Boyle, Spring of the Air.

DISSI'MILAR. adj. [dis and similar.] Unlike; heterogeneous.

Simple oil is reduced into dissimilar parts, and yields a sweet oil, very differing from sallet-oil. Boyle.

The light whose rays are all alike refrangible I call simple, homogeneal, and similar; and that whose rays are some more refrangible than others, I call compound, heterogeneal, and dissimilar. Newton.

If the fluid be supposed to consist of heterogeneous particles, we cannot conceive how those dissimilar parts can have a like situation. Bentley.

DISSIMILA'RITY. n. s. [from dissimilar.] Unlikeness; dissimilitude.

If the principle of reunion has not its energy in this life, whenever the attractions of sense cease, the acquired principles of dissimilarity must repel these beings from their centre; so that the principle of reunion, being set free by death, must drive these beings towards God their centre, and the principle of dissimilarity forcing him to repel them with infinite violence from him, must make them infinitely miserable. Cheyne.

DISSI'MILE.* n. s. [Lat. dissimile.] A dissimilitude; a comparison with, and illustration by, contraries. "Contraria juxta se posita magis elucescunt." Such is the definition of a dissimile, following that of a simile, in the Instructions for Oratory, Oxf. 1682, p. 63. In the parts of rhetorick, dissimiles and contraries are there placed among "the ornaments of speech," sign. A. 3.

DISSIMI'LITUDE.† n. s. [dissimilitudo, Lat.]

1. Unlikeness; want of resemblance.

Thereupon grew marvellous dissimilitudes, and by reason thereof jealousies, heartburnings, jars, and discords. Hooker.

We doubt whether the Lord, in different circumstances, did frame his people unto any utter dissimilitude, either with Egyptians, or any other nation. Hooker.

The dissimilitude between the Divinity and images, shews that images are not a suitable means whereby to worship God. Stilling fleet.

As humane society is founded in the similitude of some things, so it is promoted by some certain dissimilitudes. Grew.

Women are curious observers of the likeness of children to parents, that they may, upon finding dissimilitude, have the pleasure of hinting unchastity. Pope, Odyssey, Notes.

2. Comparison by contraries. See DISSIMILE.

Dissimilitudes are expressed either by disjunction, or by commutation and conversion, and several ways of comparing together and reflecting upon them. Instruct. for Oratory, p. 63.

DISSIMULA'TION.† n. s. [dissimulatio, Latin. "The learned make a difference between simulation and dissimulation. Simulation is a pretence of what is not; and dissimulation is a concealment of what is." Tatler, No. 213.] The act of dissembling; hypocrisy; fallacious appearance; false pretensions.

Dissimulation is but a faint kind of policy; for it asketh a strong wit, and a strong heart, to know when to tell truth, and to do it. Bacon.

He added not; and Satan bowing low
His grey dissimulation, disappear'd
Into thin air diffus'd. Milton, P.R.

Dissimulation may be taken for a bare concealment of one's mind, in which sense we commonly say, that it is prudence to dissemble injuries. South.

To DISSI'MULE.* v. a. [old Fr. dissimuler; Lat. dissimulo.] To dissemble. Not now in use. Chaucer presents us both with this verb, and with the substantive dissimuling.

To the intent he would not discomfort hi friend Titus, [he] dissimuled his heaviness. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 124.

In the church some errours may be dissimuled with less inconvenience, than they can be discovered. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

DI'SSIPABLE. adj. [from dissipate.] Easily scattered; liable to dispersion.

The heat of those plants is very dissipable, which under the earth is contained and held in; but when it cometh to the air it exhaleth. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The parts of plants are very tender, as consisting of corpuscles which are extremely small and light, and therefore the more easily dissipable. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To DI'SSIPATE.† v. a. [dissipatus, Lat.]

1. To scatter every way; to disperse.

Martin, the legate of Pope Innocent VIII., revoked and dissipated all former grants. Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ii. § 4.

Abraham was contemporary with Paleg, in whose time the famous dissipation of mankind and distinction of languages happened. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. The state of being dispersed.

Now
Foul dissipation follow'd, and forc'd rout. Milton, P.L.

Where the earth contains nitre within it, if that heat which is continually steaming out of the earth be preserved, its dissipation prevented, and the cold kept off by some building, this alone is ordinarily sufficient to raise up the nitre. Woodward.

3. Scattered attention.

I have begun two or three letters to you by snatches, and been prevented from finishing them by a thousand avocations and dissipations. Swift.

DISSOCIABI'LITY.* n. s. [from dissociable.] Want of sociability.

This dissociability, this dogmatizing, cruel, enslaving principle, is that which makes popery so very dreadful. Dr. Brett's Friendly Call to the R. Catholicks in Ireland, 1757, p. 12.

DISSO'CIABLE.* adj. [Lat. dissociabilis.] Not to be brought to good fellowship. Cockeram.

A company of scribbling parasites, fiery-spirited friars, zealous anachorists, hypocritical confessors, and those Pretorian soldiers, his janisary jesuits, that dissociable society, as Languis terms it. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 650.

To DISSO'CIATE.† v. a. [dissocio, Latin.] To separate; to disunite; to part. Cockeram.

In the dissociating action, even of the gentlest fire, upon a concrete, there perhaps vanish some active and fugitive particles, whose presence was requisite to contain the concrete under such a determinate form. Boyle.

By thus dissociating every state from every other, like deer separated from the herd, each power is treated with, on the merit of his being a deserter from the common cause.
Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DISSOCIA'TION.* n. s. [from dissociate.] Separation; division.

Before the dissociation of the seventeen provinces, this town [Antwerp] was one of the greatest marts of Europe. Howell, Lett. i. ii. 15.

Angels dissolv'd in hallelujahs lie. Dryden.

To DISSO'LVE. v. n.

1. To be melted; to be liquefied.

All putrefaction, if it dissolve not in rarefaction, will in the end issue into plants or living creatures bred of putrefaction. Bacon.

As wax dissolves, as ice begins to run
And trickle into drops before the sun,
So melts the youth, and languishes away.
Addison, Ovid.

2. To sink away; to fall to nothing.

If there be more, more woeful, hold it in;
For I am almost ready to dissolve,
Hearing of this. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To melt away in pleasures.

DISSO'LVENT. adj. [from dissolve.] Having the power of dissolving or melting.

In man and viviparous quadrupeds, the food moistened with the spittle is first chewed, then swallowed into the stomach, where, being mingled with dissolvent juices, it is concocted, macerated, and reduced into a chyle. Ray.

DISSO'LVENT. n. s. [from the adjective.] That which has the power of disuniting the parts of any thing.

Spittle is a great dissolvent, and there is a great quantity of it in the stomach, being swallowed constantly. Arbuthnot.

DISSO'LVER.† n. s. [from dissolve.]

1. That which has the power of dissolving.

Fire, and the more subtle dissolver, putrefaction, by dividing the particles of substances, turn them black. Arbuthnot.

Hot mineral waters are the best dissolvers of phlegm. Arbuthnot.

2. One who solves or clears a difficulty.

Something must be distorted, beside the intent of the divine inditer. Peacham on Poetry.

DISTO'RT.* adj. Distorted; writhed.

Her face was ugly, and her mouth distort.
Spenser, F. Q. v. xii. 36.

DISTO'RTION.† n. s. [distortio, Lat.]

1. Irregular motion by which the face is writhed, or the parts disordered.

By his distortions he reveals his pains;
He by his tears, and by his sighs complains. Prior.

In England we see people lulled asleep with solid and elaborate discourses of piety, who would be warmed and transported out of themselves by the bellowings and distortions of enthusiasm.
Addison, Spect.

2. A wresting from the true meaning.

Those absurdities are all framed by himself, either by a willing mistake of my meaning, or by a childish distortion of my words.
Bp. Wren, Monarchy Asserted, (1659,) p. 147.

To DISTRA'CT.† v. a. part. pass. distracted; anciently distraught, distraughted, and distract. [distractus, Lat.]

1. To pull different ways at once.

The needle endeavours to conform unto the meridian, but being distracted, driveth that way where the greater and powerfuller part of the earth is placed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. To separate; to divide.

By sea, by sea.
— Most worthy sir, you therein throw away
The absolute soldiership you have by land;
Distract your army, which doth most consist
Of war-mark'd footmen.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Once it was well compacted, and built as a city that is at unity in itself; but now distracted from itself. Fuller, Holy War, p. 275.

3. To turn from a single direction towards various points.

If he cannot wholly avoid the eye of the observer, he hopes to distract it by a multiplicity of the object. South.

4. To fill the mind with contrary considerations; to perplex; to confound; to harass.

Vouchsafe then, O Thou most Almighty Spright!
From whom all gifts of wit and knowledge flow,
To shed into my breast some sparkling light
Of Thine eternal truth, that I may show
Some little beams to mortal eyes below
Of that immortal beauty, there with Thee,
Which in my weake distraughted mind I see.
Spenser, Hymn of Heavenly Beauty.

While I suffer thy terrours I am distracted.
Psalm lxxxviii. 15.

Come, cousin, canst thou quake, and change thy colour,
Murder thy breath in middle of a word,
And then again begin and stop again,
As if thou wert distraught and mad with terrour?
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

It would burst forth; but I recover breath,
And sense distract to know well what I utter.
Milton, S. A.

He possesses a quiet and cheerful mind, not afflicted with violent passions, or distracted with immoderate cares. Ray.

If our sense of hearing were a thousand times quicker than it is, how would a perpetual noise distract us! We should, in the quietest retirement, be less able to sleep or meditate than in the middle of a sea-fight. Locke.

5. To make mad: properly, by an unsettled and vagrant fancy; but popularly, to make mad in whatever mode.

Wherefore throng you hither?
——To fetch my poor distracted husband hence:
Let us come in, that we may bind him fast,
And bear him home for his recovery.
Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

Better I were distract,
So should my thoughts be sever'd from my griefs,
And woes, by wrong imagination, lose
The knowledge of themselves. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

She was unable, in strength of mind, to bear the grief of his decease, and fell distracted of her wits.
Bacon.

You shall find a distracted man fancy himself a king, and with a right inference require suitable attendance, respect, and obedience. Locke.

DISTRA'CT.* part. adj. [Lat. distractus. See To DISTRACT.] Mad.

Alone she being left, the spoil of love and death,
In labour of her grief, outrageously distract.
Drayton, Polyolb. S. 6.

DISTRA'CTEDLY.† adv. [from distract.] Madly; frantickly.

Methought her eyes had crost her tongue;
For she did speak in starts distractedly.
Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

It is fine sport to see in our authors, how the devil with his famous oracles and prophets foreseeing by his skill in the Scripture that Christ was near his birth, did droop upon it and hang the wing; did sensibly decay in his courage; began to breathe quick, and speak imperfectly; and sometimes as men in the extremity of a fever, distractedly, wildly, without any coherence, and scarce sense. Hammond, Serm. xvi.

DISTRA'CTEDNESS.† n. s. [from distract.] The state of being distracted; madness.

Lo, thou, to whom the greatest throng was a solitude in respect of the fruition of thy Father, thou, who wert uncapable of distraction from him with whom thou wert one, wouldest yet so much act man, as to retire for the opportunity of prayer; to teach us, who are nothing but wild thoughts and giddy distractedness, to go aside when we would speak with God. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

DISTRA'CTER.* n. s. [from distract.] That which draws aside, or which perplexes and confounds.

Such inspiration as this, is no distracter from, but an accomplisher and enlarger of, human faculties. More, Conj. Cabb. Preface.

DISTRA'CTION.† n. s. [distractio, Lat.]

1. Tendency to different parts; separation.

While he was yet in Rome,
His power went out in such distractions as Beguil'd all spies. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Thou, to whom the greatest throng was a solitude in respect of the fruition of thy Father, thou who wert uncapable of distraction from him with whom thou wert one, wouldest yet so much act man as to retire for the opportunity of prayer.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

2. Confusion; state in which the attention is called different ways.

That ye may attend upon the Lord without distraction. 1 Cor. vii. 35.

Never was known a night of such distraction;
Noise so confus'd and dreadful; jostling crowds,
That run, and knew not whither. Dryd. Span. Fr.

What may we not hope from him in a time of quiet and tranquillity, since, during the late distractions, he has done so much for the advantage of our trade? Addison, Freeholder.

3. Perturbation of mind; violence of some painful passion.

The irascible passions follow the temper of the heart, the concupiscible distractions, the crasis of the liver. Brown.

The distraction of the children, who saw both their parents expiring together, would have melted the hardest heart. Tatler.

4. Madness; frantickness; loss of the wits; vagrancy of the mind.

Madam, this is a mere distraction:
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shaks.

So to mad Pentheus double Thebes appears,
And furies howl in his distemper'd ears:
Orestes so, with like distraction tost,
Is made to fly his mother's angry ghost. Waller.

Commiserate all those who labour under a settled distraction, and who are shut out from all the pleasures and advantages of human commerce.
Atterbury.

5. Disturbance; discord; difference of sentiments.

The two armies lay quiet near each other, without improving the confusion and distraction which the king's forces were too much inclined to.
Clarendon.

DISTRA'CTIVE.† adj. [from distract.] Causing perplexity.

In these perilous and distractive times.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 104.

Who is not too thick-sighted, may see how hurtful and distractive it is to the house, the church, and commonwealth.
Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

Oft grown unmindful through distractive cares,
I've stretched my arms, and touch'd him unawares.
Dryden.

To DISTRA'IN. v. a. [Fr. destraindre.]

1. To seize; to lay hold on as an indemnification for a debt.

Here's Beaufort, that regards not God nor king,
Hath here distrain'd the Tower to his use. Shaks.

2. To rend; to tear. Spenser. Not in use.

To DISTRA'IN. v. n. To make seizure.

The earl answered, I will not lend money to my superiour, upon whom I cannot distrain for the debt. Camden, Remains.

Blood, his rent to have regain'd,
Upon the British diadem distrain'd. Marvel.

DISTRA'INER. n. s. [from distrain.] One that seizes.

DISTRA'INT. n. s. [from distrain.] Seizure
Dict.

DISTRA'UGHT.† part. adj. [from distract.] Distracted. See To DISTRACT.

He had been a good military man in his days, but was then distraught of his wits.
Camden, Remains.

At length I wisdom ponder'd in my thought,
And madness weigh'd: for folly is distraught.
Sandys, Eccles. p. 3.

DISTRA'UGHTED.* See the 4th sense of To DISTRACT.

To DISTREA'M.* v. n. [from stream, with the unmeaning addition of dis. A poetical word of modern times.] To flow.

Still as the village caught the waving sound,
A swelling tear distream'd from every eye.
Shenstone, Elegy.

DISTRE'SS. n. s. [destresse, Fr.]

1. The act of making a legal seizure.

He would first demand his debt; and, if he were not paid, he would straight go and take a distress of goods and cattle, where he could find them, to the value. Spenser on Ireland.

Quoth she, some say, the soul's secure
Against distress and forfeiture. Hudibras.

2. A compulsion in real actions, by which a man is assured to appear in court, or to pay a debt or duty which he refused.
Cowel.

3. The thing seized by law.

4. Calamity; misery; misfortune.

There can I sit alone, unseen of any,
And to the nightingale's complaining notes
Tune my distresses, and record my woes. Shaks.

There shall be signs in the sun, and in the moon, and in the stars; and upon earth distress of nations, with perplexity, the sea and the waves roaring.
Luke, xxi. 25.

People in affliction or distress cannot be hated by generous minds. Richardson, Clarissa.

To DISTRE'SS. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prosecute by law to a seizure.

2. To harass; to make miserable; to crush with calamity.

Distress not the Moabites, neither contend with them in battle. Deut. ii. 9.

Scott.

DISTRE'SSFUL. adj. [distress and full.]

1. Miserable; full of trouble; full of misery.

I often did beguile her of her tears,
When I did speak of some distressful stroke
That my youth suffer'd. Shakspeare, Othello.

The ewes still folded, with distended thighs,
Unmilk'd, lay bleating in distressful cries.
Pope, Odyssey.

Distressful and desolating events, which have attended the mistakes of politicians, should be present in their minds. Watts.

2. Attended with poverty.

He, with a body fill'd and vacant mind,
Gets him to rest, cramm'd with distressful bread.
Shakspeare.

DISTRE'SSFULLY.* adv. [from distressful.] In a miserable manner.

I am distressfully deaf. Johnson.

DISTRE'SSING.* adj. [from distress.] Harassing; afflicting; tormenting; painful.
Ash.

To DISTRI'BUTE. v. a. [distribuo, Lat.] To divide amongst more than two; to deal out; to dispensate.

The king sent over a great store of gentlemen and warlike people, amongst whom he distributed the land. Spenser on Ireland.

The spoil got on the Antiates
Was not distributed. Shakspeare, Coriol.

She did distribute her goods to all them that were nearest of kindred. Judith, xvi. 24.

DISTRI'BUTER.† n. s. [from distribute.] One who deals out any thing; a dispenser.

He is a distributer of the church goods.
A fruitful Serm. on Rom. xii. 3, &c. (1584,) p. 65.

We might cast in also the consideration of that divine Nemesis, which God has placed in the frame and nature of the universal creation, as he is a distributer to every one according to his works.
More, Conj. Cabb. p. 153.

There were judges and distributers of justice appointed for the several parts of his dominions.
Addison on Italy.

Of that peculiar matter out of which the bodies of vegetables and of animals are formed, water is the common vehicle and distributer to the parts of those bodies. Woodward.

DISTRIBU'TION. n. s. [distributio, Lat.]

1. The act of distributing or dealing out to others; dispensation.

Of great riches there is no real use, except it be in the distribution. Bacon, Essays.

Providence has made an equal distribution of natural gifts, whereof each creature severally has a share. L'Estrange.

Every man in a great station would imitate the queen in the distribution of offices in his disposal.
Swift.

2. Act of giving in charity.

Let us govern our charitable distributions by this pattern of nature, and maintain a mutual circulation of benefits and returns. Atterbury.

3. [In logick.] As an integral whole is distinguished into its several parts by division; so the word distribution is most properly used, when we distinguish an universal whole into several kinds of species. Watts.

DISTRI'BUTIVE.† adj. [from distribute.]

1. That is employed in assigning to others their portions: as, distributive justice, that which allots to each his sentence or claim.

Justice, although it be but one entire virtue, yet is described in two kinds: the one is named Justice distributive, which is in distribution of honour, money, benefice, or other thing semblable: the other is called commutative or by exchaunge.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 142.

If justice will take all, and nothing give,
Justice methinks is not distributive. Dryden.

Observe the distributive justice of the authors, which is constantly applied to the punishment of virtue, and the reward of vice, directly opposite to the rules of their best criticks. Swift.

2. That assigns the various species of a general term.

The Hebrews want those numbers which the grammarians call distributive or divisive, terni, quaterni, quini, seni, septini, &c. which they mostwhat supply by repetition. Mede on Dan. p. 12.

DISTRI'BUTIVELY. adv. [from distributive.]

1. By distribution.

2. Singly; particularly.

Although we cannot be free from all sin collectively, in such sort that no part thereof shall be found inherent in us; yet, distributively at the least, all great and grievous actual offences, as they offer themselves one by one, both may, and ought to be, by all means avoided. Hooker.

3. In a manner that expresses singly all the particulars included in a general term; not collectively.

An universal term is sometimes taken collectively for all its particular ideas united together, and sometimes distributively, meaning each of them single and alone. Watts, Logick.

DISTRI'BUTIVENESS.* n. s. [from distributive.] Desire of distributing.

The carving at the table he always made his province, which he said he did as a diversion to keep him from eating overmuch: but certainly that practice had another more immediate cause, a natural distributiveness of humour, and a desire to be employed in the relief of every kind of want of every person. Fell, Life of Hammond, § 2.

DI'STRICT. n. s. [districtus, Lat.]

1. The circuit or territory within which a man may be compelled to appearance.
Cowel.

2. Circuit of authority; province.

His governors, who formed themselves upon the example of their grand monarque, practised all the arts of despotick government in their respective districts. Addison.

With stern distaste avow'd,
To their own districts drive the suitor crowd.
Pope, Odyssey.

3. Region; country; territory.

Those districts which between the tropicks lie,
The scorching beams, directly darted, fry.
Blackmore.

DISTRI'CTION. n. s. [districtus, Lat.] Sudden display. A word little used.

A smile plays with a surprizing agreeableness in the eye, breaks out with the brightest distriction, and sits like a glory upon the countenance.
Collier on the Aspect.

To DISTRU'ST.† v. a. [dis and trust.] To regard with diffidence; to diffide in; not to trust.

He sheweth himself unto such as do not distrust him. Wisdom, i. 2.

To me reproach
Rather belongs, distrust, and all dispraise.
Milton, P. L.

2. Suspicion; want of faith; want of confidence in another.

You doubt not me; nor have I spent my blood,
To have my faith no better understood:
Your soul's above the baseness of distrust;
Nothing but love could make you so unjust.
Dryden.

DISTRU'STFUL.† adj. [distrust and full.]

1. Apt to distrust; suspicious.

Go boldly home, and let thy mind
No distrustful crosses find.
Beaum. and Fl. Wom. Pleased.

But rattling nonsense in full vollies breaks. Pope.

DISTRU'STFULLY.† adv. [from distrustful.] In a distrustful manner.

They so labour, as neither to labour anxiously, nor distrustfully, nor profanely.
Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 14.

Many are they,
That of my life distrustfully thus say,
No help for him in God there lies. Milton, Ps. iii.

DISTRU'STFULNESS.† n. s. [from distrust-

ful.] The state of being distrustful; want of confidence.

It is behooful for christian brethren to be firmly joined in the bands of concord and unity, without being acquainted with distrustfulness of God's Word; and that no man, having built his faith upon God's Word, and truly depending on Christ, should need to doubt of a perfect peace.
Knight, Trial of Truth, (1580,) fol. 14.

Overwhelmed with distrustfulness and grievous doubtings of his salvation.
Professor Benefield's Serm. (1615,) p. 21.

DISTRU'STING.* n. s. [from distrust.] Want of confidence.

God hath created the physician for thy help; therefore use him temperately, without violent confidences; and sweetly, without uncivil distrustings, or refusing his prescriptions upon humour or impotent fear. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ch. 4. § 1.

DISTRU'STLESS.* adj. [distrust and less.] Without suspicion or distrust.

Poets, ever void
Of guile, distrustless, scorn the treasur'd gold,
And spurn the miser, spurn his deity.
Shenstone, Economy.

To DISTU'NE.* v. a. [dis and tune.] To disorder; to untune.

Untimely Fever, rude insulting guest,
How didst thou with such unharmonious heat
Dare to distune his well-composed rest;
Whose heart so just and noble strokes did beat?
Sir H. Wotton to a Friend in Sickness.

But is he gone? and live I rhyming here,
As if some muse would listen to my lay,
When all distun'd sit waiting for their dear,
And bathe the banks where he was wont to play?
Sir H. Wotton, Tears at the Grave of Sir A. Morton.

To DISTU'RB.† v. a. [destourber, old Fr. disturbo, low Lat.]

1. To perplex; to disquiet; to deprive of tranquillity.

Disturbances on earth through female snares.
Milton, P. L.

DISTU'RBER. n. s. [from disturb.]

1. A violater of peace; he that causes tumults and publick disorders.

He stands in the sight both of God and men most justly blamable, as a needless disturber of the peace of God's church, and an author of dissension. Hooker.

Men that make an insult upon society, ought to be humbled as disturbers of the publick tranquillity. Addison.

Ye great disturbers, who in endless noise,
In blood and horror, seek unnatural joys;
For what is all this bustle, but to shun
Those thoughts with which you dare not be alone!
Granville.

2. He that injures tranquillity; he that causes perturbation of mind.

Two deep enemies
Foes to my rest, and my sweet sleep's disturbers.
Shakspeare.

To DISTU'RN.† v. a. [dis and turn.] To turn off; to turn aside. Not now in use.

He glad was to disturn that furious stream
Of war on us, that else had swallow'd them.
Daniel.

For thee vain foolish things thy prophets sought;
Thee thine iniquities they have not taught,
Which might disturn thy bondage: but for thee
False burthens, and false causes, they would see.
Donne, Poems, p. 357.

DISVALUA'TION. n. s. [dis and valuation.] Disgrace; diminution of reputation.

DI'TTY.† n. s. [dicht, Dutch; dickt, Swedish. Wicliffe writes this word dite, Ex. xiv. Formerly, this was a very serious word. It is now used in a light manner, and generally connected with dismal or doleful, to heighten the burlesque.] A poem to be sung; a song.

Although we lay altogether aside the consideration of ditty or matter, the very harmony of sounds being framed in due sort, and carried from the ear to the spiritual faculties of our souls, is, by a native puissance and efficacy, greatly available to bring to a perfect temper whatsoever is there troubled. Hooker.

Being young, I fram'd to the harp
Many an English ditty, lovely well,
And gave the tongue a helpful ornament. Shaksp.

It is a heavenly hymn, no ditty, father,
It passes through my ears unto my soul,
And works divinely on it.
Beaum. and Fl. Lover's Progress.

Bearing evermore a part in that heavenly ditty of the Angels, Blessing, and Glory, and Wisdom, and Thanksgiving, and Honour, and Power, and Might, be unto our God for ever and ever.
Bp. Hall, Soul's Farewell to Earth, § 12.

Strike the melodious harp, shrill timbrels ring,
And to the warbling lute soft ditties sing. Sandys.

His annual wound in Lebanon, allur'd
The Syrian damsels to lament his fate,
In am'rous ditties, all a summer's day.
Milton, P. L.

Mean while the rural ditties were not mute,
Temper'd to the oaten flute;
Rough satyrs danc'd. Milton, Lycidas.

They will be sighing and singing under thy inexorable windows lamentable ditties, and call thee cruel. Dryden.

DIVA'N.† n. s. [An Arabick or Turkish word, signifying the supreme council. Sandys calls it the divano, as well as divan, Trav. 1615, pp. 32. 61. But Shaw says, that divan is a corruption of douwanne. Travels, 4to. p. 248.]

1. The council of the Oriental princes.
2. Any council assembled: used commonly in a sense of dislike.

Forth rush'd in haste the great consulting peers,
Rais'd from the dark divan, and with like joy
Congratulant approach'd him. Milton, P. L.

Swift to the queen the herald Medon ran,
Who heard the consult of the dire divan.
Fenton, Odyssey.

To DIVA'RICATE.† v. n. [divaricatus.] Lat.] To be parted into two; to become bifid; to stride. See the substantive STRIDE. Cockeram.

To DIVA'RICATE. v. a. To divide into two.

A slender pipe is produced forward towards the throat, whereinto it is at last inserted, and is there divaricated, after the same manner as the spermatick vessels. Grew.

DIVARICA'TION.† n. s. [divaricatio, Lat.]

1. Partition into two.

Dogs, running before their masters, will stop at a divarication of the way, till they see which hand their masters will take. Ray.

2. Division of opinions.

To take away all doubt, or any probable divarication, the curse is plainly specified.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Extension.

Two generals — are to play the bullies and buffoon, to shew their legerdemain, their activity of face, and divarication of muscles.
Rymer on Tragedy, p. 155.

To DIVE. v. n. [ðippan, Sax.]

1. To sink voluntarily under water.

I am not yet informed, whether when a diver diveth, having his eyes open, and swimmeth upon his back, he sees things in the air greater or less.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Around our pole the spiry Dragon glides,
And, like a winding stream, the Bears divides,
The less and greater; who, by fate's decree,
Abhor to dive beneath the Southern sea.
Dryden, Virgil.

That the air in the blood-vessels of live bodies has a communication with the outward air, I think, seems plain, from the experiments of human creatures being able to bear air of much greater density in diving, and of much less upon the tops of mountains, provided the changes be made gradually. Arbuthnot.

2. To go under water in search of any thing.

Crocodiles defend those pearls which lie in the lakes, the poor Indians are eaten up by them, when they dive for the pearl. Ralegh, Hist.

The knave deserves it, when he tempts the main,
Where folly fights for kings, or dives for gain.
Pope.

3. To go deep into any question; doctrine; or science.

The wits that div'd most deep, and soar'd most high,
Seeking man's powers, have found his weakness such. Davies.

He performs all this out of his own fund, without diving into the arts and sciences for a supply.
Dryden.

Whensoever we would proceed beyond those simple ideas, and dive farther into the nature of things, we fall presently into darkness and obscurity. Locke.

You swim a-top, and on the surface strive;
But to the depths of nature never dive. Blackmore.

You should have div'd into my inmost thoughts.
Philips.

4. To immerge into any business or condition.

Sweet prince, th' untainted virtue of your years
Hath not yet div'd into the world's deceit,
Nor can distinguish. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

5. To depart from observation; to sink.

Dive thoughts down to my soul. Shakspeare.

To DIVE. v. a. To explore by diving.

The Curtii bravely div'd the gulph of fame.
Denham.

To DIVE'L. v. a. [divello, Latin.] To pull; to separate; to sever.

They begin to separate; and may be easily divelled or parted asunder. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To DIVE'LLICATE.* v. a. [Lat. vellico.] To pull; to tear.

DI'VER.† n. s. [from dive.]

1. One that sinks voluntarily under water.

Perseverance gains the diver's prize. Pope, Dunc.

2. One that goes under water in search of treasure.

It is evident, from the relation of divers and fishers for pearls, that there are many kinds of shell-fish which lie perpetually concealed in the deep, skreened from our sight. Woodward.

3. He that enters deep into knowledge or study.

He would have him, as I conceive it, to be no superficial and floating artificer; but a diver into causes, and into the mysteries of proportion. Wotton, Architecture.

4. A water fowl; a didapper. Barret.

The word colymbus is by later naturalists appropriated to this kind, [the didapper or dabchick,] and mergus used for another sort of divers more like to ducks. Ray, Dict. Tril. p. 21.

DI'VERB.* n. s. [Latin, diverbium, a by-word.] A proverb.

England is a paradise for women, a hell for horses; Italy a paradise for horses, a hell for women; as the diverb goes. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 601.

He that marries a wife out of a suspected inn or alehouse, buys a horse in Smithfield, and hires a servant in Paules, as the diverb is, shall likely have a jade to his horse, a knave for his man, and an arrant honest woman to his wife. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 631.

To DIVE'RGE. v. n. [divergo, Lat.] To tend various ways from one point.

Homogeneal rays, which flow from several points of any object, and fall perpendicularly on any reflecting surface, shall afterwards diverge from so many points. Newton.

DIVE'RGENCE.* n. s. [from diverge.] Tendency to various parts from one point.

Perhaps you mean thus, The angle being once made by the divergence of straight lines, remains an angle, though one or both of those lines be afterwards made crooked. Very good! But doth it remain the same angle? the same quantity of divergence? Wallis, Correction of Hobbes, sect. 9.

DIVE'RGENT. adj. [from divergens, Latin.] Tending to various parts from one point.

DI'VERS. adj. [diversus, Lat.] Several; sundry; more than one.

We have divers examples in the church of such as, by fear, being compelled to sacrifice to strange gods, repented, and kept still the office of preaching the Gospel. Whitgift.

The teeth breed when the child is a year and a half old: then they cast them, and new ones come about seven years; but divers have backward teeth come at twenty, some at thirty and forty. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Divers letters were shot into the city with arrows, wherein Solyman's councils were revealed. Knolles.

Divers friends thought it strange, that a white dry body should acquire a rich colour upon the affusion of spring water. Boyle on Colours.

DIVERS-COLOURED.* adj. [divers and coloured.] Having various colours.

Smiling cupids;
With divers-coloured fans. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

By which the beauty of the earth appears;
The divers-colour'd mantle which she wears. Sandys, Job, p. 55.

DI'VERSE. adj. [diversus, Latin.]

1. Different from another.

Four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another. Dan. vii. 3.

2. Different from itself; various; multiform; diffused.

Eloquence is a great and diverse thing, nor did she yet ever favour any man so much as to be wholly his. B. Jonson.

3. In different directions. It is little used but in the last sense.

The gourd
And thirsty cucumber, when they perceive
Th' approaching olive, with resentment fly
Her fatty fibres, and with tendrils creep
Diverse, detesting contact. Philips.

To seize his papers, Curl, was next thy care:
His papers light, fly diverse tost in air. Pope, Dunc.

To DIVE'RSE.* v. n. [Lat. diverto, diversum.] To turn aside. Obsolete. See To DIVERT.

The red-cross knight divers'd; but forth rode Britomart. Spenser, F. Q. iii. iii. 63.

DIVERSIFICA'TION.† n. s. [from diversify.]

1. The act of changing forms or qualities.

If you consider how variously several things may be compounded, you will not wonder that such fruitful principles or manners of diversification, should generate differing colours. Boyle on Colours.

2. Variation; variegation.

If accents and diversification of voice be wholly rejected, the prayers will seem cold and lifeless, the attention will languish, and the devotion lose its spirit and fervour. Abp. Hort's Charge.

3. Variety of forms; multiformity.

4. Change; alteration.

This which is here called a change of will, is not a change of his will, but a change in the object, which seems to make a diversification of the will, but indeed is the same will diversified. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To DIVE'RSIFY. v. a. [diversifier, Fr.]

1. To make different from another; to distinguish; to discriminate.

There may be many species of spirits, as much separated and diversified one from another as the species of sensible things are distinguished one from another. Locke.

Male souls are diversified with so many characters, that the world has not variety of materials sufficient to furnish out their different inclinations. Addison, Spect.

It was easier for Homer to find proper sentiments for Grecian generals, than for Milton to diversify his infernal council with proper characters. Addison, Spect.

2. To make different from itself; to vary; to variegate.

The country being diversified between hills and dales, woods, and plains, one place more clear, another more darksome, it is a pleasant picture. Sidney.

There is, in the producing of some species, a composition of matter which may be much diversified. Bacon.

DIVE'RSION. n. s. [from divert.]

1. The act of turning any thing off from its course.

Cutting off the tops, and pulling off the buds, work retention of the sap for a time, and diversion of it to the sprouts that were not forward. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I have ranked this diversion of Christian practice among the effects of our contentions. Decay of Piety.

2. The cause by which any thing is turned from its proper course or tendency.

Fortunes, honour, friends,
Are mere diversions from love's proper object,
Which only is itself. Denham, Sophy.

3. Sport; something that unbends the mind by turning it off from care. Diversion seems to be something lighter than amusement, and less forcible than pleasure.

You for those ends whole days in council sit,
And the diversions of your youth forget. Waller.

In the book of games and diversions, the reader's mind may be supposed to be relaxed. Addison, Spect.

Such productions of wit and humour as expose vice and folly, furnish useful diversion to readers. Addison, Freeholder.

4. [In war.] The act or purpose of drawing the enemy off from some design by threatening or attacking a distant part.

DIVE'RSITY. n. s. diversité, Fr. from diversitas, Latin.]

1. Difference; dissimilitude; unlikeness.

Then is there in this diversity no contrariety. Hooker.

They cannot be divided, but they will prove opposite; and not resting in a bare diversity, rise into a contrariety. South.

The most common diversity of human constitutions arises from the solid parts, as to their different degrees of strength and tension. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Variety.

The diversity of ceremonies in this kind ought not to cause dissension in churches. Hooker.

Society cannot subsist without a diversity of stations; and if God should grant every one a middle station, he would defeat the very scheme of happiness proposed in it. Rogers.

3. Distinct being; not identity.

Considering any thing as existing, at any determined time and place, we compare it with itself existing at another time, and thereon form the ideas of identity and diversity. Locke.

4. Variegation.

A waving glow his bloomy beds display,
Blushing in bright diversities of day. Pope.

DI'VERSLY. adv. [from diverse.]

1. In different ways; differently; variously.

The lack we all have as well of ghostly, as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known; but the gifts of God are so diversly bestowed, that it seldom appeareth what all receive: what all stand in need of seldom lieth hid. Hooker.

Both of them do diversly work, as they have their medium diversly disposed. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Whether the king did permit it to save his purse, or to communicate the envy of a business, displeasing to his people, was diversly interpreted. Bacon.

Leicester bewrayed a desire to plant him in the queen's favour, which was diversly interpreted by such as thought that great artizan of courts to do nothing by chance, nor much by affection. Wotton.

The universal matter, which Moses comprehendeth under the names of heaven and earth, is by divers diversly understood. Ralegh, Hist.

William's arm
Could nought avail, however fam'd in war;
Nor armies leagu'd, that diversly assay'd
To curb his power. Philips.

2. In different directions; to different points.

On life's vast ocean diversly we sail;
Reason the card, but passion is the gale. Pope.

To DIVE'RT. v. a. [diverto, Latin.]

1. To turn off from any direction or course.

I rather will subject me to the malice
Of a diverted blood and bloody brother. Shaksp.

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain,
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.
Shakspeare.

He finds no reason to have his rent abated, because a greater part of it is diverted from his landlord. Locke.

They diverted raillery from improper objects, and gave a new turn to ridicule.
Addison, Freeholder.

Nothing more is requisite for producing all the variety of colours and degrees of refrangibility, than that the rays of light be bodies of different sizes; the least of which may make violet the weakest and darkest of the colours, and be more easily diverted by refracting surfaces from the right course; and the rest, as they are bigger and bigger, make the stronger and more lucid colours, blue, green, yellow and red, and be more and more difficultly diverted. Newton.

2. To draw to from a different part.

The kings of England would have had an absolute conquest of Ireland, if their whole power had been employed; but still there arose sundry occasions, which divided and diverted their power some other way. Davies on Ireland.

3. To withdraw the mind.

Alas, how simple, to these cates compar'd,
Was that crude apple that diverted Eve!
Milton, P. R.

They avoid pleasure, lest they should have their affections tainted by any sensuality, and diverted from the love of him who is to be the only comfort. Addison on Italy.

4. To please; to exhilarate. See DIVERSION.

An ingenious gentleman did divert or instruct the kingdom by his papers. Swift.

5. To subvert; to destroy; in Shakspeare, unless it belong to the first sense.

Frights, changes, horrours,
Divert and crack, rend and deracinate
The unity and married calm of states. Shakspeare.

To DIVE'RT.* v. n. To turn aside; to depart from the principal design of an argument or subject.

So Maro's Muse
—— commodious precepts gives
Instructive to the swains; not wholly bent
On what is gainful, sometimes she diverts
From solid counsels. Philips, Cider, B. 1.

DIVE'RTER. n. s. [from the verb.] Any thing that diverts or alleviates.

Angling was, after tedious study, a rest to his mind, a cheerer of his spirits, and a diverter of sadness. Walton.

DIVE'RTICLE.* n. s. [Lat. diverticulum.] A turning; a by-way.

The diverticles and blind by-paths which sophistry and deceit are wont to tread.
Hales. Rem. p. 12.

I suspect there was a diverticle of the Akeman shooting from Whichwood towards Idbury, through Fyfield. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 52.

To DIVERTI'SE. v. a. [divertiser, Fr.; diverto, Lat.] To please; to exhilarate; to divert. A word now little used.

Let orators instruct, let them divertise, and let them move us, this is what is properly meant by the word salt. Dryden.

DIVE'RTISEMENT.† n. s. [divertissement, Fr.] Diversion; delight; pleasure. A word now not much in use, Dr. Johnson says. It is frequent in our old writers; and, in later times, Bp. Hurd has used it. It is also now a term for a musical composition.

How fond soever men are of bad divertisement, it will prove mirth which ends in heaviness.
Gov. of the Tongue.

When there is no recreation abroad, I have a company of honest old fellows in leathern coats, which find me divertisement at home.
Goodman, Winter's Ev. Conf. P. i.

DIVE'RTIVE.† adj. [from divert.] Recreative; amusing; exhilarating. A word not fully authorized, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the modern authority of Dr. Rogers. But it seems to be well authorized by the examples which I add.

His [Æsop's] ingenious and divertive fables — entertain and please us extremely.
Boyle on Bentley's Phalaris, p. 271.

There are some exercises and recreations, both of body and mind, which are very ingenious as well as divertive. Goodman, Winter's Ev. Conf. P. i.

I would not exclude the common accidents of life, nor even things of a pleasant and divertive nature, so they are innocent, from conversation.
Rogers.

To DIVE'ST. v. a. [devestir, French. The English word is therefore more properly written devest. See To DEVEST.] To strip; to make naked; to denude.

Then of his arms Androgeus he divests;
His sword, his shield he takes, and plumed crests.
Denham.

Let us divest the gay phantom of temporal happiness, of all that false lustre and ornament in which the pride, the passions, and the folly of men have dressed it up. Rogers.

DIVE'STURE. n. s. [from divest.] The act of putting off.

The divesture of mortality dispenses them from those laborious and avocating duties which are here requisite to be performed. Boyle, Seraphic Love.

DIVI'DABLE.† adj. [from divide. Shakspeare places the accent on the first syllable. But the word is perhaps peculiar to him.] Separate; different; parted. A word not used.

How could communities maintain Peaceful commerce from dividable shores? Shaksp.

DIVI'DANT. adj. [from divide.] Different; separate. A word not in use.

Twinn'd brothers of one womb,
Whose procreation, residence, and birth
Scarce a dividant, touch with several fortunes.
Shakspeare.

To DIVI'DE.† v. a. [divido, Lat.]

1. To part one whole into different pieces.

Divide the living child in two, and give half to the one, and half to the other. 1 Kings, iii. 25.

Let old Timotheus yield the prize,
Or both divide the crown;
He rais'd a mortal to the skies,
She drew an angel down. Dryden, St. Cecilia.

They were divided into little, independent societies, speaking different languages. Locke.

2. To separate; to keep apart, by standing as a partition between.

Let there be a firmament in the midst of the waters, and let it divide the waters from the waters.
Genesis, i. 6.

You must go
Where seas, and winds, and deserts will divide you.
Dryden.

3. To disunite by discord.

There shall be five in one house divided.
St. Luke, xii. 52.

4. To deal out; to give in shares.

Then in the midst a tearing groan did break
The name of Antony; it was divided
Between her heart and lips. Shakspeare.

Divide the prey into two parts, between them that took the war upon them, who went out to battle, and between all the congregation.
Numbers, xxxi. 27.

Cham and Japhet were heads and princes over their families, and had a right to divide the earth by families. Locke.

5. [In musick.] To play divisions. See the 7th sense of DIVISION.

And all the while most heavenly melody
About the bed sweet musick did divide.
Spenser, F. Q. i. v. 17.

To DIVI'DE.† v. n.

1. To part; to sunder.

To right and left the front
Divided, and to either flank retir'd. Milton, P. L.

Knatchbull, Annot. p. 260.

DI'VIDEND. n. s. [from divide.]

1. A share; the part allotted in division.

Each person shall adapt to himself his peculiar share, like other dividends. Decay of Piety.

If on such petty merits you confer
So vast a prize, let each his portion share:
Make a just dividend; and, if not all,
The greater part to Diomede will fall.
Dryden, Fables.

2. [In arithmetick.] Dividend is the number given to be parted or divided.
Cocker's Arithmetick.

DIVI'DER. n. s. [from divide.]

1. That which parts any thing into pieces.

According as the body moved, the divider did more and more enter into the divided body; so it joined itself to some new parts of the medium, or divided body, and did in like manner forsake others. Digby on the Soul.

2. A distributer; he who deals out to each his share.

Who made me a judge or divider over you?
Luke.

3. A disuniter; the person or cause that breaks concord.

Money, the great divider of the world, hath, by a strange revolution, been the great uniter of a divided people. Swift.

4. A particular kind of compasses.

Piercing even to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit. Heb. iv. 12.

DIVI'DUAL.† adj. [dividuus, Lat.] Divided; shared or participated in common with others.

So that a man may say his religion is now no more within himself, but is become a dividual movable, and goes and comes near him, according as that good man frequents the house.
Milton, Areopagitica.

She shines,
Revolv'd on heav'n's great axle, and her reign
With thousand lesser lights dividual holds,
With thousand thousand stars! Milton, P. L.

DIVINA'TION. n. s. [divinatio, Lat.]

1. Divination is a prediction or foretelling of future things, which are of a secret or hidden nature, and cannot be known by any human means.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

Certain tokens they noted in birds, or in the entrails of beasts, or by other the like frivolous divinations. Hooker.

Surely there is no enchantment against Jacob neither is there any divination against Israel. Numbers.

His count'nance did imprint an awe;
And naturally all souls to his did bow,
As wands of divination downward draw,
And point to beds where sov'reign gold doth grow. Dryden.

The excellency of the soul is seen by its power of divining in dreams: that several such divinations have been made, none can question who believes the holy writings. Addison.

2. Conjectural presage or prediction.

Tell thou thy earl his divination lies,
And I will take it as a sweet disgrace. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

DI'VINATOR.* n. s. [Lat. divinator.] One that professes divination.

Matthew Riccius, the Jesuit, informeth us, in his commentaries of those countries, of all nations they are most superstitious, and much tormented in this kind, attributing so much to their divinators. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 166.

Of this number are all superstitious idolaters, Ethnicks, Mahometans, Jews, hereticks, enthusiasts, divinators, prophets, sectaries, and schismaticks. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 641.

DIVI'NATORY.* adj. [Lat. divinatus.] Professing divination.

There is no necessity of supposing this a divining sacrifice. — However, the Apostate Julian, according to his usual modesty, roundly affirms, that this intercourse was properly divinatory. Biblioth. Bibl. (Ox. 1720,) on Gen. xv. 9.

DIVI'NE. adj. [divinus, Lat.]

1. Partaking of the nature of God.

Her line
Was hero-make, half human, half divine. Dryden.

2. Proceeding from God; not natural; not human.

The benefit of nature's light is not thought excluded as unnecessary, because the necessity of a divine light is magnified. Hooker.

Instructed, you'd explore
Divine contrivance, and a God adore. Blackmore.

3. Excellent in a supreme degree. In this sense it may admit of comparison.

The divinest and richest mind,
Doth by art's purchase and by nature's dower,
That ever was from heav'n to earth confin'd. Davies.

4. Presageful; divining; prescient.

Yet oft his heart, divine of something ill,
Misgave him; he the fault'ring measure felt. Milton, P. L.

DIVI'NE. n. s.

1. A minister of the gospel; a priest; a clergyman.

Claudio must die to-morrow: let him be furnished with divines, and have all charitable preparation. Shakspeare.

Give Martius leave to proceed in his discourse; for he spoke like a divine in armour. Bacon, Holy War.

A divine has nothing to say to the wisest congregation, which he may not express in a manner to be understood by the meanest among them. Swift.

2. A man skilled in divinity; a theologian.

Th' eternal cause, in their immortal lines
Was taught, and poets were the first divines. Denham.

To DIVI'NE.* v. a. To deify. Not now in use.

At length out of the river it was rear'd,
And borne above the clouds to be divin'd. Spenser, Ruins of Time.

To DIVI'NE. v. a. [divino, Lat.] To foretel; to foreknow; to presage.

Why dost thou say king Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfal? Shakspeare.

To DIVI'NE. v. n.

1. To utter prognostication.

Then is Cæsar and he knit together. —— If I were to divine of this unity, I would not prophecy so. Shakspeare.

The prophets thereof divine for money. Mic. iii. 11.

2. To feel presages.

If secret powers
Suggest but truth to my divining thoughts,
This pretty lad will prove our country's bliss. Shakspeare.

3. To conjecture; to guess.

The best of commentators can but guess at his meaning; none can be certain he has divined rightly. Dryden, Juv. Dedic.

He took it with a bow, and soon divin'd
The seeming toy was not for nought design'd. Dryden.

In change of torment would be ease,
Could you divine what lovers bear;
Even you, Prometheus, would confess
There is no vulture like despair. Granville.

DIVI'NELY. adv. [from divine.]

1. By the agency or influence of God.

Faith, as we use the word, called commonly divine faith, has to do with no propositions but those which are supposed to be divinely inspired. Locke.

This topick was very fitly and divinely made use of by our apostle, in his conference with philosophers, and the inquisitive people of Athens. Bentley.

2. Excellently in the supreme degree.

The Grecians most divinely have given to the active perfection of men, a name expressing both beauty and goodness. Hooker.

She fair, divinely fair! fit love for gods. Milton, P. L.

Exalted Socrates! divinely brave!
Injur'd he fell, and dying he forgave;
Too noble for revenge. Creech, Juvenal.

3. In a manner noting a deity.

His golden horns appear'd,
That on the forehead shone divinely bright,
And o'er the banks diffus'd a yellow light. Addison.

DIVI'NENESS.† n. s. [from divine.]

1. Divinity; participation of the divine nature.

Every comet or burning meteor strikes more wonder into the beholder, than those glorious lamps of nature, with their admirable motions and order, in which the heathen have acknowledged a divineness. Bp. Reynolds on the Pass. ch. 1.

Is it then impossible to distinguish the divineness of this book from that which is human? Grew.

2. Excellence in the supreme degree.

By Jupiter, an angel! or, if not,
An earthly paragon: behold divineness
No elder than a boy. Shakspeare, Cymb.

DIVI'NER. n. s. [from To divine.]

1. One that professes divination, or the art of revealing occult things by supernatural means.

This drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me, called me Dromio, and swore I was assured to her; told me what privy marks I had about me. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

Expelled his oracles, and common temples of delusion, the devil runs into corners, exercising meaner trumperies, and acting his deceits in witches, magicians, diviners, and such inferior seducers. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Conjecturer; guesser.

If he himself be conscious of nothing he then thought on, he must be a notable diviner of thoughts that can assure him that he was thinking. Locke.

DIVI'NERESS.† n. s. [old Fr. devineresse.] A prophetess; a woman professing divination.

The mad divineress had plainly writ,
A time should come, but many ages yet,
In which sinister destinies ordain,
A dame should drown with all her feather'd train. Dryden.

DIVI'NIFIED.* adj. [Lat. divinus and fio.] Participating of the divine nature.

In the Canticles the Virgin saith, "My beloved is white and red, and chosen of a thousand;" white, for his blessed and divinified soul; red, for his precious flesh embrued with his blood. Partheneia Sacra, (1633,) p. 204.

DIVI'NITY. n. s. [divinité, French; from divinitas, Latin.]

1. Participation of the nature and excellence of God; deity; godhead.

As with new wine intoxicated both,
They swim in mirth, and fancy that they feel
Divinity within them breeding wings,
Wherewith to scorn the earth. Milton, P. L.

When he attributes divinity to other things than God, it is only a divinity by way of participation. Stilling fleet.

2. God; the Deity; the Supreme Being; the Cause of causes.

'Tis the Divinity that stirs within us,
'Tis Heav'n itself that points out an hereafter,
And intimates eternity to man. Addison.

3. False god.

Vain idols, deities that ne'er before
In Israel's lands had fix'd their dire abodes,
Beastly divinities, and droves of gods. Prior.

4. Celestial being.

God doubtless can govern this machine he could create, by more direct and easy methods than employing these subservient divinities. Cheyne.

5. The science of divine things; theology.

Hear him but reason in divinity,
And, all admiring with an inward wish,
You would desire the king were made a prelate. Shakspeare.

Trust not my age,
My reverence, calling, nor divinity,
If this sweet lady lie not guiltless here
Under some biting errour. Shakspeare.

Among hard words I number those which are peculiar to divinity, as it is a science. Swift.

6. Something supernatural.

They say there is divinity in odd numbers, either in nativity, chance, or death. Shakspeare.

DIVI'SIBLE. adj. [divisibilis, Lat.] Capable of being divided into parts; discerptible; separable.

When we frame in our minds any notion of matter, we conceive nothing else but extension and bulk, which is impenetrable, or divisible and passive. Bentley, Serm.

DIVISIBI'LITY. n. s. [divisibilité, Fr.] The quality of admitting division or separation of parts.

The most palpable absurdities will press the asserters of infinite divisibility. Glanville, Scepsis.

This will easily appear to any one, who will let his thoughts loose in the vast expansion of space, or divisibility of matter. Locke.

DIVI'SIBLENESS. n. s. [from divisible.] Divisibility.

Naturalists disagree about the origin of motion, and the indefinite divisibleness of matter. Boyle.

DIVI'SION.† n. s. [divisio, Lat.]

1. The act of dividing any thing into parts.

My having is not much;
I'll make division of my present with you. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

2. The state of being divided.

Thou madest the spirit of the firmament, and commanded it to part asunder, and to make a division betwixt the waters. 2 Esdr. vi. 41.

3. That by which any thing is kept apart; partition.

4. The part which is separated from the rest by dividing.

If we look into communities and divisions of men, we observe that the discreet man, not the witty, guides the conversation. Addison, Spectator.

5. Disunion; discord; difference.

There was a division among the people, because of him. John, vii. 43.

As to our divisions with the Romanists, were our differences the product of heat, they would, like small clefts in the ground, want but a cool season to cement them. Decay of Piety.

6. Parts into which a discourse is distributed.

In the divisions I have made, I have endeavoured, the best I could, to govern myself by the diversity of matter. Locke.

Express the heads of your divisions in as few and clear words as you can, otherwise I never can be able to retain them. Swift.

7. Space between the notes of musick, or parts of a musical composure; just time. This is Dr. Johnson's definition. But a division in musick is a variation of melody upon some given fundamental harmony. To run a division is the technical expression.

Thy tongue
Makes Welsh as sweet as ditties highly penn'd,
Sung by a fair queen, in a summer's bower,
With ravishing division to her lute.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Our tongue will run divisions in a tune, not missing a note, even when our thoughts are totally engaged elsewhere. Glanville.

8. Distinction.

I will put a division between my people and thy people. Exod.

9. [In arithmetick.] The separation or parting of any number or quantity given, into any parts assigned. Cocker.

10. Subdivision; distinction of the general into species.

Abound
In the division of each several crime,
Acting in many ways. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

DIVI'SIONER.* n. s. [from division.] One who divides. Obsolete.

Division was made, and I not minded. The divisioner, which was Freeman the Ignatian, and the other priests, thought that I knew nothing of the grand present; but afterwards, understanding that I knew both of the money and of the circumstances wherewith it was to be divided, they, fearing lest I would make the partiality known to the state, gave me a part.

Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 181.

DIVI'SIVE.* adj. [Lat. divisus.]

1. Forming division of distribution.

The Hebrews want those numbers which the grammarians call distributive or divisive, terni, quaterni, quini, seni, septeni, &c. which they mostwhat supply by repetition.

Mede on Dan. p. 12.

2. Having the quality of creating division or discord.

The remonstrance was condemned as divisive, factious, and scandalous.

Burnet, Hist. of his Own Time.

DIVI'SOR. n. s. [divisor, Lat.] The number given, by which the dividend is divided; the number which sheweth how many parts the dividend is to be divided into.

DIVO'RCE. n. s. [divorce, Fr. from divortium, Lat.]

1. The legal separation of husband and wife.

Divorce is a lawful separation of husband and wife, made before a competent judge, on due cognizance had of the cause, and sufficient proof made thereof. Ayliffe's Parergon.

To restore the king,
He counsels a divorce, a loss of her,
That like a jewel has hung twenty years
About his neck, yet never lost her lustre.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

He had in his eye the divorce which had passed betwixt the emperour and Scribonia.

Dryden, Dedic. to the Æn.

2. Separation; disunion.

Such motions may occasion a farther alienation of mind, and divorce of affections in her, from my religion. K. Charles.

These things, to be a bastard, and to be born out of lawful wedlock, are convertible the one with the other; and 'tis hard to make divorce between those things that are so near in nature to each other, as being convertible terms.

Ayliffe's Parergon.

3. The sentence by which a marriage is dissolved.

4. The cause of any penal separation.

Go with me, like good angels, to my end;
And as the long divorce of steel falls on me,
Make of your prayers one sweet sacrifice,
And lift my soul to heav'n. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

To DIVO'RCE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To separate a husband or wife from the other.

Whosoever shall marry her that is divorced, committeth adultery. St. Matt. v. 32.

Dearly I love you, and would be lov'd fain,
But am betroth'd unto your enemy;
Divorce me, untie, or break that knot again,
Take me to you, imprison me; for I,
Except you enthral me, never shall be free.
Donne, Poems, p. 323.

2. To force asunder; to separate by violence.

Were it consonant unto reason to divorce these two sentences, the former of which doth shew how the latter is restrained, and not marking the former, to conclude by the latter of them? Hooker.

The continent and the island were continued together within men's remembrance, by a drawbridge; but is now divorced by the downfallen cliffs. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

So seem'd her youthful soul not easily forc'd,
Or from so fair, so sweet a seat divorc'd. Waller.

3. To separate from another.

If thou wert not glad,
I would divorce me from thy mother's tomb,
Sepulch'ring an adultress. Shaksp. K. Lear.

If so be it were possible, that all other ornaments of mind might be had in their full perfection, nevertheless the mind that should possess them divorced from piety, could be but a spectacle of commiseration. Hooker.

4. To take away; to put away.

I dare not make myself so guilty,
To give up willingly that noble title
Your master wed me to: nothing but death
Shall e'er divorce my dignities. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Aerial pasture the lungs with gentle force
Constant embrace by turns, by turns divorce.
Blackmore.

DIVO'RCEMENT.† n. s. [from divorce.] Divorce; separation of marriage.

He that is once married, cannot but with the mutual consent of his wife abstain, nor may give a libel of divorcement to her that hath not trespassed.

Martin, Mar. of Priests, (1555,) sign. X. b.

Write her a bill of divorcement, and give it in her hand, and send her out of his house.

Deut. xxiv. 1.

Since her divorcement, and his decay of estate, it is known they have met.

Beaum. and Fl. Honest Man's Fortune.

DIVO'RCER.† n. s. [from divorce.]

1. The person or cause which produces divorce or separation.

Death is the violent estranger of acquaintance, the eternal divorcer of marriage.

Drummond, Cypr. Grove.

If she consent, wherein has the law to right her? or consent not, then is it either just, and so deserved? or if unjust, such in all likelihood was the divorcer. Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

2. One of a sect, called divorcers; of which Milton was deemed the father.

Those I term divorcers, that would be quit of their wives for slight occasions; and, to maintain this opinion, one hath published a tractate of Divorce. Pagit's Heresiography, (1654,) p. 129.

DIVO'RCIVE.* adj. [from divorce.] Having power to divorce.

To that a little patience; until this first part have amply discoursed the grave and pious reasons of this divorcive law.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

DIURE'TICK. adj. [διερήτικος.] Having the power to provoke urine.

Graceful as John, she moderates the reins,
And whistles sweet her diuretick strains. Young.

DIURE'TICK.† n. s. Diureticks are decoctions, emulsions, and oils of emollient vegetables, that relax the urinary passages: such as relax ought to be tried before such as force and stimulate. Those emollients ought to be taken in open air, to hinder them from perspiring, and on empty stomachs. Arbuthnot.

DIU'RNAL. adj. [diurnus, Lat.]

1. Relating to the day.

We observe in a day, which is a short year, the greatest heat about two in the afternoon, when the sun is past the meridian, which is the diurnal solstice, and the same is evident from the thermometer. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Think, ere this diurnal star
Leave cold the night, how we his gather'd beams
Reflected, may with matter sere foment.
Milton, P. L.

2. Constituting the day.

Why does he order the diurnal hours
To leave earth's other part, and rise in ours?
Prior.

3. Performed in a day; daily; quotidian.

The prime orb,
Incredible how swift, had thither roll'd
Diurnal. Milton, P. L.

The diurnal and annual revolution of the sun have been, from the beginning of nature, constant, regular, and universally observable by all mankind. Locke.

DIU'RNAL.† n. s. [diurnal, Fr.] A journal; a day-book.

We writers of diurnals are nearer in our style to that of common talk, than any other writers; by which means we use words of respect sometimes very unfortunately. Tatler, No. 204.

DIU'RNALIST.* n. s. [from diurnal.] A journalist.

Let me add hereunto the late experiments of some odiously incestuous marriages, which (even by the relation of our diurnalists) have by this means found a damnable passage, to the great dishonour of God, and shame of this church.

Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

DIU'RNALLY. adv. [from diurnal.] Daily; every day.

As we make the enquiries, we shall diurnally communicate them to the publick. Tatler.

DIUTU'RNAL.* adj. [Lat. diuturnus.] Lasting; of long continuance.

We thought it conducing to the common good of both republicks, to send George Downing, a person of eminent quality, and long in our knowledge and esteem for his undoubted fidelity, probity and diligence, in many and various negotiations, dignified with the character of our agent, to reside with your lordships, and chiefly to take care of those things by which the peace between us may be preserved entire and diuturnal.

Milton, Letters of State.

DIUTU'RNITY. n. s. [diuturnitas, Lat.] Length of duration.

Such a coming, as it might be said, that that generation should not pass till it was fulfilled, they needed not suppose of such diuturnity.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

To DIVU'LGATE.* v. a. [Lat. divulgo.] To publish that which is secret.

Huloet, and Barret.

Which [thing] is divulgated or spread abroad. Huloet.

DIVU'LGATE.* adj. [Lat. divulgatus.] Published; made known.

The pope so lately put down, the Gospel so clearly divulgate.

Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 34. b.

DIVULGA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. divulgatio.] A publishing or reporting abroad.

Secrecy hath no less use than divulgation.

Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

To DIVU'LGE. v. a. [divulgo, Lat.]

1. To publish; to make publick; to reveal to the world.

Men are better contented to have their commendations suppressed than the contrary much divulged.

Hooker.

I will pluck the veil of modesty from the so seeming mistress Page, and divulge Page himself for a secure and wilful Acteon.

Shakspeare, Merry W. of Windsor.

These answers in the silent night receiv'd,
The king himself divulg'd, the land believed.

Dryden, Æn.

You are depriv'd of the right over your own sentiments, of the privilege of every human creature, to divulge or conceal them. Pope.

The cabinets of the sick, and the closets of the dead, have been ransacked to publish private letters, and divulge to all mankind the most secret sentiments of friendship. Pope.

2. To proclaim; to declare by a publick act.

This is true glory and renown, when God
Looking on th' earth, with approbation, marks
The just man, and divulges him through heav'n
To all his angels, who with true applause

DIVU'LGER.† n. s. [from divulge.] A publisher; one that exposes to publick view.

It is true that, by confessions, we find that false priest Watson, and arch-traitor Percy, to have been the first devisers and divulgers of this scandalous report. Proceedings against Garnet, &c. (1606,) sign. M. 4. b.

I think not any thing in my letters could tend so much to my reproach, as the odious divulging of them did to the infamy of the divulgers.

King Charles.

DIVU'LSION.† n. s. [divulsio, Lat.] The act of plucking away; laceration.

Many an unpleasing potion, many tormenting incisions and divulsions did she endure from their hands: the remedy was equal in trouble to the disease. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Aristotle, in his Ethicks, takes up the conceit of the beaver, and the divulsion of his testacles.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

DIVU'LSIVE.* adj. [Lat. divulsus.] Having power to tear away.

Away, therefore, with all the distractive, yea divulsive, thoughts of the world.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 49.

To DI'ZEN.† v. a. [This word seems corrupted from dight.] To dress; to deck; to rig out. A low word, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the ludicrous application of it by Swift. It is of much higher date than the time of Swift; and and it is yet in use in the north of England.

I put my clothes off, and I dizen'd him.

Beaum. and Fl. The Pilgrim.

Go saddle my fore-horse, put his feather on too,
He'll prance it bravely, friend; he fears no colours;
And take the armour down, and see him dizen'd.

Beaum. and Fl. Women Pleased.

Your ladyship lifts up the sash to be seen,
For sure I had dizen'd you out like a queen. Swift.

To DIZZ.* v. a. [Sax. ðyꝛ.] To astonish; to puzzle; to make giddy or dizzy in the head. Sherwood has this forgotten verb in his dictionary.

Now he [Rozinante] is dizzed with the continual circles of the stables, which are ever approached, but never entered; beside the unsupportable torment of feeding horses, the noise of grinding the beloved corn, the smell of hay and litter.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quixote.

DI'ZZARD. n. s. [from dizzy.] A blockhead; a fool. See DISARD. Dict.

DI'ZZINESS.† n. s. [from dizzy.] Giddiness; whirl in the head.

As we see children turn round so long in sport, that they fall down at last, when they would stand; so there are many, who, playing in the mazes of little faults, bring their minds to such a dizziness, as throws them down when they mean to stand and intermit that amusement.

W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654.)

Fixed seriousness heats the brain in some to distraction, and causeth an aching and dizziness in sounder heads. Glanville.

DI'ZZY.† adj. [ðyꝛı, ðyꝛıȝ, Saxon]

1. Giddy; vertiginous; having in the head the sensation of turning round.

All on a sudden miserable pain
Surpriz'd thee, dim thine eyes, and dizzy swam

2. Causing giddiness.

How fearful
And dizzy 'tis to cast one's eyes so low!

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Did not the distemper of their own stomachs affect them with a dizzy megrim, they would soon tie up their tongues, and discern themselves like that Assyrian blasphemer, all this while reproaching not man, but the Almighty, the Holy One of Israel. Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

3. Giddy; thoughtless.

What followers, what retinue canst thou gain?
Or at thy heels the dizzy multitude,
Longer than thou canst feed them on thy cost?

Milton, P. L.

4. Rotatory; whirling.

The reeling clouds
Stagger with dizzy poise, as doubting yet
Which master to obey. Thomson, Winter.

To DI'ZZY. v. a. [from the adjective.] To whirl round; to make giddy.

Not the dreadful spout,
Which shipmen do the hurricano call,
Shall dizzy with more clamour Neptune's ear
In his descent, than shall my prompted sword
Falling on Diomede. Shakspeare, Troil. and Cres.

To divide him inventorially would dizzy the arithmetick of memory. Shakspeare.

To DO.† v. a. Thou dost, he doth or does; preter. did; part. pass. done. [ðon, Sax. doen, Dutch. The word is traced, by Junius, to the Goth. taujan; whence, by dropping the j, the Theotis. or Alam. tuan, duan, tuon, duon, as well as the Sax. ðon. Some have fancied the Gr. τεύχω, to prepare, to build, as the origin of do. This verb is often called the auxiliary verb; but the exact power which it now has in our language, as an auxiliary, is not easy, Mr. Tyrwhitt has observed, to be defined, and still less to be accounted for from analogy. It is derived from the same root, and is pronounced by Mr. Tooke to be the same word as to; and therefore for the same reason that to is put before the infinitive, do used formerly to be put before such other parts of the verb which likewise were not distinguished from the noun by termination: as we still say, I do love, instead of, I love; I did love, instead of, I loved; but if a distinguishing termination is used, then the distinguishing do or did must be omitted, the termination fulfilling its office: and therefore we never find "I did loved," or "he doth loveth." See Tyrwhitt's Ess. on Chaucer, and Tooke's Div. of Purley. See also the verb neuter.]

1. To practise or act any thing good or bad.

Thou hast done evil above all that were before thee. 1 Kings.

Flee evil, and do good. Psalms.

2. To perform; to achieve.

They help, who hurt so small;
And he hath nothing done, that doth not all. Daniel.

Learn to live well, that thou may'st die so too;
To live and die is all we have to do. Denham.

What is the reason a man's arm won't smile and frown, and do all the intellectual postures of the countenance? Collier.

3. To execute; to discharge.

May one, that is a herald and a prince,
Do a fair message to his kingly ears?

Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

Pindarus is come
To do you salutation from his master.

Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The jury prayed of the senate a guard, that they might do their consciences. Bacon.

4. To cause. This structure is obsolete.

A fatal plague which many did to dye.

Spenser, F. Q.

Nought can quench mine inly flaming side,
Nor sea of liquor cold, nor lake of mire,
Nothing but death can do me to respire.

Spenser, F. Q.

We do you to wit. 2 Cor. viii. 1.

5. To transact.

The thing was not done in a corner.

Acts, xxvi. 26.

6. To produce any effect to another.

If he did not care whether he had their love or no, he waved indifferently 'twixt doing them neither good nor harm. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Thou hast, Sebastian, done good feature shame.

Shakspeare.

If there be any good thing to be done,
That may to thee do ease, and grace to me,
Speak to me. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

'Tis true, I did so; nor was it in vain:
She did me right, and satisfy'd my vengeance.

Rowe.

You do her too much honour: she hath neither sense nor taste, if she dares to refuse you. Swift.

7. To have recourse to; to practise as the last effort, commonly in the form of a passionate interrogation.

What will ye do in the end thereof? Jer. v. 81.

8. To perform for the benefit or hurt of another.

I know what God will do for me. Sam. xxii. 3.

Acts of mercy done to the poor, shall be accepted and rewarded, as done to our Saviour himself. Atterbury.

9. To exert; to put forth.

Do thy diligence to come shortly unto me. 2 Tim. iv. 9.

10. To manage by way of intercourse or dealing; to have business; to deal.

I have been deterred by an indisposition from having much to do with steams of so dangerous a nature. Boyle.

What had I to do with kings and courts?
My humble lot had cast me far beneath them. Rowe.

11. To gain; to effect by influence.

It is much, that a jest with a sad brow will do with a fellow that never had the ache in his shoulders. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

His queen, notwithstanding she had presented him with divers children, and with a crown also, though he would not acknowledge it, could do nothing with him. Bacon.

12. To make any thing what it is not.

Off with the crown, and with the crown his head;
And whilst we breathe take him to do him dead. Shakspeare.

13. To finish; to end.

As for this mercy,
Which he intends for Lear and for Cordelia,
The battle done, and they within our power,
Shall never see his pardon. Shakspeare.

Go to the reading of some part of the New Testament, not carelessly, or in haste, as if you had a mind to have done, but attentively, as to be able to give some account of what you have read. Duppa.

Gigantick hinds, as soon as work was done,
To their huge pots of boiling pulse would run. Dryden.

14. To conclude; to settle.

They did their work and din'd. Prior.

When all is done, there is no man can serve his own interest better than by serving God. Tillotson.

15. To put.

Why, Warwick, who should do the duke to death?
Shakspeare.
The lord Aubrey Vere,
Was done to death? Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

16. The phrase, what to DO with, signifies how to bestow; what use to make of; what course to take; how to employ; which way to ged rid of.

Men are many times brought to that extremity, that if it were not for God, they would not know what to do with themselves, or how to enjoy themselves for one hour. Tillotson.

To Do.† v. n.

1. To act or behave in any manner well or ill.

Unto this day they do after the former manners: they fear not the Lord, neither do they after the law and commandment which the Lord commanded the children of Jacob. 2 Kings.

As every prince should govern as he would desire to be governed, so every subject ought to obey as he would desire to be obeyed, according to the maxim of doing as we would be done by. Temple.

2. To make an end; to conclude. This is only in the compound preterite.

You may ramble a whole day, and every moment discover something new; but when you have done, you will have but a confused notion of the place. Spectator.

3. To cease to be concerned with; to cease to care about; to desist from notice or practice: only in the compound preterite.

No men would make use of disunited parties to destroy one body, unless they were sure to master them when they had done with them. Stilling fleet.

I have done with Chaucer, when I have answered some objections. Dryden.

We have not yet done with assenting to propositions at first hearing, and understanding their terms. Locke.

Having done with such amusements, we give up what we cannot disown. Pope.

4. To fare; to be with regard to sickness or health.

And when Uriah was come unto him, David demanded of him how Joab did, and how the people did. 2 Sam. xi. 7.

Good woman, how do'st thou?
—— The better that it pleases your good worship to ask. Shakspeare.

5. To succeed; to fulfil a purpose.

They say yet in the north, when a thing has lost its force or virtue, that it does not. Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

Come, 'tis no matter; we shall do without him. Addison.

You would do well to prefer a bill against all kings and parliaments since the conquest; and, if that won't do, challenge the crown. Collier on Duelling.

6. To deal with.

No man who hath to do with the king, will think himself safe, unless you be his good angel, and guide him. Bacon.

7. To Do is used for any verb to save the repetition of the word; as, I shall come, but if I do not, go away; that is, if I come not.

Thus painters Cupids paint, thus poets do
A naked god, blind, young, with arrows two. Sidney.

If any thing in the world deserve our serious study and consideration, those principles of religion do. Tillotson.

Take all things which relax the veins; for what does so, prevents too vigorous a motion through the arteries. Arbuthnot.

8. Do is a word of vehement command, or earnest request; as, help me, do; make haste, do.

If thou hast lost thy land, do not also lose thy constancy; and if thou must die a little sooner, yet do not die impatiently. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

— Loose me. — I will free thee.
— Do, and I'll be thy slave. Dryden, K. Arthur.

9. To Do is put before verbs sometimes expletively; as, I do love, or, I love; I did love, or, I loved.

The Turks do acknowledge God the Father, creator of heaven and earth, being the first person in the Trinity, though they deny the rest. Bacon, Holy War.

This just reproach their virtue does excite. Dryden, Æn.

Expletives their feeble aid do join. Pope.

10. Sometimes emphatically; as, I do hate him, but will not wrong him.

Perdition catch my soul
But I do love thee; and when I love thee not,
Chaos is come again. Shakspeare, Othello.

11. Sometimes by way of opposition; as, I did love him, but scorn him now.

12. Sometimes emphatically, by way of strong negation; as, I do not know the man.

13. Sometimes, for the purpose of interrogation; as, Do you not remember me?

DO'CILE.† adj. [docile, Fr. docilis, Lat.]

1. Teachable; easily instructed; tractable.

Dogs soon grow accustomed to whatever they are taught, and, being docile and tractable, are very useful. Ellis's Voyage.

2. With to before the thing taught.

Soon docile to the secret acts of ill,
With smiles I could betray, with temper kill. Prior.

Doci'lity.† n. s. [docilité, Fr. from docilitas, Lat.] Aptness to be taught; readiness to learn. Huloet.

God both teacheth men, and giveth them the capacity to learn. He giveth docility, together with his doctrine. Fotherby, Atheomastix, (1622,) p. 359.

All the perfection they allowed his understanding was aptness and docility, and all that they attributed to his will was a possibility to be virtuous. South.

What is more admirable than the fitness of every creature for use? The docility of an elephant, and the insitiency of a camel for travelling in deserts? Grew.

Dock. n. s. [bocce, Saxon.] A plant; a weed.

The species are seventeen, ten of which grow wild, several of them being used in medicine; and the sort called the oriental burdock, is said to be the true rhubarb. Miller.

Nothing teems
But hateful docks, rough thistles, kecksies, burs,
Losing both beauty and utility. Shaks. Hen. V.

My love for gentle Dermot faster grows
Than yon tall dock that rises to thy nose:
Cut down the dock, 'twill sprout again; but know
Love rooted out again will never grow. Swift.

Dock.† n. s. [As some imagine of δοχεῖον, Dr. Johnson says; and some from δοχὴ, capacity of receiving or containing. But the Goth. dok, a deep or gulfy place, may be the parent of the word, though we have it directly from the Teut.

docke.] A place where water is let in or out at pleasure, where ships are built or laid up.

The boatswain and mariner may bring religion to what dock they please. Howel.

There are docks for their gallies and men of war, as well as work-houses for all land and naval preparations. Addison.

DOCK-YARD.* n. s. A place or yard, where ships are built, and naval stores repositeed; as, at Plymouth, Portsmouth, Woolwich, &c.

I suggested that he might go to a dock-yard, and work, as Peter the Great did.

Boswell's Tour to the Heb. p. 304.

DOCK. n. s.

1. The stump of the tail, which remains after docking.
2. The solid part of the tail.

The tail of a great rhinoceros is not well described by Bontius. The dock is about half an inch thick, and two inches broad, like an apothecary's spatula. Grew, Museum.

To DOCK. v. a. [from dock, a tail.]

1. To cut off a tail.
2. To cut any thing short.

One or two stood constant centry, who docked all favours handed down; and spread a huge invisible net between the prince and subject, through which nothing of value could pass. Swift, Examiner.

DO'CTOR. n. s. [doctor, Lat.]

1. One that has taken the highest degree in the faculties of divinity, law, or physick. In some universities they have doctors of musick. In its original import it means a man so well versed in his faculty, as to be qualified to teach it.

No woman had it but a civil doctor,
Who did refuse three thousand ducats of me,
And begg'd the ring. Shaks. Merch. of Venice.

Then stood there up one in the council, a pharisee named Gamaliel, a doctor of laws. Acts, v. 34.

2. A man skilled in any profession.

Then subtle doctors scriptures made their prize,
Casuists, like cocks, struck out each other's eyes.
Denham.

Each proselyte would vote his doctor best,
With absolute exclusion to the rest. Dryden.

3. A physician; one who undertakes the cure of diseases.

By med'cine life may be prolong'd, yet death
Will seize the doctor too. Shakspeare, Cymb.

How does your patient, doctor?
— Not so sick, my lord,
As she is troubled with thick coming fancies.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Children will not take those medicines from the doctor's hand, which they will from a nurse or mother. Government of the Tongue.

To 'pothecaries let the learn'd prescribe,
That men may die without a double bribe:
Let them, but under their superiors, kill,
When doctors first have sign'd the bloody bill.
Dryden.

He that can cure by recreation, and make pleasure the vehicle of health, is a doctor at it in good earnest. Collier.

In truth, nine parts in ten of those who recovered, owed their lives to the strength of nature and a good constitution, while such a one happened to be the doctor. Swift.

4. Any able or learned man.

The simplest person, that can but apprehend and speak sense, is as much judge of it as the greatest doctor in the school. Digby of Bodies.

To DO'CTOR. v. a. [from the noun.] To physick; to cure; to treat with medicines. A low word.

DO'CTORAL.† adj. [doctoralis, Lat.] Relating to the degree of a doctor.

The bed of a sick man is a school; a doctoral chair of learning and discipline.

Bp. King, Thanksg. Serm. (1619,) p. 42.

But why do I anticipate the more acceptable and prevailing voice of learned Bucer himself, the pastor of nations? And O that I could set him living before ye in that doctoral chair, where once the learnedest of England thought it no disparagement to sit at his feet!

Milton, Judg. of Martin Bucer concerning Div.

If church and state were made the theme, then the doctoral degree of wit was to be taken at Billingsgate. Dryden, Relig. Laici, Pref.

DO'CTORALLY.† adv. [from doctoral.] In manner of a doctor.

The physicians resorted to him to touch his pulse, and consider of his disease doctorally at their departure. Hakewill.

An English or Irish doctorate cannot be obtained by a very young man.

Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

To DO'CTORATE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make a doctor.

The parson was master of arts; but whether doctorated by degree or courtesy, because of his profession, I know not. Lilly, Life, &c. p. 77.

[He was] an advocate to the council for the marches of Wales, but afterwards doctorated in medicine at Oxford.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iii. 395.

DO'CTORESS.* n. s. [from doctor.] She who professes the skill of doctor.

Glorying in nothing more than to be called the doctoress of all nations.

Tr. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 71.

Should you say an ague were a fever, the doctoress would have a shaking fit of laughter!

Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 47.

DO'CTORLY.* adj. [from doctor.] Like a learned man.

For instance, his not unlearned and bold Maldonate (as we shall see afterwards) upon a text of this very question, confessing the current of the stream of antiquity, can come in, at last, with a doctorly wipe of "Adduci non possum ut sequar;" I cannot go with them.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of Marr. Clergy, i. 5.

DOCTORS-COMMONS.* n. s. The college of civilians, residing in the city of London; so called, perhaps, from their collegiate manner of living. See the 3d sense of COMMONS.

You told me that a dignitary of our church, (whose name you acquainted me not with,) in friendship to the gentleman's father had been at Doctors-Commons; and there fee'd one of the doctors, who is a judge of one of those courts where matrimonial causes are conusable.

Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 365.

I caused an enquiry to be made at Doctors-Commons, concerning the number of divorces.

Burke on a Regicide Peace.

DO'CTORSHIP. n. s. [from doctor.] The rank of a doctor.

DO'CTRINAL.† adj. [doctrina, Lat.]

1. Containing doctrine, or something formally taught.

The verse naturally affords us the doctrinal proposition, which shall be our subject. South.

2. Pertaining to the act or means of teaching.

To this end the word of God no otherwise serveth, than only in the nature of a doctrinal instrument. Hooker.

What special property or quality is that, which, being no where found but in sermons, maketh them effectual to save souls, and leaveth all other doctrinal means besides destitute of vital efficacy. Hooker.

Whether those dramatick constitutions, wherein Sophocles and Euripedes reign, shall be found more doctrinal and exemplary to a nation.

Milton, Reason of Ch. Government.

In a doctrinal way, saying to the contemner, Alas, why do you thus? You hurt yourself, not me; he that throws a stone at another, hits himself. Herbert, Country Parson, ch. 28.

DO'CTRINAL.† n. s. Something that is part of doctrine; "a book to instruct the unlearned." Huloet.

Comedies, which they suppose to be a doctrinal of ribaudry, be undoubtedly a picture, or as it were a myrrour, of man's life; wherein evil is not taught, but discovered.

Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 42. b.

Not such as assent to every word in Scripture, can be said in doctrinals to deny Christ. South.

DO'CTRINALLY.† adv. [from doctrine.] In the form of doctrine; positively; as necessary to be held.

Nor is it easily credible, that he who can preach well, should be unable to pray well; whereas it is indeed the same ability to speak affirmatively, or doctrinally, and only by changing the mood, to speak prayingly. Milton, Apology for Smectym.

Scripture accommodates itself to common opinions, and employs the usual forms of speech, without delivering any thing doctrinally concerning these points. Ray.

DO'CTRINE. n. s. [doctrina, Lat.]

1. The principles or positions of any sect or master; that which is taught.

To make new articles of faith and doctrine, no man thinketh it lawful: new laws of government, what church or commonwealth is there which maketh not either at one time or other? Hooker.

Ye are the sons of clergy, who bring all their doctrines fairly to the light, and invite men with freedom to examine them. Atterbury.

That great principle in natural philosophy is the doctrine of gravitation, or mutual tendency of all bodies towards each other.

Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

2. The act of teaching.

He said unto them in his doctrine. Mark, iv. 2.

DO'CUMENT.† n. s. [documentum, Lat.]

1. Precept; instruction: direction.

It is a most necessary instruction and document for them, that as her majesty made them dispensators of her favour, so it behoveth them to shew themselves equal distributers. Bacon.

Learners should not be too much crouded with a heap or multitude of documents or ideas at one time. Watts.

2. Precept in an ill sense; a precept insolently authoritative, magisterially dogmatical, solemnly trifling.

Gentle insinuations pierce, as oil is the most penetrating of all liquors; but in magisterial documents men think themselves attacked, and stand upon their guard. Gov. of the Tongue.

It is not unnecessary to digest the documents of cracking authors into several classes.

Hervey on Consumptions.

3. [In law.] A written evidence produced in proof of what is asserted; a record.

DO'DDED.* adj. Without horns: applied to sheep. An abbreviation of doe-headed. Craven Dial. 1824.

DO'DDER.† n. s. [touteren, to shoot up, Dutch. Skinner.]

Dodder is a singular plant: when it first shoots from the seed, it has little roots, which pierce the earth near the roots of other plants; but the capillaments of which it is formed, soon after clinging about these plants, the roots wither away. From this time it propagates itself along the stalks of the plant, entangling itself about them. It has no leaves, but consists of capillaments or stalks, brownish with a cast of red, which run to great lengths. They have tubercles, which fix them fast down to the plant, and by means of which they absorb the juices destined for its nourishment. Hill.

There are two cells in each berry, and two seeds in each cell.

Veget. Syst. ix. 18.

DO'DDERED, adj. [from dodder.] Overgrown with dodder; covered with supercrescent plants.

Near the hearth a laurel grew,
Dodder'd with age, whose boughs encompass round
The household gods, and shade the holy ground.
Dryden, Æn.

The peasants were enjoin'd
Sere-wood, and firs, and dodder'd oaks to find.
Dryden, Fables.

'Tis dodecatemorion thus describ'd:
Thrice ten degrees, which every sign contains,
Let twelve exhaust, that not one part remains;
It follows streight, that every twelfth confines
Two whole, and one half portion of the signs.
Creech.

DODECATE'MORY.* n. s. A denomination sometimes applied to each of the twelve signs of the zodiak. See DODECATEMORION.

The dodecatemories, or constellations; the moon's mansion, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 248.

To DODGE. v. n. [probably corrupted from dog; to shift and play sly tricks like a dog.]

1. To use craft; to deal with tergiversation; to play mean tricks; to use low shifts.

If in good offices and due retributions we may not be pinching and niggardly, it argues an earthly and ignoble mind, where we have apparently wronged, to higgle and dodge in the amends. Hale, Contemplations.

The consideration should make men grow weary of dodging and shewing tricks with God. South, Serm. i. 352.

2. To shift place as another approaches.

For he had, any time this ten years full,
Dodg'd with him betwixt Cambridge and the Bull.
Milton, on Hobson the Carrier.

3. To play fast and loose; to raise expectations and disappoint them.

You know my passion for Martha, and what a dance she has led me: she dodged with me above thirty years. Addison.

The chaffering with dissenters, and dodging about this or t'other ceremony, is but like opening a few wickets, and leaving them a-jar, by which no more than one can get in at a time. Swift.

4. The word in all its senses is low and vulgar.

DO'DGER.* n. s. [from dodge.] One who is guilty of mean tricks; "a scurvy hagler, a lousy dodger, or a cruel extortioner." Cotgrave in V. Caguerafle.

DO'DGERY.* n. s. [from dodge.] Trick.

2. A shell-snail, called also hodmandod, in several parts of England.

DO'DO.* n. s. A bird somewhat larger than a swan, but wholly different from it in shape; though by some esteemed a kind of that bird. Chambers.

The dodo [is] a bird the Dutch call walghvogel or dod Eersen; her body is round and fat, which occasions her slow pace; or that, her corpulency. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 382.

DOE. n. s. [ðа, Saxon; daa, Danish; dama, Lat.] A she-deer; the female of a buck.

Then but forbear your food a little while,
While, like a doe, I go to find my fawn,
And give it food. Shaks. As you like it.

Bucks have horns, does none.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The fearful doe
And flying stag amidst the greyhounds go.
Dryden, Virgil.

DOE. n. s. [from To do.] A feat; what one has to do; what one can perform.

No sooner he does peep into
The world, but he has done his doe. Hudibras.

DO'ER. n. s. [from To do.]

1. One that does any thing good or bad.

So foul a thing, O! thou Injustice art,
That tort'rest both the doer and distrest. Daniel.

It may be indeed a public crime, or a national mischief; yet it is but a private act, and the doer of it may chance to pay his head for his presumption. South.

2. Actor; agent.

Sith thus far we open the things that have been done, let not the principal doers themselves be forgotten. Hooker.

3. Performer.

One judgeth the prize to the best doer, of which they are no less glad than great princes are of triumphs. Sidney.

4. An active, or busy, or valiant person.

Fear not, my lord, we will not stand to prate;
Talkers are no good doers: be assur'd,
We go to use our hands, and not our tongues.
Shakspeare.

They are great speakers, but small doers; greater in shew than in deed. Knolles, Hist.

5. One that habitually performs or practises.

Be doers of the word, and not hearers only.

DOES. The third person from do for doth.

Though lending to foreigners, upon use, doth not at all alter the balance of trade between those countries, yet it does alter the exchange between those countries. Locke.

To DOFF. v. a. [from do off.]

1. To put off dress.

You have deceiv'd our trust,
And made us doff our easy robes of peace,
To crush our old limbs in ungentle steel.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Doff those links. Milton, S. A.

Nature, in awe to him,
Had doff'd her gaudy trim,
With her great master so to sympathize.
Milton, Ode Nativ.

That judge is hot, and doffs his gown.
Dryden, Juv.

Alcides doffs the lion's tawny hide. Rowe.

2. To strip; to devest of any thing.

Why art thou troubled, Herod? What vain fear
Thy blood-revolving breast doth move?
Heav'n's king, who doffs himself our flesh to wear,
Comes not to rule in wrath, but serve in love.
Crashaw.

3. To put away; to get rid of.

Your eye in Scotland
Would create soldiers, and make women fight,
To doff their dire distresses. Shaksp. Macbeth.

4. To shift off; to delay; to refer to another time; to put off.

Every day thou doff'st me with some device, Iago; and rather keep'st from me all conveniency, than suppliest me with the least advantage of hope. Shakspeare, Othello.

Away, I will not have to do with you.——
Can'st thou so doff me? Shakspeare, Much Ado.

5. This word is in all its senses obsolete, and scarcely used except by rusticks; yet it is a pure and commodious word.

DOG.† n. s. [dogghe, Dutch; doggur, Icel. dogue, old Fr.]

1. A domestic animal remarkably various in his species; comprising the mastiff, the spaniel, the bulldog, the greyhound, the hound, the terrier, the cur, with many others. The larger sort are used as a guard; the less for sports.

Such smiling rogues as these soothe every passion:
Renege, affirm, and turn their halcyon beaks
With ev'ry gale and vary of their masters,
As knowing nought, like dogs, but following.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Why should we not think a watch and pistol as distinct species one from another, as a horse and a dog? Locke.

The clamour roars of men and boys, and dogs.
Thomson.

2. A constellation called Sirius, or Canicula, rising and setting with the sun during the canicular days, or dog days.

Among the southern constellations, two there are who bear the name of the dog; the one in sixteen degrees latitude, containing on the left thigh a star of the first magnitude, usually called Procyon, or Anticanus. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It parts the twins and crab, the dog divides,
And Argo's keel that broke the frothy tides.
Creech.

3. A reproachful name for a man.

I never heard a passion so confus'd,
So strange, outrageous, and so variable,
As the dog Jew did utter in the streets. Shaksp.

Beware of dogs, beware of evil workers.
Phil. iii. 2.

4. Not always a reproachful name, but sometimes applied in sport, to a buck or blood, a gay young man; as by Johnson himself.

I love the young dogs of this age: they have more wit and humour and knowledge of life than we had; but then the dogs are not so good scholars.
Boswell, Life of Dr. Johnson.

5. To give or send to the Dogs; to throw away. To go to the Dogs; to be ruined, destroyed, or devoured.

Had whole Colepeper's wealth been hops and hogs,
Could he himself have sent it to the dogs! Pope.

6. It is used as the term for the male of several species; as, the dog fox, the dog otter.

If ever I thank any man, I'll thank you; but that they call compliments is like the encounter of two dog apes. Shakspeare.

The same ill taste of sense will serve to join
Dog foxes in the yoke, and sheer the swine.
Dryden.

7. Dog is a particle added to any thing to mark meanness, or degeneracy, or worthlessness; as dog rose.

8. Sick as a Dog. See Dogsick.

9. A pair of Dogs. Machines of iron for burning wood upon. Uncertain etymology.

10. Dog, among carpenters and sawyers, means a piece of iron, or iron rod, about ten or twelve inches long, with a hook at each end, at right angles to each other, with which they fasten a log of timber to the roller at the sawpit, where they saw it.

To Dog. v. a. [from the noun.] To hunt as a dog, insidiously and indefatigably.

I have dogg'd him like his murtherer. Shaksp.

I, his despiteful Juno, sent him forth
From courtly friends, with camping foes to live,
Where death and danger dog the heels of worth.
Shakspeare.

Sorrow dogging sin,
Afflictions sorted. Herbert.

I fear the dread events that dog them both,
Lest some ill-greeting touch attempt the person
Of our unowned sister. Milton, Comus.

These spiritual joys are dogged by no sad sequels.
Glanville.

I have been pursued, dogged, and way-laid through several nations, and even now scarce think myself secure. Pope.

Hate dogs their flight, and insult mocks their end. Vanity of Human Wishes.

Dog-fight.* n. s. [dog and fight.] A battle between two dogs.

Alas, men are more ready to clap their hands, as boys are wont to do in dog-fights.
Bp. Hall, Remains, p. 61.

Dog-fisher. n. s. [dog and fisher.] A kind of fish.

The dog-fisher is good against the falling sickness. Walton.

Dog-keeper.* n. s. [dog and keeper.] One who has the management of dogs.

I have had it by me some time, it was written by a dog-keeper of my grandfather's.
Swift, Tale of a Tub.

Dog-latin.* n. s. A word usually denoting barbarous Latin, which is also called apothecary's Latin; and sometimes, that species of burlesque Latin poetry, called the macaronick. See Macaronick.

Dog-mad.* adj. [dog and mad.] Mad, as a dog sometimes is.

He was troubled with a disease, reverse to that called the stinging of the tarantula; and would run dog-mad, at the noise of musick, especially a pair of bag-pipes. Swift, Tale of a Tub.

Dog-teeth. n. s. [dog and teeth.] The teeth in the human head next to the grinders; the eye-teeth.

The best instruments for dividing of herbs or incisor-teeth; for cracking of hard substances, as bones and nuts, grinders, or mill-teeth; for dividing of flesh, sharp-pointed or dog-teeth.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Dog-trick.† n. s. [dog and trick.] An ill turn; surly or brutal treatment.

To kill men scurvily, 'tis such a dog-trick,
Such a rat-catcher's occupation.
Beaum. and Fl. Island Princess.

Nor those,
With their court dog-tricks, that can fawn and fleer,
Make their revenue out of legs and faces,
Echo my lord, and lick away a moth.
B. Jonson, Fox.

Learn better manners, or I shall serve you a dog-trick; I'll make you know your rider.
Dryden, Don Sebast.

Do'gbane. n. s. [dog and bane.] A plant.
Miller.

Dogberry-tree. A kind of cherry.

Do'gbolt.† n. s. [dog and bolt.] Of this word I know not the meaning, unless it be, that when meal or flour is sifted or bolted to a certain degree, the coarser part is called dogbolt, or flour for dogs. Such is Dr. Johnson's statement respecting this word; and he cites a passage from Hudibras in proof of it. It appears, however, to have been a word of contempt applied to persons; but why, I am yet to learn.

In his reply he doth nothing but quarrel, like a dogbolt lawyer. Dr. Fulke's Confut. of the Papists, &c. (1583,) p. 33.

For to say truth, the lawyer is a dogbolt,
An arrant worm; and though I call him worshipful,
I wish him a canoniz'd cuckold, Diego.
Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

His only solace was, that now
His dogbolt fortune was so low,
That either it must quickly end,
Or turn about again, and mend. Hudibras.

Do'gbriar.† n. s. [dog and briar.] The briar that bears the hip; the cynosbaton.

The hip-briar is also named κυνοσβάτος, or the dogbriar or bramble. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 9.

Do'gcheap. adj. [dog and cheap.] Cheap as dogs' meat; cheap as the offal bought for dogs.

Good store of harlots, say you, and dogcheap?
Dryden.

Do'gdays.† n. s. [dog and days.] The days in which the dogstar rises and sets with the sun, vulgarly reputed unwholesome. Rarely used in the singular number.

They are a company of giddy, afternoon men; it is midsummer moon still; and the dogdays last all the year long; they are all mad.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 74.

Nor was it more in his power to be without promotion and titles, than for a healthy man to sit in the sun, in the brightest dogdays, and remain without warmth. Clarendon.

Is it necessary, to make a complaint of this kind consistent, that every day should be a dogday?
Ruffhead's Life of Pope, p. 35.

Do'gdraw. n. s. [dog and draw.] A manifest deprehension of an offender against venison in the forest, when he is found drawing after a deer by the scent of a hound which he leads in his hand.
Cowel.

Doge. n. s. [doge, Italian.] The title of the chief magistrate of Venice and Genoa.

Doria has a statue at the entrance of the doge's palace, with the title of deliverer of the commonwealth. Addison.

It is part of the jaw of a shark or dogfish.
Woodward.

Do'gfly. n. s. [dog and fly.] A voracious biting fly.

Thump-buckler Mars began,
And at Minerva with a lance of brass he headlong ran;
These vile words ushering his blows, Thou dog-fly, what's the cause
Thou mak'st gods fight thus? Chapman, Iliad.

Do'gged.† adj. [from dog.] Sullen; sour; morose; ill-humoured; gloomy.

Your uncle must not know but you are dead:
I'll fill these dogged spies with false reports.
Shaksp. K. John.

Now, for the bare-pick'd bone of majesty,
Doth dogged war bristle his angry crest,
And snarleth in the gentle eyes of peace.
Shaksp. K. John.

Dogged York, that reaches at the moon,
Whose over-weening arm I have pluck'd back,
By false accuse doth level at my life.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

So churlish, proud, insolent, so dogged, of so bad a disposition. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 109.

A dogged man, or a cynick: And so the Syriack and Arabick.
Bp. Patrick, on the first B. of Samuel.

Few miles on horseback had they jogged,
But fortune unto them turn'd dogged. Hudibras.

Do'GGEDLY.† adv. [from dogged.]

1. Sullenly; gloomily; sourly; morosely; "currishly." Sherwood.

He pincheth most doggedly.

Overbury, Charact. sign. P. 7.

2. With an obstinate resolution, as Mr. Boswell supposes.

Dr. Johnson wrote a long letter to Mrs. Thrale: I wondered to see him write so much so easily. He verified his own doctrine, that "a man may always write when he will set himself doggedly to it." Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

Do'GGEDNESS.† n.s. [from dogged.] Gloom of mind; sullenness; moroseness.

Now you are friendly,
Your doggedness and niggardize flung from you.
Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

Do'GGER.† n. s. [from dog, for its meanness. Skinner. From the Icel. dugga, a fishing vessel; duggarar, sailors. Serenius. A small ship with one mast.

Do'GGEREL.† adj. [from dog. What might be called in French, "rime de chien." See Cotgrave in V. CHIEN. "Chose de chien, a paltry thing, a trifle." Tyrwhitt on Chaucer's expression of "rime doggerel." Another old poet mentions "bastard rime after the dog'rell gyse." Skelton in his Interlude of Magnificence.] Loosed from the measures or rules of regular poetry; vile; despicable; mean: used of verses.

Then hasten Og and Doeg to rehearse,
Two fools that crutch their feeble sense on verse;
Who by my muse to all succeeding times,
Shall live in spite of their own dogg'rel rhymes.
Dryden.

Your wit burlesque may one step higher climb,
And in his sphere may judge all dogg'rel rhyme.
Dryden.

It is a dispute among the criticks, whether burlesque poetry runs best in heroick verse, like that of the Dispensary; or in doggerel, like that of Hudibras. Addison, Spect.

Do'GGEREL. n. s. Mean, despicable, worthless verses.

The hand and head were never lost of those
Who dealt in dogg'rell, or who pin'd in prose.
Dryden, Juv.

The vilest dogg'rell Grubstreet sends,
Will pass for yours with foes and friends. Swift.

Do'GGISH.† adj. [from dog.] Churlish; brutal.

At Rome, in the time of Nero, there was a philosopher called Demetrius, which was of that sect, that forasmuch as they abandoned all shamefacedness in their words and acts, they were called cynici, in English doggish.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 67.

He was taken, beside, with a doggish appetite, which called for meat almost every moment.
Fotherly, Atheom. p. 156.

Do'GHEARTED. adj. [dog and heart.] Cruel; pitiless; malicious.

His unkindness,
That stript her from his benediction, turn'd her
To foreign casualties, gave her dear rights
To his doghearted daughters. Shaks. K. Lear.

Do'GHOLE. n. s. [dog and hole.] A vile hole; a mean habitation.

France is a doghole, and it no more merits the tread of a man's foot: to the wars. Shakspeare.

But, could you be content to bid adieu
To the dear playhouse, and the players too,
Sweet country seats are purchas'd ev'ry where,
With lands and gardens, at less price than here
You hire a darksome doghole by the year.
Dryden, Juv.

Reverse your ornaments, and hang them all
On some patch'd doghole, ek'd with ends of wall.
Pope.

DOGKE'NNEL. n. s. [dog and kennel.] A little hut or house for dogs.

A certain nobleman, beginning with a dogkennel, never lived to finish the palace he had contrived. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

I am desired to recommend a dogkennel to any that shall want a pack. Tatler.

Do'GLEECH.* n. s. [dog and leech. See LEECH.] A dog-doctor; a word of contempt.

Am I grown,
Because I have been a little peevish to you,
(Only to try your temper,) such a dogleech,
I could not be admitted to your presence?
Beaum. and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

Do'GLOUSE. n. s. [dog and louse.] An insect that harbours on dogs.

Do'GLY.* adv. [from dog.] In manner like a dog; churlish. Huloet. Not in use.

Ld. Rivers, Dictes, &c. sign. C. i.

DO'GMA.† n. s. [Latin. The Latin plural, dogmata, is sometimes used. "Those unworthy dogmata which have clogged and encumbered it, [the Christian Religion."] Worthington to Hartlib, 1660. Epist. 2.]

1. Established principle; doctrinal notion.

Our poet was a stoick philosopher, and all his moral sentences are drawn from the dogmas of that sect. Dryden.

2. [In canon law.] Dogma is that determination which consists in, and has a relation to, some casuistical point of doctrine, or some doctrinal part of the Christian faith. Ayliffe, Parergon.

DOGMA'TICAL. } adj. [from dogma.] Au-
DOGMA'TICK. } thoritative; magisterial; positive; in the manner of a philosopher laying down the first principles of a sect.

The dim and bounded intellect of man seldom prosperously adventures to be dogmatical about things that approach to infinite, whether in vastness or littleness. Boyle.

I laid by my natural diffidence and scepticism for a while, to take up that dogmatical way, which is so much his character. Dryden.

Learning gives us a discovery of our ignorance, and keeps us from being peremptory and dogmatical in our determinations. Collier on Pride.

Criticks write in a positive dogmatick way, without either language, genius, or imagination.
Spectator.

One of these authors is indeed so grave, sententious, dogmatical a rogue, that there is no enduring him. Swift.

DOGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from dogmatical.] Magisterially; positively.

I shall not presume to interpose dogmatically, in a controversy, which I look never to see decided.
South.

DOGMA'TICALNESS.† n. s. [from dogmatical.] The quality of being dogmatical; magisterialness; mock authority.

This induced Socrates and all of them to confess their ignorance, and believe that nothing could be known, comprehended, or understood: not out of obstinacy or dogmaticalness, but from the narrowness of their senses, the weakness of their minds, the shortness of life, and truth being hid as it were in a deep well.
Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 20.

The right state and disposition of the mind to make proper improvements—in this will be considered the notions of scepticism, dogmaticalness, enthusiasm, superstition.
Warburton to Hurd, Letters, L. 24.

DOGMATICK.* n. s. One of a sect of physicians, called also Dogmatists, in contradistinction to Empiricks and Methodists. They brought physick into a form and arrangement.

Galen mentions in his time but three sects of physicians, Empiricks, Methodists, and Dogmaticks: we have now a fourth, that go under the name of Chymicks, Hermeticks, or Paracelsians.
Hakewill on Providence, p. 244.

Do'GMATISM.* n. s. [from dogma.] Positiveness in opinion, or in disputation.

The presbyterian clergy, more eminent for zeal than for policy, often contradicted James's opinions, with a freedom equally offensive to his dogmatism as a theologian, and to his pride as a king. Robertson, Hist. of Scotland, ii. 177.

Do'GMATIST. n. s. [dogmatiste, Fr.] A magisterial teacher; a positive asserter; a bold advancer of principles.

I could describe the vanity of bold opinion, which the dogmatists themselves demonstrate in all the controversies they are engaged in.
Glanville, Scepsis.

A dogmatist in religion is not a great way off from a bigot, and is in high danger of growing up to be a bloody persecutor.
Watts, Improvement of the Mind.

To Do'GMATIZE.† v. n. [from dogma.] To assert positively; to advance without distrust; to teach magisterially.

Not to conclude or dogmatize upon this or that peremptorily.
Translators of the Bible to the Reader.

These, with the pride of dogmatizing schools,
Impos'd on nature arbitrary rules;
Forc'd her their vain inventions to obey,
And move as learned frenzy trac'd the way.
Blackmore.

This father, violating all these laws, had accused me as a dogmatizing heretick.
H. Wharton, Inquist. of Goa, ch. 6.

Do'GMATIZER.† n. s. [from dogmatize.] An asserter; a magisterial teacher; a bold advancer of opinions.

We must condemn him [Amadis de Gaul] to the fire, without all remission, as the dogmatizer and head of a bad sect. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix.

Such opinions, being not entered into the confessions of our church, are not properly chargeable either on Papists or Protestants, but on particular dogmatizers of both parties. Hammond.

Do'GROSE. n. s. [dog and rose.] The flower of the hip.

Of the rough or hairy excrescence, those on the briar, or dogrose, are a good instance.
Derham, Physico-Theol.

Do'GSEARS.* n. s. An expression for the creases made on the leaves of books by their being folded down at particular places.

With the sweat of my own hands, I did make plain and smooth the dogsears throughout our great Bible. Arbuthnot and Pope, Mem. of P. P.

Under a tea-cup he might lie,
Or creas'd like dogsears in a folio.
Gray, Long Story.

Do'GSICK.* adj. [dog and sick.] Sick as a dog.

He that saith, he is dog-sicke, or sick as a dog, meaneth, doubtlesse, a sick dog.
Dyet's Dry Dinner, 1599.

Do'GSKIN.* adj. [dog and skin.] Made of the skin of a dog.

Also a small cabinet, with six drawers inlaid with tortoise-shell, and brass-gilt ornaments at the four corners, in which were two leather forehead-cloths, three pair of oiled dog-skin gloves, seven cakes of superfine Spanish wool, half a dozen of Portugal dishes, and a quire of paper from thence. Tatler, No. 245.

Do'GSLEEP. n.s. [dog and sleep.] Pretended sleep.

Juvenal indeed mentions a drowsy husband, who raised an estate by snoring; but then he is represented to have slept what the common people call dogsleep. Addison.

Do'GSMEAT. n. s. [dog and meat.] Refuse; vile stuff; offal like the flesh sold to feed dogs.

His reverence bought of me the flower of all the market; these are but dogsmeat to 'em. Dryden.

Do'GSTAR. n. s. [dog and star; canicula, Lat.] The star which gives the name to the dogdays.

All shun the raging dogstar's sultry heat,
And from the half-unpeopled town retreat. Addison.

Do'GTROT. n. s. [dog and trot.] A gentle trot like that of a dog.

This said, they both advanc'd, and rode,
A dogstrot through the bawling crowd. Hudibras.

Do'GWEARY. adj. [dog and weary.] Tired as a dog; excessively weary.

Oh, master, master, I have watch'd so long,
That I'm dogweary. Shaksp. Tam. of the Shrew.

Do'GWOOD. n. s. A species of cornelian cherry.

Do'ILY. n. s.

1. A species of woollen stuff so called, I suppose, from the name of the first maker.

We should be as weary of one set of acquaintance, though never so good, as we are of one suit, though never so fine: a fool, and a doily stuff, would now and then find days of grace, and be worn for variety. Congreve, Way of the World.

2. It is now the name of a small napkin, coloured, or plain, placed on our tables after dinner with the wine and dessert.

Do'INGS. n. s. [from To do. This word has hardly any singular.]

1. Things done; events; transactions.

I have but kill'd a fly,
—— But! how if that fly had a father and mother?
How would he hang his slender gilded wings,
And buz lamented doings in the air? Shakspeare.

2. Feats; actions, good or bad.

The next degree was to mark all Zelmane's doings, speeches and fashions, and to take them unto herself, as a pattern of worthy proceeding. Sidney.

If I'm traduc'd by tongues which neither know
My faculties, nor person, yet will be
The chronicles of my doing; let me say
'Tis but the fate of place, and the rough brake
That virtue must go through. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

At length a reverend sire among them came,
And of their doings great dislike declar'd,

3. Behaviour; conduct.

Never the earth on his round shoulders bare,
A maid train'd up from high or low degree,
That in her doings better could compare
Mirth with respect, few words with curtesy. Sidney.

4. Conduct; dispensation.

Dangerous it were for the feeble brains of man to wade far into the doings of the Most High. Hooker.

5. Stir; bustle; tumult.

Shall there be then, in the mean while, no doings? Hooker.

6. Festivity; merriment: as, jolly doings.

7. This word is now only used in a ludicrous sense, or in low, mean language.

After such miraculous doings, we are not yet in a condition of bringing France to our terms. Swift.

DOIT.† n. s. [duyt, Dutch; doyght, Erse. The Dutch duyt is the eighth part of a penny; Fr. d'huit.] A small piece of money.

When they will not give a doit to relieve a lame beggar, they will lay out ten to see a dead Indian. Shakspeare, Tempest.

In Anna's wars a soldier, poor and old,
Had dearly earn'd a little purse of gold;
Tir'd with a tedious march, one luckless night,
He slept, poor dog! and lost it to a doit. Pope.

DOLE.† n. s. [from deal; bælan, Sax. dailjan, Goth.]

1. The act of distribution or dealing.

The Holy Ghoost maketh his dole in otherwise than other people; for they dele as lyketh them, &c. Liber. Fest. fol. 42. b.

It was your presurmise,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop. Shakspeare.

The personal fruition in any man cannot reach to feel great riches: there is a custody of them, or a power of dole and donative of them, or a fame of them, but no solid use to the owner. Bacon, Ess. of Riches.

At her general dole
Each receives his ancient soul. Cleaveland.

2. Any thing dealt out or distributed.

Now, my masters, happy man be his dole say I; every man to his business. Shakspeare.

Let every man beg his own way, and happy man be his dole. Beaum. and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

But lest some may haply think, or thus expostulate with me after this debatement, who made you the busy almoner to deal about this dole of laughter and reprehension, which no man thanks your bounty for. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

Let us, that are unhurt and whole,
Fall on, and happy man be's dole. Hudibras.

3. Provisions or money distributed in charity, at any time; formerly at funerals more especially.

I know you were one could keep
The buttery-hatch still lock'd, and save the chippings,
Sell the dole beer to aqua-vitæ men. B. Jonson, Alchemist.

Our doles and funeral meals, if they be our own early provisions, will then spend the better. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § 9. ch. 4.

They had such firm dependence on the day,
That Need grew pamper'd, and forgot to pray;
So sure the dole, so ready at their call,
They stood prepar'd to see the manna fall. Dryden.

Clients of old were feasted; now a poor
Divided dole is dealt at th' outward door,
Which by the hungry rout is soon dispatch'd. Dryden, Juv.

4. Blows dealt out.

I have seen him——
——In the head of a troop stand as if he had been rooted,
Dealing large doles of death. Beaum. and Fl. Isl. Princess.

What if his eye-sight, for to Israel's God
Nothing is hard, by miracle restor'd,
He now be dealing dole among his foes,
And over heaps of slaughter'd walk his way? Milton, S. A.

5. [from dolor, Lat. Dr. Johnson says; it is rather from the old Fr. dole.] Grief; sorrow; misery.

Yonder they lie; the poor old man, their father, making such pitiful dole over them, that all beholders take his part with weeping. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Our sometime sister, now our queen,
Have we, as 'twere, with a defeated joy,
With mirth in funeral, and with dirge in marriage,
In equal scale weighing delight and dole,
Taken to wife. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

They might hope to change
Torment with ease, and soonest recompense
Dole with delight. Milton, P. L.

6. Bound or division of land. [Sax. bælan, to divide, to mark out. However, "les doles de forest," are the bounds of the forest, in old French. Kelham, Norm. Dict.] This sense is yet used in some parts of England; a dole-stone in Norfolk is a land-mark.

Cursed be he which translateth the bounds and doles of his neighbour.

Injunctions of Q. Eliz. 1559, sign. B. iii.

Accursed be he, saith Almighty God by Moses, who removeth his neighbour's doles and marks. Homilies, B. ii. Exhort. for Rog. Week.

To DOLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To deal; to distribute. Dict.

Do'LEFUL. adj. [dole and full.]

1. Sorrowful; dismal; expressing grief; querulous.

She earnestly entreated to know the cause thereof, that either she might comfort or accompany her doleful humour. Sidney.

For none but you, or who of you it learns,
Can rightfully aread so doleful lay. Spenser, F. Q.

With screwed face and doleful whine, they only ply with senseless harangues of conscience against carnal ordinances. South.

Just then the hero cast a doleful cry,
And in those ardent flames began to fry:
The blind contagion rag'd within his veins. Dryden.

2. Melancholy; afflicted; feeling grief; sorrowful.

How oft my doleful sire cry'd to me, tarry, son,
When first he spied my love. Sidney.

3. Dismal; impressing sorrow; dolorifick.

It watereth the heart, to the end it may fructify; maketh the virtuous, in trouble, full of magnanimity and courage; serveth as a most approved remedy against all doleful and heavy accidents, which befal men in this present life. Hooker.

No light, but rather darkness visible
Serv'd only to discover sights of woe,
Regions of sorrow! doleful shades! where peace
And rest can never dwell! Milton, P. L.

Happy the mortal man! who now at last
Has through this doleful vale of mis'ry past;
Who to his destin'd stage has carry'd on
The tedious load, and laid his burden down. Prior.

Do'LEFULLY.† adv. [from doleful.] In a doleful manner; sorrowfully; dismally; querulously.

These and such other things she said so dolefully, as no one could hear her that would not deem her to be one of the most esteemed and loyal damsels of the world. Shelton, Tr. of D. Quix. iv. 7.

They tragically exaggerate the matters they take to be ill, and dolefully forebode worse, to cast a damp on their own spirits, and exasperate or deject all whom they can influence. B. Jenks, Serm. 5 Nov. 1689, p. 26.

Do'LEFULNESS. n. s. [from doleful.]

Do'LENT.* adj. [old Fr. dolent; Lat. dolens.] Sorrowful. Old English. Chalmers.

DO'LESOME. adj. [from dole.] Melancholy; gloomy; dismal; sorrowful; doleful.

Hell-ward bending o'er the beach, descry
The dolesome passage to th' infernal sky.
Pope, Odyssey.

DO'LESOMELY. adv. [from dolesome.] In a dolesome manner.

DO'LESOMENESS. n. s. [from dolesome.] Gloom; melancholy; dismalness.

DOLL.† n. s.

1. A contraction of Dorothy.

Doll Tearsheet. Shakspeare.

2. A little girl's puppet or baby. Of this word Dr. Johnson gives no derivation. It may have been adopted from the old French dol, trumpery, a trick; or it may be an abbreviation of idol. Cooper, in his old Latin Dictionary, (1578,) renders capitulum lepidissimum, "O pleasant companion, O little pretie doll polle!"

DO'LLAR.† n. s. [daler, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says. Mr. Horne Tooke strangely thinks that Skinner's opinion respecting this word is reasonable, viz. that it belongs to the Sax. ðal, a portion, because it is half a ducat! This word, which is the Teutonick thaler, is rather from thale or dale, a valley; this coin having first been coined in the valley of St. Joachim. See Shaw's Travels, 4to. p. 252. See also Du Cange in V. DALERUS.] A Dutch and German coin of different value, from about two shillings and sixpence to four and sixpence.

He disburs'd
Ten thousand dollars for our gen'ral use.
Shakspeare, Macb.

DO'LOR.* See DOLOUR.

DOLORI'FEROUS.* adj. [dolor and fero, Lat.] Producing pain.

Whether or not wine may be granted in such doloriferous affects in the joints.
Whitaker, Blood of the Grape, p. 74.

DOLORI'FICAL.* adj. [Lat. dolorificus.] Causing sorrow. See DOLORIFICK.
Cockeram.

DOLORI'FICK. adj. [dolorificus, Lat.] Causing grief or pain.

The pain returned, dissipating that vapour which obstructed the nerves, and giving the dolorifick motion free passage again. Ray.

This, by the softness and rarity of the fluid, is insensible, and not dolorifick. Arbuthnot on Air.

DO'LOROUS.† adj. [doloreux, doloros, old Fr. from dolor, Latin.]

1. Sorrowful; doleful; dismal; gloomy; impressing sorrow.

We are taught by his example, that the presence of dolorous and dreadful objects, even in minds most perfect, may, as clouds, overcast all seasonable joy. Hooker.

You take me in too dolorous a sense:
I spake t' you for your comfort. Shakspeare.

Through many a dark and dreary vale
They pass'd, and many a region dolorous,
O'er many a frozen, many a fiery alp,
Rocks, caves, lakes, fens, bogs, dens, and shades of death. Milton, P. L.

Talk not of ruling in this dol'rous gloom,
Nor think vain words, he cry'd, can ease my doom.
Pope.

2. Painful.

How doth thine own weight torment thee, whiles thy whole body rests upon this forced and dolorous hold, till thy nailed feet bear their part in a no less afflictive supportation!
Bp. Hall, Contemp. The Crucifixion.

Their despatch is quick, and less dolorous than the paw of the bear, or teeth of the lion.
More, Antid. against Atheism.

DO'LOROUSLY.* adv. [from dolorous. Old Fr. doloreusement.] Sorrowfully; mournfully.

It provoketh us also—with Christ and his apostles dolorously to lament the sore decay of the wicked.
Bale on the Revel. (1550,) P. i. sign. L. 8. b.

The widow and children for some days exclude themselves; and, when abroad, go dolorously habited. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 378.

DO'LOUR. n. s. [dolor, Latin.]

1. Grief; sorrow.

I've words too few to take my leave of you,
When the tongue's office should be prodigal,
To breathe th' abundant dolour of the heart.
Shakspeare.

2. Lamentation; complaint.

Never troubling him, either with asking questions, or finding fault with his melancholy; but rather fitting to his dolour dolorous discourses of their own and other folks' misfortune. Sidney.

3. Pain; pang.

A mind fixed and bent upon somewhat that is good, doth avert the dolours of death. Bacon.

DO'LPHIN.† n. s. [delphin, Latin; though the dolphin is supposed to be not the same fish. But our word is the Teut. dolfyn.] The name of a fish.

His delights
Were dolphin like; they shew'd his back above
The element they liv'd in. Shakspeare.

Draw boys riding upon goats, eagles, and dolphins. Peacham.

DOLT.† n. s. [dol, Teutonick; dolheyd, Teut. madness; dal, Su. stupid; Sax. ðol, and Goth. dwalla, the same; whence the Sax. verb ðpolian, to stupify, to make dull. Dolt is dulled, as Mr. H. Tooke has observed. The French word for our dolt is badault, or lourdault.] A heavy stupid fellow; a blockhead; a thickscull; a loggerhead.

Let dolts in haste some altar fair erect
To those high powers which idly sit above. Sidney.

Thou hast not half that power to do me harm,
As I have to be hurt: oh, gull; oh, dolt!
As ignorant as dirt! Shakspeare, Othello.

Like men condemn'd to thunder-bolts,
Who, ere the blow, become mere dolts;
They neither have the hearts to stay,
Nor wit enough to run away. Hudibras.

Wood's adult'rate copper,
Which, as he scatter'd, we, like dolts,
Mistook at first for thunder-bolts. Swift.

To DOLT.* v. a. [from the noun.] To make dull. I have heard the word so spoken, but know no instance of it in books.

To DOLT.* v. n. To behave foolishly; to consume time like a dolt.

Than in these trifles to have dolted so much.
New Custom.

DO'LTISH.† adj. [from dolt.] Stupid; mean; dull; blockish.

Your argument is, as you are; unlearned, fantastical, and doltish.
Bale, Yet a Course, &c. (1543,) fol. 62. b.

Dametas, the most arrant doltish clown, that ever was without the privilege of a bauble. Sidney.

Their neglect of all sound literature, and their liking of all doltish and monastical schoolmen, daily increased.
Milton, Animad. Rem. Def. i. 193.

DO'LTISHNESS.* n. s. [from doltish.] Folly; stupidity.

We have nothing but scurrility, unworthy of any chaste ears; or some extreme shew of doltishness, indeed, fit to lift up a loud laughter, and nothing else. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

DOM.* Sax. ðom, power, dominion. Dr. Johnson in birthdom refers to dom, of which, however, there is no notice in his dictionary. It is found only in composition.

Kingdom, dukedom, earldom, — meant originally the domain or property of the king, duke, or earl; and in a secondary sense dom was afterwards applied to express quality, state, condition, or property of another kind, as freedom.
Whiter, Etym. Magn. p. 210.

DO'MABLE.† adj. [domabilis, Lat.] Tamable. Cockeram.

DOMA'IN.† n. s. [domaine, Fr. from dominium, Lat.]

1. Dominion; empire.

Rome's great emperour, whose wide domain
Had ample territory, wealth and pow'r.
Milton, P. L.

Ocean trembles for his green domain. Thomson.

2. Possession; estate.

A Latian field, with fruitful plains,
And a large portion of the king's domains.
Dryden, Æn.

3. The land about a mansion-house occupied by the lord.

But now nor shaggy hill, nor pathless plain,
Forms the lone refuge of the sylvan game;
Since Lyttelton has crown'd the sweet domain
With softer pleasures and with fairer fame.
Shenstone.

DO'MAL.* adj. [low Lat. doma, house.] Relating to the astrological use of house. See HOUSE.

Mars is now entering into the first house, and will shortly appear in all his domal dignities.
Addison, Drummer.

DOME.† n. s. [dome, French, from domus, Lat.]

1. A building; a house; a fabrick.

Best be he call'd among good men,
Who to his God this column rais'd:
Though lightning strike the dome again,
The man who built it shall be prais'd. Prior.

Stranger! whoe'er thou art, securely rest,
Affianc'd in my faith, a friendly guest:
Approach the dome, the social banquet share.
Pope, Odyss.

2. A hemispherical arch; a cupola.

And urns, and domes, and cells, and grottoes.
Shenstone.

DOMESDAY.* See DOOMSDAY.

DO'MESMAN.* n. s. [ðome, Sax. judgement.] An umpire; a judge. Not now in use.

And Jesus stood before the domesman, and the justise axide him and seide, Art thou kyng of Jewis? Wicliffe, St. Matt. xxvii.

The domesman is one of those that sit in the court in judicature with the steward.
Blount, Anc. Ten. p. 165.

DOME'STICAL. }
DOME'STICK. } adj. [domesticus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to the house; not relating to things publick.

The necessities of man had at the first no other helps and supplies than domestical; such as that which the prophet implyeth, saying, Can a mother forget her child? Hooker.

The practical knowledge of the domestick duties is the principal glory of a woman.
Richardson, Clarissa.

2. Private; done at home; not open.

In this their domestical celebration of the Passover, they divided supper into two courses.
Hooker.

Beholding thus, O, happy as a queen!
We cry; but shift the gaudy, flatt'ring scene,
View her at home in her domestick light,
For thither she must come, at least at night.
Granville.

3. Inhabiting the house; not wild.

The faithful prudent husband is an honest, tractable, and domestick animal. Addison, Spect.

4. Not foreign; intestine.

Domestical evils, for that we think we can master them at all times, are often permitted to run on forward, till it be too late to recall them.
Hooker, Dedication.

Equality of two domestick pow'rs
Breeds scrupulous faction.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Combine together 'gainst the enemy;
For these domestick and particular broils
Are not the question here. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Such they were, who might presume t'have done
Much for the king and honour of the state;
Having the chiefest actions undergone,
Both foreign and domestical of late. Daniel.

Next to the sin of those who began that rebellion, theirs must needs be who hindered the speedy suppressing of it, by domestick dissentions.
King Charles.

DOME'STICALLY.* adv. [from domestical.] Relatively to the domestick character or affairs; privately; not openly.

Is it not a miracle, that so many of your Priests, Ignatians, and Monks feeding here in England, daintily, arrayed gallantly, lodging softly, should be very domestically and privily conversant with ladies, dames, matrons, maids of all sorts, and yet none of all these be scorched?
Sheldon, Miracles of Antichrist, (1616,) p. 135.

He was glad — to return to Sheene, where he lived domestically as usual, till the death of Sir W. Temple. Orrery on Swift, Lett. 2.

DOME'STICANT.* adj. [from domestick.] Forming part of the same family.

The power — was virtually residing and domesticant in the plurality of his assessors.
Sir E. Dering's Speeches, p. 71.

To DOME'STICATE.† v. a. [from domestick.]

1. To make domestick; to withdraw from the publick. Richardson, Clarissa.

2. To familiarize; to render, as it were, of the same family. This is the primitive sense of the word, which is not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

It is true, that the symptoms are well allayed, or otherwise peradventure custom hath taught me to bear them better, being now familiarized and domesticated evils, Jam mansueta mala.
Sir H. Wotton, Letters, p. 366.

Having the entry into your houses, and being half domesticated by their situation.
Burke, Lett. to a Member of the Nat. Assembly.

DOME'STICK. n. s. One kept in the same house.

A servant dwells remote from all knowledge of his lord's purposes; he lives as a kind of foreigner under the same roof; a domestick, and yet a stranger too. South.

DO'MICILE.* n. s. [Fr. domicile; Lat. domicilium. Burke uses the Latin word, as if he had not known of the English. It is not indeed in our lexicography. But the example which I adduce, is of the date of a century and a half since.] A house.

This famous domicile was brought with these appurtenances in one night from Nazareth over seas and lands by mighty Angels; and can, if honoured with a visit, with an offering, or with a vow, cure in a moment all diseases.
Brevint, Saul and Samuel at Endor, p. 303.

DO'MICILED.* part. adj. [from the noun.] Having an abode.

P. Ryan, an Irishman by birth, but for many years domiciled in Denmark, died in London, &c.
Dr. Phillimore's Reports, vol. 2. p. 332.

DOMICI'LIARY.* adj. [Lat. domicilium. This word, as Mr. Mason also has observed, has arisen out of the practice of the late French republican tyranny.] Intruding into private houses.

Supervisors of domiciliary visitation. Burke.

To DOMICI'LIATE.* v. a. [Lat. domicilium.] To render domestick or familiar. A modern word.

Arbuthnot on Coins.

3. One highly exalted in power: used of angelick beings.

He heav'n of heav'ns, and all the pow'rs therein,
By thee created; and by thee threw down
Th' aspiring dominations. Milton, P. L.

Hear all ye angels, progeny of light,
Thrones, dominations, princedoms, virtues, pow'rs.
Milton, P. L.

DO'MINATIVE.† adj. [from dominate.]

1. Imperious; insolent. Dict.

2. Presiding; governing.

To each thing hath the goodness of that Architect imparted a peculiar badge of honour, that nothing should be despisable in the eyes of other, the prince in majesty and sovereignty of power, the nobility in wisdom and dominative virtue.
Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

DO'MINATOR.† n. s. [Latin.]

1. The presiding or predominant power or influence.

Jupiter and Mars are dominators for this North-west part of the world, which maketh the people impatient of servitude, lovers of liberty, martial and courageous. Camden, Remains.

2. The absolute governour, or ruler.

God, who is the dominator of glory, gives and takes it away, as seemeth good to him.
Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 155.

To DOMINE'ER. v. n. [dominor, Lat.] To rule with insolence; to swell; to bluster; to act without controul.

Go to the feast, revel and domineer,
Carouse full measure. Shaksp. Tam. of the Shrew.

The voice of conscience now is low and weak, chastising the passions, as old Eli did his lustful domineering sons. South.

Both would their little end secure;
He sighs for freedom, she for pow'r;
His wishes tend abroad to roam,
And hers to domineer at home. Prior.

To DOMINE'ER.* v. a. To govern.

Think'st thou, because my friend, with humble fervour,
Kneels to Omnipotence, each gossip's dream,
Each village-fable domineers in turn
His brain's distemper'd nerves?
Walpole, Myster. Mother, ii. 2.

DOMI'NICAL.† adj. [dominicalis, Lat.]

1. Noting the Lord's day, or Sunday.

The cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations. Holder on Time.

2. Noting the prayer of our Lord Christ.

The Dominical Prayer, and the Apostolical Creed, (whereof there was such a hot dispute in our last conversation,) are two Acts tending to the same object of devotion. Howell, Lett. iv. 29.

DOMI'NICAL.* n. s. The Lord's day, or Sunday.

The whole space betwixt this and Pentecost, and every dominical in the year.
Hammond, Serm. ix.

DO'MINO. n. s. [Ital.] A kind of hood worn by canons of cathedral churches in Italy; also a dress formerly much worn at Venice; and adopted in this country as a masquerade-garment.

DOMI'NION. n. s. [dominium, Lat.]

1. Sovereign authority; unlimited power.

They on the earth
Dominion exercise, and in the air,
Chiefly on man. Milton, P. L.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl,
Dominion absolute; that right we hold
By his donation: but man over man
He made not lord. Milton, P. L.

Blest use of pow'r, O virtuous pride in kings!
And like his bounty, whence dominion springs.
Tickell.

2. Power; right of possession or use, without being accountable.

He could not have private dominion over that, which was under the private dominion of another.
Locke.

3. Territory; region; district; considered as subject.

The donations of bishopricks the kings of England did ever retain in all their dominions, when the pope's usurped authority was at the highest.
Davies on Ireland.

4. Predominance; ascendant.

Objects placed foremost ought to be more finished than those cast behind, and to have dominion over things confused and transient.
Dryden, Dufresnoy.

5. An order of angels.

By him were all things created, visible and invisible, whether they be thrones or dominions, or principalities or powers. Col. i. 16.

DON. n. s. [dominus, Lat.] The Spanish title for a gentleman; as, Don Quixote. It is with us used ludicrously.

To the great dons of wit,
Phœbus gives them full privilege alone,
To damn all others, and cry up their own. Dryden.

To DON.† v. a. [To do on.] To put on; to invest with; the contrary to doff.

He dyde on his clothes.
Liber Festivalis, fol. 53. b.

The purple morning left her crimson bed,
And don'd her robes of pure vermillion hue.
Fairfax.

Her helm the virgin don'd. Fairfax.
Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes.
Song in Hamlet.

What! should I don this robe, and trouble you?
Tit. Andronicus.

DO'NARY.† n. s. [donarium, Lat.] A thing given to sacred uses.

Æsculapius of old, that counterfeit god, did as many famous cures; his temple (as Strabo relates) was daily full of patients, and as many several tables, inscriptions, pendants, donaries, &c. to be seen in his Church.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 225.

DONA'TION. n. s. [donatio, Lat.]

1. The act of giving any thing; the act of bestowing.

He gave us only over beast, fish, fowl
Dominion absolute; that right we hold
By his donation. Milton, P. L.

After donation there is an absolute change and alienation made of the property of the thing given; which being so alienated, a man has no more to do with it than with a thing bought with another's money. South.

2. The grant by which any thing is given or conferred.

Howsoever the letter of that donation may be unregarded by men, yet the sense thereof is so imprinted in their hearts, as if every one laid claim for himself unto that which was conferred upon all. Ralegh, Essays.

The kingdoms of the world to thee were giv'n,
Permitted rather, and by thee usurp'd,
Other donation none thou canst produce.
Milton, P. R.

DO'NATIVE. n. s. [donatif, Fr. from donatus, Lat.]

1. A gift; a largess; a present; a dole of money distributed.

The Roman emperour's custom was, at certain solemn times, to bestow on his soldiers a donative; which donative they received, wearing garlands upon their heads. Hooker.

They were entertained with publick shews and donatives, to make them more easily digest their lost liberty. Dryden.

2. [In law.] A benefice merely given and collated by the patron to a man, without either presentation to the ordinary, or institution by the ordinary, or induction by his orders. Cowel.

Never did steeple carry double truer;
His is the donative, and mine the cure. Cleaveland.

DONE.† part. pass. of the verb To Do. Formerly written doen.

Another like fair tree eke grew thereby,
Whereof who so did eat, eftsoons did know
Both good and evil: O mournful memory!
That tree, through one man's fault, hath done us all to dye. Spenser, F. Q.

DONE.*

1. The infinitive of Do, in our old language; as in Spenser, "as maydens used to done."

2. Sometimes used for do in the indicative mood.

Ne to your lady will I service done.
Spenser, F. Q.

DONE. a kind of interjection. The word by which a wager is concluded; when a wager is offered, he that accepts it says done.

Done: the wager? Shakspeare, Tempest.

One thing, sweet-heart, I will ask;
Take me for a new-fashion'd mask.
— Done: but my bargain shall be this,
I'll throw my mask off when I kiss. Cleaveland.

'Twas done and done, and the fox, by consent, was to be the judge. L'Estrange.

DONEE'.* n. s. [from dono, Lat.] The person to whom a gift is made.

There is an errour all over; but whether are most to blame, you may judge between the donor and the donee; if one would not give, the other could not receive.
Sir M. Sandys, Ess. (1634,) p. 217.

Touching the parties unto deeds and charters, we are to consider as well the donors and granters, as the donees or grantees. Spelman.

DO'NJON.† n. s. [now corrupted to dungeon, from domnionum, low Latin, according to Menage; old Fr. dongeoun, or donjon. V. Cotgrave.]

1. A strong tower in the middle of a castle or fort, wherein the besieged make their last efforts of defence, when the rest is forced. Cotgrave.

The keep or dungeon [was] generally a large square tower, flanked at its angles by small turrets, having within them one or more wells.
Grose, Military Antiq. ii. 3.

2. A tower or place in which prisoners were kept; now used of subterraneous prisons.

The grete toure, that was so thicke and strong,
Which of the castle was the chief dongeon,
Wherein the knightes were in prison,
Was evin joynant to the garden-wall,
Ther as this Emely had her playeing. Chaucer.

DO'NNAT.* n. s. [do and naught.] An idle, good-for-nothing person; who is employed only in doing mischief. A word yet used in the north of England, where it is also applied to the devil. Pronounced sometimes dannot.

Crafty and proud donaughts.
Granger on Ecclesiastes, (1621,) p. 248.

DO'NOR. n. s. [from dono, Lat.] A giver; a bestower; one who gives any thing.

Litters thick besiege the donor's gate,
And begging lords and teeming ladies wait
The promis'd dole. Dryden, Juv.

It is a mighty check to beneficent tempers to consider how often good designs are frustrated and perverted to purposes, which, could the donors themselves have foreseen, they would have been very loth to promote. Atterbury.

DO'NSHIP. n. s. [from don.] Quality or rank of a gentleman or knight.

I'm none of those,
Your bosom-friends, as you suppose,
But Ralph himself, your trusty squire,
Wh' has dragg'd your donship out o'th' mire.
Hudibras.

DO'NZEL.* n. s. [Italian; low Lat. domicellus. See DAMSEL.] A page.

He is esquire to a knight-errant, donzel to the damsels. Butler's Characters.

DOO'DLE. n. s. [a cant word, perhaps corrupted from do little, Faineant.] A trifler; an idler.

DOOLE.* So Spenser sometimes writes dole, as he also writes doleful, doolful.

To DOOM.† v. a. [deman, Saxon; doemen, Dutch; Su. doma; Icel. dema; Goth. domjan.]

1. To judge.

Him through malice fall'n,
Father of mercy and grace! thou didst not doom
So strictly, but much more to pity incline.
Milton, P. L.

2. To condemn to any punishment; to sentence.

He may be doom'd to chains, to shame, to death,
While proud Hippolitus shall mount his throne.
Smith.

Justly th' impartial fates conspire,
Dooming that son to be the sire
Of such another son. Granville.

3. To pronounce condemnation upon any.

Minos, the strict inquisitor, appears,
And lives and crimes, with his assessors, hears;
Round in his urn the blended balls he rolls,
Absolves the just, and dooms the guilty souls.
Dryden, Æn.

4. To command judicially or authoritatively.

Have I a tongue to doom my brother's death?
And shall that tongue give pardon to a slave?
Shakspeare.

5. To destine; to command by uncontrollable authority.

Fate and the gods, by their supreme command,
Have doom'd our ships to seek the Latian land.
Dryden, Æn.

I have no will but what your eyes ordain;
Destin'd to love, as they are doom'd to reign.
Granville.

DOOM.† n. s. [dom, Saxon; doem, Dutch.]

1. Judicial sentence; judgement.

He's fled, my lord, and all his pow'rs do yield;
And humbly thus, with halters on their necks,
Expect your highness' doom of life or death. Shaks.

To Satan, first in sin, his doom apply'd,
Though in mysterious terms, judg'd as then best.
Milton, P. L.

And now, without redemption, all mankind
Must have been lost, adjudg'd to death and hell
By doom severe. Milton, P. L.

In the great day, wherein the secrets of all hearts shall be laid open, no one shall be made to answer for what he knows nothing of; but shall receive his doom, his conscience accusing or excusing him. Locke.

2. The great and final judgement.

Search Windsor-castle, elves within and out:
Strew good luck, Ouphes, on every sacred room,
That it may stand till the perpetual doom. Shaksp.

3. Condemnation; judicial sentence.

Revoke thy doom,
Or whilst I can vent clamour from my throat,
I'll tell thee thou do'st evil. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. Determination declared.

If friend or foe, let him be gently used.
— Revoke that doom of mercy; for 'tis Clifford.
Shakspeare.

5. The state to which one is destined.

By day the web and loom,
And homely household-task shall be her doom.
Dryden, Iliad.

6. Ruin; destruction.

From the same foes, at last, both felt their doom,
And the same age saw learning fall, and Rome.
Pope.

7. Discrimination; discernment.

In him no point of courtesy there lact:
He was of manners mild, of doom exact.
Mir. for Mag. p. 175.

DOO'MSDAY.† n. s. [Sax. dom and dæg.]

1. The day of final and universal judgement; the last, the great day.

Men, wives, and children stare, cry out, and run,
As it were doomsday. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

They may serve for any theme, and never be out of date until doomsday. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Our souls, not yet prepar'd for upper light,
Till doomsday wander in the shades of night:
This only holiday of all the year,
We privileg'd in sunshine may appear. Dryden.

2. The day of sentence or condemnation.

All-souls day is my body's doomsday.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

DOOMSDAY-BOOK.† n. s. [doomsday and book. Sometimes also called doom-book, as in Sadler's Rights of the Kingdom, 1649. Sax. dom-boc. Sometimes simply, domesday.] A book made by order of William the Conqueror, in which the estates of the kingdom were registered.

King Alfred, about the year 900, composed a book of this nature, which was extant at Winchester at the coming-in of the Conqueror, but is since lost. But the incomparable record of domesday, now remaining at the chapter-house at Westminster, and lately printed, was begun by order of William the Conqueror, with the advice of his parliament, in the year of our Lord 1080, and completed in the year 1086. Commissioners were sent into every county, and juries summoned and impannelled in each hundred out of all orders of freemen, from barons down to the lowest farmers, to give in upon oath to the commissioner, by verdict or presentment, due information. Kelham.

The Danes also brought in a reckoning of money by ores, per oras, which is mentioned in doomsday-book. Camden.

DOO'MSMAN.* See DOMESMAN.

DOO'MFUL.* adj. [from doom.] Full of destruction.

As 'twere by scars to show
That still she must remain disfigur'd with the blow;
And by th' infectious slime that doomful deluge left,
Nature herself hath since of purity been reft.
Drayton's Polyolb. S. 9.

DOOR.† n. s. [ᵹop, ᵹupe, Saxon; dorris, Erse; daur, M. Goth. dyr, dur, Icel. and old Goth. darr, Pers. See Sir T. Herbert's Trav. p. 317.]

1. The gate of a house; that which opens to yield entrance. Door is used of houses, and gates of cities, or publick buildings, except in the licence of poetry.

All the castle quaked from the ground,
And every door of free-will open flew.
Spenser, F. Q.

In the side a door
Contriv'd; and of provisions laid in large,
For man and beast. Milton, P. L.

To the same end men sev'ral paths may tread,
As many doors into one temple lead. Denham.

For without rules there can be no art, any more than there can be a house without a door to conduct you in. Dryden.

2. In familiar language, a house; often in the plural, doors.

Lay one piece of flesh or fish in the open air, and another of the same kind and bigness within doors. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Let him doubt whether his clothes be warm, and so go naked; whether his house be firm, and live without doors. Decay of Piety.

Martin's office is now the second door in the street, where he will see Parnel. Arbuthnot.

Lambs, though they are bred within doors, and never saw the actions of their own species, push at those who approach them with their foreheads. Addison, Spect.

The sultan entered again the peasant's house, and turned the owner out of doors. Addison, Guardian.

3. Entrance; portal.

The tender blades of grass appear,
And buds, that yet the blast of Eurus fear,
Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the year. Dryden.

4. Passage; avenue; means of approach.

The indispensable necessity of sincere obedience, shuts the door against all temptations to carnal security. Hammond.

5. Out of DOOR, or DOORS. No more to be found; quite gone; fairly sent away.

Should he, who was thy lord, command thee now,
With a harsh voice and supercilious brow,
To servile duties, thou would'st fear no more;
The gallows and the whip are out of door.
Dryden, Persius.

His imaginary title of fatherhood is out of doors, and Cain is no prince over his brother. Locke.

6. At the DOOR of any one. Imputable; chargeable upon him.

In any of which parts, if I have failed, the fault lies wholly at my door. Dryden, Dufresnoy, Pref.

7. Next DOOR to. Approaching to; near to; bordering upon.

A seditious word leads to a broil, and a riot unpunished is but next door to a tumult. L'Estrange.

DOO'RCASE. n. s. [door and case.] The frame in which the door is inclosed.

The making of frames for doorcases, is the framing of two pieces of wood athwart two other pieces. Moxon.

DOO'RING.* n. s. [from door.] A door-case.

He reports of a whirlpool, between the Rost Islands and Lofoot, called Malestrand; which from half ebb to half flood is heard to make so terrible a noise as shakes the doorings of houses in those islands ten miles off.
Milton, Hist. Moscovia, chap. 5.

DOO'RKEEPER. n. s. [door and keeper.] Porter; one that keeps the entrance of a house.

He that hath given the following assistances to thee, desires to be even a doorkeeper in God's house, and to be a servant to the meanest of God's servants. Bp. Taylor's Pref.

DOO'RNAIL.* n. s. [door and nail.] The nail on which in ancient doors the knocker struck. See DEAD as a door-nail.

DOO'RPOST.* n. s. [door and post.] The post of a door.

He shall also bring him unto the door, or to the doorpost. Exod. xxi. 6.

DOO'RSTEAD.* n. s. [door and stead.] Entrance of the door.

Did nobody clog up the king's doorstead more than I, there would be room for all honest men.
Warburton to Hurd, Letters, L. 191.

DO'QUET. n. s. A paper containing a warrant.

Before the institution of this office, no doquet for licence to alien, nor warrant for pardon of alienation made, could be purchased without an oath.
Bacon, Office of Alienation.

To DOR.* See To DORR.

DO'REE.* n. s. [Fr. dorée.] A fish, corruptly called by us, and sometimes so written, John Dory. The word John is perhaps a corruption of the Fr. jaune, yellow; the sides of this fish being of a gold-yellow colour.

DO'RIAN.* adj. [Fr. dorien.] Used by Milton for Dorick.

The Dorian mood

DO'RICISM.* n. s. [from Dorick.] A phrase of the Dorick dialect.

We have a letter writ by Dion of Syracuse to Dionysius, tyrant of that place; and part of another, written by Dionysius himself; both preserved among the Epistles of Plato; where there is not the least shadow of Doricism; but as well the prince, as the philosopher, have written their epistles in such a dialect, as if (to use Dr. Bentley's gentlemanlike phrase) they had gone to school at Athens.
Boyle, on Bentley's Phalaris, p. 43.

DO'RICK.* adj. [from Doris, Fr. Dorique.]

1. Denoting a species of the ancient musick.

Go to their tune; the one delights in the Ionick; the other altogether in the Dorick.
Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 73.

No musick must be heard, no song be set or sung, but what is grave and Dorick.
Milton, Areopagitica.

2. Denoting an order of architecture.

Pilasters round
Were set, and Dorick pillars overlaid
With golden architrave. Milton, P. L.

DO'RMANCY.* n. s. [from dormant.] Quiescence.

The dormancy of religious oppression, and the natural conclusion that the statutes complained of are not likely to be enforced, form in my mind no reason why they should be suffered to remain.
Bp. Horsley, Parl. Reg. xxvi. 258.

DO'RMANT.† adj. [dormant, Fr.]

1. Sleeping.

He a dragon! if he be, 'tis a very peaceful one: I can insure his anger is dormant; or should he seem to rouse, 'tis well lashing him, and he will sleep like a top. Congreve, Old Bachelor.

With this radius he is said to strike and kill his prey, for which he lies, as it were, dormant, till it swims within his reach. Grew, Museum.

2. In a sleeping posture.

If a lion wear the coat of Judah, yet were it not a lion rampant, but rather couchant and dormant.
Brown.

3. Private; not publick.

There were other dormant musters of soldiers throughout all parts of the realm, that were put in readiness, but not drawn together.
Bacon, War with Spain.

4. Concealed; not divulged.

It would be prudent to reserve these privileges dormant, never to be produced but upon great occasions. Swift.

5. Leaning; not perpendicular; made in the roof of a house. See DORMANT, n. s.

Old dormant windows must confess
Her beams: their glimmering spectacles,
Struck with the splendour of her face,
Do th' office of a burning-glass. Cleaveland.

DO'RMANT.* } n. s.
DO'RMAR. }

1. A large beam; a piece of timber, sometimes called a sleeper.

Ropes —— the dormant toss'd
Now out, now in; now back, now forward cast.
Fairfax, Tasso.

In a parlour belonging to a farm-house, there was a remarkably large dormar of chesnut.
Clubbe's Antiq. of Wheatfield.

2. A window made in the roof of a house, or above the entablature; being raised upon the rafters. Chambers.

DO'RMITIVE.* n. s. [Lat. dormio.] A soporifick medicine; an opiate.

Does any distressed patient want an emetick —— or a dormitive? Arbuthnot.

This is the dormitive I take to Bedward.
Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 112.

DO'RMITORY.† n. s. [dormitorium, Lat.]

1. A place to sleep in; used commonly for a room with many beds.

Sure it was in some obscure hole of the peak, or some blind dormitory of a convent.

Bp. Hall, Hon. of Marr. Clergy.

If we be then taken down from the cross and put into the quiet chambers or dormitories, if there be seasons of rest and peace yet behind upon this earth in these our days, O they will be rich seasons of opportunity to bring forth glorious proportionable fruits of such repentance. Hammond, Serm. x.

Rooms that have thorough lights are left for entertainment, and those that have windows on one side for dormitories. Mortimer.

Naked mourns the dormitory wall,
And Jones and Boyle's united labours fall.

Pope, Dunciad.

Sloth is another principal personage: she also is discovered in the dormitory of a monastery.

Warton, Essay on Pope, p. 221.

2. A burial place. The places where dead bodies are buried, are in Latin called cœmiteria, and in English dormitories.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

New dormitories are bought for the dead, and furnished; neither might the corpses be allowed to lie single in their earthen beds, but are filled up like faggots in a stack, for the society of their future resurrection.

Bp. Hall, Serm. of Publick Thanksgiving.

He which numbreth the sands of the sea, knoweth all the scattered bones, seeth into all the graves and tombs, searcheth all the repositories and dormitories in the earth, knoweth what dust belongeth to each body, what body to each soul.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 11.

He [bishop Rust] was buried in the quire of his own cathedral church of Dromore, in a vault made for his predecessour bishop Taylor, whose sacred dust is deposited also there: and what dormitory hath two such tenants? Glanville, Lett. concerning Bp. Rust's Discourse of Truth.

DO'RMOUSE.† n. s. [dormio, to sleep, and mouse.] A small animal which passes a large part of the winter in sleep.

Dull as a dormouse. Beaum. and Fl. Ph.

Come, we all sleep, and are mere dormice flies,
A little less than dead: more dulness hangs
On us than on the moon. B. Jonson, Catiline.

After they have lain a little while, they grow as drowsy as dormice, unless they are roused.

Collier on Thought.

DORN. n. s. [from dorn, German, a thorn.] The name of a fish; perhaps the same as the thornback.

The coast is stored both with shellfish, as scallops and sheathfish, and flat, as turbets, dorns, and holybut. Carew.

DO'RNICK.† n. s. [of Doornick in Flanders, where first made.] A species of linen cloth used in Scotland for the table, Dr. Johnson says; but it means also linsey-woolsey, and sometimes coarse damask: written sometimes darnick.

Three yerds of Dornek for a pleyer's cote, 5 Hen. VIII. Lysons, Env. of Lond. i. 230.

I have got them painted with your arms,
With a fair darnex carpet of my own
Laid cross for the more state.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Gent.

DORP.* n. s. [Teut. dorp; Su. torp; Goth. thorp.] A small village.

Amsterdam — being from a mean fishing-dorp come, in a short revolution of time, by a monstrous increase of commerce and navigation, to be one of the greatest marts in Europe.

Howell, Lett. (dat. 1619,) i. i. 7.

What should they do, beset with dangers round,
No neighbouring dorp, no lodging to be found,
But bleaky plains, and bare unhospitable ground.

Dryden, Hind and Panther.

To DORR.† v. a. [dor, stupid, Teutonick; Dr. Johnson says. The Goth. and Su. dara, to infatuate, may be added.] To deafen or stupify with noise. This word I find only in Skinner, Dr. Johnson says. It is thus used, however, by the learned, and memorable, John Hales.

When we are so easily dorred and amated with every sophism, it is a certain argument of great defect of inward furniture and worth.

Hale, Rem. p. 13.

DORR. n. s. [so named probably from the noise which he makes.] A kind of flying insect, remarkable for flying with a loud noise.

Some insects fly with four wings, as all the vaginipennous, or sheathwinged, as beetles and dorrs.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

The dorr, or hedge-chafer's chief marks are these: his head is small, like that of the common beetle: this and his eyes black: his shoulder-piece, and the middle of his belly, also black; but just under the wing-shells, spotted with white. His wing-shells, legs, and the end of his tail, which is long and flat-pointed, of a light chesnut: his breast, especially, covered with a downy hair. Grew, Muscum.

DO'RRER.* n. s. [from dorr.] A drone.

There is a great number of gentlemen which cannot be content to live idle themselves, like dorrers, of that which others have laboured for.

Robinson, Tr. of Sir T. More's Utopia, 1551, B. 1.

DORSE.* n. s. [old Fr. ders, "a cloth of state, hanging full over, and falling low behind;" Cotgrave; probably from the Lat. dorsum.] A canopy. Obsolete.

Imprimis, a dorse and redorse of crymsyn velvet, with flowers of gold, in length two yards three quarters. Will of Sir R. Sutton, Life by Churton, p. 521.

DO'RSAL.* adj. [Fr. dorsal.] Belonging to the back.

The first dorsal fin is black. Pennant.

DO'RSEL.† } n. s. [dorsale, Lat. a packsad-
DO'RSER. } dle.] A pannier; a basket or bag, one of which hangs on either side a beast of burthen, for the reception of things of small bulk. It is corruptly spoken, and perhaps written dossel, Dr. Johnson says. He perhaps intended dosser; as Beaumont and Fl. and B. Jonson use the word. See DOSSER.

I may meet her
Riding from market one day, 'twixt her dorsers.

Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

DORSI'FEROUS. } adj. [dorsum and fero, or
DORSI'PAROUS. } pario, Lat.] Having the property of bearing or bringing forth on the back. It is used of plants that have the seeds on the back of their leaves, as fern; and may be properly used of the American frog, which brings forth young from her back.

DO'RSUM. n. s. [Latin.] A ridge of a hill.

I know not if it had any connection with a similar ridge, which creeping through the deep south-east valley beneath the trench of the great encampment on the brows of Catharine hill near Winchester, suddenly rises into a massy dorsum.

Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 69.

DO'RTURE.† n. s. [contracted from dormiture; dormitura, Lat. dortoir, French. Sometimes written dorter.] A dormitory; a place to sleep in.

He led us to a gallery like a dorture, where he shewed us along the one side seventeen cells, very neat. Bacon.

To a friar that begs, or to a monk in his dorter.

Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. ii. § 2.

DO'RY.* See DOREE.

DOSE.† n. s. [Gr. δόσις, Fr. dose.]

1. So much of any medicine as is taken at one time. Quincy.

The too vig'rous dose too fiercely wrought,
And added fury to the strength it brought.

Dryden, Virg.

In a vehement pain of the head he prescribed the juice of the thapsia in warm water, without mentioning the dose. Arbuthnot.

2. Any thing nauseous.

If you can tell an ignoramus in power and place, that he has a wit and understanding above all the world, I dare undertake that as fulsome a dose as you give him, he shall readily take it down. South.

3. As much of any thing as falls to a man's lot. Ludicrously.

No sooner does he peep into
The world, but he has done his doe;
Married his punctual dose of wives,
Is cuckolded, and breaks, or thrives. Hudibras.

4. Quantity.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants, while yet ourselves have a considerable dose of what makes them so. Granville.

5. It is often used of the utmost quantity of strong liquor that a man can swallow. He has his dose, that is, he can carry off no more.

To DOSE.† v. a.

1. To proportion a medicine properly to the patient or disease.

Plants seldom used in medicine, being esteemed poisonous, if corrected, and exactly dosed, may prove powerful medicines. Derham, Physico-Theol.

2. To give physic or any thing nauseous to any man in a ludicrous sense.

He may cast him upon a bold, self opinioned physician, worse than his distemper; who shall dose, and bleed, and kill him secundum artem!

South, Serm. i. 298.

DO'SIS. n. s. [Greek.] A dose.

As if a physician should prescribe a dosis or recipe to his patient of such simples, or compounded medicines, as cannot be had in this part of the world. Dr. Jackson's Works, (1673,) iii. 517.

DO'SSER.* n. s. [Fr. dossier.] A basket; a pannier. See DORSEL.

Mine old host of Ram-ally,
You ha' some market here;
Some dosser of fish,
Or fowl to fetch off. B. Jonson, Staple of News.

To hire a ripper's mare, and buy new dossers.

Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Gent.

DO'SSIL.† n. s. [not corrupted from dorsel, as Dr. Johnson thinks; but adopted from the old French dosil, a stopple.] A pledget; a nodule or lump of lint, to be laid on a sore.

Her complaints put me upon dressing with such medicaments as basilicon, with præcipitate, upon a dossil. Wiseman.

DOST. [the second person of do.]

Why then dost treat me with rebukes, instead
Of kind condoling cares, and friendly sorrow?

Addison, Cato.

DOT.† n. s. [This is derived by Skinner from dotter, German, the white of an egg, and interpreted by him a grume of pus. It has now no such signification, and seems rather corrupted from jot, a point, Dr. Johnson says. But it may rather be considered as regularly derived from our old verb dit, to close; which, however, has hitherto found no place in our lexicography, and no comment from our criticks, as to its usage by any English writer; though Mr. Tooke has observed it in the Scottish, Gawin Douglas.] A small point or spot made to mark any place in a writing; usually a period.

To DOT.† v. a. To mark with specks.

Is it not a singular phenomenon, that while the philosophers of the shambles are pricking their dotted lines upon his hide, all the while they are measuring him, his Grace is measuring me? Burke, Lett.

To DOT. v. n. [from the noun.] To make dots or spots.

DO'TAGE.† n. s. [from dote.]

1. Loss of understanding; imbecility of mind; deliriousness.

The soul in all hath one intelligence;
Though too much moisture in an infant's brain,
And too much driness in an old man's sense,
Cannot the prints of outward things retain:
Then doth the soul want work, and idle sit,
And this we childishness and dotage call. Davies.

No less are they out of the way in philosophy, pestering their heads with the sapless dotages of old Paris and Salamanca. Milton, Apol. for Smectymnuus.

I hold, that perfect joy makes all our parts
As joyful as our hearts:
Our senses tell us, if we please not them,
Our love is but a dotage, or a dream. Suckling.

2. Excessive fondness.

If on your head my fury does not turn,
Thank that fond dotage which so much you scorn. Dryden.

DO'TAL.† adj. [dotal, Fr. Cotgrave; dotalis, Lat.] Relating to the portion of a woman; constituting her portion; comprised in her portion.

Shall I, of one poor dotal town possest,
My people thin, my wretched country waste?
An exil'd prince, and on a shaking throne,
Or risk my patron's subjects, or my own.
Garth's Ovid.

DO'TARD.† n. s. [from dote.] A man whose age has impaired his intellects; a man in his second childhood; called in some provinces a twichild. Shakspeare once writes this word dotant. Mr. Tooke strangely thinks this word to be doddered.

Dotard, said he, let be thy deep advise,
Seems that through many years thy wits thee fail,
And that weak old hath left thee nothing wise,
Else never should thy judgement be so frail.
Spenser, F. Q.

I am come to insult thee for an old fantastick dotard, as thou art, in ever defending the women. Tatler, No. 266.

The sickly dotard wants a wife,
To draw off his last dregs of life. Prior.

DO'TARDLY.* adj. [from dotard.] Like a dotard; stupid.

That sunk and sottish, that dull and dotardly sin of idolatry. More, Antid. against Idolatry.

DOTA'TION.† n. s. [dotatio, Lat.]

1. The act of giving a dowry or portion. Dict.

2. Endowment.

That all the places and offices of the church be provided of such a dotation, that they may be maintained. Bacon, Consid. on the Ch. of Eng.

When the Christian religion then had taken foot in the empire, what sumptuous monuments were erected by that pious Constantine (in whom our nation claimeth a just interest) let histories speak; no stones were too precious, no metal was too costly for that happy use; and so powerful influence had that example upon Christian kings and princes, that each strove who should exceed other in the cost and splendour of those holy fabricks, the riches of their dotation, the price of their sacred vessels. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 259.

To DOTE.† v. n. [doten, Dutch; radoter, French; probably from the Goth. datt, weakness of mind.]

1. To have the intellect impaired by age or passion; to be delirious.

Unless the fear of death make me dote,
I see my son. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

A sword is upon the liars, and they shall dote; a sword is upon her mighty men, and they shall be dismayed. Jeremiah, l. 36.

Time has made you dote, and vainly tell
Of arms imagin'd, in your lonely cell:
Go, be the temple and the gods your care;
Permit to men the thought of peace and war.
Dryden, Æn.

When an old woman begins to dote, and grow chargeable to a parish, she is turned into a witch, and fills the country with extravagant fancies. Addison, Spect.

2. To be in love to extremity.

He was stricken with great affection towards me, which since is grown to such a doting love, that I was fain to get this place sometimes to retire in freely. Sidney.

Three sorts of men my soul hateth, and I am greatly offended at their life; a poor man that is proud, a rich man that is a liar, and an old adulterer that doteth. Ecclus. xxv. 2.

I have long loved her, and bestowed much on her, followed her with a doting observance. Shaksp.

To DOTE upon. To regard with excessive fondness; to love to excess.

All their prayers and love
Were set on Hereford, whom they doted on
And bless'd, and grac'd. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Forgive me, that I do not dream on thee,
Because thou seest me dote upon my love. Shaksp.

All the beauties of the court besides,
Are mad in love, and dote upon your person.
Denham.

Mark those who dote on arbitrary power,
And you shall find 'em either hot-brain'd youth,
Or needy bankrupts. Dryden.

Would you so dote upon your first desire,
As not to entertain a nobler fire?
Dryden, Ind. Emp.

We dote upon this present world, and the enjoyments of it; and 'tis not without pain and fear, and reluctancy, that we are torn from them, as if our hopes lay all within the compass of this life. Burnet.

O death, all eloquent! you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love.
Pope.

To DOTE.* v. a. To decay; to wither, to impair.

Such an old oak, though now it be doted, will not be struck down at one blow.
Bp. Howson, Serm. 1622, p. 33.

DO'TED. adj. [from the verb.] Stupid. Not used.

His sensceless speech and doted ignorance
The prince had marked well. Spenser, F. Q.

DO'TER. n. s. [from dote.]

1. One whose understanding is impaired by years; a dotard.

What should a bald fellow do with a comb, a dumb doter with a pipe, or a blind man with a looking-glass? Burton.

2. A man fondly, weakly, and excessively in love.

If in black my lady's brow be deckt,
It mourns that painting and usurping hair
Should ravish doters with a false aspect;
And therefore is she born to make black fair.
Shakspeare.

Our doters upon red and white are incessantly perplexed, by the incertainty both of the continuance of their mistress's kindness, and of the lasting of her beauty. Boyle.

DO'TINGLY.† adv. [from doting.] Fondly; by excessive fondness.

So dotingly the old one loves her young one.
Beaum. and Fl. Women Pleased.

Henceforth, thou treacherous and murthering spring,
Be ever call'd the Fountain of Self-love:
And with thy water let this curse remain,
(As an inseparate plague) that who but tastes
A drop thereof, may, with the instant touch,
Grow dotingly enamour'd on themselves.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

Thus did those tender-hearted reformers dotingly suffer themselves to be overcome with harlot's language. Milton, Apology for Smectym.

That he, to wedlock dotingly betray'd,
Should hope in this lewd town to find a maid!
Dryden, Juvenal.

DO'TTARD.† n. s. This word seems to signify a tree kept low by cutting, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Bacon. It seems also to mean a decayed tree, and perhaps should be written dotard. See To DOTE, v. a.

For great trees, we see almost all overgrown trees in church-yards, or near ancient buildings, and the like, are pollards and dottards, and not trees at their full height. Bacon.

In China they speak of a tree called maguais, which affords not only good drink, being pierced, but all things else that belong to the subsistence of man.—It bears huge nuts, which have excellent food in them; it shoots out hard prickles above a fathom long, and those arm them; with the bark they make tents; and the dotard trees serve for firing. Howell, Lett. ii. 54.

DO'TTEREL. n. s. [from dote.] The name of a bird that mimicks gestures.

We see how ready apes and monkeys are to imitate all motions of man; and, in catching of dotterels, we see how the foolish bird playeth the ape in gestures. Bacon.

*DOUANEE'R. n. s. [French.] An officer of customs.

The entrance is guarded by certain vigilant dragons, called douaneers, who mumbled us for some time. Gray, Lett. to West.

DO'UBLE. adj. [double, French; duplex, Latin; duple, Erse.]

1. Two of a sort; one corresponding to the other; in pairs.

All things are double one against another, and he hath made nothing imperfect. Ecclus. xlii. 24.

2. Twice as much; containing the same quantity repeated. It is sometimes used with to, and sometimes without.

Great honours are great burthens; but, on whom
They are cast with envy, he doth bear two loads:
His cares must still be double to his joys,
In any dignity. B. Jonson, Catiline.

This sum of forty thousand pounds is almost double to what is sufficient. Swift, Draper's Letters.

3. Having one added to another; having more than one in the same order or parallel.

It is a curiosity also to make flowers double, which is effected by often removing them into new earth; as, on the contrary part, double flowers by neglecting, and not removing, prove single. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I met a reverend, fat, old gouty friar,
With a paunch swoln so high, his double chin
Might rest upon't. Dryden, Span. Friar.

4. Twofold; of two kinds.

Thus cursed steel, and more accursed gold,
Gave mischief birth, and made that mischief bold;
And double death did wretched man invade,
By steel assaulted, and by gold betray'd.
Dryden, Ovid.

No star appears to lend his friendly light;
Darkness and tempest make a double night. Dryden.

5. Two in number.

And if one power did not both see and hear,
Our sights and sounds would always double be.
Davies.

6. Having twice the effect or influence; having the power of two. Not used.

I' th' presence
He would say untruths, and be ever double
Both in his words and meaning. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

Fifty thousand could keep rank, that were not of double heart. 1 Chron. xii. 33.

DOUBLE. adv. Twice over.

I am not so old in proportion to them as I formerly was, which I can prove by arithmetick; for then I was double their age, which now I am not. Swift.

DOUBLE is much used in composition, generally for doubly, two ways; as double-edged, having an edge on each side; or for twice the number or quantity, as double-died, twice died.

DOUBLE-BITING. adj. [double and bite.] Biting or cutting on either side.

But most their looks on the black monarch bend,
His rising muscles and his brawn commend;
His double-biting ax, and beamy spear,
Each asking a gigantick force to rear.
Dryden, Fables.

DOUBLE-BUTTONED. adj. [double and buttoned.] Having two rows of buttons.

Others you'll see, when all the town's afloat,
Wrapt in th' embraces of a kersey coat,
Or double-button'd frieze. Gay, Trivia.

To DOUBLE-CHARGE.* v. a. [double and charge.] To charge or entrust with a double proportion.

I will double-charge thee with dignities.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

DOUBLE-DEALER. n. s. [double and dealer.] A deceitful, subtle, insidious fellow; one who acts two parts at the same time; one who says one thing and thinks another.

Double-dealers may pass muster for a while; but all parties wash their hands of them in the conclusion. L'Estrange.

DOUBLE-DEALING. n. s. [double and dealing.] Artifice; dissimulation; low or wicked cunning; the action of one thing with the profession of another.

Thou shalt not be the worse for me; there's gold.
—But that it would be double-dealing, sir, I would you could make it another. Shaksp. Tw. Night.

Our poets have joined together such qualities as are by nature most compatible; valour with anger, meekness with piety, and prudence with dissimulation: this last union was necessary for the goodness of Ulysses; for without that, his dissimulation might have degenerated into wickedness and double-dealing. Broome, View of Epic Poetry.

To DOUBLE-DIE. v. a. [double and die.] To die twice over.

Yes, I'll to the royal bed,
Where first the mysteries of our love were acted,
And double-die it with imperial crimson.
Dryden and Lee.

DOUBLE-EDGED.* adj. [double and edge.] Having two edges: as, "a double-edged sword." Huloet.

DOUBLE ENTENDRE. n. s. [Fr.] A double signification of a sentence or expression; a species of low wit.

DOUBLE-MINDED. adj. [double and mind.] Unsettled; undetermined.

A double-minded man is unstable in all his ways.
James.

DOUBLE-MOUTHED. * adj. [double and mouth.] Having different mouths.

Fame, if not double-fac'd, is double-mouth'd.
Milton, S. A.

DOUBLE-NATURED.* adj. [double and nature.] Having a two-fold nature.

Two kinds of life has double-natur'd man,
And two of death. Young, Night Th. 7.

DOUBLE-PLEA. n. s. [duplex placitum, Lat.] Is that in which the defendant alleges for himself two several matters, in bar of the action, whereof either is sufficient to effect his desire in debarring the plaintiff. Cowel.

DOUBLE-QUARREL, is a complaint made by any clerk or other to the archbishop of the province, against an inferiour ordinary, for delaying justice in some cause ecclesiastical. The effect is, that the archbishop directs his letters, under the authentical seal, to all clerks of his province, commanding them to admonish the said ordinary within nine days to do the justice required, or otherwise to cite him to appear before him or his official: and lastly to intimate to the said ordinary, that if he neither performs the thing enjoined, nor appears at the day assigned, he himself will proceed to perform the justice required. And this seems to be termed a double-quarrel, because it is most commonly made against both the judge, and him at whose petition justice is delayed. Cowel.

To DOUBLE-SHADE.* v. a. [double and shade.] To double the natural darkness of the place.

Now began
Night, with her sullen wings, to double-shade
The desart. Milton, P. R.

For much she fear'd the Tyrians, double-tongued,
And knew the town to Juno's care belong'd.
Dryden, Virgil.

To DO'UBLE. v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To enlarge any quantity by addition of the same quantity.

Rumour doth double voice, and echo
The numbers of the fear'd. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Pay him six thousand, and deface the bond;
Double six thousand, and then treble that. Shaks.

Our foes too proud the weaker to assail,
Or doubles his dishonour if he fail. Dryden.

This power of repeating or doubling any idea we have of any distance, and adding it to the former, as often as the will, without being ever able to come to any stop or stint, is that which gives us the idea of immensity. Locke.

This was only the value of the silver: there was besides a tenth part of that number of talents of gold, which, if gold was reckoned in a decuple proportion, will just double the sum.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. To contain twice the quantity.

Thus reinforc'd against the adverse fleet,
Still doubling ours, brave Rupert leads the way.
Dryden.

3. To repeat; to add.

He saw proud Arcite and fierce Palemon
In mortal battle, doubling blow on blow;
Like lightning flam'd their falchions to and fro.
Dryden.

Now we have the Cape of Good Hope in sight, the trade-wind is our own, if we can but double it.
Dryden.

To DO'UBLE.† v. n.

1. To increase to twice the quantity.

'Tis observed in particular nations, that within the space of three hundred years, notwithstanding all casualties, the number of men double.
Burnet, Theory.

2. To enlarge the stake to twice the sum in play.
Throw Ægypt's by, and offer in the stead,
Offer — the crown on Berenice's head:
I am resolv'd to double till I win.
Dryden, Tyrannick Love.

3. To turn back, or wind in running.
Under the line the sun crosseth the line, and maketh two summers and two winters; but in the skirts of the torrid zone it doubleth and goeth back again, and so maketh one long summer.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Who knows which way she points?
Doubling and turning like an hunted hare!
Find out the meaning of her mind who can. Dryd.

4. To play tricks; to use sleights.
Tut, tut, leave pleasing of my honour, Diligence; you double with me.
B. Jonson, Case is altered.

Do'UBLE.† n. s.

Here's a pot of good double, neighbour: drink, and fear not your man. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. A turn used to escape pursuit; a trick; a shift; an artifice.
He [the hare] outruns the wind, and with what care
He cranks and crosses, with a thousand doubles.
Shakspeare, Ven. and Adon.
All their arch-villainies, and all their doubles,
Which are more than a hunted hare ere thought on.
Beaum. and Fl. Tamer Tamed.
Man is frail;
Convulsions rack his nerves, and cares his breast;
His flying life is chas'd by rav'ning pains,
Through all his doubles, in the winding veins.
Blackmore.
These men are too well acquainted with the chase, to be flung off by any false steps or doubles.
Addison.

4. In modern times, used for resemblance; as, his or her double, meaning another person extremely like the party.

Do'UBLENESS.† n. s. [from double.]

1. The state of being double.
If you think well to carry this as you may, the doubleness of the benefit defends the deceit from reproof. Shakspeare.

2. Duplicity; doubleness of heart and tongue. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.
As though in this very point other men's confessions in particular beside your own in generality, had not left us marks and traces evident and plain enough to descry doubleness with diversity.
Proceedings against Garnet, &c. (1606,) sign. Aa, b.
Thus had these Neroes caught me in their net,
But to what end I could not throughly guess;
Such was my plainness, such their doubleness.
Mir. for Mag. p. 408.
On his seven heads were seven helmets crowned with seven streamers, on which were inscribed, Dissimulation, Delay, Discomfort, Variance, Envy, Detraction, Doubleness.

Do'UBLET.† n. s. [from double.]

1. The inner garment of a man; the waistcoat: so called from being double for warmth, or because it makes the dress double. [I once thought with Dr. Johnson, Mr. Malone says, that doublet meant a waistcoat; but that is not the fact; nor do one of the early instances, which here follow, prove it; though Addison seems to have so used the word. But doublet meant the coat, "the inner garment of a man," with respect to his cloak or outer covering. So Lord Capel, at his execution, in March 1648-9, says: "Stay, I must pull off my doublet first, and my waistcoat." So Hudibras's doublet of sturdy buff was not a waistcoat, but a coat, i. e. an outer garment.]
What a pretty thing a man is, when he goes in his doublet and hose, and leaves off his wit!
Shakspeare.
His doublet was of sturdy buff,
And though not sword yet cudgel proof.
Hudibras.
It is common enough to see a countryman in the doublet and breeches of his great grandfather.
Addison on Italy.
They do but mimick ancient wits at best,
As apes our grandsires in their doublets drest.
Pope.

2. Two; a pair.
Those doublets on the sides of his tail seem to add strength to the muscles which move the tail-fins. Grew, Museum.

Do'UBLING.* n. s. [from double.] An artifice; a shift; a turn to escape pursuit.
Instruct my quivering pen,
To tell the rest of fortune's doublings then.
Mir. for Mag. p. 485.
At their turns and doublings no men readier, to the right, or to the left.
Milton, Ten. of Kings and Magistrates.
So keen thy hunters, and thy scent so strong,
Thy turns and doublings cannot save thee long.
Swift.
When, I say, you see those, or any such like shiftings and doublings in any party dissenting from the government, you may certainly conclude, that 'tis not their conscience sways, but their faction. Scott, Works, ii. 42.

DOUBLO'N. n. s. [French.] A Spanish coin containing the value of two pistoles.

Do'UBLY.† adv. [from double.]

1. In twice the quantity; to twice the degree.
Young Hollis, on a muse by Mars begot,
Born, Cæsar like, to write and act great deeds,
Impatient to revenge his fatal shot,
His right hand doubly to his left succeeds. Dryd.
Haply at night he does with horror shun
A widow'd daughter, or a dying son:
His neighbour's offspring he to-morrow sees,
And doubly feels his want in their increase. Prior.

2. Deceitfully; with a double heart and face.
He is a man that deals doubly, that speaks what he thinks not, or that speaks one thing and thinks another. Huloet.

To DOUBT. v. n. [doubter, French; dubito, Latin.]

1. To question; to be in uncertainty.
Even in matters divine, concerning some things, we may lawfully doubt and suspend our judgement, inclining neither to one side or other; as namely, touching the time of the fall both of man and angels. Hooker.
Let no man, while he lives here in the world, doubt whether there is any hell or no, and thereupon live so, as if absolutely there were none.
South.
I doubt not to make it appear to be a monstrous folly to deride holy things. Tillotson.

2. To question any event, fearing the worst.
Doubting things go ill, often hurts more
Than to be sure they do. Shakspeare, Cymb.
Admitting motion in the heavens to shew
Invalid that which thee to doubt it mov'd.
Milton, P. L.

3. Sometimes with of in both the foregoing senses.
Solyman said he had hitherto made war against divers nations, and always had the victory, whereof he doubted not now also.
Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.
Have I not manag'd my contrivance well,
To try your love and make you doubt of mine?
Dryden.

4. To fear; to be apprehensive of ill.
I doubt there's deep resentment in his mind,
For the late slight his honour suffer'd there.
Otway.
If there were no fault in the title, I doubt there are too many in the body of the work.
Baker on Learning.
This is enough for a project, without any name; I doubt more than will be reduced into practice.
Swift.

5. To suspect; to have suspicion.
The king did all his courage bend
Against those four which now before him were,
Doubting not who behind him doth attend. Daniel.

6. To hesitate; to be in suspense; to waver undetermined.
What fear we then, why doubt we to incense
His utmost ire? Milton, P. L.
At first the tender blades of grass appear,
And buds that yet the blast of Eurus fear,
Stand at the door of life, and doubt to clothe the year. Dryden.

To DOUBT.† v. a.

1. To hold questionable; to think uncertain.

2. To think endangered.
He from the terrour of this arm so late
Doubted his empire. Milton, P. L.

3. To fear; to suspect.
He did ordain the interdicts and prohibitions which we have to make entrance of strangers, which at that time was frequent, doubting novelties and commixture of manners. Bacon.
If they turn not back perverse,
But that I doubt. Milton, P. L.
You that will be less fearful than discreet,
That love the fundamental part of state,
More than you doubt the change of it, prefer
A noble life before a long. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. To fill with fear; to fright.
I'll tell ye all my fears; one single valour,
The virtues of the valiant Caratach,
More doubts me than all Britain.
Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

5. To distrust; to hold suspected.
To teach vain wits a science little known,
T' admire superior sense, and doubt their own.
Pope.

DOUBT.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Uncertainty of mind; suspense; undetermined state of opinion.
Could any difficulty have been proposed, the resolution would have been as early as the proposal; it could not have had time to settle into doubt. South.
Those who have examined it, are thereby got past doubt in all the doctrines they profess. Locke.

2. Question; point unsettled.

Hippocrates commends the flesh of the wild sow above the tame, and no doubt but the animal is more or less healthy according to the air it lives in. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

'Tis past a doubt,
All Bedlam or Parnassus is let out. Pope.

3. Scruple; perplexity; irresolution.

Our doubts are traitors,
And make us lose, by fearing to attempt,
The good we oft might win. Shakspeare.

4. Uncertainty of condition.

And thy life shall hang in doubt before thee; and thou shalt fear day and night, and shalt have no assurance of thy life. Deut. xxviii. 66.

I'm bound in
To saucy doubts and fears. Shakspeare.

5. Suspicion; apprehension of ill.

I desire to be present with you now, and to change my voice; for I stand in doubt of you. Gal. iv. 20.

6. Difficulty objected.

To every doubt your answer is the same,
It so fell out, and so by chance it came. Blackmore.

7. Dread; horrour.

Yet dread of shame and doubt of foul dishonour
Made her not yield. Spenser, F. Q. iv. i. 8.

8. Difficulty; danger.

[He] forced them, however strong and stout
They were, as well approv'd in many a doubt,
Back to recule. Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 47.

Do'UBTABLE.* adj. [old Fr. doutable.] That may be doubted. Sherwood.

Do'UBTER.† n. s. [from doubt.] One who entertains scruples; one who hangs in uncertainty.

Protagoras was no atheist: he was not a denier, but a doubter of the gods, at the most. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 101.

Such oracles of vain reason have all the doubters and disputers against religion been since the world began. Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 263.

Do'UBTFUL. adj. [doubt and full.]

1. Dubious; not settled in opinion.

Yet I am doubtful. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Thus they their doubtful consultations dark
Ended. Milton, P. L.

2. Ambiguous; not clear in his meaning: as, a doubtful expression.

3. That about which there is doubt; that which is not yet determined or decided; obscure; questionable; uncertain.

In handling the right of a war, I am not willing to intermix matter doubtful with that which is out of doubt; for as in capital causes, wherein but one man's life is in question, the evidence ought to be clear; so much more in a judgement upon a war, which is capital to thousands. Bacon.

In doubtful cases, reason still determines for the safer side; especially if the case be not only doubtful, but also highly concerning, and the venture be a soul, and an eternity. South.

Themetes first, 'tis doubtful whether hir'd,
Or so the Trojan destiny requir'd,
Mov'd, that the ramparts might be broken down. Dryden.

4. Hazardous; of uncertain event.

We have sustain'd one day in doubtful fight,
What Heaven's Lord had powerfullest to send Against us from about his throne. Milton, P. L.

New counsels to debate
What doubtful may ensue. Milton, P. L.

5. Not secure; not without suspicion.

Our manner is always to cast a doubtful and a more suspicious eye towards that, over which we know we have least power. Hooker, Dedication.

6. Not confident; not without fear.

With doubtful feet and wavering resolution
I come, still dreading thy displeasure, Samson. Milton, S. A.

This was at first resolved
If we were wise, against so great a foe
Contending, and so doubtful what might fall. Milton, P. L.

7. Partaking different qualities.

Looks
Downcast and damp, yet such wherein appear'd
Some glimpse of joy, which on his countenance cast
Like doubtful hue. Milton, P. L.

Do'UBTFULLY.† adv. [from doubtful.]

1. Dubiously; irresolutely.

2. Ambiguously; with uncertainty of meaning.

Knowing how doubtfully all allegories may be construed, and this book of mine being a continual allegory, I have thought good to discover the general intention. Spenser on Ireland.

Nor did the goddess doubtfully declare
Her alter'd mind, and alienated care. Dryden.

3. In a state of dread. See the 4th sense of To Doubt, v. a.

With that she wak'd, full of fearful fright,
And doubtfully dismay'd through that so uncouth sight. Spenser, F. Q. v. vii. 16.

Do'UBTFULNESS.† n. s. [from doubtful.]

1. Dubiousness; suspense; instability of opinion; "flitting of mind." Huloet.

Though doubtfulness or uncertainty seems to be a medium between certain truth and certain falsehood in our minds, yet there is no such medium in things themselves. Watts.

2. Ambiguity; uncertainty of meaning.

In arguing, the opponent uses as comprehensive and equivocal terms as he can, to involve his adversary in the doubtfulness of his expressions: and therefore the answerer on his side, makes it his play to distinguish as much as he can. Locke.

Most of his philosophy is, in broken sentences, delivered with much doubtfulness. Baker on Learning.

3. Hazard; uncertainty of event or condition.

Do'UBTING.* n. s. [from doubt.] Scruple; perplexity.

Do'UBTINGLY.† adv. [from doubt.] In a doubting manner; dubiously; without confidence.

Whatsoever a man imagineth doubtingly, or with fear, must needs do hurt, if imagination have any power at all; for a man representeth that oftener that he feareth than the contrary. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

That life and immortality which was brought to light through the Gospel, was very doubtingly and obscurely spoken of by some of the wisest of the ages before. Derham, Christo-Theology, p. 14.

Do'UBTLESS. adj. [from doubt.] Free from fear; void of apprehension of danger.

Pretty child, sleep doubtless and secure,
That Hubert, for the wealth of all the world,
Will not offend thee. Shakspeare, K. John.

I am doubtless; I can purge
Myself of many I am charg'd withal. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Do'UBTLESS. adv. Without doubt; without question; unquestionably.

Doubtless he would have made a noble knight. Shakspeare.

All their desires, deserts, or expectations the Conqueror had no other means to satisfy, but by the estates of such as had appeared open enemies to him, and doubtless many innocent persons suffered in this kind. Hale, Common Law.

Doubtless many men are finally lost, who yet have no men's sins to answer for, but their own. South.

Mountains have been doubtless much higher than they are at present: the rains have washed away the soil, that has left the veins of stones shooting out of them. Woodward.

Doubtless, oh guest! great laud and praise were mine,
If, after social rites and gifts bestow'd,
I stain'd my hospitable hearth with blood. Pope, Odyssey.

Do'UBTLESSLY.* adv. [from doubtless.] Unquestionably; without doubt.

La. You would stay at home?
El. Lo. Yes, lady.
La. Why you may, and doubtlessly will, when you have debated that your commander is but your mistress. Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

Do'UCED.* n. s. [from the Fr. douce; Lat. dulcis, sweet. This word is used by Chaucer, which Mr. Tyrwhitt imagines to be a corruption of doucete, the name of a musical instrument, in a manuscript poem of Lydgate's. Douced is admitted into some Musical Dictionaries, as another word for dulcimer; which the passage in Chaucer cannot be said to support; as it hardly implies an instrument with strings of wire.] A musical instrument. Obsolete.

Many an other pipe,
That craftily began to pipe,
Both in douced, and eke in rede.
Chaucer, House of Fame, iii. 131.

Do'UCET.† n. s. [doucet, French.] A custard. This word I find only in Skinner, and in Ainsworth, Dr. Johnson says. Cotgrave uses it under the word flannet, where he calls it "a little custard;" and in the list of diet for K. Charles I. when Duke of York, it repeatedly occurs, usually in conjunction with tart, under the form of doulcet. See Archælog. vol. xv. pp. 3. et seq.

Doucets *of a Deer. See Dowsets.

*DOUCE'UR. n. s. [French.] Flattery; a lure; a coaxing temptation.

Blame with indulgence, and correct with douceur. Ld. Chesterfield.

He has a douceur for Ireland in his pocket. Burke on a Late State of the Nation.

These are the douceurs by which we are invited to regicide fraternity and friendship. Burke on a Regicide Peace.

Do'UCKER. n. s. [colymbus; from To douck, corrupted from To duck.] A bird that dips in the water.

The colymbi, or douckers or loons, are admirably conformed for diving, covered with thick plumage, and their feathers so slippery that water cannot moisten them. Ray.

DOVE.† n. s. [duvo, old Teutonick; taub, daub, German; dufva, Swedish; Saxon, buua, i. e. duva.]

1. A wild pigeon.

So shews a snowy dove trooping with crows,
As yonder lady o'er her fellows shows. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Say, will the falcon, stooping from above,
Smit with her varying plumage, spare the dove? Pope.

Not half so swift the trembling doves can fly;
When the fierce eagle cleaves the liquid sky,

Not half so swiftly the fierce eagle moves,
When through the skies he drives the trembling doves. Pope.

2. A pigeon.

I have here a dish of doves, that I will bestow upon your worship. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

DO'VECOT.† n. s. [dove and cot.] A small building in which pigeons are bred and kept.

Like an eagle in a dovecot, I
Flutter'd your Volscians in Corioli;
Alone I did it. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Every salmon usually returns to the same river; as young pigeons, taken out of the same dove-cote, have also been observed to do. Walton, Angler.

DO'VEHOUSE. n. s. [dove and house.] A house for pigeons.

The hawk sets up for protector, and makes havock in the dovehouse. L'Estrange.

But still the dovehouse obstinately stood. Dryden.

DO'VELIKE.* adj. [dove and like.]

1. Like a dove in quality.

Lay by your anger for an hour, and dovelike
Before the holy altars of your helpers
(The all-fear'd gods) bow down your stubborn bodies. Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

If ye find these dispositions and actions dovelike, applaud them, as beseeming the true spouse of Christ, who is ever like herself, columba perfecta, yea perfecta columba, a true dove for her quiet innocence.

Bp. Hall, Sermon on the Unity of the Church.

2. Resembling the appearance of a dove.

Thou from the first
Wast present, and with mighty wings outspread
Dovelike sat'st brooding on the vast abyss.
Milton, P.L.

DO'VESHIP.* n. s. [from dove.] The quality of a dove.

For us, let our doveship approve itself in meekness of suffering, not in actions of cruelty.

Bp. Hall, Serm. on the Unity of the Church.

DO'VETAIL. n.s. [dove and tail.] A form of joining two bodies together, where that which is inserted has the form of a wedge reversed, and therefore cannot fall out.

DO'VETAILED.* adj. [from dovetail.] Fastened in the dovetail way.

He made an administration, so checkered and speckled; he put together a piece of joinery, so crossly indented, and whimsically dovetailed.

Burke, Speech on American Taxation.

DO'VISH.* adj. [from dove.] Having the innocence of a dove.

Contempte of thys world, doveyshe simplicitie, serpentlike wysdome.

Confut. of N. Shaxton, (1546,) sign. G. iv. b.

DOUGH.† n.s. [ðah, Saxon; deegh, Dutch, from the Theotiscan thihen, to grow bigger, to rise, as the bakers speak; or it may be the past participle of the Sax. ðeapian, to moisten or wet, as Mr. Horne Tooke contends.]

1. The paste of bread, or pies, yet unbaked.

How boldly and how saucily he talk'd,
And how unlike the lump I took him for,
The piece of ignorant dough, he stood up to me,
And mated my commands.
Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife, &c.

She has found what dough you are made of, and so kneads you. Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

When the gods moulded up the paste of man,
Some of their dough was left upon their hands,
For want of souls, and so they made Egyptians.
Dryden.

You that from pliant paste would fabricks raise,
Expecting thence to gain immortal praise,
Your knuckles try, and let your sinews know
Their power to knead, and give the form to dough.
King.

2. My cake is DOUGH. My affair has miscarried; my undertaking has never come to maturity.

My cake is dough, but I'll in among the rest;
Out of hope of all, but my share of the feast.
Shakspeare.

DO'UGHBAKED.† adj. [dough and baked.] Unfinished; not hardened to perfection; soft.

For when, through tasteless flat humility,
In doughbak'd men, some harmlessness we see,
'Tis but his phlegm that's virtuous, and not he.
Donne.

The Lutherans, who by a doughbak'd reformation, striking off from the Romish errours, have rather changed than corrected this grand absurdity.

South, Serm. i. 20.

DO'UGHKNEADED.* adj. [dough and kneaded.] Soft; capable of being kneaded like dough.

He demeans himself in the dull expression so like a doughkneaded thing, that he has not spirit enough left him so far to look to his syntax, as to avoid nonsense. Milton, Apol. for Smectymn.

DO'UGHTINESS.* n. s. [from doughty.] Valour; bravery.

The Biscayan, who perceived him come in that manner, perceived, by his doughtiness, his intention. Shelton, Tr. of Don Quixote.

DO'UGHTY.† adj. [ðohtiȝ, Saxon; deught, virtue, Dutch. So far Dr. Johnson. To this may be added the Sax. ðuȝuð, valour, virtue: the Theotiscan, dugeth, dugatha, dohta, and the Goth. dugr, the same. The Greek ἀγαθὸς will also be obvious.]

1. Brave; noble; illustrious; eminent. Used of men and things.

Such restless passion did all night torment
The flatt'ning courage of that fairy knight,
Devising how that doughty tournament
With greatest honour he atchieven might.
Spenser, F. Q.

He is made as strong as brass, is of brave years too,
And doughty of complexion.
Beaum. and Fl. Rule a Wife, &c.

2. It is now seldom used but ironically, or in burlesque.

If this doughty historian hath any honour or conscience left, he ought to beg pardon. Stillingfleet.

She smil'd to see the doughty hero slain,
But at her smile the beau reviv'd again. Pope.

DO'UGHY. adj. [from dough.] Unsound; soft; unhardened.

Your son was misled with a snipt taffeta fellow there, whose villainous saffron would have made all the unbaked and doughy youth of a nation in his colour. Shakspeare.

To DOUSE.† v.a. [δύσις; but probably it is a cant word formed from the sound, Dr. Johnson says. But he gives no example. It is, however, no cant word. The learned Hammond employs it in a very serious way, writing the word with a z instead of an s.] To put over head suddenly in the water.

To profess such kindness to immaterial joys, and yet immerse and douze himself in carnal!
Hammond, Serm. ii.

I have washed my feet in mire or ink, douzed my carnal affections in all the vileness of the world.
Hammond, Serm. vii.

To DOUSE. v.n. To fall suddenly into the water.

It is no jesting, trivial matter,
To swing i' th' air, or douse in water. Hudibras.

To DOUSE.* v.a. To strike. See To DOWSE.

To DOUT.* v.a. [To do out.] To put out. A word, like doff, now little used except in low language; as, dout the candle; dout the fire; which phrases are common in several counties. The commentators on Shakspeare have settled that dout is the true reading in the following passage, and that doubt has been there, and elsewhere in Shakspeare, as in other old books, misprinted for it.

The dram of base
Doth all the noble substance often dout,
To his own scandal. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

DO'UTER.* n. s. [from dout.] An extinguisher for a candle. Ray, and Bailey.

DO'WABLE.* adj. [from the obsolete verb dow, to give; old Fr. dowé, endowed.] Capable of being dowered.

At the age of nine years she is dowable. Cowel.

A seisin in law of the husband will be as effectual as a seisin in deed, in order to render the wife dowable. Blackstone.

DO'WAGER. n. s. [douairiere, French.]

1. A widow with a jointure.

She lingers my desires,
Like to a stepdame or a dowager,
Long wintering on a young man's revenue.
Shakspeare.

Widows have a greater interest in property than either maids or wives; so that it is as unnatural for a dowager as a freeholder to be an enemy to our constitution. Addison.

2. The title given to ladies who survive their husbands.

Catharine no more
Shall be call'd queen; but princess dowager,
And widow to prince Arthur. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

DO'WCETS.* n. s. plur. With hunters, the testicles of a hart or stag.

I gave them
All the sweet morsels, call'd tongue, ears, and dowcets. B. Jonson, Sad Shepherd.

DO'WDY.† n. s. An awkward, ill-dressed, inelegant woman; a dirty woman. Icel. douda, an idle person. Craven Dial. 1824.

Laura, to his lady, was but a kitchen wench: Dido a dowdy; Cleopatra, a gipsy; Helen and Hero, hildings and harlots. Shaks. Rom. and Jul.

The bedlam train of lovers use
T' enhance the value, and the faults excuse;
And therefore 'tis no wonder if we see
They doat on dowdies and deformity. Dryden.

DO'WDY. adj. Awkward.

No housewifry the dowdy creature knew;
To sum up all, her tongue confess'd the shrew.
Gay.

DO'WER.† / DO'WERY. } n. s. [douaire, French.]

1. That which the wife bringeth to her husband in marriage.

His wife brought in dow'r Cilicia's crown,
And in herself a greater dow'r alone. Dryden.

His only daughter in a stranger's pow'r;
For very want, he could not pay a dow'r. Pope.

Rich, though depriv'd of all her little store,
For who can seize fair virtue's better dow'r?
Melmoth.

2. That which the widow possesses. This is a very imperfect definition of this legal dower, as Mr. Mason has observed.

Tenant in dower is, where the husband of a woman is seised of an estate of inheritance and dies: the wife shall have the third part of all lands and tenements whereof he was seised during the coverture, to hold to herself for the term of her natural life. Blackstone.

His patrimonial territories of Flanders were in dower to his mother-in-law. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. The gifts of a husband for a wife.

Ask me never so much dowry and gift, and I will give according as you shall say unto me; but give me the damsel to wife. Gen. xxxiv. 12.

4. Endowment; gift.

What spreading virtue, what a sparkling fire!
How great, how plentiful, how rich a dow'r,
Dost thou within this dying flesh inspire! Davies.
I wonder by what dower,
Or patent, you had power
From all to rape a judgement.
Feltham, Answ. to B. Jonson.

Do'WERED. adj. [from dower.] Portioned; supplied with a portion.

Will you with those infirmities she owes,
Unfriended, new-adopted to our hate,
Dower'd with our curse, and stranger'd with our oath,
Take her, or leave her? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Do'WERLESS.† adj. [from dower.] Wanting a fortune; unportioned.

Thy dow'rless daughter, king, thrown to my chance,
Is queen of us, and ours, and our fair France.
Shakspeare.
Come to these groves, and these life-breathing glades,
Ye friendless orphans, and ye dow'rless maids!
Sir W. Jones, Solyma.

DOWLE.* n. s. [perhaps from wool. See WOOL.] Mr. Horne Tooke vehemently contends, against the commentators on Shakspeare, that this word is nothing more than the past participle of deal, i. e. a piece, a portion. They shew, that it is a feather, with Bailey; who also calls it the single particles of the down.

One dowle that's in my plume. Shaks. Tempest.

There is a certain shell-fish in the sea, called Pinna, that bears a mossy dowl or wool, whereof cloth was spun and made.
Humane Industry, or Hist. of Man. Arts, 1661.

Do'WLAS. n. s. A coarse kind of linen.

Dowlas, filthy dowlas; I have given them away to bakers' wives, and they have made boulters of them. Shakspeare.

Do'WLY.* adj. [from dole, in the sense of grief or sorrow.] Melancholy; sad; applied to persons: lonely, to places. A northern word: sometimes written and spoken daly. Grose, Westmoreland Dial. Craven Dial. and Brockett. Dowled is also used in the north for flat, not brisk, as applied to liquour. Praise of Yorksh. Ale, p. 96, and Grose.

DOWN. n. s. [duun, Danish.]

1. Soft feathers.

Virtue is the roughest way;
But proves at night a bed of down. Watton.
Leave, leave, fair bride! your solitary bed,
No more shall you return to it alone;
It nurseth sadness; and your body's print,
Like to a grave, the yielding down doth dint.
Donne.
We tumble on our down, and court the blessing
Of a short minute's slumber. Denham, Sophy.
A tender weakly constitution is very much owing to the use of down beds. Locke.

2. Any thing that soothes or mollifies.

Thou bosom softness! down of all my cares!
I could recline my thoughts upon this breast
To a forgetfulness of all my griefs,
And yet be happy. Southern, Oroonoko.

3. Soft wool, or tender hair.

I love my husband still;
But love him as he was when youthful grace,
And the first down began to shade his face. Dryd.
On thy chin the springing beard began
To spread a doubtful down, and promise man.
Prior.

4. The soft fibres of plants which wing the seeds.

Any light thing that moveth, when we find no wind, sheweth a wind at hand; as when feathers, or down of thistles, fly to and fro in the air.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.
Like scatter'd down by howling Eurus blown,
By rapid whirlwinds from his mansion thrown.
Sandys.

DOWN.† n. s. [ðun, Saxon; dune, Erse, a hill. This is the etymology given by Dr. Johnson. The Celt. and old Fr. dun may be added. In the earlier editions of his Dictionary, Dr. Johnson had said, that the word "is used now as if derived from the adverb; for it means, 1st, a large open plain or valley; and 2d, a hill or rising ground, which sense is very rare." He saw the impropriety of this statement, and converted the two definitions into that single one which has since stood in all the editions, viz. "a large open plain; properly, a flat on the top of a hill." Mr. Horne Tooke, however, long afterwards ungenerously commented on the mistake, without adverting to the rectification. Div. of Purley, i. 446. Our old lexicography thus defines the present word, Barret in V. DOWN. "Downs or plains, where corn cannot grow, bare earth, &c."] A large open plain: properly a flat on the top of a hill.

On the downs we see, near Wilton fair,
A hasten'd hare from greedy greyhound go.
Sidney.
Lord of much riches which the use renowns;
Seven thousand broad-tail'd sheep graz'd on his downs. Sandys.
Not all the fleecy wealth
That doth enrich those downs is worth a thought,
To this my errand, and the care it brought.
Milton, Comus.
Hills afford pleasant prospects; as they must needs acknowledge who have been on the downs of Sussex. Bay.
How Will-a-wisp misleads night-faring clowns
O'er hills and sinking bogs, and pathless downs.
Gay.
To compass this, his building is a town,
His pond an ocean, his parterre a down. Pope.

DOWN.* n. s. [Dun or dune, says Verstegan, was our ancient name for mountain; but for such kind of mountains as lie stretching out in length, and commonly on the sea-side; as do dunes [duyns] or sand-hills on the sea-coasts in Holland; the like whereof some call in England the downs.] A sand-bank, or hill, properly; in the plural, the road in which ships lie on our hilly coast of Kent.

All in the downs the fleet was moor'd. Gay.

DOWN.* adj.

1. Downright; plain; positive.

Her many down denials.
Beaum. and Fl. Valentinian.

2. Dejected; as, a down look.

DOWN.† prep. [aðun, Saxon; down, Armor. deep.]

1. Along a descent; from a higher place to a lower.

Let go thy hold when a great wheel runs down hill, lest it break thy neck with following it; but the great one that goes upward, let him draw after.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.
A man, falling down a precipice, though in motion, is not at liberty, because he cannot stop that motion if he would. Locke.

2. Towards the mouth of a river.

Mahomet put his chief substance into certain boats to be conveyed down the river, as purposing to fly. Knolles.

DOWN.† adv. Not up.

1. On the ground; from the height at which any thing was to a lower situation.

Whom they hit, none on their feet might stand,
Though standing else as rocks; but down they fell
By thousands. Milton, P. L.
The overpowering stream carries them away, and down they sink into the bottomless pit.
South, Serm. ii. 229.
Down sinks the giant with a thund'ring sound,
His pond'rous limbs oppress the trembling ground.
Dryden.

2. Tending towards the ground.

From his slack hand the garland wreath'd for Eve
Down dropt. Milton, P. L.

3. From former to latter times: as, this has been the practice down from the conquest.

Described our pre-existing station
Before this vile terrene creation;
And lest I should be wearied, madam,
To cut things short, came down to Adam!
Prior, Alma.

4. Out of sight; below the horizon.

How goes the night, boy?
—The moon is down: I have not heard the clock,
And she goes down at twelve. Shaks. Macbeth.

5. To a total subjection: used of men and things.

What remains of the subject, after the decoction, is continued to be boiled down, with the addition of fresh water, to a sapid fat.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

6. Into disgrace; into declining reputation.

He shar'd our dividend o' the crown,
We had so painfully preach'd down;
And forc'd us, though against the grain,
To have calls to preach it up again. Hudibras.
It has been still preached up, but acted down; and dealt with, as the eagle in the fable did with the oyster, carrying it up on high, that, by letting it fall, he might dash it in pieces. South.
There is not a more melancholy object in the learned world, than a man who has written himself down. Addison.

7. [Answering to up.] Here and there.

Let them wander up and down for meat, and grudge if they be not satisfied. Psal. lix. 15.

DOWN. interj.

1. An exhortation to destruction or demolition.

Go, some pull down the Savoy; others to the Inns of Courts: down with them all. Shakspeare.
If there be ten, shrink not; but down with them.
Shakspeare.
But now they cry, down with the palace, fire it.
Pull out th' usurping queen. Dryden.

2. A contemptuous threat.

Down, down to hell, and say I sent thee thither.
Shakspeare.

DOWN.† [To go.]

1. To be received, to be digested.

If he be hungry more than wanton, bread alone will down; and if he be not hungry, 'tis not fit he should eat. Locke.
I know not how absurd this may seem to the masters of demonstration; and probably it will hardly down with any body, at first hearing. Locke.

2. To descend.

I tell thee, Fortune, and thee, wanton Love,
I will not down to everlasting night,
Till I have moralized this tragedy,
Whose chiefest actor was my sable dart.
Trag. of Soliman and Perseda.

To Down. v. a. [from the particle.] To knock; to subdue; to suppress; to conquer.

The hidden beauties seem'd in wait to lie,
To down proud hearts, that would not willing die.
Sidney.

Down-bed.* n. s. Bed of down.

If he loved too much to lie upon his own down-bed of ease, his subjects had the pleasure, during his reign, of lolling and stretching upon theirs.
Marq. of Halifax.

Do'wncast.* n. s. Sadness; melancholy look.

Come, let's be sad, my girls;
That downcast of thine eye, Olympias,
Shews a fine sorrow.
Beaum. and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.

Do'wncast. adj. [down and cast.] Bent down; directed to the ground.

Wanton languishing borrowed of her eyes the downcast look of Modesty. Sidney.

My wily nurse by long experience found,
And first discover'd to my soul its wound:
'Tis love said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surprise.
Dryden.

Thy downcast looks, and thy disorder'd thoughts,
Tell me my fate: I ask not the success
My cause has found. Addison, Cato.

Do'wncome.* n. s. [down and come.] A fall of rain; a fall in the market. A northern word. Craven Dial. and Brockett.

Do'wned.* adj. [from down.] Covered with soft feathers; stuffed with down.

What pain to quit the world, just made their own;
Their nest so deeply down'd, and built so high!
Young, Night Th. 8.

Do'wnfal. n. s. [down and fall.]

1. Ruin; calamity; fall from rank or state.

Why dost thou say king Richard is depos'd?
Dar'st thou, thou little better thing than earth,
Divine his downfall? Shakspeare, Rich. II.

We have seen some, by the ways by which they had designed to rise uncontrollably, to have directly procured their utter downfal. South.

2. A sudden fall, or body of things falling.

Each downfal of a flood the mountains pour
From their rich bowels, rolls a silver stream.
Dryden.

3. Destruction of fabricks.

Not more aghast the matrons of renown,
When tyrant Nero burn'd th' imperial town,
Shriek'd for the downfal in a doleful cry,
For which their guiltless lords were doom'd to die.
Dryden.

Do'wnfallen.† participial adj. [down and fall.] Ruined; fallen.

Let us rather
Hold fast the mortal sword; and, like good men,
Bestride our down-fall'n birthdom. Shaks. Macb.

The land is now divorced by the downfallen steep cliffs on the farther side.
Carew, Survey of Cornwall.

Downgy'ved.† adj. [down and gyved. Dr. Johnson has printed this word down-gyred; but the true reading is what I have given. His explanation of "let down in circular wrinkles" is of course removed.] Hanging down like the loose cincture which confines fetters round the ancles. Steevens.

Lord Hamlet, with — his stockings foul'd,
Ungarter'd, and downgyved to his ancles. Shaks.

Downhe'arted.* adj. [down and heart.] Dejected; spiritless; without heart. A colloquial word.

Do'wnward. } adv. ðunepeapð, Sax.]
Do'wnwards. }

1. Towards the centre.

As you lift up the glasses, the drop will ascend slower and slower, and at length rest, being carried downward by its weight, as much as upwards by the attraction. Newton.

2. From a higher situation to a lower.

Look downward on that globe, whose hither sides,
With light from hence, shines. Milton, P. L.

Hills are ornamental to the earth, affording pleasant prospects to them that look downwards from them upon the subjacent countries.
Ray on the Creation.

What would this man? Now upward will he soar,
And little less than angel, would be more:
Now looking downwards, just as griev'd, appears
To want the strength of bulls, the fur of bears.
Pope.

3. In a course of successive or lineal descent.

A ring the count does wear,
That downward hath succeeded in his house,
From son to son, some four or five descents. Shaks.

Do'wnward. adj.

1. Moving on a declivity; tending towards the center; tending to the ground.

With downward force,
That drove the sand along, he took his way,
And roll'd his yellow billows to the sea. Dryden.

2. Declivous; bending.

When Aurora leaves our northern sphere,
She lights the downward heaven, and rises there.
Dryden.

3. Depressed; dejected.

At the lowest of my downward thoughts, I pulled up my heart to remember, that nothing is atchieved before it be thoroughly attempted, and that lying still doth never go forward. Sidney.

Do'wnweed.* n. s. [down and weed.] Cottonweed. Barret.

Do'wny. adj. [from down.]

1. Covered with down or nap.

By his gates of breath
There lies a downy feather, which stirs not:
Did he suspire, that light and weightless down
Perforce must move. Shakspeare.

There be plants that have prickles, yet have downy or velvet rind upon their leaves; as stock-gillyflowers and coltsfoot; which down or nap consisteth of a subtile spirit, in a soft substance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

In her hand she held
A bough of fairest fruit, that downy smil'd
New gather'd, and ambrosial smell diffus'd. Milton, P. L.

2. Made of down or soft feathers.

A side breeze from westward waits their sails to fill,
And rest in those high beds his downy wings. Dryd.
Belinda still her downy pillow prest,
Her guardian sylph prolong'd the balmy rest. Pope.

3. Soft; tender; soothing.

Banquo! Donalbain! Malcolm! awake!
Shake off this downy sleep, death's counterfeit,
And look on death itself. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The night's companion kindly cheating them
Of all their cares, tam'd the rebellious eye
Of sorrow with a soft and downy hand,
Sealing all breasts in a lethean band. Crashaw.

Do'WRE. } n. s. [douaire, Fr. It ought to Do'WRY. } be written dower.]

1. A portion given with a wife. See DOWER.

1. Refuse; lees; dregs: properly something fluid.

You would think I had a hundred and fifty tattered prodigals lately come from swinekeeping, from eating draff and husks. Shaks. Henry IV.

'Twere simple fury still thyself to waste
On such as have no taste;
To offer them a surfeit of pure bread
Whose appetite is dead!
No, give them grains their fill;
Husks, draff, to drink and swill. Ben Jonson.

I call'd, and drew them thither,
My hell-hounds to lick up the draff and filth,
Which man's polluting sin with taint had shed
On what was pure. Milton, P. L.

Here rather let me drudge, and earn my bread,
Till vermin, or the draff of servile food,
Consume me. Milton, S. A.

2. Refuse; sweepings. Perhaps improper.

Younger brothers but the draff of nature. Dryden.

DRA'FFISH.* adj. [from draff.] Worthless.

The dregs and draffy part, disgrace and jealousy. Beaum. and Fl. Island Princess.

DRAFT.† A corrupt spelling of draught, both as a substantive and a participle. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from Shakspeare, to illustrate draft as an adjective, which belongs to the fourth sense of the substantive draught. See DRAUGHT.

To DRAG.† v. a. [ᵹpaᵹan, Saxon; Su. Goth. draga; Lat. traho, to draw.]

1. To pull along the ground by main force; to draw heavily along.

Such his aspect, when, foil'd with bloody dust, Dragg'd by the cords which through his feet were thrust. Denham.

While I have any ability to hold a commerce with you, I will never be silent; and this chancing to be a day that I can hold a pen, I will drag it as long as I am able. Swift.

2. To draw any thing burthensome; any thing from which one cannot disengage one's self.

'Tis long since I, for my celestial wife,
Loath'd by the gods, have dragg'd a ling'ring life. Dryden.

Can I, who lov'd so well,
To part with all my bliss to save my lover?
Oh! can I drag a wretched life without him? Smith.

3. To draw contemptuously along, as a thing unworthy to be carried.

He triumphs in St. Austin's opinion; and is not only content to drag me at his chariot-wheels; but he makes a shew of me. Stillingfleet.

4. To pull about with violence and ignominy.

They shall surprise
The serpent, prince of air, and drag in chains
Through all his realm, and there confounded leave. Milton.

The constable was no sooner espied but he was reproached with disdainful words, beaten and dragged in so barbarous a manner, that he hardly escaped with his life. Clarendon.

5. To pull roughly and forcibly.

To fall, that's justice;
But then, to drag him after! For to die,
And yet in death to conquer, is my wish. Dryden.

In my fatal cause your sword was drawn;
The weight of my misfortunes dragg'd you down. Dryden.

To DRAG. v. n. To hang so low as to trail or grate upon the ground.

From hence are heard the groans of ghosts, the pains
Of sounding lashes, and of dragging chains. Dryden.

A door is said to drag, when, by its ill hanging on its hinges, the bottom edge of the door rides in its sweep upon the floor. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

DRAG.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A net drawn along the bottom of the water.

They catch them in their net, and gather them in their drag. Habak. i. 15.

Casting nets were spread in shallow brooks,
Drags in the deep, and baits were hung on hooks. Dryden.

The creatures are but instruments in God's hand: the returning our acknowledgements to them is just the same absurdity with theirs who burnt incense to the drag, and sacrificed to the net. Rogers.

2. An instrument with hooks to catch hold of things under water.

You may in the morning find it near to some fixed place, and then take it up with a drag hook, or otherwise. Walton.

3. A kind of car drawn by the hand.

The drag is made somewhat like a low car: it is used for the carriage of timber, and then is drawn by the handle by two or more men. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

To DRA'GGLE. v. a. [from drag.] To make dirty by dragging on the ground.

You'll see a draggled damsel, here and there,

DRA'GONSHEAD. n. s. A plant.

DRA'GONTREE. n. s. A species of palm.

DRAGO'ON.† n. s. [from dragen, German, to carry, Dr. Johnson says. Others from the Roman draconarii, whose military standard was the representation of a dragon; which, in later times, according to Voltaire, was the distinction also of a French regiment of horse. V. Junius, Skinner, and Morin. The word in the bas Bret. is dragoun.]

1. A kind of soldier that serves indifferently either on foot or horseback.

Two regiments of dragoons suffered much in the late action. Tatler.

2. Formerly used for a dragoonade; which see.

I am persuaded that this most inhuman and barbarous persecution of the innocent French hereticks, (as they miscall them,) will make all sober papists abhor the Pope and his party, who use such unchristian and antichristian means to make proselytes, and endeavour to bring men to the catholick faith (as they pretend) by dragoons, and imprisonments; not by demonstrations and reasons out of Scripture. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 265.

To DRAGO'ON. v. a. [from the noun.] To persecute by abandoning a place to the rage of soldiers.

In politicks I hear you're stanch,
Directly bent against the French;
Deny to have your free-born foe
Dragoon'd into a wooden shoe. Prior.

DRAGOONA'DE.* n. s. [from dragoon.] An abandonment of a place to the rage of soldiers.

It was supported by the authority of a great king, and the terrour of ill usage, and a dragoonade in conclusion.

DRAUGHT.† n. s. [from draw.]

1. The act of drinking.

They slung up one of their hogsheads, and I drank it off at a draught, which I might well do; for it did not hold half a pint. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

2. A quantity of liquor drank at once.

He had once continued about nine days without drink; and he might have continued longer, if, by distempering himself one night with hard study, he had not had some inclination to take a small draught. Boyle.

Fill high the goblets with the sparkling flood,
And with deep draughts invoke our common god.
Dryden.

Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs enslave;
He reels, and, falling, fills the spacious cave.
Dryden, Æn.

I have cured some very desperate coughs by a draught every morning of spring water, with a handful of sage boiled in it. Temple.

Every draught, to him that has quenched his thirst, is but a further quenching of nature; a provision for rheum and diseases. South.

3. Liquor drank for pleasure.

Were it a draught for Juno when she banquets,
I would not taste thy treasonous offer.
Milton, Comus.

Number'd ills, that lie unseen
In the pernicious draught: the word obscene,
Or harsh, which, once elanc'd, must ever fly
Irrevocable, the too prompt reply. Prior.

Delicious wines th' attending herald brought;
The gold gave lustre to the purple draught.
Pope, Odyssey.

4. The act of drawing or pulling carriages.

Ulysses and old Nestor — yoke you like draught oxen, and make you plough up the wars.
Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

The drayplough is the best plough in winter for miry clays. Mortimer, Husbandry.

DRA'ZEL. n. s. [perhaps corrupted from drossel, the scum or dross of human nature; or from droslesse, French, a whore.] A low, mean, worthless wretch. See DROTCHEL.

As the devil uses witches,
To be their cully for a space,
That, when the time's expir'd, the drazels
For ever may become his vassals. Hudibras.

DREAD.† n. s. [ðpæð, Saxon; Icel. and Goth. thra, sadness. The Prompt. Parv. and Ort. Vocab. define this substantive, dreadfulness. It is not often used in the plural. "Whose dreads in his behalf were rarely so deposited." Fell, Life of Hammond.]

1. Fear; terrour; affright; horrour either felt or impressed.

Think'st thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When pow'r to flatt'ry bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Let not thy dread make me afraid. Job, xiii. 21.

Was ever any wicked man free from the stings of a guilty conscience, from the secret dread of divine displeasure, and of the vengeance of another world? Tillotson.

If our fears can be awakened with the dread of evil, he has armed his laws with the terrour of eternal misery. Rogers.

2. Habitual fear; awe.

To thee, of all our good the sacred spring;
To thee, our dearest dread; to thee, our softer king.
Prior.

DREAD. adj. [ðpæð, Saxon.]

1. Terrible; frightful.

That e'er this tongue of mine,
That laid the sentence of dread banishment
On yond' proud man, should take it off again
With words of sooth! Shakspeare, Rich. II.

It cannot be, but thou hast murther'd him:
So should a murtherer look, so dread, so grim.
Shakspeare.

To be expos'd against the warring winds;
To stand against the deep dread bolted thunder.
Shakspeare.

Terrour seiz'd the rebel host,
When, coming towards them, so dread they saw
The bottom of the mountains upward turn'd.
Milton, P. L.

2. Awful; venerable in the highest degree.

Thou, attended gloriously from heav'n,
Shalt in the sky appear, and from thee send
The summoning archangels to proclaim
Thy dread tribunal. Milton, P. L.

From this descent
Celestial virtues rising will appear
More glorious and more dread than from no fall.
Milton.

3. This seems to be the meaning of that controverted phrase dread majesty. Some of the old acts of parliament are said in the preface to be metuendissimi regis, our dread sovereign's.

To DREAD. v. a. [from the noun.] To fear in an excessive degree.

You may despise that which terrifies others, and which yet all, even those who most dread it, must in a little time encounter. Wake.

Accompanied with damps and dreadful gloom.
Milton, P. L.

Thy love, still arm'd with fate,
Is dreadful as thy hate. Granville.

2. Awful; venerable.

How dreadful is this place. Genesis, xxviii. 17.

3. Full of fear. Obsolete.

Dreadful of danger that might him betide
She oft and oft adviz'd him to refraine
From chase of greater beasts. Spenser, F. Q.

DRE'ADFULNESS. n. s. [from dreadful.] Terribleness; frightfulness.

It may justly serve for matter of extreme terrour to the wicked, whether they regard the dreadfulness of the day in which they shall be tried, or the quality of the judge by whom they are to be tried. Hakewill on Providence.

DRE'ADFULLY. adv. [from dreadful.] Terribly; frightfully.

Not sharp revenge, nor hell itself can find
A fiercer torment than a guilty mind,
Which day and night doth dreadfully accuse,
Condemns the wretch, and still the charge renews.
Dryden.

DRE'ADLESS. adj. [from dread.] Fearless; unaffrighted; intrepid; unshaken; undaunted; free from terrour.

Dreadless, said he, that shall I soon declare;
It was complain'd, that thou hadst done great tort Unto an aged woman. Spenser, F. Q.

All night the dreadless angel, unpursu'd
Through heav'n's wide champaign held his way.
Milton, P. L.

DRE'ADLESSNESS. n. s. [from dreadless.] Fearlessness; intrepidity; undauntedness.

Zelmane, to whom danger then was a cause of dreadlessness, all the composition of her elements being nothing but fiery, with swiftness of desire crossed him. Sidney.

DREAM.† n. s. [droom, Dutch. This word is derived by Meric Casaubon, with more ingenuity than truth, from δρᾶμα τῆ βίᾳ, the comedy of life; dreams being, as plays are, a representation of something which does not really happen. This conceit Junius has enlarged by quoting an epigram.

Σκηνη πᾶς ὁ βιος καὶ παίγνιον· ἤ μάθε παίζειν,
Τὴν σπεδὴν μεταθεὶς· ἤ φέρε τὰ; ὄδυνας.
Anthologia.

So far Dr. Johnson. The word might be as well referred to the Greek δρέμω, to run, to pass swiftly, to post away; which indeed aptly suits a dream; or it may be, by a metathesis, the Lat. dormire, to sleep. And in aid to this etymology, I cite Bishop Sanderson's Sermons ad Aulam, 1681, p. 79. "Not a calm and soft sleep, but as the slumbering dorms of a sick man."]

1. A phantasm of sleep; the thoughts of a sleeping man.

We eat our meat in fear, and sleep
In the affliction of those terrible dreams
That shake us nightly. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

In dreams they fearful precipices tread;
Or, shipwreck'd, labour to some distant shore.
Dryden.

Glorious dreams stand ready to restore
The pleasing shapes of all you saw before. Dryden.

2. An idle fancy; a wild conceit; a groundless suspicion.

Let him keep
A hundred knights; yes, that on ev'ry dream,
Each buz, each fancy, each complaint, dislike,
He may enguard his dotage. Shaksp. K. Lear.

To DREAM. v. n. preter. dreamed, or dreamt. [from the noun.]

1. To have the representation of something in sleep.

Dreaming is the having of ideas, whilst the outward senses are stopped, not suggested by any external objects, or known occasion, nor under the rule or conduct of the understanding. Locke.

I dreamed that I was conveyed into a wide and boundless plain. Tatler.

2. It has of before the noun.

I have long dream'd of such a kind of man,
But, being awake, I do despise my dream. Shaks.

I have nightly since
Dreamt of encounters 'twixt thyself and me:
We have been down together in my sleep,
Unbuckling helms, fisting each other's throat,
And wak'd half dead with nothing. Shaks. Coriol.

3. To think; to imagine.

These boys know little they are sons to th' king,
Nor Cymbeline dreams that they are alive. Shaks.

He never dreamed of the deluge, nor thought that first orb more than a transient crust.
Burnet, Theory.

He little dream'd how nigh he was to care,
Till treach'rous fortune caught him in the snare.
Dryden.

4. To think idly.

They dream on in a constant course of reading, but not digesting. Locke.

I began to dream of nothing les th an the immortality of my work. Smith.

5. To be sluggish; to idle.

Why does Anthony dream out his hours,
And tempts not fortune for a noble day? Dryden.

To DREAM. v. a. To see in a dream.

The Macedon, by Jove's decree,
Was taught to dream an herb for Ptolemy.
Dryden.

At length in sleep their bodies they compose,
And dreamt the future fight, and early rose.
Dryden.

DRE'AMER.† n. s. [from dream.]

1. One who has dreams; one who has fancies in his sleep.

The vision said, and vanish'd from his sight;
The dreamer waken'd in a mortal fright. Dryden.

If our dreamer pleases to try whether the glowing heat of a glass furnace be barely a wandering imagination in a drowsy man's fancy, by putting his head into it, he may perhaps be wakened into a certainty. Locke.

2. An idle fanciful man; a visionary.

Sometime he angers me,
With telling of the moldwarp, and the ant,
Of dreamer Merlin, and his prophecies. Shaksp.

3. Formerly, an interpreter of dreams.

They said one to another, Behold this dreamer [in the margin, master of dreams] cometh.
Gen. xxxvii. 19.

What labour and what travel have I run through,
And through what cities to absolve this riddle;
Diviners, dreamers, school-men, deep magicians,
All have I try'd. Beaum. and Fl. Women Pleased.

4. A mope; a man lost in wild imagination; a reveur.

The man of sense his meat devours,
But only smells the peel and flowers;
And he must be an idle dreamer,
Who leaves the pie and gnaws the streamer. Prior.

5. A sluggard; an idler.

DRE'AMFUL.* adj. [from dream. Proper, as the opposite to dreamless.] Full of dreams. Huloet.

DRE'AMINGLY.* adv. [from the part. dreaming.] Sluggishly; negligently. Huloet.

To speak dreamingly. Cockeram in V. Draule.
Do all thy business leisurely, not dreamingly.
Bp. Henshaw's Thoughts, ed. 1651, p. 124.

DREA'MLESS. adj. [from dream.] Free from dreams.

The savages of Mount Atlas, in Barbary, were reported to be both nameless and dreamless.
Camden, Rem.

DREAR. adj. [ðreopiȝ, Saxon, dreary.] Mournful; dismal; sorrowful.

In urns and altars round,
A drear and dying sound
Affrights the flamens at their service quaint.
Milton, Ode Nativ.

DREAR. n. s. Dread; terrour.

The ill-fac'd owl, death's dreadful messenger;
The hoarse night-raven, trump of doleful drear.
Spenser, F. Q.

DRE'ARIHEAD. n. s. [from dreary.] Horrour; dismalness: a word now no longer in use.

That shortly from the shape of womanhed,
Such as she was when Pallas she attempted,
She grew to hideous shape of drearihead,
Pined with grief of folly late repented.
Spenser, F. Q.

DRE'ARILY.* adv. [from dreary.] Dreadfully; terribly.

But eft, when ye count you freed from feare,
Comes the breme winter with chamfred browes,
Full of wrinckles and frosty furrowes,
Drerily shooting his stormy darte,
Which cruddles the blood, and pricks the harte.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

DRE'ARIMENT. n. s. [from dreary.]

1. Sorrow; dismalness; melancholy.

I teach the woods and waters to lament
Your doleful dreariment. Spenser, Epithal.

2. Horrour; dread; terrour. This word is now obsolete.

Almighty Jove, in wrathful mood,
To wreak the guilt of mortal sins is bent;
Hurls forth his thundering dart with deadly food,
Inroll'd in flames and smouldring dreariment.
Spenser, F. Q.

DRE'ARINESS.* n. s. [Sax. ðreopiȝnyꝑe.] Dismalness; sorrow. Manning.

DRE'ARY. adj. [ðreopiȝ, Saxon.]

1. Sorrowful; distressful.

The messenger of death, the ghastly owl,
With dreary shrieks did also yell;
And hungry wolves continually did howl
At her abhorred face, so horrid and so foul.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. Gloomy; dismal; horrid.

Obscure they went through dreary shades, that led
Along the vast dominions of the dead. Dryden.

Towns, forests, herds and men promiscuous drown'd,
With one great death deform the dreary ground.
Prior.

3. This word is scarcely used but in poetical diction.

DREDGE.† n. s. [To dretch, in Chaucer, is to delay; perhaps a net so often stopped may be called from this, Dr. Johnson says. But his remark is foreign to the purpose. A dredge is nothing more than a drag, and that is Gothick. See DRAG and DRAGNET.] A kind of net.

For oysters they have a peculiar dredge; a thick, strong net, fastened to three spills of iron, and drawn at the boat's stern, gathering whatsoever it meeteth lying in the bottom. Carew.

To DREDGE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To gather with a dredge.

The oysters dredged in the Lyne, find a welcome acceptance. Carew.

They dredge up from the bottom of the sea abundance of a sort of white coral.
Ray, Rem. p. 272.

DREDGE.* n. s. This word is used in some parts of England, as in Norfolk and Essex, for a mixture of oats and barley sown together.

They reap every one his corn in the field, [in the margin, mingled corn or dredge.] Job, xxiv. 6.

To DREDGE.* v. a. [from dredge, mixed corn.] To scatter flour on any thing which is roasting. Still a term in cookery.

My spice-box, gentlemen;
And put in some of this, the matter's ended;
Dredge you a dish of plovers; there's the art on't.
Beaum. and Fl. Bloody Brother.

Burnt figs, dredged with meal and powdered sugar. Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

DRE'DGER.† n. s. [from dredge.]

1. One who fishes with a dredge.
2. An instrument to scatter flour on meat while roasting. Ash.

To DREE.* v. a. [Sax. ðpeah, ðpeoȝan.] To suffer; to hold out; to endure. North. Ray.

DREE.* adj. Long in continuance; tedious. Lancashire and Cheshire, and throughout the north.

DRE'GGINESS. n. s. [from dreggy.] Fulness of dregs or lees; foulness; muddiness; feculence.

DRE'GGISH. adj. [from dregs.] Foul with lees; feculent.

To give a strong taste to this dreggish liquor, they fling in an incredible deal of broom or hops, whereby small beer is rendered equal in mischief to strong. Harvey on Consumptions.

DRE'GGY.† adj. [from dregs.] Containing dregs; consisting of dregs; muddy; feculent.

Youthful fancies are vanished away through coldness, dryness, and earthiness of the dull dreggy humours. Granger on Ecclesiastes, (1621,) p. 322.

These num'rous veins, such is the curious frame,
Receive the pure insinuating stream;
But no corrupt or dreggy parts admit,
To form the blood, or feed the limbs unfit.
Blackmore.

Ripe grapes, being moderately pressed, their juice may, without much dreggy matter, be squeezed out. Boyle.

DREGS.† n. s. [ðpeꝛcen, Sax.; dreggian, Icelandick; Su. Goth. dregg. This word is rarely found in the singular. But it is once used by Shakspeare. "What too curious dreg espies my sweet lady in the fountain of our love?" And by Bishop Burnet, in the Pref. to his Life of Bedell: "This iron age, and dreg of time."]

1. The sediment of liquors; the lees; the grounds; the feculence.

Fain would we make him author of the wine,
If for the dregs we could some other blame. Davies.

They often tread destruction's horrid path,
And drink the dregs of the revenger's wrath.
Sandys.

We from the dregs of life think to receive,
What the first sprightly running could not give.
Dryden.

Such run on poets in a raging vein,
Ev'n to the dregs and squeezings of the brain.
Pope.

2. Any thing by which purity is corrupted.

The king by this journey purged a little the dregs and leaven of the northern people, that were before in no good affections towards him. Bacon.

3. Dross; sweepings; refuse.

Heav'n's favourite thou, for better fates design'd,
Than we the dregs and rubbish of mankind.
Dryden.

What diffidence we must be under, whether God will regard our sacrifice, when we have nothing to offer him but the dregs and refuse of life, the days of loathing and satiety, and the years in which we have no pleasure. Rogers.

To DREIN. v. n. [See DRAIN.] To empty. The same with drain; spelt differently perhaps by chance.

She is the sluice of her lady's secrets: 'tis but setting her mill agoing, and I can drein her of them all. Congreve.

'Tis drein'd and empty'd of its poison now;
A cordial draught. Southern.

To DRENCH.† v. a. [Sax. ðpencean; Su. Goth. draenca; to immerse.]

1. To wash; to soak; to steep.

Our garments being as they were drenched in the sea, hold notwithstanding their freshness and glosses. Shakspeare.

To-day deep thoughts resolve with me to drench
In mirth, that after no repenting draws.
Milton, Sonnet.

Now dam the ditches, and the floods restrain;
Their moisture has already drench'd the plain.
Dryden.

2. To saturate with drink or moisture: in an ill sense.

In swinish sleep
Their drenched natures lie, as in a death.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Too oft, alas! has mutual hatred drench'd
Our swords in native blood. Philips.

3. To physick by violence.

If any of your cattle are infected, speedily let both sick and well blood, and drench them.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

DRENCH.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. A draught; a swill: by way of abhorrence or contempt.

Let such bethink them, if the sleepy drench
Of that forgetful lake benum not still,
That in our proper motion we ascend. Milton, P. L.

2. Physick for a brute.

A drench is a potion or drink prepared for a sick horse, and composed of several drugs in a liquid form. Farrier's Dict.

Harry, says she, how many hast thou kill'd today? Give my roan horse a drench, says he; and answers, fourteen, an hour after.
Shakspeare, Henry IV.

A drench of wine has with success been us'd,
And through a horn the gen'rous juice infus'd.
Dryden.

3. Physick that must be given by violence.

Physicians, some with glisters;
Some with lettice-caps; some, posset-drinks; some, pills;
Twenty consulting here about a drench.
Beaum. and Fl. Thier. and Theod.

Their counsels are more like a drench, that must be poured down, than a draught which must be leisurely drank, if I liked it. King Charles.

4. A channel of water.

DRE'NCHER. n. s. [from drench.]

1. One that dips or steeps any thing.

2. One that gives physick by force. Dict.

DRENT.† part. Probably corrupted from drenched, to make a proverbial rhyme, to brent or burnt, Dr. Johnson says, in the first of the two passages cited from Spenser. But it is the old regular past participle of drench, and is adopted by Spenser from Chaucer.

What flames, quoth he, when I the present see,
In danger rather to be drent than brent?
Spenser, F. Q.

Nor so great wonder and astonishment
Did the most chaste Penelope possesse,
To see her lord, that was reported drent.
Spenser, F. Q.

To DRESS.† v. a. [dresser, French; trwsio, old Welsh, to dress, to deck.]

1. To clothe; to invest with clothes.

The first request
He made, was, like his brothers to be dress'd;
And, as his birth requir'd, above the rest. Dryden.

2. To clothe pompously or elegantly. It is used with up and out to enforce it.

Look upon pleasures not upon that side that is next the sun, or where they look beauteously; that is, as they come towards you to be enjoyed; for then they paint and smile, and dress themselves up in tinsel and glass gems and counterfeit imagery. Taylor.

Few admir'd the native red and white,
Till poets dress'd them up to charm the sight.
Dryden.

Lollia Paulina wore, in jewels, when dressed out, the value of three hundred and twenty-two thousand nine hundred and sixteen pounds thirteen shillings and four pence. Arbuthnot.

3. To adorn; to deck; to embellish; to furnish.

Where was a fine room in the middle of the house, handsomely dressed up, for the commissioners to sit in. Clarendon.

The mind loses its natural relish of real truth, and is reconciled insensibly to any thing that can be dressed up, into any faint appearance of it. Locke.

4. To cover a wound with medicaments.

In time of my sickness another chirurgeon dressed her. Wiseman.

5. To curry; to rub: a term of the stable.

Our infirmities are so many, that we are forced to dress and tend horses and asses, that they may help our needs. Bp. Taylor.

Three hundred horses, in high stables fed,
Stood ready, shining all, and smoothly dress'd.
Dryden, Æn.

6. To break or teach a horse. A term of horsemanship.

A steed
Well-mouth'd, well-managed, which himself did dress;
His aid in war, his ornament in peace. Dryden.

7. To rectify; to adjust.

And the Lord God took the man, and put him into the garden of Eden, to dress it and to keep it. Genesis, ii. 15.

Adam! well may we labour still to dress
This garden; still to tend plant, herb, and flow'r.
Milton, P. L.

Well must the ground be digg'd and better dress'd,
New soil to make and meliorate the rest. Dryden.

8. To prepare for any purpose.

In Orkney they dress their leather with roots of tormentil, instead of bark. Mortimer, Husbandry.

9. To trim; to fit any thing for ready use.

When he dresseth the lamps, he shall burn incense. Ex. xxx.

When you dress your young hops, cut away roots or sprigs. Mortimer, Husbandry.

For his fat grandsire some delicious mess,
In feeding high his tutor will surpass,
An heir apparent of the gourmand race. Dryden.

To DRESS.* v. n.

1. To pay particular regard to dress: as, to dress for dinner, to dress for the opera, to dress for a ball.

My hair I'd powder in the women's way,
And dress, and talk of dressing more than they.
Bramston's Man of Taste.

2. In military language, to keep the body in such a relative position, as to contribute towards, and make a part of, an exact continuity of line, upon whatever front, or in whatever shape, the battalion may be formed. Soldiers dress by one another in ranks, and the body collectively dresses by some given object.
James, Military Dict.

DRESS. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Clothes; garment; habit.

Dresses laughed at in our forefathers' wardrobes or pictures, when, by the circulation of time and vanity, they are brought about, we think becoming. Gov. of the Tongue.

A robe obscene was o'er his shoulders thrown,
A dress by fates and furies worn alone.
Pope, Statius.

2. Splendid clothes; habit of ceremony.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at a distance an encroacher.
Richardson, Clarissa.

3. The skill of adjusting dress.

The men of pleasure, dress, and gallantry. Pope.

DRE'SSER.† n. s. [from dress.]

1. One employed in putting on the clothes and adorning the person of another.

Presently the tailors, the tirewomen, the gorgetmakers, the seamstresses, the chambermaids, the dressers, and all that wretched crew of obsequious attendants, are condemned as Antichristians, and only fit to wait upon the whore of Babylon. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hand. p. 64.

She hurries all her handmaids to the task;
Her head alone will twenty dressers ask.
Dryden, Juv.

2. One employed in regulating, trimming, or adjusting any thing.

Then said he unto the dresser of his vineyard, Behold, these three years I come seeking fruit on this fig-tree, and find none. St. Luke, xiii. 7.

3. The bench in a kitchen on which meat is drest or prepared for the table. [Teut. dressoor.]

'Tis burnt, and so is all the meat:
What dogs are these? Where is the rascal cook?
How durst you, villains, bring it from the dresser,
And serve it thus to me that love it not? Shaks.

A maple dresser in her hall she had,
On which full many a slender meal she made.
Dryden.

When you take down dishes, tip a dozen upon the dresser. Swift, Direct. to the Cook.

DRE'SSING.† n. s. [from dress.]

1. Attire; ornament; habiliment; outward appearance.

A dressing I saw a jeweller's wife wear, who indeed was a jewel herself. B. Jonson, Poetaster.

So may Angelo,
In all his dressings, characts, titles, forms,
Be an archvillain. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

2. The application made to a sore.

The second day after we took off the dressings, and found an eschar made by the cathcretick.
Wiseman on Tumours.

3. Manual labour upon ground.

Every year you shall give them three dressings or half-diggings. Evelyn, ii. i. § 3.

DRE'SSY.* adj. [from dress.] Distinguished by dress; affecting great taste and elegance in dress. A modern word, frequent in conversation.

DRE'SSINGROOM. n. s. [dress and room.] The room in which clothes are put on.

Latin books might be found every day in his dressingroom, if it were carefully searched. Swift.

DREST. part. [from dress.]

In flow'ry wreaths the royal virgin drest
His bending horns, and kindly clapt his breast.
Addison.

To DRIB.† v. a. [contracted from dribble.] To crop; to cut off; to defalcate. A cant word, Dr. Johnson says; but why, I am at a loss to learn. It is true that, in the solitary citation which he brings from Dryden, the word may wear the appearance of a vulgarism. But it is a serious word of more than a century before Dryden's time.

Not at the first sight, nor yet with a dribbed shot,
Love gave the wound. Sidney, Astrophel and Stella.

Merchants' gains come short of half the mart;
For he who drives their bargains, dribs a part.
Dryden.

DRIB.* n. s. [for drip.] A drop.

Do not, I pray thee, paper stain
With rhymes retail'd in dribbs.
Swift, on Gibbs's Psalms.

To DRI'BBLE.† v. n. [This word seems to have come from drop by successive alterations, such as are usual in living languages. Drop, drip, dripple, dribble, from thence drivel and driveler. Drip may indeed be the original word, from the Danish drypp.]

1. To fall in drops.
2. To fall weakly and slowly.

Believe not that the dribbling dart of love
Can pierce a compleat bosom. Shakspeare.

3. To proceed slowly.

Small temptations allure but dribbling offenders.
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

4. To slaver as a child or idiot.

To DRI'BBLE. v. a. To throw down in drops.

Let the cook follow with a ladle full of soup, and dribble it all the way up stairs.
Swift, Rules to Servants.

DRI'BBLING.* n. s. [from dribble.] A falling in drops.

Semilunar processes on the surface, owe their form to the dribbling of water that passed over it.
Woodward on Fossils.

A dribbling, difficulty, and a momentary suppression of urine, may be caused by the stone's shutting up the orifice of the bladder.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DRI'BLET.† n. s. [from dribble.] A small sum; odd money in a sum; any small inconsiderable thing. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, 1697, p. 96.

Twelve long years of exile born,
Twice twelve we number'd since his blest return:
So strictly wert thou just to pay,
Even to the driblet of a day. Dryden.

DRI'ER. n. s. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture; a desiccative.

There is a tale, that boiling of daisy roots in milk, which it is certain are great driers, will make dogs little. Bacon.

DRIFT. n. s. [from drive.]

1. Force impellent; impulse; overbearing influence.

A man being under the drift of any passion, will still follow the impulse of it, till something interpose, and, by a stronger impulse, turn him another way. South.

2. Violence; course.

The mighty trunk, half rent with rugged rift,
Doth roll adown the rocks, and fall with fearful drift. Spenser, F. Q.

3. Any thing driven at random.

Some log, perhaps, upon the waters swam,
An useless drift, which rudely cut within,
And hollow'd, first a floating trough became,
And cross some riv'let passage did begin. Dryden.

4. Any thing driven or borne along in a body.

The ready racers stand,
Swift as on wings of wind up-borne they fly,
And drifts of rising dust involve the sky.
Pope, Odyssey.

5. A storm; a shower.

Our thunder from the south
Shall rain their drift of bullets on this town. Shaks.

6. A heap or stratum of any matter thrown together by the wind; as a snowdrift, a deep body of snow.

7. Tendency, or aim of action.

The particular drift of every act, proceeding eternally from God, we are not able to discern; and therefore cannot always give the proper and certain reason of his works. Hooker.

Their drift 'comes known, and they discover'd are;
For some, of many, will be false of course. Daniel.

8. Scope of a discourse.

The main drift of his book being to prove, that what is true is impossible to be false, he opposes nobody. Tillotson.

The drift of the pamphlet is to stir up our compassion towards the rebels. Addison.

This by the stile, the manner, and the drift,
'Twas thought could be the work of none but Swift. Swift.

To DRIFT. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To drive; to urge along.

Snow no larger than so many grains of sand, drifted with the wind in clouds from every plain.
Ellis's Voyage.

2. To throw together on heaps. Not authorized.

He wanders on
From hill to dale, still more and more astray,
Impatient flouncing through the drifted heaps.
Thomson.

To DRIFT.* v. n. To form into heaps; as, the snow drifts.

DRIFT-WAY.* n. s. [drift and way.] A common road for driving cattle. Cowel.

DRIFT-WIND.* n. s. [drift and wind.] A wind that drives all before it, or that throws any matter into heaps or drifts.

It could
No more be hid in him, than fire in flax,
Than humble banks can go to law with waters,
That drift-winds force to raging.
Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsmen.

To DRILL.† v. a. [drillen, Dutch; ðyplian, Sax. from ðurgh, through.]

1. To pierce any thing with a drill.

The drill-plate is only a piece of flat iron, fixed upon a flat board, which iron hath an hole punched a little way into it, to set the blunt end of the shank of the drill in, when you drill a hole.
Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

2. To perforate; to bore; to pierce.

My body through and through he drill'd,
And Whackum by my side lay kill'd. Hudibras.
Tell, what could drill and perforate the poles,
And to th' attractive rays adapt their holes?
Blackmore.

3. To make a hole.

When a hole is drilled in a piece of metal, they hold the drill-bone in their right hand; but when they turn small work, they hold the drill-bone in their left hand. Moxon.

4. To delay; to put off: in low phrase; corrupted, I believe, from drawled.

She has bubbled him out of his youth; she drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and she will drop him in his old age. Addison.

5. To draw from step to step. A low phrase.

By such insinuations they have once got within him, and are able to drill him on from one lewdness to another; by the same arts corrupting and squeezing him as they please. South, Serm. ii. 216.

6. To drain; to draw slowly. This sense wants better authority, Dr. Johnson says; meaning the authority of Thomson, which is all that he could find. It seems, however, to have been adopted from the neuter verb, which was unknown to Dr. Johnson, and is used by old and good authors.

Drill'd through the sandy stratum every way,
The waters with the sandy stratum rise. Thomson.

7. To form to arms; to teach the military exercise. An old cant word. See the verb neuter, and the substantive.

The foe appear'd drawn up and drill'd,
Ready to charge them in the field. Hudibras.

To DRILL.* v. n.

1. To flow gently or slowly; "to trickle down." Cockeram.

Choice vineyards planted, paradises made,
Stor'd with all sorts of fruits, with trees of shade,
And water'd with cool rivulets that drill'd
Along the borders. Sandys, Ecclesiastes, p. 2.

With honey the hard rocks supply'd his want,
And pure oil drill'd from cliffs of adamant.
Sandys, Songs out of the O. and N. Test.

A small spring (Maxera in Ptolemy,) streaming from the Taurisian mountains, drills in two branches through it. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 174.

All have cool refreshing rivulets of crystal, drilling over pebbles of amber.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 329.

2. To muster; to assemble in order to exercise.

I fir'd it: and gave him three sweats,
In the artillery-yard, three drilling days.
Beaum. and Fl. Martial Maid.

DRILL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. An instrument with which holes are bored. It is a point pressed hard against the thing bored, and turned round with a bow and string.

The way of tempering steel to make gravers, drills, and mechanical instruments, we have taught artificers. Boyle.

Drills are used for the making such holes as punches will not serve for; as a piece of work that hath already its shape, and must have an hole made in it. Moxon.

2. An ape; a baboon.

Shall the difference of hair be a mark of a different internal specifick constitution between a changeling and a drill, when they agree in shape and want of reason? Locke.

Would you have your son move his ears like a drill? — Yes, fool, said he, why should he not have the perfection of a drill, or of any other animal? Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scribl.

3. A small dribbling brook. This I have found no where else, and suspect it should be rill, Dr. Johnson says. By no where else he means the passage from Sandys; but it seems to have been no uncommon word.

Springs through the pleasant meadows pour their drills,
Which snake-like glide between the bordering hills. Sandys.

From hence in smaller drills her course she keeps,
And scarce discern'd along the vallies creeps.
F. Wiatt, Verses Pref. to Sandys's Ps. (1648.)

Is not that rill or drill of water called by foreign writers Rhinocolura?
Bp. Richardson on the Old Test. (1655,) p. 115.

4. Military exercise. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

He that but saw thy curious captain's drill,
Would think no more of Flushing or the Brill.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.

To DRINK.† v. n. preter. drank, or drunk; part. pass. drunk, or drunken, formerly dronk and dronken. [Sax. ðpencan; Goth. driggkan, in which the first g is sounded like our n.]

1. To swallow liquors; to quench thirst.

Here, between the armies,
Let's drink together friendly, and embrace.
Shakspeare.

She said drink, and I will give thy camels drink also; so I drank, and she made the camels drink also. Gen. xxiv. 46.

He drank of the wine. Gen. ix. 21.

2. To feast; to be entertained with liquors.

They drank, and were merry with him.
Gen. xliii. 34.

3. To drink to excess; to be an habitual drunkard. A colloquial phrase.

First for his son a gay commission buys,
Who drinks, whores, fights, and in a duel dies!
Pope, Eth. Epist.

4. To DRINK to. To salute in drinking; to invite to drink by drinking first.

I take your princely word for those redresses.
— I gave it you, and will maintain my word;
And thereupon I drink unto your grace. Shaks.

5. To DRINK to. To wish well to in the act of taking the cup.

Give me some wine; fill full:
I drink to th' general joy of the whole table,
And to our dear friend Banquo, whom we miss.
Shakspeare.

I'll drink to master Bardolph, and to all the cavaleroes about London. Shakspeare.

To DRINK. v. a.

1. To swallow; applied to liquids.

He had eaten no bread, nor drunk any water three days and three nights. 1 Sam. xxx. 12.

We have drunken our water for money.
Lam. v. 4.

2. To suck up; to absorb.

Set rows of rosemary with flow'ring stem,
And let the purple vi'lets drink the stream. Dryd.

Brush not thy sweeping skirt too near the wall;
Thy heedless sleeve will drink the colour'd oil.
Gay.

3. To take in by an inlet; to hear; to see.

My ears have yet not drunk a hundred words
Of that tongue's uttering, yet I know the sound.
Shakspeare.

Thither write, my queen,
And with mine eyes I'll drink the words you send,
Though ink be made of gall. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Phemius! let acts of gods, and heroes old,
What ancient bards in hall and bow'r have told,
Attemper'd to the lyre, your voice employ;
Such the pleas'd ear will drink with silent joy.
Pope.

I drink delicious poison from thy eye. Pope.

4. To act upon by drinking.

Come, we have a hot venison pasty to dinner: come, gentlemen, I hope we shall drink down all unkindness. Shakspeare.

He will drown his health and his strength in his belly; and, after all his drunken trophies, at length drink down himself too. South.

5. To make drunk.

Benhadad was drinking himself drunk in the pavilions. 1 Kings, xvi. 9.

6. It is used with the intensive particles off, up, and in: Off to note a single act of drinking.

One man gives another a cup of poison, a thing as terrible as death; but at the same time tells him that it is a cordial, and so he drinks it off, and dies. South.

7. Up, to note that the whole is drunk.

Alexander, after he had drank up a cup of fourteen pints, was going to take another.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

8. In, to enforce the sense; usually of inanimate things.

The body being reduced nearer unto the earth, and emptied, becometh more porous, and greedily drinketh in water. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DRINK. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Liquor to be swallowed: opposed to meat.

When God made choice to rear
His mighty champion, strong above compare,
Whose drink was only from the liquid brook!
Milton, S. A.

2. Liquor of any particular kind.

We will give you rare and sleepy drinks.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

The juices of fruits are either watry or oily: I reckon among the watry all the fruits out of which drink is expressed, as the grape, the apple, and the pear. Bacon.

O madness, to think use of strongest wines,
And strongest drinks, our chief support of health.
Milton, S. A.

These, when th' allotted orb of time's compleat,
Are more commended than the labour'd drink.
Philips.

Amongst drinks, austere wines are apt to occasion foul eruptions. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DRI'NKABLE.† adj. [from drink.] Potable; such as may be drank.

Men say that water is both navigable, drinkable, and washable.
Wodroephe, Tr. and Eng. Gram. (1623,) p. 247.

DRI'NKER.† n. s. [Sax. ðpincepe.]

1. One that drinks to excess; a drunkard.

It were good for those that have moist brains, and are great drinkers, to take fume of lignum, aloes, rosemary, and frankincense, about the full of the moon. Bacon.

The drinker and debauched person is the object of scorn and contempt. South.

The urine of hard drinkers affords a liquor extremely fetid, but no inflammable spirit: what is inflammable stays in the blood, and affects the brain. Great drinkers commonly die apoplectick.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. One that drinks any liquor, but not to excess.

A well, in the midst of Arcadia, causeth the drinker of it to loath wine for ever after.
Junius, Sin Stigmat. (1635,) p. 229.

Having considered the effects of tea upon the health of the drinker, which I think he has aggravated in the vehemence of his zeal, and which, after soliciting them by this watery luxury year after year, I have not yet felt; he proceeds to examine how it may be shown to affect our interest.
Dr. Johnson, Review of a Journal, &c.

DRI'NKING.* n. s. [from drink.]

1. The act of quenching thirst.

When delight is the only end, and rests in itself, and dwells there long; then eating, and drinking, is not a serving of God, but an inordinate affection. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

2. A festival; an entertainment with liquors.

The drinking was according to the law; none did compel. Esther, i. 8.

The church-wardens or quest-men, and their assistants, shall suffer no plays, feasts, banquets, suppers, churchales, drinkings, temporal courts, or lects, layjuries, musters, or any other profane usage to be kept in the church, chapel, or church-yard.
Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical.

3. The habit of drinking strong liquors to excess.

I then considered drinking as a necessary qualification for a gentleman and a man of fashion!
Ld. Chesterfield.

DRINKING-HORN.* n. s. [Sax. ðpenc-hopn.] A drinking cup made of horn.

DRINKING-HOUSE.* n. s. [Sax. ðpenc-hup.] An ale-house.

DRI'NKLESS.* adj. [drink and less.] Without drink. A very old word.

In every thing, I wot, there lieth mesure;
r though a man forbiddeth dronkenness,
He nought forbiddeth that every creture
Be drinkless for alway.
Chaucer, Tr. and Cr. ii. 718.

DRI'NKMONEY. n. s. [drink and money.] Money given to buy liquor.

Peg's servants were always asking for drink-money. Arbuthnot.

To DRIP.† v. n. [drippen, Dutch; ðpýpan, Sax.]

1. To fall in drops.

The fat of the project dript insensibly away at a slow fire. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 166.

2. To have drops falling from it.

The soil, with fatt'ning moisture fill'd,
Is cloth'd with grass, and fruitful to be till'd;
Such as in fruitful vales we view from high,
Which dripping rocks, not rolling streams supply.
Dryden.

The finest sparks, and cleanest beaux,
Drip from the shoulders to the toes. Prior.

To DRIP. v. a.

1. To let fall in drops.

Her flood of tears
Seem like the lofty barn of some rich swain,
Which from the thatch drips fast a shower of rain.
Swift.

2. To drop fat in roasting.

Let what was put into his belly, and what he drips, be his sauce. Walton's Angler.

His offer'd entrails shall his crime reproach,
And drip their fatness from the hazle broach.
Dryden, Virgil.

DRIP.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. That which falls in drops.

So long as justice and judgement sit upon all the benches of a kingdom, either it is not possible for fluxes and meltings to begin in the state; or, if they do begin, their drip will be cured presently.
Abp. Laud, Serm. p. 161.

Water may be procured for necessary occasions from the heavens, by preserving the drips of the houses. Mortimer.

2. [In architecture.] A large flat member of the cornice, the corona; so called because it crowns the entablature and the whole order. It is called by workmen the drip. Chambers.

DRI'PPING. n. s. [from drip.] The fat which housewives gather from roast meat.

Shews all her secrets of housekeeping;
For candles how she trucks her dripping. Swift.

DRI'PPINGPAN.† n. s. [drip and pan.] The pan in which the fat of roast meat is caught.

He hath followed your court, and your last predecessors, from place to place, any time this seven years, as faithfully as your spits and your drippingpans have done, and almost as greasily.
Beaum. and Fl. Woman-hater.

When the cook turns her back, throw smoking coals into the drippingpan. Swift.

DRI'PPLE. adj. [from drip.] This word is used somewhere by Fairfax for weak, or rare; dripple shot.

To DRIVE.† v. a. preterite drove, anciently drave; part. pass. driven, or drove. [dreifa, old Goth. drieban, M. Gothick; ðpipan, Saxon; dryven, Dutch. Chaucer writes our verb drife, in the Rom. of the Rose.]

1. To produce motion in any thing by violence: as, the hammer drives the nail.

2. To force along by impetuous pressure.

He builds a bridge, who never drove a pile.
Pope.

On helmets, helmets throng,
Shield press'd on shield, and man drove man along.
Pope.

3. To expel by force from any place: with from.

Driven from his native land to foreign grounds,
He with a gen'rous rage resents his wounds.
Dryden, Virgil.

His ignominious flight the victors boast,
Beaux banish beaux, and swordknots swordknots drive.
Pope.

4. To send by force to any place: with to.

Time drives the flocks from field to fold,
When rivers rage and rocks grow cold. Shaksp.

Fate has driven 'em all
Into the net. Dryden, Don Sebast.

5. To chase; to hunt.

To drive the deer with hound and horn
Earl Percy took his way. Chevy Chase.

6. To force or urge in any direction.

He stood and measured the earth: he beheld, and drove asunder the nations. Hab. iii. 6.

7. To impel to greater speed.

She saddled an ass, and said to her servant, Drive, and go forward; slack not thy riding for me, except I bid thee. 2 Kings, iv. 24.

8. To guide and regulate a carriage.

He took off their chariot-wheels, that they drove them heavily. Ex. xiv. 25.

9. To convey animals; to make animals march along under guidance.

There find a herd of heifers, wand'ring o'er
The neighb'ring hill, and drive 'em to the shore.
Addison.

10. To clear any place by forcing away what is in it.

We come not with design of wasteful prey,
To drive the country, force the swains away.
Dryden.

11. To force; to compel.

For the metre sake, some words in him sometime be driven awry, which require straighter placing in plain prose. Ascham.

12. To hurry on inconsiderately.

Most miserable if such unskilfulness make them drive on their time by the periods of sin and death.
Bp. Taylor.

He, driven to dismount, threatened, if I did not the like, to do as much for my horse as fortune had done for his. Sidney.

The Romans did not think that tyranny was thoroughly extinguished, till they had driven one of their consuls to depart the city, against whom they found not in the world what to object, saving only that his name was Tarquin. Hooker.

He was driven by the necessities of times, more than led by his own disposition, to rigour.
K. Charles.

13. To distress; to straiten.

This kind of speech is in the manner of desperate men far driven. Spenser, State of Ireland.

14. To urge by violence, not kindness.

He taught the gospel rather than the law,
And forc'd himself to drive; but lov'd to draw.
Dryden.

15. To impel by influence of passion.

I drave my suitor from his mad humour of love to a living humour of madness.
Shakspeare, As you like it.

Discontents drave men into slidings. K. Charles.

Lord Cottington, being master of temper, and of the most profound dissimulation, knew too well how to lead him into a mistake, and then drive him into choler. Clarendon.

It is better to marry than to burn, says St. Paul; where we may see what drives men into a conjugal life: a little burning pushes us more powerfully than greater pleasures in prospect. Locke.

16. To urge; to press to a conclusion.

The experiment of wood that shineth in the dark, we have diligently driven and pursued; the rather for that, of all things that give light here below, it is the most durable, and hath least apparent motion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

We have thus the proper notions of the four elements, and both them and their qualities, driven up and resolved into their most simple principles.
Digby on Bodies.

To drive the argument farther, let us inquire into the obvious designs of this divine architect.
Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

The design of these orators was to drive some particular point, either the condemnation or acquittal. Swift.

17. To carry on; to keep in motion.

As a farmer cannot husband his ground so well, if he sit at a great rent; so the merchant cannot drive his trade so well if he sit at great usury.
Bacon.

The bees have common cities of their own,
And common sort, beneath one law they live,
And with one common stock their traffick drive.
Dryden.

Your Parsimond a lawless bargain drove,
The parent could not sell the daughter's love.
Dryden.

The trade of life cannot be driven without partners. Collier.

18. To purify by motion: so we say to drive feathers.

His thrice driv'n bed of down. Shakspeare.

The one's in the plot, let him be never so innocent; and the other is as white as the driven snow, let him be never so criminal. L'Estrange.

19. To DRIVE out. To expel.

Tumults and their exciters drave myself and many of both houses out of their places. K. Charles.

As soon as they heard the name of Roscetes, they forthwith drave out their governour, and received the Turks into the town. Knolles, Hist.

To DRIVE.† v. n.

1. To go as impelled by any external agent. [In the sea-phrase, it is probably from the Fr. dériver.]

The needle endeavours to conform unto the meridian; but being distracted, driveth that way where the greater and powerfuller part of the earth is placed. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Love, fixt to one, still safe at anchor rides,
And dares the fury of the winds and tides;
But losing once that hold, to the wide ocean borne,
It drives away at will, to every wave a scorn.
Dryden.

Nor with the rising storm would vainly strive;
But left the helm, and let the vessel drive.
Dryden, Æn.

2. To rush with violence.

Fierce Boreas drove against his flying sails,
And rent the sheets. Dryden, Æn.

Near as he draws, thick harbingers of smoke,
With gloomy pillars cover all the place;
Whose little intervals of night are broke,
By sparks that drive against his sacred face. Dryd.

Then with so swift an ebb the flood drove backward,
It slipt from underneath the scaly herd.
Dryden, All for Love.

The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
T' imboss their hives in clusters.
Dryden, Don Sebast.

While thus he stood,
Pirithous' dart drove on, and nail'd him to the wood. Dryden.

As a ship, which winds and waves assail,
Now with the current drives, now with the gale;
She feels a double force, by turns obeys
The imperious tempest, and th' impetuous seas.
Dryden.

The wolves scampered away, however, as hard as they could drive. L'Estrange.

Thick as autumnal leaves, or driving sand,
The moving squadrons blacken all the strand.
Pope, Iliad.

3. To pass in a carriage. [Perhaps the examples belong rather to the eighth sense of the verb active.]

There is a litter ready; lay him in't,
And drive tow'rd Dover. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Thy flaming chariot-wheels, that shook
Heaven's everlasting frame, while o'er the necks
Thou drov'st of warring angels disarray'd.
Milton, P. L.

4. To tend to; to consider as the scope and ultimate design.

Authors drive at these as the highest elegancies which are but the frigidities of wit.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

We cannot widely mistake his discourse, when we have found out the point he drives at. Locke.

They look no further before them than the next line; whence it will inevitably follow, that they can drive to no certain point, but ramble from one subject to another. Dryden.

We have done our work, and are come within view of the end that we have been driving at.
Addison on the War.

5. To aim; to strike at with fury.

Four rogues in buckram let drive at me.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

At Auxur's shield he drove, and at the blow
Both shield and arm to ground together go.
Dryden, Æn.

6. To distrain; the word, I think, is still thus used.

His landlord, who, he fears, hath sent
His water-bailiff thus to drive for rent.
Cleaveland, Poems, &c. p. 19.

7. To drive, in all its senses, whether active or neuter, may be observed to retain a sense compounded of violence and progression.

DRIVE.* n. s. [from the verb.] Passage in a carriage. A modern word.

We had a dreary drive, in a dusky night, to St. Andrew's, where we arrived late.
Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

To DRI'VEL.† v. n. [from drip, dripple, dribbel, drivel. Such is Dr. Johnson's etymological deduction. The word is perhaps from the Icel. drafa, to talk idly or foolishly; whence also the Danish dræv or dræver, a fool, a trifler; and the Teut. ravelen, to dote. And thus the second definition ought to be the first.]

1. To slaver; to let the spittle fall in drops, like a child, an idiot, or a dotard.

I met with this Chremes, a drivelling old fellow, lean, shaking both of head and hands, already half earth, and yet then most greedy of earth. Sidney.

No man could spit from him, but would be forced to drivel like some paralytick, or a fool.
Grew.

2. To be weak or foolish; to dote.

This drivelling love is like a great natural, that runs lolling up and down to hide his bauble.
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

I hate to see a brave bold fellow sotted,
Made sour and senseless, turn'd to whey by love;
A drivelling hero, fit for a romance. Dryden.

DRI'VEL.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Slaver; moisture shed from the mouth.

Besides th' eternal drivel, that supplies
The dropping beard, from nostrils, mouth, and eyes. Dryden.

2. A fool; an idiot; a driveller. This sense is now out of use, Dr. Johnson says. But the sense he has thus assigned to it was not an exclusive one; it meant, before the time of Sidney, whose authority alone is cited by Dr. Johnson, a servant. Yet Dr. Jamieson has questioned, in his Scottish Dictionary, this relationship of the word to the Teut. drevel, a servant; and considers it only as a driveller. Our old lexicography militates against this opinion. "Drevyll, a servant." Prompt. Parv. "Drevell and drudge." Vulg. Horm. "Drivel or slave." Huloet. "A drivel, drug, or kitchen-slave." Barret.

What fool am I, to mingle that drivel's speeches among my noble thoughts! Sidney.

Millions of years this old drivel Cupid lives,
While still more wretch, more wicked he doth prove. Sidney.

That false witch, and that foul aged drevill;
The one a fiend, the other an incarnate devil.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 3.

DRI'VELLER. n. s. [from drivel.] A fool; an idiot; a slaverer.

I have heard the arrantest drivellers commended for their shrewdness, even by men of tolerable judgement. Swift.

DRI'VEN. Participle of drive.

They were driven forth from among men.
Job, xxx. 5.

DRI'VER.† n. s. [from drive.]

1. The person or instrument who gives any motion by violence.
2. One who drives beasts.

He from the many peopled city flies;
Contemns their labours, and the driver's cries.
Sandys.

The driver runs up to him immediately, and beats him almost to death. L'Estrange.

The multitude or common rout, like a drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which their driver shall accustom them to. South.

3. One who drives a carriage.

Not the fierce driver with more fury lends
The sounding lash, and ere the stroke descends,
Low to the wheels his pliant body bends.
Dryden, Virgil.

4. One who considers a thing as his ultimate design.

It is strange, that for wishing and advising, and in his own particular using and ensuing that moderation, thereby not to engarboil the church, and disturb the course of piety, he should so, by you and yours, be blamed, accused, and traduced for a Papist and an Arminian; calumniated almost in every ordinary, by your means, for a dangerous driver at popery and sedition.
Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 80.

DRI'VING.* n. s. [from drive.]

1. The act of giving motion.

The driving [in the margin marching] is like the driving of Jehu, the son of Nimshi. 2 Kings, ix. 20.

2. Tendency.

Did you mark the dainty driving of the last point? Brewer, Com. of Lingua, iii. 7.

To DRI'ZZLE.† v. a. [driselen, German, to shed dew; driusan, Goth. to fall.] To shed in small slow drops; as winter rains.

When the sun sets, the air doth drizzle dew.
Shakspeare.

Though now this face of mine be hid
In sap-consuming winter's drizzled snow,
And all the conduits of my blood froze up,
Yet hath my night of life some memory. Shaks.

To DRI'ZZLE. v. n. To fall in short slow drops.

And drizzling drops that often do redound,
The firmest flint doth in continuance wear.
Spenser, F. Q.

Her heart did melt in great compassion,
And drizzling tears did shed for pure affection.
Spenser, F. Q.

This day will pour down,
If I conjecture ought, no drizzling show'r,
But rattling storm of arrows barb'd with fire.
Milton, P. L.

The neighbouring mountains, by reason of their height, are more exposed to the dews and drizzling rains than any of the adjacent parts.
Addison on Italy.

DRI'ZZLE.* n. s. A small rain.

DRI'ZZLING.* n. s. [from the verb.] A slow drop.

The draffysh declaracyons of my lorde Boner, with such other dirty dryselings of Antichrist.
Bale, Yet a Course, &c., fol. 97. b.

DRI'ZZLY.† adj. [from drizzle.] Shedding small rain.

This during winter's drizzly reign be done,
Till the new ram receives th' exalted sun.
Dryden, Virg.

Thus easy rob'd, they to the fountain sped,
That in the middle of the court up-threw
A stream high-spouting from its liquid bed,
And falling back again in drizzly dew.
Thomson, Castle of Indolence.

DROIL.† n. s. [by Junius understood a contraction of drivel, Dr. Johnson says. Drivel certainly means a slave, one who is a very low servant. So the Icel. driole, a slave.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; a drudge.

Then I begin to rave at my stars' bitterness,
To see how many muckhills plac'd above me,
Peasants and droils!
Beaum. and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

To DROIL.† v. n. [from the noun.] To work sluggishly and slowly; to plod.

Let such vile vassals, born to base vocation,
Drudge in the world, and for their living droil,
Which have no wit to live withouten toyle.
Spenser, F. Q.

The soul — finding the ease she had from her visible and sensuous colleague the body, in performance of religious duties, her pinions now broken and flagging, shifted off from herself the labour of high soaring any more, forgot her heavenly flight, and left the dull and droiling carcass to plod on in the old road and drudging trade of controversy. Milton, Of Reform. B. i.

Desuetude does contract and narrow our faculties, so that we can apprehend only those things in which we are conversant; the droiling peasant scarce thinks there is any world beyond the neighbouring markets. Gov. of the Tongue.

DROLL.† n. s. [drôle, French. Dr. Johnson. See also Loescheri Liter. Celt. p. 99. "Drol, trol, (Celt.) homo impudens, unde Gallicum drôle.]

1. One whose business is to raise mirth by petty tricks; a jester; a buffoon; a jack-pudding.

But since I am fallen upon Dr. Dale, who was a witty kind of droll, I will tell you instead of news (for there is little good stirring now) two other facetious tales of his. Howell, Lett. iv. 2.

As he was running home in all haste, a droll takes him up by the way. L'Estrange.

He whom we allowed, and formerly, for a certain pleasant subtilty, and natural way of giving you an unexpected hit, called a droll, is now mimicked by a biter, who is a dull fellow, that tells you a lie with a grave face, and laughs at you for knowing him no better than to believe him.
Tatler, No. 12.

Why, how now, Andrew, cries his brother droll;
To-day's conceit methinks is something dull.
Prior.

Democritus, dear droll, revisit earth,
And with our follies glut thy heighten'd mirth.
Prior.

2. A farce; something exhibited to raise mirth. See DROLLERY.

Some as justly fame extols,
For lofty lines in Smithfield drolls. Swift.

To DROLL.† v. n. [droler, Fr.] To jest; to play the buffoon.

Such august designs as inspire your inquiries used to be decided by drolling fantasticks, that have only wit enough to make others and themselves ridiculous. Glanville.

Good words, friend, said the bee, (having now pruned himself, and being disposed to droll,) I'll give you my hand and word to come near your kennel no more. Swift, Tale of a Tub.

To DROLL.* v. a. To cheat; to trick; to cajole; to flatter.

Men that will not be reasoned into their senses, may yet be laughed or drolled into them.
L'Estrange.

We must not be drolled out of our religion.
Wallis, Serm. at Oxf. (1682,) p. 30.

Let virtuosos insult, and despise on, yet they never shall be able to droll away nature. South.

That no example of great men, or of the multitude, may bias him, nor sophistry of cunning men cheat him of his religion, no atheistical person droll or rally him out of it, nor scurrility make him ashamed of it. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. iii.

It would be a jest indeed, should he droll himself into a belief that there are no such things as pain or death. Scott, Christian Life.

DRO'LLER.* n. s. [from droll.] A jester; a buffoon.

He is making an experiment by another sort of enemies, and sets the apes and drollers upon it.
Glanville, Serm. p. 193.

DRO'LLERY.† n. s. [Fr. drolerie.]

1. Idle jokes; buffoonery.

They hang between heaven and hell, borrow the Christians' faith, and the atheists' drollery upon it.
Gov. of the Tongue.

2. A show; the old word for the present drolls exhibited at fairs.

Alon. What were these?
Seb. A living drollery: now I will believe
That there are unicorns. Shakspeare, Tempest.

DRO'LLING.* n. s. [from droll.] Burlesque; low wit; contemptible jesting.

These whifflers, who have neither learning nor good manners, are neither afraid nor ashamed by their rude drolling and buffooning to expose to contempt all that which the wisest and best men in the world have always had the greatest veneration for. Hallywell, Moral Sermons, p. 56.

DRO'LLINGLY.* adv. [from drolling.] In a jesting manner.

Are all men puritans when they are sick, or upon their death-beds? And yet then there are very few are so modish as to wave the talk of religion, or to talk lightly and drollingly of it.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

DRO'LLISH.* adj. Somewhat droll. A word frequent in conversation; and somewhere used by Sterne.

DRO'MEDARY.† n. s. [dromedaire, Ital. dromedarius, low Lat. from the Gr. δρομὰς, swift; δρομὰς κάμηλος.]

A sort of camel so called from its swiftness, because it is said to travel a hundred miles a day. Dromedaries are smaller than common camels, slenderer, and more nimble, and are of two kinds: one larger, with two small bunches, covered with hair, on its back; the other lesser, with one hairy eminence, and more frequently called camel: both are capable of great fatigue. Their hair is soft and shorn: they have no fangs and fore-teeth, nor horn upon their feet, which are only covered with a fleshy skin; and they are about seven feet and a half high, from the ground to the top of their heads. See CAMEL. Calmet.

Straw for the horses and dromedaries brought they unto the place. 1 Kings, iv. 28.

Mules after these, camels and dromedaries,
And wagons fraught with utensils of war.
Milton, P. R.

DRONE.† n. s. [Sax. ðpoen, according to Dr. Johnson; ðpane, or ðpan, of ðpýzan, to expel; according to Mr. Horne Tooke. The German trane, is a drone. Serenius refers to the old Sax. ðpoenen, to murmur; to make a low noise. Dr. Johnson's ðpoen, therefore, may be no errour, as I know some have asserted.]

1. The bee which makes no honey, and is therefore driven out by the rest.

The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum,
Delivering o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Luxurious kings are to their people lost;
They live, like drones, upon the publick cost.
Dryden, Aurengzebe.

All, with united force, combine to drive
The lazy drones from the laborious hive.
Dryden, Virgil.

2. A sluggard; an idler.

He sleeps by day
More than the wild cat: drones hive not with me,
Therefore I part with him. Shakspeare.

Sit idle on the household hearth
A burdenous drone, to visitants a gaze. Milton.

It is my misfortune to be married to a drone, who lives upon what I get, without bringing any thing into the common stock. Addison.

3. The hum, or instrument of humming.

If men should ever be thumbing the drone of one plain song, it would be a dull opiate to the most wakeful attention. Milton, Anim. Rem. Def.

Born to no possession of your own, but a pair of wings, and a drone-pipe. Swift, Tale of a Tub.

Here while his scanting drone-pipe scann'd
The mystic figures of her hand;
He tipples palmestry, and dines
On all her fortune-telling lines. Cleaveland.

To DRONE. v. n. [from the noun.]

1. To live in idleness; to dream.

What have I lost by my forefathers' fault?
Why, was not I the twentieth by descent
From a long restive race of droning kings? Dryd.

2. To give a heavy dull tone.

Melfoil and honeysuckles pound,
With these alluring savours strew the ground,
And mix with tinkling brass the cymbal's droning sound. Dryden.

DRO'NING.* n. s. [from drone.] Utterance in a dull, drivelling manner.

Cant and droning supply the place of sense and reason in the language of men.
Swift, Tale of a Tub.

DRO'NISH.† adj. [from drone.] Idle; sluggish; dreaming; lazy; indolent; unactive. This is a very old word in our language, though Dr. Johnson has adduced only a solitary instance of it from Rowe.

Drones—make great buzzing, to the disturbance of the good travelling bees, whose inclination, upon examination, you shall find more profitable than the dronish ones.
Knight, Tr. of Truth, (1580,) fol. 37.

The dronish monks, the scorn and shame of manhood,
Rouse and prepare once more to take possession,
To nestle in their ancient hives again. Rowe.

Several, who have gotten to be elected into fellowships or students' places,—not regarding the ends of this institution, do live, upon the said fellowships or students' places, a dronish and slothful life.
Dean Prideaux, Art. for the Ref. of the two Univ. 1715.

DRO'NISHNESS.* n. s. [from dronish.] Laziness; inactivity.

He must not be tame neither, nor sink into an enervated dulness, or flaccid dronishness of gesture.
Essay on the Action for the Pulpit, (1753,) p. 65.

To DROOP.† v. n. [droef, sorrow, Dutch; driupa, Icel. to mourn.]

1. To languish with sorrow.

Conceiving the dishonour of his mother,
He straight declin'd, droop'd, took it deeply;
Fasten'd, and fix'd the shame on't in himself.
Shakspeare.

I droop, with struggling spent,
My thoughts are on my sorrows bent. Sandys.

2. To faint; to grow weak; to be dispirited.

I find my zenith doth depend upon
A most auspicious star; whose influence
If now I court not, but omit, my fortunes
Will ever after droop. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Good things of day begin to droop and drowse,
While night's black agents to their prey do rowse.
Shakspeare.

When by impulse from heav'n Tyrtæus sung,
In drooping soldiers a new courage sprung.
Roscommon.

Can flow'rs but droop in absence of the sun,
Which wak'd their sweets? and mine, alas! is gone. Dryden.

Time seems not now beneath his years to stoop,
Nor do his wings with sickly feathers droop.
Dryden.

When factious rage to cruel exile drove
The queen of beauty and the court of love,
The muses droop'd with their forsaken arts. Dryd.

I'll animate the soldiers' drooping courage
With love of freedom and contempt of life.
Addison, Cato.

I saw him ten days before he died, and observed he began very much to droop and languish. Swift.

3. To sink; to lean downwards; commonly by weakness or grief.

I never from thy side henceforth must stray,
Where'er our day's work lies; though now enjoin'd
Laborious, till day droop. Milton, P. L.

His head, though gay,
Carnation, purple, azure, or speck'd with gold,
Hung drooping, unsustain'd. Milton, P. L.

On her heav'd bosom hung her drooping head,
Which, with a sigh she rais'd, and this she said.
Pope.

DROP. n. s. [ðpoppa, Saxon.]

1. A globule of moisture; as much liquor as falls at once when there is not a continual stream.

Meet we the med'cine of our country's weal,
And with him pour we in our country's purge,
Each drop of us. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Whereas Aristotle tells us, that if a drop of wine be put into ten thousand measures of water, the wine being overpowered by so vast a quantity of water, will be turned into it; he speaks very improbably. Boyle.

Admiring in the gloomy shade,
Those little drops of light. Waller.

Had I but known that Sancho was his father,
I would have pour'd a deluge of my blood
To save one drop of his. Dryden, Span. Friar.

2. Diamond hanging in the ear.

The drops to thee, Brillante, we consign;
And Momentilla, let the watch be thine. Pope.

DROP SERENE. n. s. [gutta serena, Lat.] A disease of the eye, proceeding from an inspissation of the humour.

So thick a drop serene hath quench'd their orbs,
Or dim suffusion veil'd! Milton, P. L.

To DROP.† v. a. [ðpopian, Sax.]

1. To pour in drops or single globules.

His heavens shall drop down dew.
Deut. xxxiii. 28.

2. To let fall.

Others o'er chimney tops and turrets row,
And drop their anchors on the meads below.
Dryden.

One only hag remain'd:
Propp'd on her trusty staff, not half upright,
And dropp'd an awkward court'sy to the knight.
Dryden.

St. John himself will scarce forbear
To bite his pen and drop a tear. Swift.

3. To let go; to dismiss from the hand, or the possession.

Though I could
With barefac'd power sweep him from my sight,
And bid my will avouch it; yet I must not,
For certain friends that are both his and mine,
Whose loves I may not drop. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Those who have assumed visible shapes for a season, can hardly be reckoned among this order of compounded beings; because they drop their bodies, and divest themselves of those visible shapes.
Watts, Logick.

4. To utter slightly or casually.

Drop not thy word against the house of Isaac.
Amos, vii. 16.

5. To insert indirectly, or by way of digression.

St. Paul's epistles contain nothing but points of Christian instruction, amongst which he seldom fails to drop in the great and distinguishing doctrines of our holy religion. Locke.

6. To intermit; to cease.

Where the act is unmanly or immoral, we ought to drop our hopes, or rather never entertain them.
Collier on Despair.

After having given this judgement in its favour, they suddenly dropt the pursuit. Sharp, Surg.

7. To quit a master.

I have beat the hoof till I have worn out these shoes in your service, and not one penny left me to buy more; so that you must even excuse me, if I drop you here. L'Estrange.

8. To let go a dependant, or companion, without farther association.

She drilled him on to five-and-fifty, and will drop him in his old age, if she can find her account in another. Addison.

They have no sooner fetched themselves up to the fashion of the polite world, but the town has dropped them. Addison.

Mention either of the kings of Spain or Poland, and he talks notably; but if you go out of the Gazette, you drop him. Addison.

9. To suffer to vanish, or come to nothing.

Thus was the fame of our Saviour perpetuated by such records as would preserve the traditionary account of him to after-ages, and rectify it, if, by passing through several generations, it might drop any part that was material. Addison.

Opinions, like fashions, always descend from those of quality to the middle sort, and thence to the vulgar, where they are dropped and vanish.
Swift.

10. To bedrop; to speckle; to variegate with spots. "Variis stellatus corpora guttis."

Or, sporting, with quick glance,
Shew to the sun their wav'd coats, dropp'd with gold. Milton, P. L.

To DROP. v. n.

1. To fall in drops, or single globules.

The quality of mercy is not strain'd;
It droppeth, as the gentle rain from heaven,
Upon the place beneath. Shaksp. Merch. of Venice.

2. To let drops fall; to discharge itself in drops.

The heavens dropped at the presence of God.
Psalm lxvii. 8.

While cumber'd with my dropping clothes I lay,
The cruel nation, covetous of prey,
Stain'd with my blood th' unhospitable coast.
Dryden, Æn.
Beneath a rock he sigh'd alone,
And cold Lycæus wept from every dropping stone.
Dryden.

3. To fall; to come from a higher place.
Philosophers conjecture that you dropped from the moon, or one of the stars.
Swift, Gulliver's Travels.
In every revolution, approaching nearer and nearer to the sun, this comet must at last drop into the sun's body. Cheyne.

4. To fall spontaneously.
So may'st thou live, till, like ripe fruit, thou drop
Into thy mother's lap; or be with ease

5. To fall in death; to die suddenly.
It was your presurmise,
That in the dole of blows your son might drop.
Shakspeare.

6. To die.
Nothing, says Seneca, so soon reconciles us to the thoughts of our own death, as the prospect of one friend after another dropping round us.
Digby to Pope.

7. To sink into silence; to vanish; to come to nothing: a familiar phrase.
Virgil's friends thought fit to let drop this incident of Helen. Addison's Travels.
I heard of threats, occasioned by my verses: I sent to acquaint them where I was to be found, and so it dropped. Pope.

8. To come unexpectedly.
Either you come not here, or as you grace
Some old acquaintance, drop into the place,
Careless and qualmish, with a yawning face.
Dryden.
He could never make any figure in company, but by giving disturbance at his entry; and therefore takes care to drop in when he thinks you are just seated. Spectator, No. 448.

9. To fall short of a mark.
Often it drops or overshoots by the disproportions of distance or application. Collier.

DRO'PPING. n. s. [from drop.]

1. That which falls in drops.
Thrifty wench scrapes kitchen-stuff,
And barreling the droppings and the snuff
Of wasting candles. Donne.

2. That which drops when the continuous stream ceases.
Strain out the last dull droppings of your sense,
And rhyme with all the rage of impotence. Pope.

DRO'PPINGLY.* adv. [from dropping.] By drops. Huloet.

DRO'PLET. n. s. A little drop.
Thou abhorr'dst in us our human griefs,
Scorn'd our brine's flow, and those our droplets, which
From niggard nature fall. Shakspeare, Timon.

DRO'PSTONE. n. s. [drop and stone.] Spar formed into the shape of drops.
Woodward.

DRO'PWORT. n. s. [drop and wort.] A plant of various species.

DRO'PSICAL. adj. [from dropsy.] Diseased with a dropsy; hydropical; tending to a dropsy.
The diet of nephritick and dropsical persons ought to be such as is opposite to, and subdueth the alkalescent nature of the salts in the serum of the blood. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DRO'PSIED. adj. [from dropsy.] Diseased with a dropsy.
Where great addition swells, and virtue none,
It is a dropsied honour: good alone
Is good. Shakspeare, All's well.

DRO'PSY. n. s. [hydrops, Lat.; whence anciently hydropisy, thence dropisy, dropsy.] A collection of water in the body, from too lax a tone of the solids, whereby digestion is weakened, and all the parts stuffed. Quincy.
An anasarca, a species of dropsy, is an extravasation of water lodged in the cells of the membrana adiposa. Sharp.

DROSS.† n. s. [ᵹpoꝛ, Sax.; tross, Icel. refuse; leavings. Wicliffe writes it drastis. So the Sax. ᵹpeꝛᵹep, fæces.]

1. The recrement or dispumation of metals.
Some scumm'd the dross that from the metal came,
Some stirr'd the molten ore with ladles great,
And every one did swink, and every one did sweat.
Spenser, F. Q.
Should the mixture of a little dross constrain the church to deprive herself of so much gold, rather than learn how, by art and judgement, to make separation of the one from the other?
Hooker.

2. Rust; incrustation upon metal.
An emperor, hid under a crust of dross, after cleansing, has appeared with all his titles fresh and beautiful. Addison.

3. Refuse; leavings; sweepings; any thing remaining after the removal of the better part; dregs; feculence; corruption.
Fair proud, now tell me why should fair be proud,
Sith all world's glory is but dross unclean;
And in the shade of death itself shall shroud,
However now thereof ye little ween? Spenser.
That most divine light only shineth on those minds, which are purged from all worldly dross and human uncleanness. Ralegh.
All treasures and all gain esteem as dross,
And dignities and pow'rs all but the highest.
Milton.
Such precepts exceedingly dispose us to piety and religion, by purifying our souls from the dross and filth of sensual delights. Tillotson.

DRO'SSEL.* See DROTCHEL.

DRO'SSINESS. n. s. [from drossy.] Foulness; feculence; rust.
The furnace of affliction refines us from earthly drossiness, and softens us for the impression of God's stamp. Boyle.

DRO'SSY.† adj. [from dross.]

1. Full of scorious or recrementitious parts; full of dross.
So doth the fire the drossy gold refine. Davies.
For, by the fire, they emit not only many drossy and scorious parts, but whatsoever they had received either from earth or loadstone.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Worthless; foul; feculent.
Your intention hold,
As fire these drossy rhymes to purify,
Or as elixir to change them into gold. Donne.
O be Thou pleased to cure this sad, this miserable disease; to inspirit and enliven this earthly, drossy heart, that it may freely mount towards Thee. Whole Duty of Man, Collects.

DRO'TCHEL.† n. s. [corrupted perhaps from dretchel. To dretch, in Chaucer, is to idle, to delay. Droch, in Frisick, is delay. Or, it may be another corruption of drossel. See DRAZEL, which is, in some parts of England, still the name for a slut; and sometimes pronounced dratchel.] An idle wench; a sluggard. In Scottish it is still used.
An unwieldy drossel, nothing but guts.
Minsheu, in V. Panguts.

DROVE.† n. s. [from drive, Sax. ᵹpaf.]

1. A body or number of cattle; generally used of oxen or black cattle.
They brought to their stations many droves of cattle; and within a few days were brought out of the country two thousand muttons. Hayward.
A Spaniard is unacquainted with our northern droves. Brown.

2. A number of sheep driven. To an herd of oxen we regularly oppose, not a drove, but a flock of sheep.
A drove of sheep, or an herd of oxen, may be managed by any noise or cry which the drivers shall accustom them to. South.

3. Any collection of animals.
The sounds and seas, with all their finny drove,
Now to the moon in wavering morrice move.
Milton, Cm.

4. A crowd; a tumult.
But if to fame alone thou dost pretend,
The miser will his empty palace lend,
Set wide with doors, adorn'd with plated brass,
Where droves, as at a city-gate, may pass.
Dryden, Juv.

5. A drift-way, or common road for driving cattle. Cowel.

DRO'VEN. part. from drive. Not now used.
This is fought indeed;
Had we so done at first, we had droven them home
With clouts about their heads. Shakspeare.

DRO'VER.† n. s. [from drove.]

1. One that fats oxen for sale, and drives them to market.
The prince hath got your hero.
—— I wish him joy of her.
—— Why, that's spoken like an honest drover; so they sell bullocks. Shakspeare, Much Ado.
The temple itself was profaned into a den of thieves, a rendezvous of higlers and drovers, and a place not for the sacrificing, but for the selling of sheep and oxen. South, Serm. iii. 311.
The drover whom his fellow drover meets,
In narrow passages of winding streets.
Dryden, Juv.

2. Once used by Spenser for a boat driven forward by the tide.
He woke,
And saw his drover drive along the stream.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 22.

DROUGHT.† n. s. [Sax. ᵹpuᵹoðe, (drugoth) from ᵹpyᵹan, to dry. Hence our word has been often written drouth; and in old time drythe or drith. Iden in 1557 and Sir Thomas Elyot use the latter. Huloet also has dryth and drithe, in his old dictionary, under dryness.]

1. Dry weather; want of rain.
O earth! I will befriend thee more with rain
Than youthful April shall with all his showers:
In summer's drought I'll drop upon thee still.
Shakspeare.
Great droughts in summer, lasting till the end of August, some gentle showers upon them, and then some dry weather, portend a pestilent summer the year following. Bacon.
To south the Persian bay,
And inaccessible th' Arabian drought.
Milton, P. R.
As torrents in the drowth of summer fail,
So perisht man from death shall never rise.
Sandys.
They were so learned in natural philosophy, that they foretold earthquakes and storms, great droughts, and great plagues. Temple.
In a drought the thirsty creatures cry,
And gape upon the gather'd clouds for rain.
Dryden.
Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and landsnails innumerable come out of their lurking-places. Ray.

2. Thirst; want of drink.

His carcass, pin'd with hunger and with drought.
Milton.

One whose drought
Yet scarce allay'd, still eyes the current stream,
Whose liquid murmur heard, new thirst excites.
Milton.

DROU'GHTINESS. n. s. [from droughty.] The state of wanting rain.

DRO'UGHTY. adj. [from drought.]

1. Wanting rain; sultry.
That a camel, so patient of long thirst, should be bred in such droughty and parched countries, where it is of such eminent use for travelling over those dry and sandy deserts, where no water is to be had, must be acknowledged an act of providence and design. Ray on Creation.

2. Thirsty; dry with thirst.
If the former years
Exhibit no supplies, alas! thou must
With tasteless water wash thy droughty throat.
Philips.

DROUTH.* See DROUGHT.

To DROWN. v. a. [from drunden, below, Germ. Skinner; from ðpuncnian, Sax. Mr. Lye.]

1. To suffocate in water.
They would soon drown those that refused to swim down the popular stream. King Charles.
When of God's image only eight he found
Snatch'd from the wat'ry grave, and sav'd from nations drown'd. Prior.

2. To overwhelm in water.
Or so much as it needs
To dew the sovereign flower, and drown the weeds.
Shakspeare.
Galleys might be drowned in the harbour with the great ordnance, before they could be rigged.
Knolles, Hist.

3. To overflow; to bury in an inundation; to deluge.
Betwixt the prince and parliament we stand,
The barriers of the state on either hand:
May neither overflow, for then they drown the land.
Dryden.

4. To immerge; to lose in any thing.
Most men being in sensual pleasures drown'd,
It seems their souls but in their senses are.
Davies.

5. To lose in something that overpowers or covers.
Who cometh next will not follow that course, however good, which his predecessors held, for doubt to have his doings drowned in another man's praise. Spenser on Ireland.
That the brightness of the sun doth drown our discerning of the lesser lights, is a popular errour.
Wotton.
My private voice is drown'd amid the senate.
Addison.
Some aged man who lives this act to see,
And who in former times remember'd me,
May say, the son, in fortitude and fame,
Outgoes the mark, and drowns his father's name.
Dryden.

To DROWN. v. n. To be suffocated in the waters.
There be, that keep them out of fire, and yet was never burned; that beware of water, and yet was never nigh drowning. Ascham, Schoolmaster.
Methought what pain it was to drown!
What dreadful noise of waters in my ears! Shaks.

DRO'WNER.* n. s. [from drown.] That which overwhelms or suffocates.
Idleness [is] enemy of virtue, the drowner of youth. Ascham, Toxophilus.

To DROWSE. v. a. [droosen, Dutch.] To make heavy with sleep.
There gentle sleep
First found me, and with soft oppression seiz'd
My drowsed senses uncontroll'd. Milton, P. L.

To DROWSE.† v. n.

1. To slumber; to grow heavy with sleep.
All their shape
Spangled with eyes, more numerous than those
Of Argus; and more wakeful than to drowse,
Charm'd with Arcadian pipe. Milton, P. L.
He drowsed upon his couch.
South, Serm. iv. 78.

2. To look heavy; not cheerful.
They rather drows'd, and hung their eyelids down,
Slept in his face, and render'd such aspect
As cloudy men use to their adversaries.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

DRO'WSIHED. n. s. Sleepiness; inclination to sleep. Obsolete.
The royal virgin shook off drowsyhed;
And, rising forth out of her baser boure,
Look'd for her knight. Spenser, F. Q.

DRO'WSILY. adv. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepily; heavily; with an inclination to sleep.
The air swarms thick with wand'ring deities,
Which drowsily like humming beetles rise.
Dryden.

2. Sluggishly; idly; slothfully; lazily.
We satisfy our understanding with the first things, and, thereby satiated, slothfully and drowsily sit down. Ralegh.

DRO'WSINESS. n. s. [from drowsy.]

1. Sleepiness; heaviness with sleep; disposition to sleep.
What a strange drowsiness possesses them!
Shakspeare.
In deep of night, when drowsiness
Hath lock'd up mortal sense, then listen I
To the celestial siren's harmony. Milton, Arcades.
What succour can I hope the muse will send,
Whose drowsiness hath wrong'd the muse's friend?
Crashaw.
He passes his whole life in a dozed condition, between sleeping and waking, with a kind of drowsiness and confusion upon his senses. South.
He that from his childhood has made rising betimes familiar to him, will not waste the best part of his life in drowsiness and lying a-bed. Locke.
A sensation of drowsiness, oppression, and lassitude, are signs of a plentiful meal in young people. Arbuthnot.

2. Idleness; indolence; inactivity.
It falleth out well, to shake off your drowsiness; for it seemed to be the trumpet of a war.
Bacon, Holy War.

DRO'WSY. adj. [from drowse.]

1. Sleepy; heavy with sleep; lethargick.
Drowsy am I, and yet can rarely sleep. Sidney.
Men drowsy, and desirous to sleep, or before the fit of an ague, do use to yawn and stretch.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The flowers, call'd out of their beds,
Start and raise up their drowsy heads. Cleaveland.
Drunken at last, and drowsy they depart,
Each to his house. Dryden.

2. Heavy; lulling; causing sleep.
Sir Guyon, mindful of his vows yplight,
Up rose from drowsy couch. Spenser, F. Q.
While thus she rested, on her arm reclin'd,
The hoary willows waving with the wind,
And feather'd quires that warbled in the shade,
And purling streams that through the meadow stray'd,
In drowsy murmurs lull'd the gentle maid.
Addison.

3. Stupid; dull.
Those inadvertencies, a body would think, even our author, with all his drowsy reasoning, could never have been capable of. Atterbury.

DRO'WSY-HEADED.* adj. [drowsy and head.] Having a sluggish disposition; heavy.
The appetite of sleeping is as unsatiable as any of the rest, if a man do give himself unto it; as Solomon also observeth: who so elegantly characterizeth the drowsy-headed sluggards, that no character in Theophrastus is more graphically described. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 200.

To DRUB.† v. a. [druber, to kill, Danish; drabba, Su. to contend or fight; treffen, Germ. to strike.] To thresh; to beat; to bang; to thump; to thwack; to cudgel. A word of contempt.
He that is valiant, and dares fight,
Though drubb'd, can lose no honour by't. Hudibras.
The little thief had been soundly drubbed with a good honest cudgel. L'Estrange.
Though the bread be not mine, yet, if it had been less than weight, I should have been drubbed.
Locke.

DRUB. n. s. [from the verb.] A thump; a knock; a blow.
The blows and drubs I have receiv'd,
Have bruis'd my body, and bereav'd
My limbs of strength. Hudibras.
By setting an unfortunate mark on their followers, they have exposed them to innumerable drubs and contusions. Addison.

To DRUDGE.† v. n. [ðpeccan, to vex, Saxon; draghen, to carry, Dutch. So far Dr. Johnson. Mr. Horne Tooke shews that it is the past participle (ðpoȝ, ðpuȝe,) of the Sax. ðpeoȝan, to act, to suffer.] To labour in mean offices; to toil without honour or dignity; to work hard; to slave.
And to crack'd fiddle and hoarse tabour,
In merriment, did drudge and labour. Hudibras.
Advantages obtained by industry directed by philosophy, can never be expected from drudging ignorance. Glanville.
Soon he came to court,
Proffering for hire his service at the gate,
To drudge, draw water, and to run or wait.
Dryden.
I made no such bargain with you, to live always drudging. Dryden, Dedic. Æn.

To DRUDGE.† v. a. To consume tediously, or laboriously.
What is an age, in dull renown drudg'd o'er!
One little single hour of love is more. Granville.
The poor sleep little: we must learn to watch
Our labours late, and early every morning,
Midst winter frosts; then clad and fed with sparing,
Rise to our toils, and drudge away the day. Otway.

DRUDGE. n. s. [from the verb.] One employed in mean labour; a slave; one doomed to servile occupation.
To conclude, this drudge of the devil, this diviner, laid claim to me. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.
He sits above and laughs the while
At thee, ordain'd his drudge, to execute
Whate'er his wrath shall bid. Milton, P. L.
Art thou our slave,
Our captive, at the publick mill our drudge,
And dar'st thou, at our sending and command,
Dispute thy coming? Milton, S. A.
He is content to be their drudge,
And on their errands gladly trudge. Hudibras.
The hard master makes men serve him for nought, who rewards his drudges and slaves with nothing but shame and sorrow, and misery.
Tillotson.

DRU'DGER. n. s. [from drudge.]

1. A mean labourer.

2. The drudging-box; the box out of which flour is thrown on roast meat.
Dict.

DRU'DGERY. n. s. [from drudge.] Mean labour; ignoble toil; dishonourable work; servile occupation.

My old dame will be undone for one to do her husbandry, and her drudgery. Shakspeare.

Were there not instruments for drudgery as well as offices of drudgery? Were there not people to receive orders as well as others to give and authorize them? L'Estrange.

You do not know the heavy grievances,
The toils, the labours, weary drudgeries,
Which they impose. Southern, Oroonoko.

To thee that drudgery of pow'r I give;
Cares be thy lot: reign thou, and let me live.
Dryden.

Paradise was a place of bliss, as well as immortality, without drudgery, and without sorrow.
Locke.

It is now handled by every dirty wench, and condemned to do her drudgery.
Swift, Meditations on a Broomstick.

Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace-stone, looks gay. Thomson, Summer.

DRU'DGING-BOX. n. s. [drudging and box.] The box out of which flour is sprinkled upon roast meat.

But if it lies too long, the crackling's pall'd,
Not by the drudging-box to be recall'd.
King, Cookery.

DRU'DGINGLY. adv. [from drudging.] Laboriously; toilsomely.

He does now all the meanest and triflingest things himself drudgingly, without making use of any inferiour or subordinate minister.
Ray on the Creation.

DRUG.† n. s. [drogue, French; δροζε, Sax. of δριζαν or δρυζαν, to dry. Mr. H. Tooke.]

1. An ingredient used in physick; a medicinal simple.

A fleet descry'd
Hangs in the clouds, by equinoctial winds
Close sailing from Bengala, or the isles
Of Ternate and Tidore, whence merchants bring Their spicy drugs. Milton, P. L.

Judicious physick's noble art to gain,
He drugs and plants explor'd, alas, in vain! Smith.

Bright Helen mix'd a mirth-inspiring bowl,
Temper'd with drugs of sov'reign use, t' assuage
The boiling bosom of tumultuous rage.
Pope, Odyssey.

In the names of drugs and plants, the mistake in a word may endanger life.
Baker, Reflect. on Learning.

2. It is used sometimes for poison.

Mortal drugs I have; but Mantua's law
Is death to any he that utters them. Shakspeare.

And yet no doubts the poor man's draught control;
He dreads no poison in his homely bowl:
Then fear the deadly drug, when gems divine
Enchase the cup, and sparkle in the wine. Dryden.

3. Any thing without worth or value; any thing of which no purchaser can be found.

Each noble vice
Shall bear a price,
And virtue shall a drug become:
An empty name
Was all her fame,
But now she shall be dumb. Dryden, Albion.

4. A drudge. This seems the meaning here, Dr. Johnson says; that is, in the passage of Shakspeare, which is all he notices as to this meaning. But it was formerly common. "Drudge, or drugge, a servant which doth all the vile service." Huloet. "Drudge, a drug, or kitchen-slave." Barret.

He from his first swath proceeded
Through sweet degrees that this brief world affords,
To such as may the passive drugs of it freely command. Shakspeare.

5. A carriage for the conveyance of timber. Norfolk. Grose.

To DRUG. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To season with ingredients, commonly medicinal.

The surfeited grooms
Do mock their charge with snores. — I've drugg'd their possets,
That death and nature do contend about them.
Shakspeare.

2. To tincture with something offensive.

Oft they assay'd,
Hunger and thirst constraining; drugg'd as oft
With hatefullest disrelish, writh'd their jaws,
With soot and cinders fill'd. Milton, P. L.

To DRUG.* v. n. To prescribe or administer drugs.

Past all the doses of your drugging doctors.
B. Jonson, Alch.

DRU'GGER.* n. s. [from drug.] Our old word for a druggist.

Fraternities and companies, I approve of, as merchants' burses, colleges of druggers, physicians, musicians, &c.
Burton, Anatomy of Melancholy, p. 63.

DRU'GGERMAN.* n. s. [δραγέμενος, Græco-Barb. One who interprets. French, drogueman. It is sometimes written in English, dragoman, and sometimes trudgman. Chald. targeman. See TRUDGMAN.] An interpreter.

You druggerman of heaven, must I attend
Your drowning prayers? Dryden, Don Sebast.

DRU'GGET.† n. s. A slight kind of woollen stuff.

Even I, a dunce of more renown than they,
Was sent before but to prepare thy way;
And, coarsely clad in Norwich drugget, came
To teach the nations in thy greater name.
Dryden, Mac Flecknoe.

In druggets drest, of thirteen pence a-yard,
See Philip's son amidst his Persian guard. Swift.

DRU'GGIST.† n. s. [from drug, Dr. Johnson says. Rather from our old substantive druggister, of which the next word, druggster, is another abbreviation. Druggister is in Sherwood's Dictionary.] One who sells physical drugs.

Common nitre we bought at the druggist's. Boyle.

DRU'GSTER. n. s. [from drug.] One who sells physical simples.

Common oil of turpentine I bought at the drugster's. Boyle.

They set the clergy below their apothecaries, the physician of the soul below the drugsters of the body. South, Serm. i. 158.

DRU'ID.† n. s. [In some editions of Dr. Johnson's Dictionary, this word is unaccountably left out. But it is in the first; without any example, however; and with this short etymological notice: "derio, oaks, and hud, incantation; which may be as ancient as the Grecian δρὺς, Perron; darrach, oak, Erse." — The word deru in the Celtick, as derw in Welsh and Armorick, signifies an oak; and, as the druids held this tree in great reverence, it is supposed that their name was hence derived; the Gr. δρὺς, an oak, offers, of course, the same reason. The Welsh derwyddon, and the ancient Fr. druydes, thus shew their original. Steele uses this word in the singular number; "the druid of the family." Tatler, No. 255.] One of the priests and philosophers of the ancient Britons and Gauls.

After he [Brute] had furnished Britain with new regiments and lawes, there entred in a new fashioned sorte of priests; all divers from the other; and they were called druids. These dwelt in the forests, like heremites; and procured both publique and private sacrifices to be done. To them was it always put to discuss all matters of religion; to appoynt thereunto the ceremonies; to brynge up youthe in natural discipline; and to end all controversies.
Bale, Eng. Vot. P. i. (1560,) fol. 13. b.

That any law or superstition of our philosophers, the druids, forbad the Britons to write their memorable deeds, I know not why any out of Cæsar should allege. Milton, Hist. of England.

The British druids took this isle of Anglesey, then well-stored with thick woods and religious groves, (in so much that it was then called Inis dowill, the dark isle,) for their chief residence.
Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 9.

DRUI'DICAL.* adv. [from druid.] Pertaining to the manners, rites, or customs, of the druids.

I have frequently wondered that our modern writers have made so little use of the druidical times, and the traditions of the old bards, which afford subjects fruitful of the most genuine poetry, with respect both to imagery and sentiment.
Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

Any druidical anecdotes that I can meet with, I will be sure to send you when I return to Cambridge. Gray, Letter to Mason.

In the battle of Hastings, said to be translated from the Saxon, Stonehenge is called a druidical temple. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 155.

DRU'IDISM.* n. s. [from druid.] The philosophy, or religion, of the druids.

The great and capital objects of their worship were taken from druidism; trees, stones, the elements, and the heavenly bodies.
Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. ii. 1.

DRUM.† n. s. [tromme, Danish; drumme, Erse.]

1. An instrument of military musick, consisting of vellum strained over a broad hoop on each side, and beaten with sticks.

Let's march without the noise of threat'ning drums. Shakspeare.

In drums the closeness round about, that preserveth the sound from dispersing, maketh the noise come forth at the drum-hole, far more loud and strong than if you should strike upon the like skin extended in the open air. Bacon.

Tears trickling down their breasts bedew the ground,
And drums and trumpets mix their mournful sound. Dryden.

Now no more the drum
Provokes to arms, or trumpet's clangor shrill
Affrights the wives, and chills the virgin's blood.
Philips.

2. The tympanum of the ear, or the membrane which perceives the vibration of the air.

3. In use, when Johnson wrote, for a large concourse of visitors; what is now called a rout.

The young ladies contented themselves to be found employed in domestick duties; for then routs, drums, balls, assemblies, and such like markets for women, were not known. Rambler, No. 97.

Not dreaming the least of a drum or a rout.
Poems by Gent. of Oxford, (1757,) p. 5.

To DRUM.† v. n.

1. To beat a drum; to beat a tune on a drum.

There is still some talk about the drumming spirit in Wiltshire, but with many the story is as suspicious as that (which made no less noise) at Driffield. Hill's Fam. Letters, L. 33. (dat. 1663.)

Fantome advances to him drumming.
Addison, Com. of the Drummer.

2. To beat with a pulsatory motion.

His drumming heart cheers up his burning eye.
Shakspeare, Rape of Lucrece.

Now, heart,
Set ope thy sluices, send the vigorous blood
Through every active limb for my relief;
Then take thy rest within the quiet cell;
For thou shalt drum no more. Dryden.

3. To tinkle.

This indeed makes a noise, and drums in popular ears. Brown, Rel. Medici.

A boiling stomach, rotten teeth, a stinking breath, a drumming ear. Junius, Sin Stigm. p. 38.

To DRUM.* v. a. To expel with the sound of a drum. A military expression, signifying the greatest ignominy.

They drummed and trumpeted the wretches out of their hall of audience.
Burke on a Regicide Peace.

To DRU'MBLE.† v. n. [To drumble, in Devonshire, means to mutter in a sullen and inarticulate voice. The Welsh drwm is sad. This may be easily converted into sluggish. So, in Pegge's Supplement to Grose's Glossary, "To drumble, to drone; i. e. to be sluggish." The drone is, in some places, called a drumble-bee. And drumble and drone are still sometimes applied to a person muttering over and over the same circumstance.] To be confused; to be awkward.

Take up these clothes here quickly: where's the cowlstaff? Look, how you drumble: carry them to the landress in Datchet mead.
Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

DRU'MFISH. n. s. The name of a fish.

The under jaw of the drumfish from Virginia.
Woodward.

DRU'MLY.* adj. [probably from drumble; in a true sense of sluggish.] Thick; stagnant; muddy.

D. Draw me some water out of this spring.—I. Madam, it is all foul — it is all drumly, black, muddy.
Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gram. (1623,) p. 210.

DRUMMA'JOR. n. s. [drum and major.] The chief drummer of a regiment.

Such company may chance to spoil the swearing; And the drummajor's oaths, of bulk unruly, May dwindle to a feeble. Cleaveland.

DRUMMA'KER. n. s. [drum and maker.] He who deals in drums.

The drummaker uses it, and the cabinetmaker. Mortimer.

DRU'MMER. n. s. [from drum.] He whose office it is to beat the drum.

Drummer, strike up, and let us march away.
Shakspeare.

Here rows of drummers stand in martial file,
And with their vellum-thunder shake the pile.
Gay.

DRU'MSTICK.† n. s. [drum and stick.] The stick with which a drum is beaten.

I warrant you if the ghost appears, he'll whisk ye that wand before his eyes, and strike you the drumstick out of his hand. Addison, Drummer.

DRUNK. adj. [from drink.]

1. Intoxicated with strong liquor; inebriated.

This was the morn when issuing on the guard,
Drawn up in rank and file, they stood prepar'd
Of seeming arms to make a short assay;
Then hasten to be drunk, the business of the day.
Dryden.

We generally conclude that man drunk, who takes pains to be thought sober. Spectator.

2. Drenched or saturated with moisture.

I will make mine arrows drunk with blood.
Deut. xxxii. 42.

DRU'NKARD. n. s. [from drunk.] One given to excessive use of strong liquors; one addicted to habitual ebriety.

Some blood drawn on me would beget opinion
Of my more fierce endeavour. I've seen drunkards
Do more than this in sport. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

My bowels cannot hide her woes,
But, like a drunkard, I must vomit them. Shaks.

God will not take the drunkard's excuse, that he has so long accustomed himself to intemperate drinking, that now he cannot leave it off. South.

DRU'NKEN.† adj. [Sax. ðruncen.]

1. Intoxicated with liquor; inebriated.

O monstrous beast! how like a swine he lies!
Sirs, I will practise on this drunken man. Shaks.

Drunken men imagine every thing turneth round: they imagine that things come upon them; they see not well things afar off; those things that they see near hand, they see out of their place, and sometimes they see things double. Bacon.

2. Given to habitual ebriety.

Is not this Stephano, my drunken butler?
Shakspeare, Tempest.

3. Saturated with moisture.

She, therewith well appaid,
The drunken lamp down in the oil did steep.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. ii. 47.

Then let the earth be drunken with our blood.
Shakspeare.

4. Done in a state of inebriation.

When your carters, or your waiting vassals,
Have done a drunken slaughter, and defac'd
The precious image of our dear Redeemer,
You straight are on your knees for pardon, pardon.
Shakspeare.

We should for honour take
The drunken quarrels of a rake. Swift.

DRU'NKENLY. adj. [from drunken.] In a drunken manner.

My blood already like the pelican,
Hast thou tapt out, and drunkenly carous'd. Shaks.

DRU'NKENNESS.† n. s. [Sax. ðruncennerre.]

1. Intoxication with strong liquor.

Every going off from our natural and common temper, and our usual severity of behaviour, is a degree of drunkenness.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Holy Living.

2. Habitual ebriety.

The Lacedemonians trained up their children to hate drunkenness, by bringing a drunken man into their company. Watts on the Mind.

3. Intoxication, or inebriation of any kind; disorder of the faculties.

Passion is the drunkenness of the mind, and therefore in its present workings not controllable by reason. South, Serm. ii. 362.

DRY.† adj. [ðριȝ, ðρι, Sax. of ðρýȝan.]

1. Arid; not wet; not moist.

If the pipe be a little wet on the inside, it will make a differing sound from the same pipe dry.
Bacon.

When God said,
Be gather'd now, ye waters under heaven,
Into one place, and let dry land appear!
Milton, P. L.

Of turbid elements the sport;
From clear to cloudy tost, from hot to cold,
And dry to moist. Thomson.

2. Not rainy.

A dry March and a dry May portend a wholesome summer, if there be a showering April between. Bacon.

The weather, we agreed, was too dry for the season. Addison.

3. Not succulent; not juicy.

I will drain him dry as hay;
Sleep shall neither night nor day
Hang upon his penthouse lid:
He shall live a man forbid. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

4. Being without tears.

Dry mourning will decays more deadly bring,
As a north wind burns a too forward spring:
Give sorrow vent, and let the sluices go. Dryden.

Upon the reading of this letter, there was not a dry eye in the club. Addison, Spect. No. 517.

5. Thirsty; athirst.

So dry he was for sway. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Void of a bulky charger near their lips,
With which, in often interrupted sleep,
Their frying blood compels to irrigate
Their dry furr'd tongues. Philips.

6. Jejune; barren; plain; unembellished; without pathos; without flowers.

As we should take care that our stile in writing be neither dry nor empty, we should look again it be not winding or wanton with far-fetched descriptions: either is a vice. B. Jonson.

It remaineth to treat concerning ornaments within, or without the fabrick, a piece not so dry as the meer contemplation of proportions: and therefore, I hope, therein somewhat to refresh both the reader and myself. Wotton, Architecture.

That the fire burns by heat, is an empty dry return to the question, and leaves us still ignorant.
Glanville.

It is a dry fable, with little or nothing in it.
L'Estrange.

Authority and friendship work upon some, dry and sober reason works upon others. L'Estrange.

To clear up this theory, I was willing to lay aside dry subtilties with which the schools are filled.
Burnet, Theory.

These epistles will become less dry, and more susceptible of ornament. Pope.

7. Wanting; barren. Applied to persons.

So am I innocent of all those joys,
And dry of those embraces. Dryden, Amphitryon.

8. Jejune; cold. Applied also to persons.

I asked his pardon for giving him the trouble of a letter to convey the Irish papers to him: he thanked me for them; and said, he had not seen so particular an account of those affairs before; but he was very dry as to all things else.
Diary of Lord Clarendon, 1688–9.

9. In another personal application of the word, we say, he is a dry fellow, that is, a sarcastick man. See the next definition.

10. Sneering; sarcastical. Applied to things.

Have you not sometimes observed what dry bobs, and sarcastical jeers the most underling fellows will now and then bestow upon their betters?
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. P. i.

11. Hard; severe. [drien anciently to endure; dree, Scottish, and old Eng. See To DREE.]

Of two noblemen the one was given to scoff, but kept ever royal cheer in his house; the other would ask of those that had been at his table, was there never a flout or dry-blow given? Bacon.

I rather hop'd I should no more
Hear from you o' th' gallanting score;
For hard dry bastings used to prove
The readiest remedies of love;
Next a dry diet. Hudibras.

DRY-FOOT.* [In hunting.] A sort of adverbial expression, applied to a dog who pursues the game by the scent of the foot.

A hound that runs counter, and yet draws dry-foot well. Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

The truth is, my old master intends to follow my young dry-foot, over Moorfields to London.
B. Jonson, Every Man in his Humour.

All persons, licensed for making and training up of setting dogs, shall—be compelled to train up, teach, and make one or more hounds, to hunt on dry-foot. Irish Stat. 10 Will. III.

To DRY. v. a.

1. To free from moisture; to arefy; to exsiccate.

The meat was well, if you were so contented.
—I tell thee, Kate, 'twas burnt, and dry'd away.
Shakspeare.

Heat drieth bodies that do easily expire; as parchment, leaves, roots, and clay; and so doth time arefy. Bacon.

Herbs and flowers, if they be dried in the shade, or dried in the hot sun a small time, keep best.
Bacon.

The running streams are deep:
See, they have caught the father of the flock,
Who drys his fleece upon the neighbouring rock.
Dryden.

2. To exhale moisture.

'Twas grief no more, or grief and rage were one,
Within her soul: at last 'twas rage alone;
Which burning upwards in succession, dries
The tears that stood considering in her eyes.
Dryden.

3. To wipe away moisture.

Then with her vest the wound she wipes and dries. Denham.

See, at your blest returning,
Rage disappears;
The widow'd isle in mourning,
Dries up her tears. Dryden, Albion.

4. To scorch with thirst.

Their honourable men are famished, and their multitude dried up with thirst. Isaiah, v. 13.

5. To drain; to exhaust.

Rash Elpenor, in an evil hour,
Dry'd an immeasurable bowl, and thought
T' exhale his surfeit by irriguous sleep
Imprudent: him, death's iron sleep opprest.
Philips.

6. To DRY up. To deprive totally of moisture; to take all moisture away.

The water of the sea, which formerly covered it, was in time exhaled and dried up by the sun.
Woodward.

To DRY.† v. n. To grow dry; to lose moisture; to be drained of its moisture.

The deeps of the river shall dry up.
Zechariah, x. 11.

To dry and desiccate like the mummies in Egypt.
Ricaut, Greek Church, p. 277.

To DRY-RUB.* v. a. [dry and rub.] To make clean without wetting.

At twelve years old the sprightly youth is able
To turn a pancake, or dry-rub a table
Anon. in Dodsley's Coll. of Poems.

DRY'AD.* n. s. [Gr. δρὺς, an oak.] A wood-nymph.

Soft she withdrew; and like a wood-nymph light,
Oread, or Dryad, or of Delia's train,
Betook her to the groves. Milton, P. L.

DRY'ER. n. s. [from dry.] That which has the quality of absorbing moisture.

The ill effects of drinking are relieved by this plant, which is a great dryer and opener, especially by perspiration. Temple.

DRY'EYED. adj. [dry and eye.] Without tears; without weeping.

Sight so deform, what heart of rock could long
Dryey'd behold? Adam could not, but wept.
Milton, P. L.

DRY'FAT.* n. s. [dry and Sax. ꝼæt.] A large basket, or receiver, in which liquids are not put; in opposition to vat. See VAT.

The poor gentlewoman was faine to put me in a driefatte of feathers that stood in an old chamber.
Tarleton, News out of Purgatory, (1590.)

I'll undertake, and with much ease, to buy his birth-right of him for a dry-fat of new books.
Beaum. and Fl. Elder Brother.

Such pamphlets, whereof we have abroad so good store, as I think would freight a dry-fat to the mart. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 245.

DRY'LY.† adv. [from dry.]

1. Without moisture.

Like one of our French withered pears, it looks ill, it eats dryly. Shakspeare, All's well.

2. Coldly; frigidly; without affection.

The archduke, conscious to himself how dryly the king had been used by his council, did strive to recover the king's affection. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Would'st thou to honour and preferments climb,
Be bold in mischief, dare some mighty crime,
Which dungeons, death, or banishment deserves;
For virtue is but dryly prais'd, and starves.
Dryden, Juv.

3. Jejunely; barrenly; without ornament or embellishment.

Some dryly plain, without invention's aid,
Write dull receipts how poems may be made.
Pope.

4. Slyly; sarcastically.

DRY'NESS.† n. s. [from dry.]

1. Want of moisture; siccity.

The Africans are conceived to be peculiarly scorched and torrified by the sun, by dryness from the soil, from want and defect of water.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

Such was the discord which did first disperse
Form, order, beauty, through the universe;
While dryness moisture, coldness heat resists,
All that we have, and that we are, subsists.
Denham.

The marrow supplies an oil for the inunction of the bones and ligaments in the articulations, and particularly of the ligaments, preserving them from dryness and rigidity, and keeping them supple and flexible. Ray on the Creation.

Is the sea ever likely to be evaporated by the sun, or to be emptied with buckets? Why then must we fancy this impossible dryness, and then, upon that fictitious account, calumniate nature?
Bentley.

2. Want of succulence.

If he fill'd
His vacancy with his voluptuousness,
Full surfeits, and the dryness of his bones,
Call on him for't. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The difference of muscular flesh depends upon the hardness, tenderness, moisture, or dryness of the fibres. Arbuthnot.

3. Exhaustion.

This will preserve borrowing from any general stop or dryness. Bacon, Ess. of Usury.

4. Want of embellishment; want of pathos; jejuneness; barrenness; coldness.

Their new flowers and sweetness do as much corrupt as others dryness and squalor, if they chuse not carefully. B. Jonson.

Be faithful where the author excels, and paraphrase where penury of fancy or dryness of expression ask it. Garth.

He spoke little and very slowly, and most commonly with a disgusting dryness, which was his character at all times, except in a day of battle.
Burnet, Hist. of his own Times, Charact. of Will. III.

5. Want of sensibility in devotion; want of ardour; aridity.

It may be, that by this dryness of spirit God intends to make us the more fervent and resigned in our direct and solemn devotions, by the perceiving of our weakness. Bp. Taylor.

DRY'NURSE.† n. s. [dry and nurse.]

1. A woman who brings up and feeds a child without the breast.

Her nurse, whose name was Deborah, did not suckle her, perhaps; but was, as we speak, her drynurse. Bp. Patrick on Genesis.

2. One who takes care of another: with some contempt of the person taken care of.

Mistress Quickly is his nurse, or his drynurse, or his cook, or his laundry, his washer, and his wringer. Shakspeare.

To DRY'NURSE. v. a. [from the noun.] To feed without the breast.

As Romulus a wolf did rear,
So he was drynurs'd by a bear. Hudibras.

DRYSA'LTER.* n. s. A dealer in salted or dried meats, sauces, oils, pickles, and various other articles.

Almost thirty years have elapsed since I heard by accident of a drysalter, who had acquired a great reputation and a large fortune, from possessing a secret that had enabled him to send out to the Indies, and other hot countries, beef and pork, in a better state of preservation than any of the trade. As he was observed to pour into each cask a small bottle of transparent liquor, it occurred to me, that this could be no other than the spirit of sea-salt.
Sir W. Fordyce on the Muriat. Acid, (1790,) p. 7.

DRY'SHOD. adj. [dry and shod.] Without wet feet; without treading above the shoes in the water.

He had embarked us in such disadvantage, as we could not return dryshod. Sidney.

Dryshod to pass, she parts the floods in tway;
And eke huge mountains from their native seat
She would command themselves to bear away.
Spenser, F. Q.

Has honour's fountain then suck'd back the stream?
He has; and hooting boys may dryshod pass,
And gather pebbles from the naked ford. Dryden.

DU'AL.† adj. [dualis, Lat.] Expressing the number two.

The word is dual, and tells of two armies, and no more. Lightfoot, Miscell. (1629,) p. 142.

Modern languages have only one variation, and so the Latin; but the Greek and Hebrew have one to signify two, and another to signify more than two: under one variation the noun is said to be of the dual number, and under the other of the plural. Clarke, Latin Grammar.

DUA'LITY.* n. s. [from dual.]

1. That which expresses two in number; the state of being two.

There was lately raised in the church a controversie concerning the duality or unity of wills in Christ. Hales, Rem. p. 22.

A duality or binary number of persons.
South, Serm. iv. 270.

2. Division; separation.

Then sith that unity hath so great grace,
And that duality be so deform'd,
Let's not be two.
Davies, Wit's Pilgrim, sign. G. 4. b.

But he's the fount of foul duality,
That wicked witch Duessa is his bride.
More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 26.

To DUB.† v. a. [bubban to þiþeþe, Sax. addubba till riddara, Icelandick, to dub a knight. Addubba, in its primary sense, signifies to strike, knights being made by a blow with the sword. So far Dr. Johnson. But the word may be referred to the ancient French adouber; "habiller, équiper, armer, garnir, arranger, faire un chevalier, le revêter et l'armer des vêtemens de la chevalerie, du mot Latin adaptare, qui a ces significations, et non pas d'adoptare, adopter, comme le prétend M. Du Cange." Gloss. Fabliaux, par Barbazan, edit. Meon. Thus, Sir Burbon tells Sir Artegall, in the Fairy Queen of Spenser, that he was dubbed knight by the Knight of the Redcross, "who gave him arms in field to fight."]

1. To make a man a knight.

Knight, knight, good mother! Basilisco like.
What! I am dubb'd; I have it on my shoulder.
Shakspeare.

The robes which the kings then allowed to each knight, when he was dubbed, of green or burnet, as they spake in that age, appeareth upon record.
Camden, Rem.

The king stood up under his cloth of state, took the sword from the lord protector, and dubbed the lord mayor of London knight.
Hayward on Edw. VI.

2. To confer any kind of dignity, or new character.

The jealous o'erworn widow and herself,
Since that our brother dubb'd them gentlewomen,
Are mighty gossips in this monarchy.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

He
Gave thee no instance why thou should'st do treason,
Unless to dub thee with the name of traitor.
Shakspeare.

Women commence by Cupid's dart,
As a king hunting dubs a hart. Cleaveland.

A plain gentleman, of an ancient family, is of better quality than a new knight, though the reason of his dubbing was meritorious. Collier on Pride.

O, poet! thou hadst been discreeter,
Hanging the monarch's hat so high,
If thou hadst dubb'd thy star a meteor,
That did but blaze, and rove, and die. Prior.

These demoniacks let me dub
With the name of legion club. Swift.

A man of wealth is dubb'd a man of worth;
Venus shall give him form, and Anstis birth. Pope.

To DUB.* v. n. [from the sound.] To make a quick or brisk noise.

But say, Sir Huon,
Now the drum dubs, ——
What trade do you mean to follow?
Beaum. and Fl. Mad Lover.

DUB. n. s. [from the verb.] A blow; a knock.

As skilful coopers hoop their tubs
With Lydian and with Phrygian dubs. Hudibras.

DUB.* n. s. [Irish dob; Gael. duba; a pond, a gutter.] A puddle; still in use in the north of England.

DU'BBED.* adj. Blunt; not pointed. A common expression in many places. But I know not where to discover its etymology.

DUBI'ETY.* n. s. [Lat. dubietas.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness.

As we are naturally prone to action, a state of dubiety and suspense is ever accompanied with uneasiness. Richardson.

DUBIO'SITY. n. s. [from dubious.] A thing doubtful. A word not used.

Men often swallow falsities for truths, dubiosities for certainties, feasibilities for possibilities, and things impossible for possible. Brown, Vulg. Err.

DU'BIOUS.† adj. [dubius, Lat.]

1. Doubtful; not settled in an opinion.

Dubious he stray'd, with wav'ring thoughts possest,
Alternate passions struggling shar'd his breast.
Shenstone.

2. Uncertain; that of which the truth is not fully known.

No quick reply to dubious questions make.
Denham.

We also call it a dubious or doubtful proposition, when there are no arguments on either side.
Watts, Logick.

3. Not plain; not clear.

Satan with less toil, and now with ease,
Wafts on the calmer wave by dubious light.
Milton, P. L.

4. Having the event uncertain.

His utmost power with adverse pow'r oppos'd,
In dubious battle, on the plains of heav'n.
Milton, P. L.

DU'BIOUSLY. adv. [from dubious.] Uncertainly; without any determination.

Authors write often dubiously, even in matters wherein is expected a strict definitive truth.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

Almanack-makers wander in generals, and talk dubiously, and leave to the reader the business of interpreting. Swift.

DU'BIOUSNESS.† n. s. [from dubious.] Uncertainty; doubtfulness.

She speaks with dubiousness, not with the certainty of a goddess. Broome.

The dubiousness of this affair seems to be the reason of Mr. Ashmole's omission.
Introduct. to Ashmole's Berks.

DU'BITABLE.† adj. [dubito, Lat.] Doubtful; uncertain; what may be doubted.

Whatsoever is not of faith, is sin: and therefore the ground of invocation of saints or angels being at least dubitable, their invocation is sin.
More, Antidote against Idolatry, p. 25.

It hath been a question very dubitable, and not meanly controverted, what side the Greek church hath maintained in this dispute.
Ricaut, Greek Church, p. 182.

DU'BITANCY.* n. s. [Lat. dubitans.] Doubt; uncertainty.

Only our stupid, undisciplined, absurd, illogical hearts have the skill to avoid it, running headlong and wilfully after the old impurities, even then when they are most fully without all dubitancy resolved, that all the joys of heaven are forfeited by this choice. Hammond, Serm. vi.

DUBITA'TION. n. s. [dubitatio, Lat.] The act of doubting; doubt.

Many of the ancients denied the antipodes; but the experience of our enlarged navigation can now assert them beyond all dubitation.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

Dubitation may be called a negative perception; that is, when I perceive that what I see, is not what I would see. Grew.

DU'CAL. adj. [from duke.] Pertaining to a duke; as, a ducal coronet.

DU'CAT. n. s. [from duke.] A coin struck by dukes: in silver valued at about four shillings and sixpence; in gold at nine shillings and sixpence.

I cannot instantly raise up the gross
Of full three thousand ducats. Shakspeare.

There was one that died in debt: it was reported, where his creditors were, that he was dead: one said, he hath carried five hundred ducats of mine into the other world. Bacon.

DU'CHESS.* See DUTCHESS.

DU'CHY.* See DUTCHY.

DUCK.† n. s. [anas; ducken, to dip, Dutch.]

1. A water fowl, both wild and tame.

The ducks that heard the proclamation cried,
And fear'd a prosecution might betide,
Full twenty miles from town their voyage take,
Obscure in rushes of the liquid lake. Dryden.

Grubs, if you find your land subject to, turn ducks into it. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. A word of endearment, or fondness.

Will you buy any tape or lace for your cap,
My dainty duck, my dear-a? Shaks. Wint. Tale.

Pr'ythee go in, my duck; I'll but speak to 'em.
Beaum. and Fl. Span. Curate.

3. A declination of the head: so called from the frequent action of a duck in the water.

Back, shepherds, back; enough your play,
Till next sunshine holiday:
Here be, without duck or nod,
Other trippings to be trod,
Of lighter toes, and such court guise
As Mercury did first devise. Milton, Comus.

4. A stone thrown obliquely on the water so as to strike it and rebound.

Neither cross and pile, nor ducks and drakes, are quite so ancient as handy-dandy.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

5. From the foregoing expression, which describes a sport among children, has arisen a phrase, to make ducks and drakes with one's property or money, that is, to squander it, to hurl it away, like children hurling their slates or stones into the water.

Play at duck and drake with my money! take heed, fidler. Beaum. and Fl. The Chances.

Did I ever enslave myself to money; or, on the other side, make ducks and drakes with it, and squander it away in gaming, revelling, and whoring? L'Estrange, Tr. of Quevedo.

To DUCK.† v. n. [ducken, Teut. boucan, Sax. To douk is still used in the north.]

1. To dive under water as a duck.

The varlet saw, when to the flood he came,
How without stop or stay he fiercely leapt;
And deep himself he ducked in the same,
That in the lake his lofty crest was steept.
Spenser, F. Q.

Let the labouring bark climb hills of seas
Olympus high, and duck again as low
As hell's from heav'n. Shakspeare, Othello.

Well, my dear brother, if I 'scape drowning, 'tis your turn next to sink, you shall duck twice before I help you. Beaum. and Fl. Scornful Lady.

Thou art wickedly devout;
In Tiber ducking thrice, by break of day. Dryden.

2. To drop down the head, as a duck.

As some raw youth in country bred,
When at a skirmish first he hears
The bullets whistling round his ears,
Will duck his head aside, will start,
And feel a trembling at his heart. Swift.

3. To bow low; to cringe. In Scottish duyk, or juyk, to make obeisance, is still used.

I cannot flatter and look fair,
Smile in men's faces, smooth, deceive, and cog,
Duck with French nods and apish courtesy.
Shakspeare.

The learned pate
Ducks to the golden fool. Shakspeare, Timon.

Sometimes five imprimaturs are seen together dialogue-wise in the piatza of one title-page, complimenting and ducking each to other with their shaven reverences. Milton, Areopagitica.

To DUCK.† v. a. To put under water.

And down I sprang with all the force I could,
So duck't, that neither head nor foot were seen.
Mir. for Mag. p. 21.

The art of swimming, he that will attain to't,
Must fall down plump, and duck himself at first,
And that will make him hardy.
Beaum. and Fl. Wit at Sev. Weapons.

DU'CKER.† n. s. [from duck.]

1. A diver.

All birds of the river may, in a sort, be called duckers. Summary of Du Bartas, 1621, p. 238.

This bird [the didapper] is also called a doucker, and a dabchick. Ray, Dict. Tril. p. 21.

2. A cringer. Dict.

Let no dainty duckers
Up with your three-pil'd spirits, your wrought valours. Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.

DU'CKINGSTOOL.† n. s. [duck and stool.] A chair in which scolds are tied, and put under water. A corruption of cucking-stool; which has happened on account of the ducking, or immersion, which the scold underwent. See CUCKINGSTOOL.

She in the duckingstool should take her seat,
Drest like herself in a great chair of state. Dorset.

Reclaim the obstinately opprobrious and virulent women, and make the duckingstool more useful. Addison, Freeholder.

DU'CKLEGGED. adj. [duck and leg.] Short legged.

Ducklegg'd, short waisted, such a dwarf she is,
That she must rise on tiptoes for a kiss.
Dryden, Juv.

DU'CKLING.† n. s. [from duck.]

1. A young duck; the brood of the duck.

Ducklings, though hatched and led by a hen, if she brings them to the brink of a river or pond, presently leave her, and in they go. Ray on the Creation.

Ev'ry morn
Amid the ducklings let her scatter corn.
Gay, Pastorals.

2. A word of fondness.

But hark you, duckling; be sure you do not tell him that I am let into the secret. Addison, Drummer.

DU'CKMEAT. n. s. [duck and meat; lens palustris.] A common plant growing in standing waters.

To DUCKO'Y. v. a. [mistaken for decoy: the decoy being commonly practised upon ducks, produced the errour.] To entice to a snare.

This fish hath a slender membranous string, which he projects and draws in at pleasure, as a serpent doth his tongue: with this he duckoys little fishes, and preys upon them. Grew.

DUCKO'Y. n. s. Any means of enticing and ensnaring.

Seducers have found it the most compendious way to their designs to lead captive silly women, and make them the duckoys to their whole family. Decay of Piety.

DU'CKSFOOT. n. s. Black snakeroot, or Mayapple.

DU'CKWEED. n. s. [duck and weed.] The same with duckmeat.

That we call duckweed hath a leaf no bigger than a thyme-leaf, but of a fresher green; and putteth forth a little string into the water, far from the bottom. Bacon.

DUCT.† n. s. [ductus, Lat.]

1. Guidance; direction.

This doctrine, by fastening all our actions, by a fatal decree at the foot of God's chair, leaves nothing to us but only to obey our fate, to follow the duct of the stars, or necessity of those irony chains which we are born under. Hammond.

According to the duct of this hypothesis. Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 146.

2. A passage through which any thing is conducted: a term chiefly used by anatomists, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the anatomical remarks of Addison and Arbuthnot. Our publick language uses it in a more general way.

A duct from each of those cells ran into the root of the tongue, where both joined together, and passed forward in one common duct to the tip of it. Addison, Spectator.

It was observed, that the chyle in the thoracick duct retained the original taste of the aliment. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

The commissioners are impowered to contract with any persons for making and perfecting any channel, course, main cut, or duct, through any of the grounds. Acts of Parl. 16 Georg. III. ch. 56.

DU'CTILE. adj. [ductilis, Lat.]

1. Flexible; pliable.

Thick woods and gloomy night
Conceal the happy plant from human sight:
One bough it bears; but, wondrous to behold,
The ductile rind and leaves of radiant gold.
Dryden, Æn.

2. Easy to be drawn out into length, or expanded.

All bodies, ductile and tensile, as metals, that will be drawn into wires; wool and tow, that will be drawn into yarn or thread, have the appetite of not discontinuing strong. Bacon.

Gold, as it is the purest, so it is the softest and most ductile of all metals. Dryden.

3. Tractable; obsequious; complying; yielding.

He generous thoughts instills
Of true nobility; forms their ductile minds
To human virtues. Philips.

Their designing leaders cannot desire a more ductile and easy people to work upon. Addison, Freeholder.

DU'CTILENESS. n. s. [from ductile.] Flexibility; ductility.

I, when I value gold, may think upon
The ductileness, the application;
The wholesomeness, the ingenuity,
From rust, from soil, from fire ever free. Donne.

DUCTI'LITY.† n. s. [from ductile.]

1. Quality of suffering extension; flexibility.

Yellow colour and ductility are properties of gold: they belong to all gold, but not only to gold; for saffron is also yellow, and lead is ductile. Watts, Logick.

2. Obsequiousness; compliance.

This ductility of spirit commendeth men, as well as that other doth metals. Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 44.

Which considerations, I suppose, drove Origen to assert, that Christ's soul had such a command over his body, and his body such a ductility to comply with those commands, that the soul could contract or expand it, into what compass, or transfigure it into what shape, it pleased. South, Serm. i. 15.

DU'CTION.* n. s. [Lat. ductio.] Conveyance; leading.

The meanly wise and common ductions of bemisted nature. Feltham, Res. ii. 66.

DU'CTURE.* n. s. [Lat. ducturus.] Direction; guidance.

So far as the ducture of common reason, scripture, and experience will direct our enquiries, we shall find that there are three ways, by which he powerfully reaches, and operates upon the minds of men. South, Serm. v. 109.

Interest and design are a kind of force upon the soul, bearing a man oftentimes beside the ducture of his native propensities, and the first outgoings of his will. South, Serm. viii. 28.

DUD.* n. s. [Gael. dud, Icel. dude. Craven Dial. 1824.] A rag. North. Dudds are also clothes. West of England. A square in the centre of Stirbitch fair, where linen cloth was sold, is said to have been called the duddery. Grose.

To DU'DDER.* v. a. To deafen with noise; to render the head confused. Jennings, West of Engl. Dial. 1825.

DU'DGEON.† n. s. [dolch, German, Dr. Johnson says. Rather perhaps from the Germ. degen, a sword. Our weapon is termed by Cotgrave "a Scottish dagger, or dudgeon-haft dagger," and rendered dague à roëlles, that is, a dagger perhaps with a handle of defence, a little plate of iron. It is remarkable, that the particular passage, which I cite from Beaumont and Fletcher, should have escaped the notice of those who have illustrated the Hudibras of Butler; the application of the phrase in it being given to men of the same spirit, and inclination, as the redoubted Hudibras.]

1. A small dagger.

There's ne'er a one of these, the worst and weakest,
(Choose where you will,) but dare attempt the raising,
Against the sovereign peace of puritans,
A May-pole and a morrice, maugre mainly
Their zeal and dudgeon-daggers.
Beaum. and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

He [Dr. Harvey] in his younger days wore a dagger, as the fashion then was; nay, I remember my old schoolmaster, Mr. Latimer, at 70, wore a dudgeon, with a knife and bodkin. Aubery, Anecd. ii. 382.

It was a serviceable dudgeon,
Either for fighting or for drudging. Hudibras.

2. Malice; sullenness; malignity; ill-will.

When civil dudgeon first grew high,
And men fell out they knew not why. Hudibras.

The cuckoo took this a little in dudgeon. L'Estrange.

DUE. adj. The participle passive of owe. [dû, Fr.]

1. Owed; that which any one has a right to demand in consequence of a compact, or for any other reason.

There is due from the judge to the advocate some commendation and gracing, where causes are well handled and fair pleaded. There is likewise due to the publick a civil reprehension of advocates, where there appeareth cunning, gross neglect, or slight information. Bacon.

Mirth and chearfulness are but the due reward of innocency of life. More, Divine Dialogues.

A present blessing upon our fasts is neither originally due from God's justice, nor becomes due to us from his veracity. Smalridge, Sermons.

There is a respect due to mankind, which should incline ever the wisest of men to follow innocent customs. Watts.

2. Proper; fit; appropriate.

Opportunity may be taken to excite, in persons attending on those solemnities, a due sense of the vanity of earthly satisfactions. Atterbury.

3. Exact; without deviation.

You might see him come towards me beating the ground in so due time, as no dancer can observe better measure. Sidney.

And Eve within, due at her hour, prepar'd
For dinner savoury fruits. Milton, P. L.

4. Consequent to; occasioned or effected by. Proper, but not usual.

The motion of the oily drops may be in part due to some partial solution made by the vinous spirit which may tumble them to and fro. Boyle.

DUE. adv. [from the adjective.] Exactly; directly; duly. The course is due east, or due west.

Like the Pontick sea,
Whose icy current, and compulsive course,
Ne'er feels retiring ebb, but keeps due on
To the Propontick and the Hellespont.
Shakspeare, Othello.

DUE. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. That which belongs to one; that which may be justly claimed.

My due from thee is this imperial crown,
Which, as immediate from thy place and blood,
Derives itself to me. Shakspeare.
The son of Duncan,
From whom this tyrant holds the due of birth,
Lives in the English court. Shakspeare, Macbeth.
Thou better know'st
Effects of courtesy, dues of gratitude:
Thy half o' th' kingdom thou hast not forgot,
Wherein I thee endow'd. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
The due of honour in no point omit.
Shakspeare, Cymb.
I take this garland, not as given by you,
But as my merit, and my beauty's due. Dryden.
No popular assembly ever knew, or proposed, or declared what share of power was their due.
Swift.

2. Right; just title.
The key of this infernal pit by due,
And by command of heav'n's all-powerful King,
I keep. Milton, P. L.

3. Whatever custom or law requires to be done.
Befriend
Us thy vow'd priests, till the utmost end
Of all thy dues be done, and none left out.
Milton, Comus.
They pay the dead his annual dues. Dryden.

4. Custom; tribute; exactions; legal or customary perquisites.
In respect of the exorbitant dues that are paid at most other ports, this deservedly retains the name of free. Addison.

To DUE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay as due; perhaps for endow. It is perhaps only in this single passage.
This is the latest glory of their praise,
That I thy enemy due thee withal. Shakspeare.

DU'EFUL.* adj. [from due.] Fit; becoming.
All which that day in order seemly good
Did on the Thames attend, and waited well
To doe their duefull service, as to them befell.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 44.

DU'ENESS.* n. s. [from due.] Fitness. This word is somewhere used by Glanville.

DU'EL.† n. s. [duel, old French; duello, Ital.; duellum, Latin.] A combat between two; a single fight; contention between two.
In many armies, if the matter should be tried by duel between two champions, the victory should go on the one side; and yet if it be tried by the gross, go on the other side. Bacon.
That which the proud Spirit would have had Christ to have done to him in his great duel, the same he now doth unto Christ, fearfully, servilely, forcedly. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 2.
Dream not of their fight
As of a duel, or the local wounds
Of head or heel. Milton, P. L.
Victory and triumph to the Son of God,
Now entering his great duel, not of arms,
But to vanquish by wisdom hellish wiles.
Milton, P. R.
'Twas I that wrong'd you; you my life have sought:
No duel ever was more justly fought. Waller.

To DU'EL.† v. n. [from the noun.] To fight a single combat.
With the king of France duelled he.
Metrical Romances, iii. 297.
We come not hither to debate, but to combat; not to cavil, but to duel.
Baron, Cyprian Acad. (1648,) p. 28.
If death be not more formidable than hell, you are fit for a reserve, or forlorn hope, for the cannon's mouth, for cuirasiers, for fiends to duel with.
Hammond, Serm. viii.

To DU'EL.† v. a. To attack or fight with singly.
Who single
Duell'd their armies, rank'd in proud array
Himself an army, now unequal match
To save himself against a coward arm'd,
At one spear's length. Milton, S. A.
He must at length, poor man! die dully of old age at home; when here he might so fashionably and genteelly, long before that time, have been duelled or fluxed into another world!
South, Serm. vol. ii. S. 6.
On its other side is a plain field near the sea, which is said to be the stage on which St. George duelled and killed the dragon.
Maundrell, Journey to Aleppo, p. 38.

DU'ELLER.† n. s. [from duel.] A single combatant.
Fourthly, each dueller challengeth his King as unable or unwilling legally to right him, and therefore he usurps the office himself.
Fuller, Holy State, p. 115.
You may also see the hope and support of many a flourishing family untimely cut off by the sword of a drunken dueller, in vindication of something that he miscalls his honour. South, Serm. vi. 119.
They perhaps begin as single duellers, but then they soon get their troops about them.
Decay of Piety.

DU'ELLING.* n. s. [from duel.] The custom of fighting duels.
The challenging and fighting with a man is called duelling. Locke.
Shakspeare, in As you like it, has rallied the mode of formal duelling, then so prevalent, with the highest humour and address; nor could he have treated it with a happier contempt, than by making his clown so knowing in the forms and preliminaries of it. Warburton.

DU'ELLIST.† n. s. [from duel.]
1. A single combatant.
If the king ends the differences, the case will fall out no worse than when two duellists enter the field, where the worsted party hath his sword again, without further hurt. Suckling.
Henceforth let poets, ere allow'd to write,
Be search'd like duellists before they fight. Dryd.
You imagine, perhaps, that a contempt for your own life gives you a right to take that of another: but where, sir, is the difference between a duellist, who hazards a life of no value, and the murderer who acts with greater security? Is it any diminution of the gamester's fraud, when he alleges that he has staked a counter?
Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield.

2. One who professes to study the rules of honour.
He fights as you sing, prick-song, keeps time, distance, and proportion—the very butcher of a silk button, a duellist, a duellist! a gentleman of the very first house; of the first and second cause! Ah! the immortal passado! the punto reverso!
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.
His bought arms Mung not lik'd; for his first day
Of bearing them in field, he threw 'em away;
And hath no honour lost, our duellists say.
B. Jonson.

*DUE'LLO.† n. s. [Italian.] The duel; the rule of duelling.
The gentleman will, for his honour's sake, have one bout with you: he cannot by the duello avoid it. Shakspeare.
Spurn out the duelloes out o' the kingdom.
Beaum. and Fl. Passionate Madman.

*DUE'NNA. n. s. [Spanish.] An old woman kept to guard a younger.
I felt the ardour of my passion increase as the season advanced, till in the month of July I could no longer contain: I bribed her duenna, was admitted to the bath, saw her undressed, and the wonder displayed. Arbuthnot and Pope.

DUE'T.* n. s. [Ital. due, two.] An air, vocal or instrumental, for two performers.
In the choral parts the experiment has succeeded better than in the solo airs, and duets.
Mason on Ch. Musick, p. 119.

DUG. n. s. [deggia, to give suck, Icelandick.]
1. A pap; a nipple; a teat: spoken of beasts, or in malice or contempt of human beings.
Of her there bred
A thousand young ones, which she daily fed,
Sucking upon her poisonous dugs; each one
Of sundry shape, yet all ill favoured.
Spenser, F. Q.
They are first fed and nourished with the milk of a strange dug. Ralegh, Hist.
Then shines the goat, whose brutish dugs supply'd
The infant Jove, and nurst his growing pride.
Creech.

2. It seems to have been used formerly of the breast without reproach.
It was a faithless squire that was the source
Of all my sorrow, and of these sad tears;
With whom, from tender dug of common nourse,
At once I was up brought. Spenser, F. Q.
As mild and gentle as the cradle-babe,
Dying with mother's dug between its lips. Shaks.

DUG. preterit. and part. pass. of dig.
They had often found medals, and pipes of lead, as they dug among the rubbish. Addison on Italy.

DUKE.† n. s. [duc, Fr. dux, Lat.]
1. A general; a leader. This is the primitive sense; but it is unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.
Of thee a duke shall go out, that shall governe my people of Israel. Wicliffe, St. Matt. ii.
Herself the dame of Carthage kill'd,
When as the Trojan duke did her forsake.
Harrington, Orl. Furioso.

2. One of the highest order of nobility in England; in rank a nobleman next to the royal family.
The duke of Cornwall, and Regan, his duchess, will be here with him this night. Shaks. K. Lear.
Aurmarle, Surrey, and Exeter must lose
The names of dukes, their titles, dignities,
And whatsoever profits thereby rise.
Daniel, Civ. Wars.

DU'KEDOM.† n. s. [from duke.]
1. The seigniory or possessions of a duke.
Her brother found a wife,
Where he himself was lost; Prospero his dukedom
In a poor isle. Shakspeare, Tempest.
The cardinal never resigned his purple for the prospect of giving an heir to the dukedom of Tuscany. Addison.

2. The title or quality of a duke.
Is not a dukedom, sir, a goodly gift?
Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. III.

DU'LBRAINED. adj. [dull and brain.] Stupid; doltish; foolish.
This arm of mine hath chastised
The petty rebel, dulbrain'd Buckingham.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

DU'LCET.† adj. [dulcis, Lat.]
1. Sweet to the taste; luscious.
This dulcet water in four parts did spout;
Of which there flowed four rivers right cleare;
I did then taste the aromatick licoure,
Fragrant of fume, and swete as any floure.
Hawes, Hist. Gr. Amoure, (1555,) ch. 4.
From sweet kernels press'd,
She tempers dulcet creams; nor these to hold
Wants she fit vessels pure. Milton, P. L.

2. Sweet to the ear; harmonious; melodious.
I sat upon a promontory,
And heard a mermaid, on a dolphin's back,
Uttering such dulcet and harmonious breath,
That the rude sea grew civil at her song. Shaks.

A fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies, and voices sweet.
Milton, P. L.

3. Sweet to the mind.

And whereas they entitle philosophy to be a rigid and austere poesy; they have, on the contrary, styled poesy a dulcet and gentle philosophy, which leads on and guides us by the hand to action with ravishing delight, and incredible sweetness.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

DULCIFICA'TION. n. s. [from dulcify.] The act of sweetening; the act of freeing from acidity, saltness, or acrimony.

In colcothar the exactest calcination, followed by an exquisite dulcification, does not reduce the remaining body into elementary earth; for after the salt of vitriol, if the calcination have been too faint, is drawn out of the colcothar, the residue is not earth, but a mixt body, rich in medical virtues.
Boyle.

To DU'LCIFY. v. a. [dulcifier, Fr.] To sweeten; to set free from acidity, saltness, or acrimony of any kind.

A decoction of wild gourd, or colocynthis, though somewhat qualified, will not from every hand be dulcified into aliment, by an addition of flour or meal. Brown.

I dressed him with a pledgit, dipt in a dulcified tincture of vitriol. Wiseman, Surgery.

Spirit of wine dulcifies spirit of salt; nitre or vitriol have other bad effects. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

DU'LCIMER. n. s. [dolcimello, Skinner.] A musical instrument played by striking the brass wires with little sticks.

Ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of musick.
Dan. iii. 5.

DU'LCITUDE.* n. s. [Lat. dulcitudo.] Sweetness. Cockeram.

To DU'LCORATE. v. a. [from dulcor, Lat.]

1. To sweeten.

The ancients, for the dulcorating of fruit, do commend swine's dung above all other dung.
Bacon.

2. To make less acrimonious.

Turbith mineral, as it is sold in the shops, is a rough medicine; but being somewhat dulcorated, first procureth vomiting, and then salivation.
Wiseman, Surgery.

DULCORA'TION. n. s. [from dulcorate.] The act of sweetening.

Malt gathereth a sweetness to the taste, which appeareth in the wort: the dulcoration of things is worthy to be tried to the full; for that dulcoration importeth a degree to nourishment: and the making of things inalimental to become alimental, may be an experiment of great profit. Bacon.

DU'LCOUR.* n. s. [Lat. dulcor.] Sweetness.

This sort of viand is at this time made use of, out of no less mystery, than that by its colour and dulcour they might be remembered of the purity and delightfulness of the law.
L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 176.

DU'LHEAD. n. s. [dull and head.] A blockhead; a wretch foolish and stupid; a dolt.

This people be fools and dulheads to all goodness; but subtle, cunning, and bold in any mischief. Ascham.

DU'LIA. n. s. [δέλεια.] An inferiour kind of adoration.

Paleotus saith, that the same worship which is given to the prototype may be given to the image; but with the different degrees of latria and dulia.
Stillingfleet.

He that hath learned no wit by nature, nor art, may complain of gross breeding, or comes of a very dull kindred. Shakspeare.

Sometimes this perception, in some kind of bodies, is far more subtle than the sense; so that the sense is but a dull thing in comparison of it.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Every man, even the dullest, is thinking more than the most eloquent can teach him how to utter.
Dryden.

2. Blunt; obtuse.

Meeting with Time, Slack thing, said I,
Thy scythe is dull; whet it, for shame. Herbert.

3. Unready; awkward.

Gynecia a great while stood still, with a kind of dull amazement, looking stedfastly upon her.
Sidney.

O help thou my weak wit, and sharpen my dull tongue. Spenser, F. Q.

Memory is so necessary to all conditions of life, that we are not to fear it should grow dull for want of exercise, if exercise would make it stronger.
Locke.

4. Hebetated; not quick.

This people's heart is waxed gross, and their ears are dull of hearing. St. Matt. xiii. 15.

The princes of Germany had but a dull fear of the greatness of Spain, upon a general apprehension; now that fear is sharpened and pointed.
Bacon.

5. Sad; melancholy.

Let there be no noise made, my gentle friends;
Unless some dull and favourable hand
Will whisper musick to my weary spirit.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

A man
So dull, so dead in look, so woe-begone. Shaks.

6. Sluggish; heavy; slow of motion.

Thenceforth the waters waxed dull and slow,
And all that drunk thereof did faint and feeble grow. Spenser, F. Q.

7. Gross; cloggy; vile.

She excels each mortal thing
Upon the dull earth dwelling.
Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

8. Not exhilarating; not delightful: as, to make dictionaries is dull work.

9. Not bright; as, the mirror is dull, the fire is dull.

I'll not be made a soft and dull ey'd fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

10. Drowsy; sleepy.

11. Dull is used by itself, in some parts of England, to signify not quick in hearing. See the fourth sense.

DULL-BRAINED.† See DULBRAINED.

DULL-BROWED.* adj. [dull and brow.] Having a melancholy look or brow.

The over quantity of ware, fretting too much upon the woad, is obtunded or dulled by throwing in bran sometimes loose, sometimes in bags.
Sprat, Hist. of R. Soc. p. 301.

3. To sadden; to make melancholy.

My good lord,
We come to urge that virtue which we know
Lives in your breast; forth, rise, and make a head;
The nobles and the people are all dull'd
With this usurping king.
Beaum. and Fl. Philaster.

4. To hebetate; to weaken.

Now forc'd to overflow with brackish tears,
The troublous noise did dull their dainty ears.
Spenser, F. Q.

Nothing hath more dulled the wits, or taken away the will of children from learning, than care in making of Latin. Ascham.

Dulling my bodily senses to the meats and eases of this world. Donne, Dev. p. 36.

5. To damp; to clog.

Prayers were short, as if darts thrown out with a sudden quickness, lest that vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, should be wasted or dulled through continuance.
Hooker.

In bodies, union strengtheneth and cherisheth any natural action; and, on the other side, weakeneth and dulleth any violent impression; and even so is it of minds. Bacon.

6. To make heavy, or slow of motion.

Usury dulls and damps all industries, wherein money would be stirring, if it were not for the slug. Bacon.

Dull not away thy days in slothful supinity, and the tediousness of doing nothing.
Brown, Chr. Mor. i. 33.

To DULL.* v. n. To become dull.

I dull under your discipline.
Chaucer, Rom. of the Rose, 3792.

DU'LLARD.† n. s. [from dull.] A blockhead; a dolt; a stupid fellow; a dunce.

What, mak'st thou me a dullard in this act?
Wilt thou not speak to me? Shakspeare, Cymb.

Thou must make a dullard of the world,
If they not thought the profits of my death
Were very pregnant and potential spurs
To make thee seek it. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

How many shall once wish they had been born dullards, yea idiots, when they shall find their wit to have barred them out of heaven!
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 3.

DU'LLARD.* adj. Doltish; stupid.

But would I be a poet if I might,
To rub my browes three days and wake three nights,

And bite my nails, and scratch my dullard head,
And curse the backward muses on my bed.
Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

I durst essay the new-found paths, that led
To slavish Mosco's dullard sluggishness.
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. i. st. 12.

DU'LLY.† adv. [from dull.]

1. Stupidly; doltishly.

I rather would entreat thy company
To see the wonders of the world abroad,
Than living dully sluggardiz'd at home,
Wear out thy youth with shapeless idleness.
Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

It is not sufficient to imitate nature in every circumstance dully, literally, and meanly; but it becomes a painter to take what is most beautiful.
Dryden, Dufresnoy.

2. Slowly; sluggishly.

I warrant thee, Claudio, the time shall not go dully by us. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

The air, if it be moist, doth in a degree quench the flame, and howsoever maketh it burn more dully. Bacon.

3. Not vigorously; not gaily; not brightly; not keenly.

Not that I think those pantomimes,
Who vary action with the times,
Are less ingenious in their art,
Than those who dully act one part. Hudibras.

He must at length, poor man, die dully of old age at home! South, Serm. ii. S. 6.

DU'LNESS.† n. s. [from dull.]

1. Stupidity; weakness of intellect; indocility: slowness of apprehension.

Ever since they firmly have retained,
And duly well observed his beheast. Spenser, F. Q.

My prayers
Are not words duly hallow'd, nor my wishes
More worth than vanities; yet prayers and wishes
Are all I can return. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

In the body, when the principal parts, as the heart and liver, do their offices, and all the inferiour smaller vessels act orderly and duly, there arises a sweet enjoyment upon the whole which we call health. South.

If attention be duly engaged to those reflections, they cannot fail of influence. Rogers.

2. Regularly; exactly.

Seldom at church, 'twas such a busy life;
But duly sent his family and wife. Pope.

DUMB. adj. [דום he was silent; dumbs, Gothick; bumb, Saxon; dum, Danish; dom, Dutch, dull.]

1. Mute; incapable of speech.

It hath pleased himself sometime to unloose the very tongues even of dumb creatures, and to teach them to plead in their own defence, lest the cruelty of man should persist to afflict them. Hooker.

They spake not a word;
But like dumb statues, or unbreathing stones,
Star'd each on other. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Some positive terms signify a negative idea: blind implies a privation of sight, dumb a denial of speech. Watts, Logick.

2. Deprived of speech.

They sung no more, or only sung his fame;
Struck dumb, they all admir'd the god-like man.
Dryden.

3. Mute; not using words.

He is a proper man's picture; but, alas! who can converse with a dumb show?
Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

His gentle dumb expression turn'd at length
The eye of Eve to mark his play. Milton, P. L.

Her humble gestures made the residue plain,
Dumb eloquence persuading more than speech.
Roscommon.

For he who covets gain in such excess,
Does by dumb signs himself as much express,
As if in words at length he show'd his mind.
Dryden, Juv.

Nothing is more common than for lovers to complain, relent, languish, despair, and die in dumb show. Addison.

4. Silent; refusing to speak.

The good old seer withstood
Th' intended treason, and was dumb to blood;
Till tir'd with endless clamours and pursuit
Of Ithacus, he stood no longer mute. Dryd. Æn.

To DUMB.* v. a. [Sax. aδumbian.] To silence; to oblige to hold peace.

What I would have spoke,
Was beastly dumb'd by him. Shak. Ant. and Cleop.

She sings like one immortal, and she dances
As goddess-like to her admired lays;
Deep clerks she dumbs. Shakspeare, Pericles.

Every soul is more deafened and be*dumbed*, by increasing corruptions, by actual sins.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

DU'MBLEDORE.* n. s. In some parts of England the humble or bumble bee is so called, and, in some, the brown cock-chafer. It is also corruptly called drumbledore.

DU'MBLY.† adv. [from dumb.] Mutely; silently; without words.

I have seen them shiver and look pale,
Make periods in the midst of sentences,
Throttle their practis'd accent in their fears,
And, in conclusion, dumbly, have broke off,
Not paying me a welcome.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

DU'MBNESS.† n. s. [Sax. dumnyyre.]

1. Incapacity to speak.

2. Omission of speech; muteness.

There was speech in their dumbness, language in their very gesture: they looked as they had heard of a world ransomed, or one destroyed.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

To the dumbness of the gesture
One might interpret. Shakspeare, Tim. of Athens.

3. Refusal to speak; silence.

'Tis love, said she; and then my downcast eyes,
And guilty dumbness, witness'd my surprise.
Dryden.

To DU'MFOUND.† v. a. [from dumb.] To confuse; to strike dumb. A low phrase, as Dr. Johnson observes; and sometimes used, in low language also, for "to beat soundly, till the person beaten cannot speak."

They had like to have dumfounded the justice; but his clerk came in to his assistance. Spectator.

DU'MMERER.* n. s. [from dumb.] A pretendedly dumb man; a cheat. A low word. Sometimes written dommerer; and, according to Bailey, denoting also a madman.

Every village almost will yield abundant testimonies [of counterfeits] amongst us; we have dummerers, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 159.

DU'MMY.* n. s. [from dumb.]

1. One who is dumb. A low expression.

2. At the game of whist, when played by three persons instead of four, the exposition of the fourth hand is considered equivalent to a player, which is called dummy; the partner having the direction of it.

DUMP.† n. s. [from dom, stupid, Dutch.]

1. Sorrow; melancholy; sadness. Every example which Dr. Johnson has given under this definition, belongs to "a doleful or melancholy tune," of which he takes no notice. I have therefore here supplied examples. And it may be added, that to this sense the common expression, "to be in the dumps," belongs; "in dumps, Fr. morné," i. e. melancholy, sad. Sherwood.

Sudden dumps, and dreary sad disdain
Of all world's gladness, more my torment feed.
Spenser, Sonn. 52.

Alas, poor man, how willing thou art to make thyself believe that thou hast truly repented; whereas this is nothing but some dump of melancholy; or some relenting of nature, after too much expence of spirits. Bp. Hall, Temptations repelled.

2. A melancholy tune or air; an elegy.

Sing no more ditties, sing no mo
Of dumps so dull and heavy;
The frauds of men were ever so,
Since summer first was leafy. Shaksp. Much Ado.

Visit by night your lady's chamber window
With some sweet consort: to their instruments
Tune a deploring dump; the night's dead silence
Will well become such sweet complaining grievance. Shakspeare.

If thou wert not some blockish and senseless dolt, thou wouldst never laugh when I sung a heavy mixt Lidian tune, or a note to a dump or doleful ditty.
Holland, Tr. of Plutarch's Morals, p. 61.

Funerals with stately pomp
March slowly on, in solemn dump. Hudibras.

The squire who fought on bloody stumps,
By future bards bewail'd in doleful dumps.
Gay, Pastorals.

3. Any tune.

Some good old dump that Chaucer's mistress knew. Sidney, Sonnet.

Play me some merry dump to comfort me.
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

4. Absence of mind; reverie. Locke uses dumps singularly, Dr. Johnson says. But the word, in its true singular, in this sense, is not wanting.

He's in a deep dump now.
Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

This shame dumps cause to well-bred people, when it carries them away from the company.
Locke.

DU'MPISH. adj. [from dump.] Sad; melancholy; sorrowful.

New year, forth looking out of Janus' gate,
Doth seem to promise hope of new delight;
And bidding th' old adieu, his passed date
Bids all old thoughts to die in dumpish spight.
Spenser, Sonn. 4.

The life which I live at this age is not a dead, dumpish, and sour life; but chearful, lively, and pleasant. Herbert.

DU'MPISHLY.* adv. [from dumpish.] In a moping, melancholy way.

And for dispositions; how do we see one so ragingly furious as if he had newly torn off his chains, and escaped; another so stupidly senseless, that you may thrust pins into him up to the head, and he startles not at it: one so dumpishly sad, as if he would freeze to death in melancholy, and hated any contentment but in sorrow.

Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, iii. 725.

DU'MPISHNESS.* n. s. [from dumpish.] Sadness; melancholy.

How many worthy Christians are there in the world who bear a part with us in this just blame; who have yielded over themselves to a disconsolate heartlessness, and a sad dejection of spirit; partly through a natural disposition inclining to dumpishness, and partly through the prevalence of temptation. Bp. Hall, Christ Mystical.

He had need to be more than man, that can contentedly make himself contemptible, to follow Christ; to have his religion judged hypocrisy; his Christian prudence, craft and policy; his godly simplicity, silliness; his zeal, madness; his contempt of the world, ignorance; his godly sorrow, dumpishness. Junius, Sin Stigmat. p. 750.

DU'MPLING. n. s. [from dump, heaviness.] A sort of pudding.

Pudding and dumpling burn to pot. Dryden.

DU'MPY.* adj. [This, it seems, is also a Scottish adjective, which Dr. Jamieson has given in his dictionary, without any example, however, of its usage. He refers the word to the Icel. doomp, a stout or thick servant-maid. In our own language, it is a low word.] Short and thick.

Whenever he was with me, his short, dumpy, gouty, crooked fingers were continually teizing my spinnet, to his own harmonious croaking.

Student, ii. 225.

DUN. adj. [dun, Sax.]

1. A colour partaking of brown and black.

We are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness, or from white and black, that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton, Opticks.

2. Dark; gloomy.

Come, thick night!
And pall thee in the dunnest smoke of hell. Shaks.
He then survey'd
Hell, and the gulph between, and Satan there
Coasting the wall of heav'n on this side,
In the dun air sublime. Milton, P. L.

To DUN. v. a. [dunan, Sax. to clamour.] To claim a debt with vehemence and importunity.

Borrow of thy back, and borrow of thy belly: they'll never ask thee again. I shall be dunning thee every day. Bacon.

When thou dun'st their parents, seldom they,
Without a suit before the tribune, pay. Dryd. Juv.

I remember what she won:
And hath she sent so soon to dun? Swift.

DUN. n. s. [from the verb.] A clamorous, importunate, troublesome creditor.

Thus, while my joyless minutes tedious flow,
With looks demure, and silent pace, a dun,
Horrible monster! hated by gods and men,
To my aerial citadel ascends. Philips.

It grieves my heart to be pulled by the sleeve by some rascally dun, "Sir, remember my bill." Arbuthnot, Hist. of J. Bull.

DUN.* n. s. [See Down.] An eminence; a mound; a kind of fortification.

With him we went to see an ancient building, called a dun or borough.

Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

They erected palaces, rude indeed in their construction; and their chiefs raised duns or artless fortifications.

Walker, Hist. Mem. of the Irish Bards, (1786,) p. 3.

DUNCE.† n. s. [A word of uncertain etymology; perhaps from dum, Dutch, stupid, Dr. Johnson says. Minsheu derives it from densus, thick; Skinner, from the Span. tonto, stupid. None of these will be received. Serenius offers the Su. dunser, a heavy-footed man. In the margin of Mr. Horne Tooke's copy of Johnson's dictionary are these words: "Perhaps a word of reproach first used by the Thomists, from Duns Scotus, their antagonist: but we must first find out when this word began to be used." I had made a similar remark, many years since; and am enabled to strengthen it, by what Mr. Tooke had not met with, an example in point: "They hate even to death all them that preach the pure worde of God, voied of all the dregges of Dunsse learning and man's traditions." Confutation of N. Shaxton, 1546, sing. F. iii. See also A. Wood, Fast. Ox. 1691, vol. 1. col. 673. "The cardinal would write that the said Winter should study the Dunces' logick questions, meaning, I suppose, the logick questions of John Dunse."] A dullard; a dolt; a thickscull; a stupid, indocile animal.

Dunce at the best; in streets but scarce allow'd,
To tickle, on thy straw, the stupid crowd. Dryd.

Was Epiphanius so great a dunce to imagine a thing, indifferent in itself, should be directly opposite to the law of God? Stilling fleet.

I never knew this town without dunces of figure, who had credit enough to give rise to some new word. Swift.

DU'NCERY.* n. s. [from dunce.] Dulness; stupidity.

Here you come with your fine and logical distinction, and bring in the causes essential and accidental of marriage; as though we were in a school of duncery, and not in a discourse of pleasure. Sir T. Smith, Orat. IV. Append. to his Life.

Their overspreading barbarism — hath tainted also the fountains of divine doctrine, and rendered the pure and solid law of God unbeneficial to us by their calumnious dunceries.

Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

An indirect way is introduced of buying the said degrees for money, to the discouragement of learning, and the encouragement of duncery and idleness.

Dean Prideaux, on Reform. of the Two Univ. 1715.

DUNCH.* adj. Deaf. West of England. Grose.

To DU'NCIFY.* v. a. [from dunce.] To make a dunce. A contemptuous word, perhaps coined by Warburton.

Here you have a fellow ten thousand times more duncified than dunce Webster.

Warburton to Hurd, Lett. L. 180.

DUNE.* n. s. [Sax.] A hill; vulgarly pronounced down. See Down. Barret.

DUNG.† n. s. [dunz, Sax. of dýngan, to dung.] The excrement of animals used to fatten ground.

For dung all excrements are the refuse and putrefactions of nourishment. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I judge the likeliest way to be the perforation of the body of the tree in several places, one above the other; and the filling of the holes with dung, mingled with the medicine; and the watering of those lumps of dung with squirts of an infusion of the medicine in dunged water, once in three or four days. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

For when from herbs the pure part must we won,
From gross by 'stilling, this is better done
By despis'd dung than by the fire or sun. Donne.

He soon would learn to think like me,
And bless his ravish'd eyes to see
Such order from confusion sprung,
Such gaudy tulips rais'd from dung. Swift.

To DUNG.† v. a. [not from the noun, as Dr. Johnson asserts, (the noun being the participle of the verb,) but from the Sax. dýngan, to dung.] To manure with dung.

It was received of old, that dunging of grounds, when the west wind bloweth, and in the decrease of the moon, doth greatly help. Bacon. Nat. Hist.

There, as his dream, foretold, a cart he found,
That carry'd compost forth to dung the ground.
Dryden.

To DUNG.* v. n. To void excrement.

A wild ass, broke loose, ran about trampling and kicking, and dunging in their faces.

Swift, Battle of the Books.

DU'NGED.* adj. [from dung.] Covered with dung.

The dunged folds of dag-tail'd sheep.
Bp. Hall, Sat. v. 2.

DU'NGEON. n. s. [from donjon, the tower in which prisoners were kept, whence all prisons eminently strong were in time called dungeons.] A close prison: generally spoken of a prison dark or subterraneous.

Then up he took the slumbered senseless corse,
And ere he could out of his swoon awake,
Him to his castle brought with hasty force,
And in a dungeon deep him threw without remorse.
Spenser, F. Q.

We know not that the king of heav'n hath doom'd
This place our dungeon; not our safe retreat
Beyond his potent arm. Milton, P. L.

Now from the north
Of Norumbega, and the Samoed shore,
Bursting their brazen dungeon, arm'd with ice,
And snow, and hail, come stormy gust, and flaw.
Milton, P. L.

By imagination, a man in a dungeon is capable of entertaining himself with scenes and landscapes, more beautiful than any that can be found in the whole compass of nature. Addison.

To DU'NGEON.* v. a. [from the noun.] To shut up as in a dungeon.

Are we dungeon'd up from the sight of the sun?
Bp. Hall, of Contentation.

No slave in Argier is more truly sold in the market under a Turkish pirate, than we are naturally sold under the tyranny of sin; by whom we are bound hand and foot, and can stir neither of them towards God; and dungeoned up in the darkness of our ignorance, without any glimpse of the vision of God. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 128.

Light dungeon'd, manacled, [of sleep.]
Cleaveland, Poems, &c. p. 22.

DU'NGFORK.† n. s. [dung and fork.] A fork to toss out dung from stables.

I see well you would take a dongeforke to fight with, rather than you would lacke a weapon.

Abp. Cranmer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 157.

Dungforks and paddles are common every where. Mortimer.

DU'NGHILL. n. s. [dung and hill.]

1. An heap or accumulation of dung.

I, his brother, gain nothing under him but growth; for the which his animals on his dunghills are as much bound to him as I.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

Two cocks fought a duel for the mastery of a dunghill. L'Estrange.

Never enter into a league of friendship with an ingrateful person; that is, plant not thy friendship upon a dunghill: it is too noble a plant for so base a soil. South.

The dunghill having raised a huge mushroom of short duration, is now spread to enrich other men's land. Swift.

2. Any mean or vile abode.

Perhaps a thousand other worlds, that lie
Remote from us, and latent in the sky,
Are lighten'd by his beams, and kindly nurst,
Of which our earthly dunghill is the worst. Dryd.

3. Any situation of meanness.

The poor he raiseth from the dust,
Even from the dunghill lifts the just. Sandys.

4. A term of reproach for a man meanly born.

Out, dunghill! dar'st thou brave a nobleman?
Shakspeare.

DU'NGHILL.† adj. Sprung from the dunghill; mean; low; base; vile; worthless.

His dunghill thoughts, which do themselves enure
To dirty dross, no higher dare aspire.
Spenser, Hymn to Love.

Gripus, the basest and most dunghill swain,
That ever drew a net, or fish'd in fruitful main.
P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. ii. st. 14.

DU'NGY.† adj. [from dung.] Full of dung; mean; vile; base; low; odious; worthless.

Ye have seen their abominations, and their idols, [in the margin dungy gods.] Deut. xxix. 17.

We need no grave to bury honesty;
There's not a grain of it, the face to sweeten
Of the whole dungy earth. Shaksp. Wint. Tale.

DU'NGYARD. n. s. [dung and yard.] The place of the dunghill.

Any manner of vegetables cast into the dungyard. Mortimer.

DU'NNER. n. s. [from dun.] One employed in soliciting petty debts.

They are ever talking of new silks, and serve the owners in getting them customers, as their common dunners do in making them pay. Spectator.

DU'NNISH.* adj. [from dun.] Inclining to a dun colour.

The five or six first feathers of the wing above, of a dark or fuscous colour, near black; underneath, more light, or dunnish. Ray, Rem. p. 247.

DU'NNY.* adj. A word generally used, in common conversation, for deaf; and, in some parts of England, for dull of apprehension. Grose, and Pegge.

DUNT.* adj. Stupified; numbered. Norfolk. Grose.

DU'O.* n. s. [from the Lat. duo, two.] A song or piece of musick to be performed in two parts.

They call a duo a musick of two voices, although there be a third part for the thorough bass, and others for the symphony. In a word, for a duo there must be two principal parts, between which the melody is equally distributed.
Appendix to Mus. Dict. 1769, p. 13.

*DUODE'CIMO. n. s. [Lat.] A book is said to be in duodecimo, when a sheet is folded into twelve leaves.

DUODE'CUPLE. adj. [duo and decuplus, Lat.] Consisting of twelves.

Grisepsius, a learned Polander, endeavours to establish the duodecuple proportion among the Jews, by comparing some passages of Scripture together. Arbuthnot on Coins.

*DUODE'NUM. n. s. [Lat.] In anatomy, the first of the small intestines.

To DUP.* v. a. [do and up.] To open. Now used only in low language.

The porters are drunk: will they not dup the gate to-day? Damon and Pythias, 1582.

Then up he rose, and don'd his clothes,
And dupp'd the chamber door.
Song in Shakspeare's Hamlet.

DUPE. n. s. [dupe, Fr. from duppe, a foolish bird easily caught.] A credulous man; a man easily tricked. A modern word, hardly established.

An usurping populace is its own dupe, a mere underworker, and a purchaser in trust for some single tyrant. Swift.

First slave to words, then vassal to a name,
Then dupe to party: child and man the same.
Pope, Dunciad.

To DUPE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To trick; to cheat.

Those entertainments and pleasures we most value in life, are such as dupe, and play the wag with, the senses. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 9.

The throne a bigot keep, a genius quit;
Faithless through piety, and dup'd through wit.
Pope.

DU'PLE. adj. [duplus, Lat.] Double; one repeated.

To DU'PLICATE.† v. a. [duplico, Lat.]

1. To double; to enlarge by the repetition of the first number or quantity.

And some alterations in the brain duplicate that which is but a single object to our undistempered sentiments. Glanville.

Many explications, and duplicated expressions, clear one the other.
Instructions of Oratory, (Ox. 1682,) p. 57.

2. To fold together.

DU'PLICATE. adj. [from the verb.]

Duplicate proportion is the proportion of squares. Thus, in a rank of geometrical proportions, the first term to the third is said to be in a duplicate ratio of the first to the second, or as its square is to the square of the second: so in 2, 4, 8, 16, the ratio of 2 to 8 is a duplicate of that of 2 to 4; or as the square of 2 to the square of 4.
Phillips. Harris. Bailey.

It has been found, that the attraction is almost reciprocally in a duplicate proportion of the distance of the middle of the drop from the concourse of the glasses, viz. reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the spreading of the drop, and its touching each glass in a larger surface; and again reciprocally in a simple proportion, by reason of the attraction's growing stronger within the same quantity of attracting surface. Newton, Opticks.

DU'PLICATE. n. s. Another correspondent to the first; a second thing of the same kind, as a transcript of a paper.

Nothing is more needful for perfecting the natural history of bodies than the subjecting them to the fire; to which end I have reserved duplicates of the most considerable. Woodward.

DUPLICA'TION.† n. s. [from duplicate.]

1. The act of doubling.

What they have once said, they must and will maintain, in whole tomes, duplications, triplications, &c. Burton, Anat. of Melanch. p. 673.

What great pains hath been taken concerning the quadrature of a circle, and the duplication of a cube, and some other mathematical problems!
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. The act of folding together.

3. A fold; a doubling.

The peritonæum is a strong membrane, every where double; in the duplications of which all the viscera of the abdomen are hid.
Wiseman, Surgery.

DU'PLICATURE. n. s. [from duplicate.] A fold; any thing doubled.

The lympheducts, either dilacerated or obstructed, exonerate themselves into the foldings, or between the duplicatures of the membranes.
Ray on the Creation.

DUPLI'CITY.† n. s. [duplicis, Latin.]

1. Doubleness; the number of two.

This duplicity was ill contrived to place one head at both extremes, and had been more tolerable to have set three or four at one. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Do not affect duplicities, nor triplicities, nor any certain number of parts in your division of things. Watts, Logick.

2. Deceit; doubleness of heart or of tongue. Cockeram.

I have surveyed all Europe from the east to the west, from the north to the south, in search of this call upon us to purge ourselves of "subtle duplicity and a punick style" in our proceedings!
Burke, on a Regicide Peace.

DURABI'LITY. n. s. [durabilis, Latin.] The power of lasting; continuance; endurance.

Stones, though in dignity of nature inferiour unto plants, yet exceed them in firmness of strength, or durability of being. Hooker.

Our times upon the earth have neither certainty nor durability. Ralegh, Hist.

DU'RABLE. adj. [durabilis, Latin.]

1. Lasting; having the quality of long continuance.

The bones of his body we may compare to the hard rocks and stones, and therefore strong and durable. Ralegh, Hist.

With pins of adamant,
And chains, they made all fast; too fast they made,
And durable! Milton, P. L.

The glories of her majesty's reign ought to be recorded in words more durable than brass, and such as our posterity may read a thousand years hence. Swift.

2. Having successive existence.

Time, though in eternity, applied
To motion, measures all things durable
By present, past, and future. Milton.

DU'RABLENESS.† n. s. [from durable.] Power of lasting; continuance.

It were pity but that this woman should have been thus sick; the nature, the durableness, cost, pain, incurableness of her disease, both sent her to seek Christ, and moved Christ to her cure.
Bp. Hall, Contemp. B. 4.

The different consistence and durableness of the strata whereof they consist, are more or less.
Woodward.

A bad poet, if he cannot become immortal by the goodness of his verse, may by the durableness of the metal that supports it.
Addison on Ancient Medals.

DU'RABLY.† adv. [from durable.] In a lasting manner.

There indeed he found his fame flourishing, his monuments engraved in marble, and yet more durably in men's memories. Sidney.

By the books is meant the knowledge of God, in which all things are kept as durably, and distinctly, as if they were registered in a book.
South, Serm. vii. p. 270.

DU'RANCE.† n. s. [from duresse, law French.]

1. Imprisonment; the custody or power of a jailor; a prison.

Thy Dol, and Helen of thy noble thoughts,
Is in base durance and contagious prison;
Haul'd thither by mechanick dirty hands. Shaksp.

A poor, innocent, forlorn stranger, languishing in durance, upon the false accusations of a lying, insolent, whorish woman. South.

There's neither iron bar nor gate,
Portcullis, chain, nor bolt, nor grate;
And yet men durance there abide,
In dungeons scarce three inches wide. Hudibras.

Notwithstanding the warning and example before me, I commit myself to lasting durance.
Congreve, Old Bachelor.

2. Endurance; continuance; duration. A doubtful word.

Sick nature at that instant trembled round,
And mother earth sigh'd as she felt the wound:
Of how short durance was this new made state!
How far more mighty than heaven's love, hell's hate! Dryden.

3. A lasting kind of stuff, such as we now call everlasting. Obsolete.

The taylor — out of seven yards stole one and a half of durance. Three Ladies of London, 1584.

DURA'TION. n. s. [duratio, Latin.]

1. A sort of distance or length, the idea whereof we get, not from the permanent parts of space, but from the fleeting and perpetually perishing parts of succession. Locke.

2. Power of continuance.

Duration is a circumstance so essential to happiness, that if we conceived it possible for the joys of heaven itself to pass from us in an instant, we should find ourselves not much concerned for the attainment of them. Rogers.

3. Length of continuance.

Aristotle, by greatness of action, does not only mean it should be great in its nature, but also in its duration, that it should have a due length in it.
Addison, Spectator.

DU'RDUM.* n. s. [Welsh, dwrdh, a stir; Gael. diardan, anger. Craven Dial. and Brockett's N. C. Words.] A great noise, or uproar. Praise of Yorkshire Ale, p. 96. And Grose.

To DURE.† v. n. [duro, Lat.] To last; to continue; to endure.

The delights and pleasures of the world are most pleasing while they dure. Ralegh, Hist.

Yet hath he not root in himself, but dureth for a while. St. Matt. xiii. 21.

DU'REFUL. adj. [from dure and full.] Lasting; of long continuance; durable. Not in use.

The dureful oak, whose sap is not yet dry'd,
Is long e'er it conceive the kindling fire;
But when it once doth burn, it doth divide
Great heat, and makes his flames to heaven aspire.
Spenser.

DU'RELESS. adj. [from dure.] Without continuance; fading; transitory; short. Not in use.

Yet were that aptitude natural, more inclinable to follow and embrace the false and dureless pleasures of this stage-play world, than to become the shadow of God. Ralegh, Hist.

DU'RESSE.† n. s. [French; hardship, severity.]

1. Imprisonment; constraint; confinement.

If he should through pride your doom undo,
Do you by duresse him compel thereto.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. xii. 10.

The case is very hard; and I fear the plea she is advised to make, from the similitude of a man who is in duresse, will not prevail.
Tatler, No. 215.

Henry III., by the ill counsel of Hubert de Burg, pretended that these charters had been obtained by duresse.
Bp. Ellys on Liberty, P. ii. p. 56.

2. [In law.] A plea used by way of exception, by him who being cast into prison at a man's suit, or otherwise by threats, beating, &c. hardly used, seals any bond to him during his restraint. This the law holds as invalid, and supposes to be constrained. Cowel.

DU'RING. prep. [This word is rather a participle from dure; as, during life, durante vita, life continuing; during my pleasure, my pleasure continuing the same.] For the time of the continuance of; while any thing lasts.

If during his childhood he be constantly and rigorously kept from drinking cold liquor whilst he is hot, forbearance grows into a habit. Locke.

DU'RITY.† n. s. [dureté, French; durus, Latin.]

1. Hardness; firmness.

The ancients did burn their firmest stone, and even fragments of marble, which in time became almost marble again, at least of indissoluble durity, as appeareth in the standing theatres.
Wotton, Architecture.

Irradiancy or sparkling, found in many gems, is not discoverable in this; for it cometh short of their compactness and durity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Harshness; cruelty; hardness of mind.
Cockeram.

DU'ROUS.* adj. [Lat. durus.] Hard. The Scots have the adjective dure.

They all of them vary much from their primitive tenderness and bigness, and so become more durous. Smith, Port. of Old Age, p. 186.

DURST.† The preterite of dare. [Goth. daursta.]

The Christians durst have no images of the Deity, because they would rather die than defile themselves with such an impiety. Stillingfleet.

DUST.† adj. [duyster, Dutch; dyster, Su. Goth. dark.]

1. Tending to darkness. See DUSKY.

A pathless desert, dusk with horrid shades.
Milton, P. R.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured.

The hills to their supply,
Vapour, and exhalation dusk, and moist,
Sent up amain. Milton, P. L.

Dusk faces with white silken turbans wreath'd.
Milton, P. R.

DUSK. n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Tendency to darkness; incipient obscurity.

I will wait on you in the dusk of the evening, with my show upon my back. Spectator.

2. Darkness of colour; tendency to blackness.

Some sprinkled freckles on his face were seen,
Whose dusk set off the whiteness of the skin.
Dryden.

To DUSK.† v. a. [from the noun.] To make duskish. Dict.

The wanton wallowing
In fond delights, and amorous dallying,
Hath dusk'd the fairest splendour of our soul.
Marston, Scourge of Vill. B. iii. S. 8.

To DUSK.† v. n. To grow dark; to begin to lose light or brightness; to have lustre diminished. Dict.

The heart felt death;
Dusked his eyen two; and fail'd his breath.
Chaucer, Knight's Tale.

DU'SKILY.† adv. [from dusky.] With a tendency to darkness or blackness.
Sherwood.

DU'SKINESS.* n. s. [from dusky. Formerly duskness.] Incipient obscurity.

Time had somewhat sullied the colour of it with such a kind of duskiness, as we may observe in pictures that have hung in some smoky room.
Trans. of Boetius, Oxf. 1674, p. 3.

DU'SKISH. adj. [from dusk.]

1. Inclining to darkness; tending to obscurity.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw
Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light,
Enrolled in duskish smoke, and brimstone blue.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured.

Sight is not contented with sudden departments from one extreme to another; therefore let them have rather a duskish tincture than an absolute black. Wotton, Architecture.

DU'SKISHLY. adv. [from duskish.] Cloudily; darkly.

The sawdust burned fair, till part of the candle consumed: the dust gathering about the snast, made the snast to burn duskishly.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

DU'SKISHNESS.* n. s. [from duskish.] Approach to darkness.

For who can it unfold, and read aright
The divers colours, and the tinctures fair,
Which in this various vesture changes write
Of light, of duskishness of thick, of rare
Consistencies. More, Song of the Soul, i. i. 22.

DU'SKNESS.* n. s. [from dusk.] Dimness.

Of satiety or fulnesses be ingendered painful diseases and sicknesses — great bleedings, cramps, duskness of sight. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 191. b.

DU'SKY. adj. [from dusk; duyster, Dutch.]

1. Tending to darkness; obscure; not luminous.

Here lies the dusky torch of Mortimer,
Chok'd with ambition of the meaner sort. Shaksp.

There fierce winds o'er dusky valleys blow,
Whose every puff bears empty shades away.
Dryden.

Through the plains of one continual day,
Six shining months pursue their even way;
And six succeeding urge their dusky flight,
Obscur'd with vapours and o'erwhelm'd in night.
Prior.

2. Tending to blackness; dark coloured; not clear; not bright.

They did plot
The means that dusky Dis my daughter got.
Shakspeare.

It is not green, but of a dusky brown colour.
Bacon.

When Jove in dusky clouds involves the skies,
And the faint crescent shoots by fits before their eyes. Dryden.

The surface is of a dusky yellow colour.
Woodward.

By mixing such powders, we are not to expect a strong and full white, such as is that of paper; but some dusky obscure one, such as might arise from a mixture of light and darkness; or from white and black; that is, a grey, or dun, or russet brown. Newton, Opticks.

3. Gloomy; sad; intellectually clouded.

While he continues in life, this dusky scene of horrour, this melancholy prospect of final perdition, will frequently occur to his fancy.
Bentley, Serm.

Umbriel, a dusky, melancholy sprite,
As ever sully'd the fair face of light,
Down to the central earth, his proper scene,
Repairs to search the gloomy cave of spleen.
Pope.

DUST.† n. s. [ðurt, Saxon; dúst, Erse.]

1. Earth or other matter reduced to small particles.

The dust
Should have ascended to the roof of heav'n,
Rais'd by your populous troops.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

Dust helpeth the fruitfulness of trees, insomuch as they cast dust upon them; that powdering, when a shower cometh, maketh a soiling to the tree, being earth and water finely laid on.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The grave; the state of dissolution.
The sceptre, learning, physick must
All follow this, and come to dust. Shaksp. Cymb.
Thou
Out of the ground wast taken, know thy birth;
For dust thou art, and shalt to dust return.
Milton, P. L.
3. A mean and dejected state.
God raiseth up the poor out of the dust, to set them among princes. 1 Sam. ii. 8.
4. A tumult; uproar. [Su. Goth. dyst, tumult.] A northern word. Craven Dial. and Brockett. "To kick up a dust," is in other parts also a colloquial expression.

DUST-BORN.* adj. [dust and born.] A forcible compound, and well applied in a paraphrase of "dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."
The dust-born pomp of earth,
Made thrall to death, returns to dust again.
Mir. for Mag. p. 874.

To DUST.† v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To free from dust.
2. To sprinkle with dust. Sherwood.
Shimei threw stones at him, and cast dust, [in the margin, dusted him with dust.] 2 Sam. xvi. 13.
3. To levigate; to separate by a sieve.
The lower sieve receives the powder, and lets the dust go thorough the bin, over which the sieve is shaken, called the dusting bin.
Sprat, Hist. of R. Soc. p. 281.

DU'STER.* n. s. [from dust.]
1. That which frees from dust, either by wiping, as with a cloth; or by sweeping, as with a brush. "A duster made of a fox-tail fastened to a staff."
Cotgrave, in V. Vistempenard.
2. In making gunpowder, a sieve so called; a sifter.
The lower sieve is called the dry duster, and retains the small corns, which serve for musquet and pistol; and lets fall the dust into the bin.
Sprat, Hist. of R. Soc. p. 283.

DU'STINESS.* n. s. [from dusty.] The state of being covered with dust.
Sherwood.
He ran over the heat of the weather, dustiness of the roads, and other general topicks.
Graves, Spirit. Quixote, iii. 2.

DU'STMAN. n. s. [dust and man.] One whose employment is to carry away the dust.
The dustman's cart offends thy clothes and eyes,
When through the street a cloud of ashes flies. Gay.

DU'STY.† adj. [Sax. ðyrıȝ.]
1. Filled with dust; clouded with dust.
All our yesterdays have lighted fools
The way to dusty death. Shakspeare.
Arms and the dusty fields I less admire,
And soften strangely in some new desire. Dryden.
2. Covered or scattered with dust.
Even Drudgery himself,
As at the car he sweats, or dusty hews
The palace stone, looks gay. Thomson, Summer.

DUTCH.* n. s. [duytsch.]
1. The people of Holland.
2. The Dutch language.
A question may here be moved, that seeing the Teutonick is so far spread, and also varied, which then it is that we may hold for the more ancient, or the rightest and least varied from the first original; that is, whether the high Dutch, low Dutch, or eastlandish Dutch be it? To this I answer, that as the maritime parts of countries were inhabited before the inlands that lie farthest from the sea, the ancient language was there first planted; and is like to have been most varied by such as went afterward to dwell higher, and dispersed abroad in the country; and therefore I hold the eastlandish and low Dutch to draw nearer the true original than the high Dutch.
Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

DU'TCHESS.† n. s. [duchesse, Fr.]
1. The lady of a duke.
The duke of Cornwall, and Regan his dutchess, will be here. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
The duke was to command the army, and the dutchess, by the favour she possessed, to be 'near her majesty. Swift.
The gen'rous god, who wit and gold refines,
And ripens spirits as he ripens minds,
Kept dross for dutchesses, the world shall know it,
To you gave sense, good humour, and a poet. Pope.
2. A lady who has the sovereignty of a dukedom.
The only remedy for these evils, was concluded to be the espousals of the dutchess of Britanny and the king of France. Hume's Hist.
3. A lady raised to the rank of dutchess by the king.
The marchioness of Pembroke!
A thousand pounds a year! for pure respect——
——— By this time,
I know, your back will bear a dutchess.
Shakspeare, King Henry VIII.

DU'TCHY. n. s. [duché, Fr.] A territory which gives title to a duke, or has a duke for its sovereign.
Different states border on it; the kingdom of France, the dutchy of Savoy, and the canton of Bern. Addison on Italy.
France might have swallowed up his whole dutchy. Swift.

DU'TCHYCOURT. n. s. A court wherein all matters appertaining to the dutchy of Lancaster are decided by the decree of the chancellor of that court. Cowel.

DU'TEOUS. adj. [from duty.]
1. Obedient; obsequious; respectful to those who have natural or legal authority.
Great Aurengzebe did duteous care express,
And durst not push too far his great success.
Dryden.
A female softness, with a manly mind;
A duteous daughter, and a sister kind;
In sickness patient, and in death resign'd. Dryden.
Who taught the bee with winds and rains to strive,
To bring her burden to the certain hive;
And through the liquid fields again to pass
Duteous, and hark'ning to the sounding brass?
Prior.
2. Obsequious; obedient to good or bad purposes: with to.
I know thee well; a serviceable villain!
As duteous to the vices of thy mistress,
As badness would desire. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Every beast, more duteous at her call,
Than at Circean call the herd disguis'd.
Milton, P. L.
3. Enjoined by duty; enforced by the relation of one to another. This sense is not now used.
With mine own tongue deny my sacred right,
With mine own breath release all duteous ties.
Shakspeare.

DU'TIFUL. adj. [duty and full.]
1. Obedient; submissive to natural or legal superiours; reverent.
She died in an extreme old age, without pain, under the care of the most dutiful son that I have ever known or heard of. Swift to Pope.
2. Expressive of respect; giving token of reverence; respectful; reverential.
There would she kiss the ground, and thank the trees, bless the air, and do dutiful reverence to every thing she thought did accompany her at their first meeting. Sidney.

DU'TIFULLY. adv. [from dutiful.]
1. Obediently; submissively.
2. Reverently; respectfully.
His daughter Philoclea he found at that time dutifully watching by her mother, and Miso curiously watching her. Sidney.
He with joyful, nimble wing,
Flew dutifully back again,
And made an humble chaplet for the king. Swift.

DU'TIFULNESS. n. s. [from dutiful.]
1. Obedience; submission to just authority.
Piety, or dutifulness to parents, was a most popular virtue among the Romans. Dryden, Æn.
2. Reverence; respect.
It is a strange kind of civility, and an evil dutifulness in friends and relatives, to suffer him to perish without reproof or medicine, rather than to seem unmannerly to a great sinner.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

DU'TY. n. s. [from due.]
1. That to which a man is by any natural or legal obligation bound.
When ye shall have done all those things which are commanded, you say we are unprofitable servants: we have done that which was our duty to do. St. Luke, xvii. 10.
The pain children feel from any necessity of nature, it is the duty of parents to relieve. Locke.
2. Acts or forbearances required by religion or morality. In this sense it has a plural.
Good my lord,
You have begot me, bred me, lov'd me; I
Return those duties back, as are right fit;
Obey you, love you, and most honour you. Shaks.
All our duty is set down in our prayers, because in all our duty we beg the Divine assistance; and remember that you are bound to do all those duties, for the doing of which you have prayed for the Divine assistance.
Bp. Taylor, Devotions.
3. Obedience or submission due to parents, governours, or superiours; loyalty; piety to parents.
Thinkest thou that duty shall have dread to speak,
When power to flattery bows? To plainness honour
Is bound, when majesty to folly falls.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.
God's party will appear small, and the king's not greater; it being not probable that those should have sense of duty to him that had none to God. Decay of Piety.
4. Act of reverence or respect.
They both attone;
Did duty to their lady as became. Spenser, F. Q.
5. The business of a soldier on guard.
The regiment did duty there punctually.
Clarendon.
Otho, as often as Galba supped with him, used to give every soldier upon duty an aureus.
Arbuthnot on Coins.
6. The business of war; service.
The night came and severed them, all parties being tired with the duty of the day. Clarendon.
See how the madmen bleed! Behold the gains
With which their master, love, rewards their pains!
For sev'n long years, on duty every day,
Lo! their obedience, and their monarch's pay!
Dryden.
7. Tax; impost; custom; toll.
All the wines make their way through several duties and taxes, before they reach the port.
Addison.
Such shekels as they now shew, were the old ones in which duty was to be paid by their law.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

DUUMVIRATE.* n. s. [Lat. duumviratus, from duumviri.] A government or jurisdiction among the Romans, exercised by two; "the office or dignity of the duumviri." Chambers. Such is the case, in this country, with regard to the sheriffalty of London and Middlesex, which consists of two persons.

DWALE.* n. s. [Germ. dwalen, to be stupid.]

1. In botany, the deadly herb nightshade; so named, perhaps, from its stupifying or poisonous quality. Our old lexicographers Huloet and Barret notice this word. And Chaucer uses it for a soporifick draught.

Nedeth hem no dwale:
This miller hath so wisly bibbed ale,
That as an horse he snorteth in his slepe.
Chaucer, Reve's Tale.

2. In heraldry, sable or black colour.

DWA'LING, or DWA'LLING.* adj. [Goth. dwala, a fool; Sax. ðpala, blunder.] Talking nonsense as if delirious. Exmouth dialect. See To DWAULE. Grose.

DWARF.† n. s. [ðpeopx, Saxon; dwerg, Dutch; dwaerg, Danish. In the mythology of the northern nations, the dwarf was also a demon or fairy, believed to dwell among rocks; "nanos, spirituum aut dæmonum genus, credebant saxa inhabitare." Keysleri, Antiq. Septentr. p. 21. These probably belong to that class of which Paracelsus speaks; "reckoning up many places in Germany, where they walk, some two foot long!" Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 47. Barret calls a dwarf an elf, Dict. 1580.]

1. A man below the common size of men.

Get you gone, you dwarf!
You minimus, of hind'ring knot-grass made.
Shakspeare.

Such dwarfs were some kind of apes. Brown.

They but now who seem'd
In bigness to surpass earth's giant sons,
Now less than smallest dwarfs in narrow room,
Throng numberless. Milton, P. L.

2. Any animal or plant below its natural bulk.

In a delicate plantation of trees, all well-grown, fair, and smooth, one dwarf was knotty and crooked, and the rest had it in derision. L'Estrange.

Saw off the stock in a smooth place; and for dwarf trees, graft them within four fingers of the ground. Mortimer.

3. An attendant on a lady or knight in romances.

The champion stout,
Eftsoones dismounted from his courser brave,
And to the dwarf awhile his needless spear he gave.
Spenser, F. Q.

4. It is used often by botanists in composition; as, dwarf elder, dwarf honeysuckle, Dr. Johnson says; but it is not confined to botanical illustration.

Great is this mysterie of godliness,
Exceeding man's dwarf wit.
Fitzgeffry's Blessed Birthday, (1634,) p. 23.

To DWARF. v. a. [from the noun.] To hinder from growing to the natural bulk; to lessen; to make little.

It is reported that a good strong canvas, spread over a tree, grafted low, soon after it putteth forth, will dwarf it, and make it spread.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The whole sex is in a manner dwarfed, and shrunk into a race of beauties that seems almost another species. Addison.

DWA'RFISH. adj. [from dwarf.] Below the natural bulk; low; small; little; petty; despicable.

Their dwarfish pages were
As cherubims all gilt. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

And are you grown so high in his esteem,
Because I am so dwarfish and so low? Shaks.

This unheard sauciness, and boyish troops,
The king doth smile at; and is well prepar'd
To whip this dwarfish war, these pigmy arms,
From out the circle of his territories.
Shakspeare, K. John.

A thicket close beside the grove there stood,
With briars and brambles choak'd, and dwarfish wood. Dryden.

We should have lost oaks and cedars, and the other tall and lofty sons of the forest, and have found nothing but dwarfish shrubs, and creeping moss, and despicable mushrooms. Bentley.

DWA'RFISHLY. adj. [from dwarfish.] Like a dwarf.

DWA'RFISHNESS.† n. s. [from dwarfish.] Minuteness of stature; littleness.

So when our blessed Saviour tells us we cannot by our taking thought add to our real stature one cubit; he doth not hereby deny the possibility, or lawfulness of setting ourselves higher than naturally we are, either by the heels of our shoes, or by pattens or seats, and the like inventions, which seek to give an advantage of procerity and comeliness to our stature; which, if shrunk to a dwarfishness, and epitomized to a decimo-sexto, makes the persons of men and women subject to be as little in the eyes and esteem of others, as they are in their own inches or size.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 75.

'Tis no wonder that science hath not outgrown the dwarfishness of its pristine stature, and that the intellectual world is such a microcosm.
Glanville, Scepsis.

DWA'RFY.* adj. [from dwarf.] Below the common size of men.

Though I am squint-eyed, lame, bald, dwarfy, &c. yet these deformities are toys.
Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653,) p. 65.

To DWAULE.† v. a. [ðpelian, Sax. to wander; dwaelen, Dutch; Germ. dwalen; Goth. dwala, and dwalmon. See DWALE, and DWALING.] To be delirious: a provincial word mentioned by Junius.

To DWELL.† v. n. preterite dwelt, or dwelled. [duala, old Teutonick, is stay, delay; duelia, Icel. to stay, to stand still; duel, the stopping-place to which the ball was to be driven by the victorious party, Callander; dwol, Goth. delay: hence also the Su. dwalias, to stop. Chaucer thus uses dwellings for delays, Boeth. i. Metr. i.]

1. To remain. The primary meaning, hitherto unnoticed.

And clapt his iron wings, as victor he did dwell.
Spenser, F. Q. i. xi. 31.

2. To inhabit; to live in a place; to reside; to have an habitation.

If thy brother that dwelleth by thee be waxen poor, and be sold unto thee, thou shalt not compel him to serve as a bond servant. Lev. xxv. 39.

He shall dwell alone, without the camp shall his habitation be. Lev. xiii. 46.

John Haywood and Sir Thomas More, in the parish wherein I was born, dwelt and had possessions. Peacham.

Why are you vex'd, lady? Why do you frown?
Here dwell no frowns nor anger; from these gates
Sorrow flies far. Milton, Comus.

3. To live in any form of habitation.

Abraham sojourned in the land of promise as in a strange country, dwelling in tabernacles.
Heb. xi. 9.

4. To be in any state or condition.

'Tis safer to be that which we destroy,
Than by destruction dwell in doubtful joy. Shaksp.

5. To be suspended with attention; to hang upon with care or fondness.

He in great passion all this while did dwell;
More busying his quick eyes, her face to view,
Than his dull ears, to hear what she did tell.
Spenser.

Th' attentive queen
Dwelt on his accents. Smith, Phæd. and Hip.

Such was that face, on which I dwelt with joy,
Ere Greece assembled stemm'd the tides to Troy.
Pope.

6. To continue long speaking.

He preach'd the joys of heaven, and pains of hell,
And warn'd the sinner with becoming zeal;
But on eternal mercy lov'd to dwell.
Dryden, Good Parson.

We have dwelt pretty long on the considerations of space and duration. Locke.

Those, who defend our negotiators, dwell upon their zeal and patience. Swift.

To DWELL. v. a. To inhabit. Not used.

I saw and heard; for we sometimes
Who dwell this wild, constrain'd by want, come forth
To town or village nigh. Milton, P. R.

DWE'LLER. n. s. [from dwell.] An inhabitant; one that lives in any place.

The houses being kept up, did of necessity enforce a dweller; and the proportion of land for occupation being kept up, did of necessity enforce that dweller not to be beggar or cottager, but a man of some substance. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Their cries soon waken all the dwellers near;
Now murmuring noises rise in every street. Dryd.

DWE'LLING. n. s. [from dwell.]

1. Habitation; place of residence; abode.

His dwelling is low in a valley green,
Under the foot of Rauran mossy hore.
Spenser, F. Q.

Hazor shall be a dwelling for dragons, and a desolation for ever. Jer. xlix. 33.

If he have several dwellings, let him sort them so, that what he wanteth in the one he may find in the other. Bacon.

God will deign
To visit oft the dwellings of just men
Delighted. Milton, P. L.

All dwellings else
Flood overwhelm'd, and them with all their pomp
Deep under water roll'd; sea cover'd sea,
Sea without shore! Milton, P. L.

The living few, and frequent funerals then,
Proclaim'd thy wrath on this forsaken place;
And now those few, who are return'd again,
Thy searching judgements to their dwellings trace.
Dryden.

The force of fire ascended first on high,
And took its dwelling in the vaulted sky.
Dryden, Ovid.

2. State of life; mode of living.

Thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field.
Daniel, iv. 25.

DWE'LLINGHOUSE. n. s. [from dwell and house.] The house in which one lives.

A person ought always to be cited at the place of his dwellinghouse, which he has in respect of his habitation and usual residence; and not at the house which he has in respect of his estate, or the place of his birth. Ayliffe, Parergon.

DWE'LLINGPLACE. n. s. [dwell and place.] The place of residence.

People do often change their dwellingplaces, and some must die, whilst other some do grow up into strength. Spenser on Ireland.

To DWI'NDLE.† v. n. [Sax. ðpinan; Dutch, dwynen; Icel. duyna, to fail, to cease. Chaucer uses dwined for wasted, Rom. R. 360. Dr. Johnson has confounded, in several instances, the verb neuter with the active, and with the adjective dwindled; not noticing either of the latter.]

1. To shrink; to lose bulk; to grow little.
   Proper names, when familiarized in English, dwindle to monosyllables; whereas in other languages they receive a softer turn, by the addition of a new syllable. Addison.
2. To degenerate; to sink.
   If there have been such a gradual diminution of the generative faculty of the earth, that it hath dwindled from nobler animals to puny mice and insects, why was there not the like decay in the production of vegetables? Bentley.
   Religious societies, though begun with excellent intentions, are said to have dwindled into factious clubs. Swift.
   He found the expected council was dwindling into a conventicle, a packed assembly of Italian bishops, not a free convention of fathers. Atterbury.
3. To wear away; to lose health; to grow feeble.
   Weary sev'nnights, nine times nine,
   Shall he dwindle, peak, and pine.
   Shakspeare, Macbeth.
   We see, that some small part of the foot being injured by a wrench or a blow, the whole leg or thigh thereby loses its strength and nourishment, and dwindles away. Locke.
   Physicians, with their milky cheer,
   The love-sick maid and dwindling beau repair. Gay.

To DWI'NDLE.* v. a.

1. To make less.
   Our drooping days are dwindled down to nought;
   Their period finish'd, ere 'tis well begun.
   Thomson.
2. To sink; to bring low.
   'Tis now dwindled down to a light frothy stuff.
   Norris.
3. To break; to divide into parts; to disperse.
   Under Greenvil, there were only five hundred foot, and three hundred horse, left; the rest were dwindled away. Clarendon.

DWI'NDLED.* part. adj. [from dwindle.] Shrunk; fallen away.
   Setting up one foot parallel to the other; filling out the leanness of their dwindled legs, and the like. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 44.
   Thy dwindled legs seem crawling to the grave. Dryden.

To DWINE.* v. n. To faint; to grow feeble; to pine. Still a northern word. See To DWINDLE.

DYE. n. s. See DIE.

To DYE.* v. a. See To DIE.

DY'ER.* n. s. See DIER.
   Verdigrease is used by linen dyers in their yellow and greenish colours. Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. Soc. p. 288.

DY'ING.* n. s. The art of tinging cloth, stuff, or other matter, with a permanent colour.
   I conceive much light would be given to the philosophy of dying, by careful experiments of the weight added by each drug or salt, in dying of every colour. Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. Soc. p. 305.

DY'ING.† part. Tinging; giving a new colour.
   Some dying ingredients or drugs, by the coarseness of their bodies, make the thread of the dyed stuff seem coarser. Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. Soc. p. 303.

DY'ING.† The participle of die. Expiring; giving up the ghost.
   By faith Jacob, when he was a dying, blessed both the sons of Joseph. Heb. xi. 22.

DY'ING.* n. s. [from To die.] Death.
   Always bearing about in the body the dying of the Lord Jesus. 2 Cor. iv. 10.

DY'INGLY.* adv. [from dying.] As at the moment of giving up the ghost.
   But 'tis impossible to satisfy
   You, Leocadia, but by repentance,
   Though I can dyingly, and boldly, say,
   I know not your dishonour.
   Beaum. and Fl. Love's Pilgr.

DYKE.* See DIKE.

DY'NAMICKS.* n. s. [δύναμις, Gr.] The science of mechanical powers.

DY'NAST.* n. s. [Gr. δυνάστης, Fr. dynaste. Milton writes our word, in its first sense, dynasta, from the Latin; "dynastas, or proud monarchs," Tenure of Kings and Magistrates.]

1. A ruler; a governour.
   The ancient family of Des Ewes, dynasts or lords of the dition of Kessell. A. Wood, Ath. Ox. ed. 1692, vol. 2. col. 110.
2. A dynasty; a government, if it be not a misprint. See DYNASTY.
   He might give some account for the heroical times of those Egyptian dynasts, pretending antiquity many years further back into the chaos than the Mosaical beginning. Gregory's Posthuma, (1650,) p. 142.

DY'NASTY.† n. s. [Gr. δυναστεία, French, dynastie.]

1. Government; sovereignty.
   Some account him fabulous, because he carries up the Egyptian dynasties before the flood, yea, and long before the creation. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.
   Greece was divided into several dynasties, which our author has enumerated under their respective princes. Pope.
2. A race or family of rulers.
   This was the light put into the hands of the next dynasty of theologists, the schoolmen. Reeves, on the Psalms, p. 18.

DY'SCRASY.† n. s. [δυσκρασία.] An unequal mixture of elements in the blood or nervous juice; a distemperature, when some humour or quality abounds in the body. Dict.
   I will somewhat write of two dyscrasies of the body. Sir T. Elyot, Cast. of Health, (1541,) B. 4.
   If his conscience were come to that unnatural dyscrasy, as to digest poison and to keck at wholesome food, it was not for the parliament, or any of his kingdoms, to feed with him any longer. Milton, Eiconoclastes.
   Sin is but a disease and dyscrasy in the soul. Cudworth, Serm. (1676,) p. 81.
   In this pituitous dyscrasy of blood, we must vomit off the pituita, and purge upon intermissions. Floyer on the Humours.

DY'SENTERY. n. s. [dysenterie, Fr. from δυσεντερία.] A looseness, wherein very ill humours flow off by stool, and are also sometimes attended with blood. Dict.
   From an unusual inconstancy of the weather, and perpetual changes of the wind from east to west, proceed epidemical dysenteries. Arbuthnot on Air.

DY'SNOMY.* n. s. [Gr. δυσνομία.] Ill ordering of laws; or the enacting bad laws. See ANOMY. Cockeram.

DYSPE'PSY. n. s. [δυσπεψία.] A difficulty of digestion, or bad fermentation in the stomach or guts. Dict.

DY'SPHONY. n. s. [δυσφωνία.] A difficulty in speaking, occasioned by an ill disposition of the organs. Dict.

DYSPNO'EA. n. s. [δύσπνοια.] A difficulty of breathing; straitness of breath.

DY'SURY. n. s. [δυσερία.] A difficulty in making urine.
   It doth end in a dysentery, pains of the hæmorrhoids, inflammations of any of the lower parts, diabetes, a continual pissing, or a hot dysury, difficulty of making water. Harvey.

E.

E Has two sounds; long, as scêne, and short, as men. E is the most frequent vowel in the English language; for it not only is used like the rest in the beginning or end of words, but has the peculiar quality of lengthening the foregoing vowel, as căn, cāne; măn, māne; găp, gāpe; glăd, glāde; brĕd, brēde; chĭn, chīne; whĭp, wīpe; thĭn, thīne; nŏd, nōde; tŭn, tūne; plŭm, plūme. Yet it sometimes occurs final, where yet the foregoing vowel is not lengthened; as gŏne, knowlĕdge, ĕdge, gĭve. Anciently almost every word ended with e; as for can, canne; for year, yeare; for great, greate; for need, neede; for flock, flocke. It is probable that this e final had at first a soft sound, like the female e of the French; and that afterwards it was in poetry either mute or vocal, as the verse required, till at last it became universally silent.

Ea has the sound of e long: the e is commonly lengthened rather by the immediate addition of a than by the apposition of e to the end of the word; as mĕn, mēan; sĕll, sēal; mĕt, mēat; nĕt, nēat.

EACH.† pron. [Sax. æȝhpılc, ælc, elc; elch, Dutch; ilk, Scottish. Each is called a distributive pronoun, because it relates to persons or things that make up a number, including every individual of any number referred to.]

1. Either of two.

Though your orbs of diff'rent greatness be,
Yet both are for each other's use dispos'd;
His to inclose, and yours to be inclos'd. Dryden.

2. Every one of any number. This sense is rare, except in poetry, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Milton and Denham.

In the habitation of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes.
Isaiah, xxxv. 7.

The invention all admir'd, and each how he
To be the inventer miss'd. Milton, P. L.

Let each
His adamantine coat gird well, and each
Fit well his helm. Milton, P. L.

By hunger, that each other creature tames,
Thou art not to be harm'd, therefore not mov'd;
Thy temperance invincible besides. Milton, P. R.

Wise Plato said the world with men was stor'd,
That succour each to other might afford.
Denham.

When I consider how each of these professions [divinity, law, and physick,] are crowded with multitudes that seek their livelihood in them.
Addison, Spect. No. 21.

3. To EACH the correspondent word is other, whether it be used of two, or of a greater number.

'Tis said they eat each other. Shaksp. Macbeth.

Let each esteem other better than themselves.
Phil. ii. 3.

Loveliest of women! heaven is in thy soul;
Beauty and virtue shine for ever round thee,
Brightening each other! Thou art all divine.
Addison, Cato.

EA'CHWHERE.* adv. [each and where.] Everywhere.

The cases questioned are for the most part only such as you will confess, before the suspicion of antichristian apostasy, to have obtained eachwhere in the church. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 309.

EAD. [æd, ed.] in the compound, and eadig in the simple names, denotes happiness or blessedness. Thus Eadward is a happy preserver; Eadulph, happy assistance; Eadgar, happy power; Eadwin, happy conquerour; which Macarius Eupolemus, Fausta, Fortunatus, Felicianus, &c. do in some measure resemble. Ead may also in some cases be derived from the Saxon eath, which signifies easy, gentle, mild.
Gibson's Camden.

EA'GER.† adj. [eaȝop, Saxon; aigre, French, Dr. Johnson says. We must derive it, however, from the Latin acer, brisk and courageous, as well as sharp or sour.]

1. Struck with desire; ardently wishing; keenly desirous; vehement in desire; hotly longing.

Of action eager, and intent of thought,
The chiefs your honourable danger sought.
Dryden, Ovid.

Eager to read the rest, Achates came.
Dryden, Æn.

With joy the ambitious youth his mother heard,
And, eager for the journey, soon prepar'd;
He longs the world beneath him to survey,
To guide the chariot, and to give the day.
Dryden.

Love inflam'd, and [illegible]ger on his bliss,
Smother'd her words. Addison, Ovid.

Perhaps by that time this reaches you, I shall have entered on my 67th year; which makes me the eagerer to see Mrs. Morice and you once at least before I die. Atterbury to Mr. Morice, Lett. 66.

2. It is used sometimes with of, sometimes with for, sometimes with on or after before the thing sought.

3. Hot of disposition; vehement; ardent; impetuous.

He preserved the holy women Susan and Tecla, the one from the furious raging of the old judges, and the other from a most eager and forcible tiranne. Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) A. a. iii.

Apt as well to quicken the spirits as to allay that which is too eager. Hooker.

Nor do the eager clamours of disputants yield more relief to eclipsed truth, than did the sounding brass of old to the labouring moon.
Glanville, Scepsis.

Imperfect zeal is hot and eager, without knowledge. Sprat.

Eager his tone, and ardent were his eyes.
Dryden.

A man charged with a crime of which he thinks himself innocent, is apt to be too eager in his own defence. Dryden.

4. Quick; busy; easily put in action.

His Numidian genius
Is well dispos'd to mischief, were he prompt
And eager on it; but he must be spurr'd.
Addison, Cato.

5. Sharp; sour; acid. See VINEGAR.

The wine eygre or sour.
Ordynarye of Crysten Men, p. 237.

With a sudden vigour it doth posset
And curd, like eager droppings into milk,
The thin and wholesome blood. Shaks. Hamlet.

6. Keen; severe; biting.

The air bites shrewdly; it is very cold.
— It is a nipping and an eager air.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

The flesh shrinketh, but the bone resisteth, whereby the cold becometh more eager.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

7. Brittle; inflexible; not ductile. A cant word of artificers.

Gold will be sometimes so eager, as artists call it, that it will as little endure the hammer as glass itself. Locke.

EA'GERLY. adv. [from eager.]

1. With great ardour of desire; with impetuosity of inclination.

To the holy war how fast and eagerly did men go, when the priest persuaded them that whosoever died in that expedition was a martyr! South.

How eagerly he flew, when Europe's fate
Did for the seed of future actions wait! Stepney.

2. Ardently; hotly,

Brutus gave the word too early,
Who having some advantage on Octavius,
Took it too eagerly; his soldiers fell to spoil,
Whilst we by Antony were all inclos'd. Shaksp.

3. Keenly; sharply.

Abundance of rain froze so eagerly as it fell, that it seemed the depth of winter had of a sudden been come in. Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

EA'GERNESS.† n. s. [from eager.]

1. Keenness of desire; ardour of inclination.

She knew her distance, and did angle for me,
Madding my eagerness with her restraint. Shaks.

Have you not seen, when whistled from the fist,
Some faulcon stoop'd at what her eye design'd,
And, with her eagerness, the quarry miss'd.
Dryden.

The eagerness and strong bent of the mind after knowledge, if not warily regulated, is often an hinderance to it. Locke.

Detraction and obloquy are received with as much eagerness as wit and humour.
Addison, Freeholder.

Juba lives to catch
That dear embrace, and to return it too,
With mutual warmth and eagerness of love.
Addison, Cato.

His continued application to publick affairs diverts him from those pleasures, which are pursued with eagerness by princes who have not the publick so much at heart. Addison.

The things of this world, with whatever eagerness they engage our pursuit, leave us still empty and unsatisfied with their fruition. Rogers.

2. Impetuosity; vehemence; violence.

It finds them in the eagerness and height of their devotion; they are speechless for the time that it continues, and prostrate and dead when it departs. Dryden.

I'll kill thee with such eagerness of haste,
As fiends, let loose, would lay all nature waste.
Dryden.

3. Tartness; sourness. Barret.

EA'GLE. n. s. [aigle, French; aquila, Latin; ealler, Erse.]

1. A bird of prey, which, as it is reported, renews its age when it grows old. It is also said not to drink at all, like other birds with sharp claws. It is given out, that when an eagle sees its young so well grown as to venture upon flying, it hovers over their nest, and excites them to imitate it, and take their flight; and when it sees them weary, or fearful, it takes them upon its back. Eagles are said to be extremely sharp-sighted, and, when they take flight, spring perpendicularly upward, with their eyes steadily fixed upon the sun. Calmet.

Draw forth the monsters of th' abyss profound,
Or fetch th' aerial eagle to the ground. Pope.

2. The standard of the ancient Romans.

Arts still follow'd where Rome's eagles flew.
Pope.

EA'GLE-EYED.† adj. [from eagle and eyed.] Sharp-sighted as an eagle.

Contain thy self;
For though all things beneath us are transparent,
The sharpest sighted, were he eagle-ey'd,
Cannot discover us.
Beaum. and Fl. The Prophetess.

As he was quick and perspicacious, so was he inwardly eagle-eyed, and versed in the humours of his subjects. Howell.

Ev'ry one is eagled-ey'd to see
Another's faults and his deformity. Dryden.

EA'GLE-SIGHTED.* adj. [eagle and sight.] Having quick sight, like an eagle.

What peremptory eagle-sighted eye
Dares look upon the heaven of her brow,
That is not blinded by her majesty?
Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

The eagle-sighted prophets too
Which were thy church's organs.
Donne, Poems, p. 339.

EA'GLESPEED. n. s. [eagle and speed.] Swiftness like that of an eagle.

Abrupt with eaglespeed she cut the sky,
Instant invisible to mortal eye. Pope.

EA'GLESS.* n. s. [Fr. aiglesse.] The hen eagle. Sherwood.

EA'GLESTONE. n. s. A stone said to be found at the entrance of the holes in which the eagles make their nests, and affirmed to have a particular virtue in defending the eagle's nest from thunder. Calmet.

The Eaglestone contains, in a cavity within it, a small loose stone, which rattles when it is shaken; and every fossil, with a nucleus in it, has obtained the name. The analogy between a stone, thus containing another within it, or, as the fanciful writers express it, pregnant with another, and a woman big with child, led people to imagine that it must have great virtues and effects in accelerating or retarding delivery; so that if tied to the arm of a woman with child, it prevents abortion; and if to the leg, it promotes delivery. On such idle and imaginary virtues was raised all the credit which this famous fossil possessed for many ages. Hill's Materia Medica.

If you stop the holes of a hawk's bell, it will make no ring, but a flat noise or rattle; and so doth the ætites, or eaglestone, which hath a little stone within it. Bacon.

EA'GLET. n. s. [from eagle.] A young eagle.

This treason of his sons did the king express in an emblem, wherein was an eagle with three eaglets tyring on her breast, and the fourth pecking at one of her eyes. Davies.

EA'GLEWINGED.* adj. [eagle and wing.] Having the wings, as it were, of an eagle.

The eaglewinged pride
Of sky-aspiring and ambitious thoughts.
Shakspeare, K. Rich. II.

At his right hand Victory
Sat eaglewinged. Milton, P. L.

EA'GRE.† n. s. [æger, in Runick, is the ocean; eggia, in Icelandick, is to agitate, to incite. Saxon, eagorstream; egor, æstus marinus. Hickes, in Benson's Vocab. Saxon.] A tide swelling above another tide, observable in the river Severn. See AIGRE. Dr. Johnson cites a passage from Dryden, which he, or his scribe, has strangely altered. Dryden, in a note on the passage, says that he had observed the eagre on the river Trent. See also EGER.

His manly heart, whose noble pride
Was still above
Dissembled hate or varnish'd love,
Its more than common transport could not hide;
But, like an eagre, rode in triumph o'er the tide:
Thus, in alternate course,
The tyrant passions, hope and fear,
Did in extremes appear,
And flash'd upon the soul with equal force.
Dryden, Thren. August.

EA'LDERMAN.† n. s. [ealdorman, Sax.] The name of a Saxon magistrate; alderman.

The king, archbishop, eorles, bishops, ealdermen, and other degrees, may suffice to prove them to be acts of parliament.
Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, p. 89.

Those ealdormen who were ranked with bishops in the Saxon laws, and in the old Latin translations called aldermanni, were such as had counties or other territories under their government; and had the same power and jurisdiction as the earl had afterwards. The word ealdorman signifies literally no more than elder, or senator; but it signified, among the Saxons, a duke, an earl, a nobleman, a petty viceroy, a consul.
Shelton, Notes on Wotton's V. of Hickes's Thes. p. 60.

EAM.† n. s. [eam, Saxon; ohm, Germ. an uncle; amma, Icel. a grandmother, and Swedish, a nurse. This word is also written eame and eme.] Uncle: a word still used in the north of England, and in the wilder parts of Staffordshire, and in the sense also of a friend or gossip.

Whilst they were young, Cassibalane their eme
Was by the people chosen in their stead.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. x. 47.

Daughter, says she, fly, fly, behold thy dame
Foreshows the treason of thy wretched eame!
Fairfax.

To EAN.* v. n. [Sax. eanian; Lat. enitor.] To bring forth young. Used of sheep. This is the old orthography of the word; as, "an eaned lamb." Barret. This spelling the last editors of Shakspeare have revived. Dr. Johnson uses only yean. See to YEAN.

He stuck them up before the fulsome ewes;
Who, then conceiving, did in eaning time
Fall party-coloured lambs. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

EA'NLING.* n. s. [from ean.] A lamb just dropt. See YEANLING.

EAR.† n. s. [eare, Sax. oor, Dutch; auris, Lat.]

1. The whole organ of audition or hearing.

What fire is in my ears! Can this be true?
Stand I condemn'd? Shakspeare, Much Ado.

His ears are open unto their cry.
Psalm xxxiv. 15.

Valsalva discovered some passages into the region of the ear drum; of mighty use, among others, to make discharges of bruises.
Derham, Phys. Theol.

2. That part of the ear that stands prominent.

You have heard of the news abroad: I mean, the whisper'd ones; for they are yet but ear kissing arguments. Shakspeare.

His master shall bore his ear through with an awl. Exod.

3. Power of judging of harmony; the sense of hearing.

I have a reasonable good ear in musick.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

She has a delicate ear, and her voice is musick.
Richardson.

4. The head; or the person: in familiar language.

Their warlike force was sore weakened, the city beaten down about their ears, and most of them wounded. Knolles.

Better pass over an affront from one scoundrel, than draw the whole herd about a man's ears.
L'Estrange.

Be not alarmed, as if all religion was falling about our ears. Burnet's Theory.

5. The highest part of a man; the top.

A cavalier was up to the ears in love with a very fine lady. L'Estrange.

6. The privilege of being readily and kindly heard; favour.

Aristippus was earnest suitor to Dionysius for some grant, who would give no ear to his suit: Aristippus fell at his feet, and then Dionysius granted it. Bacon, Apophthegms.

They being told there was small hope of ease,
Were willing at the first to give an ear
To any thing that sounded liberty. B. Jonson.

If on a pillory, or near a throne,
He gain his prince's ear, or lose his own. Pope.

7. Disposition to like or dislike what is heard; judgement; opinion; taste.

He laid his sense closer, and in fewer words, according to the style and ear of those times.
Denham.

8. Any prominence from a larger body, raised for the sake of holding it.

There are some vessels, which, if you offer to lift by the belly or bottom, you cannot stir them; but are soon removed, if you take them by the ears.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

A quilted nightcap with one ear.
Congreve, Way of the World.

A pot without an ear. Swift.

9. The spike of corn; that part which contains the seeds. [Sax. æhhep. See To EAR.]

He delivereth to each of them a jewel, made in the figure of an ear of wheat, which they ever after wear. Bacon.

The leaves on trees not more,
Nor bearded ears in fields, nor sands upon the shore.
Dryden.

From several grains he had eighty stalks, with very large ears, full of large corn.
Mortimer's Husbandry.

10. To be by the EARS. To fall together by the EARS. To go together by the EARS. } To fight; to scuffle; to quarrel. [In Dutch oorlogen.] A familiar phrase.

Poor naked men belaboured one another with shagged sticks, or dully fell together by the ears at fisty-cuffs. More.

Fools go together by the ears, to have knaves run away with the stakes. L'Estrange.

All Asia now was by the ears,
And gods beat up for volunteers. Prior.

11. To set by the EARS. To make strife; to quarrel; in low language.

A mean rascal sets others together by the ears without fighting himself. L'Estrange.

She used to carry tales from one to another, till she had set the neighbourhood together by the ears. Arbuthnot.

It is usual to set these poor animals by the ears. Addison.

EAR-BORED.* adj. [ear and bore.] Having the ears perforated; among the Athenians a mark of nobility; among the Hebrews and Romans, a mark of servitude.

And she, like to some servile ear-bor'd slave,
Must play and sing. Bp. Hall, Sat. vi. 1.

EAR-DEAFENING.* adj. [ear and deafen.] Stunning the ear with noise.

The burst
And the ear-deafening voice o' the oracle;
Kin to Jove's thunder, so surpriz'd my sense,
That I was nothing. Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

EAR-LAP.* n. s. [Sax. eaꝛ-læppe.] The tip of the ear. Huloet.

EAR-LOCK.* n. s. [Sax. eaꝛ-locca.] A curl or twist of the hair, formerly called a love-lock; against which the indignation of Prynne was so great in 1628 as to occasion his writing a treatise, in which he deduces "the birth, source, and pedigree" of this lock "from the devil!" Those who, in the present times, seem to have revived this ornament, would not, even if they "had three ears," hear this denouncer of curls with any other emotion than that of laughter at his rage, and pity at his want of taste!

These love-locks, or car-locks, in which too many of our nation have of late begun to glory, whatever they may seem to be in the eyes and judgements of many humorous, singular, effeminate, ruffianly, vain-glorious or time-serving persons, who repute and deem them a very generous, necessary, beautiful, and comely ornament; are yet, notwithstanding, but so many badges of infamy, effeminacy, vanity, singularity, pride, &c.
Prynne, Unloveliness of Love-Locks, p. 3.

EAR-MARK.* n. s. [ear and mark.] A mark on the ear, by which shepherds know their sheep; figuratively, any distinction.

Sir J. Perrot [in 1584] ordered the Irish to mark all their cattle with pitch or ear-mark, on pain of forfeiture. Cox, Hist. of Ireland.

Telling us farther that we should know the time of the fulfilling this prophecy by the various fashions and mutability of apparel that should be in use, the very ear-mark of the age we live in.
Stephens, Add. to Spelm. Hist. Sacr. (1698,) p. 235.

To EAR-MARK.* v. a. [from the noun.] To mark cattle on the ear.

For feare lest we like rogues should be reputed,
And for care-marked beasts abroad be bruited.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale, ver. 188.

EAR-PICK.* n. s. [ear and pick.] An instrument by which the ears are cleansed; an old word in Huloet's dictionary; and noticed in modern cyclopædias, with an observation of Sir Hans Sloane that the use of this instrument seems prejudicial.

EAR-PIERCING.* adj. [ear and pierce.] Affecting the ear with shrill vibrations of sound.

The ear-piercing fife. Shakspeare, Othello.

EAR-RING.† n. s. [Sax. eaꝛ-phinʒ.] Jewels set in a ring and worn at the ears; ornament of a woman's ear.

With gold and silver they increase his store,
And gave the precious ear-rings which they wore.
Sandys.

A lady bestowed ear-rings upon a favourite lamprey. Arbuthnot.

EAR-SHOT. n. s. Reach of the ear; space within which words may be heard.

Gomez, stand you out of ear-shot. — I have something to say to your wife in private.
Dryden, Span. Friar.

EAR-WAX. n. s. [ear and wax.] The cerumen or exudation which smears the inside of the ear.

The ear being to stand open, because there was some danger that insects might creep in thereat; therefore hath nature loricated or plastered over the sides of the hole with ear-wax, to entangle insects. Ray on the Creation.

EAR-WIG.† n. s. [eape and pizza, a grub, Saxon, Dr. Johnson says. Wallis, however, derives it from the Lat. eruca; and both Mr. Pegge and Mr. Malone think his notion correct; our word periwig being, in like manner, corrupted from the French, peruque.]

1. A sheath-winged insect, imagined to creep into the ear.

Himself he on an ear-wig set;
Yet scarce he on his back could get,
So oft and high he did curvet. Drayton, Nymphid.

Ear-wigs and snails seldom infect timber.
Mortimer, Husb.

Doll never flies to cut her lace,
Or throw cold water in her face,
Because she heard a sudden drum,
Or found an ear-wig in a plum. Swift.

2. By way of reproach, a whisperer; a prying informer.

EAR-WITNESS. n. s. [ear and witness.] One who attests, or can attest any thing as heard by himself.

All present were made ear-witnesses, even of each particular branch of a common indictment.
Hooker.

The histories of mankind, written by eye or ear-witnesses, are built upon this principle.
Watts, Logick.

To EAR.† v. a. [Norm. Fr. eare, to plow; Sax. eꝛian; Goth. arian; Lat. aro. See EARTH.] To till; to plow.

He that ears my land spares my team, and gives me leave to enjoy the crop. Shakspeare, All's well.

Menecrates and Menas, famous pirates,
Make the sea serve them, which they ear and wound
With keels of every kind. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

A rough valley, which is neither eared nor sown.
Deuteronomy, xxi. 4.

The field of love, with plow of virtue ear'd.
Fairfax.

To EAR.† v. n. [from ear.] To shoot into ears.

Be they like corn on houses tops,
Which reaper's sickle never crops,
Nor binder in his bosom bears,
But withers still before it ears.
Sandys, Ps. (1636,) p. 211.

EA'RABLE.* adj. [from the verb.] Used to be tilled, arabilis. Barret.

EA'RAL.* adj. [from ear.] Receiving by the ear.

They are not true penitents that are merely earal, verbal, and worded men, that speak more than they really intend. Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 34.

EA'RED.† adj. [from ear.]

1. Having ears, or organs of hearing.
Sherwood.

2. Having ears, or ripe corn. Dr. Johnson applies, to this definition, a passage from Pope where the word means plowed. See the next definition.

3. Plowed.

Bush, or grass, or ered land.
Chaucer, H. of Fame, i. 485.

The fallow field, or land eared to be sown. Barret.

The covert of the thrice ear'd field
Saw stately Ceres to her passion yield.
Pope, Odyssey.

EA'RING.* n. s. [from ear.] A plowing of land. Huloet.

Yet there are five years, in the which there shall neither be earing nor harvest. Gen. xlv. 6.

EARL. n. s. [eoꝛl, Sax.; eoryl, Erse.] A title of nobility, anciently the highest of this nation, now the third.

Thanes and kinsmen,
Henceforth be earls, the first that ever Scotland
For such an honour nam'd. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

EARL-MARSHAL.† n. s. [earl and marshal.]

1. He that has chief care of military solemnities.

The marching troops through Athens take their way;
The great earl-marshal orders their array. Dryden.

2. One of the great officers of state in England; whose business is to take cognizance of all matters respecting honour and arms. The office is hereditary in the family of Howard, and is now filled by Charles, Duke of Norfolk.

EA'RLDOM.† n. s. [Sax. eoꝛlðome, which signified a province or county, as well as the office and jurisdiction of an earl.] The seigniory of an earl; the title and dignity of an earl.

The duke of Clarence having married the heir of the earl of Ulster, and by her having all the earldom of Ulster, carefully went about redressing evils. Spenser on Ireland.

When I am king, claim thou of me
The earldom of Hereford. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

EA'RLDORMAN.* n. s. An ealderman; so Burke has chosen to write this word. See EALDERMAN.

Enjoining all his earldormen and sheriffs immediately to apply themselves to learning, or to quit their offices.
Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. B. ii. ch. 4.

EARLES-PENNY.* n. s. [Lat. arrha, money given in part of payment.] An earnest-penny. Ray. Yet used in the north of England; and sometimes written and pronounced arles, as well as earles. See Ray and Grose. See also EARNEST.

EA'RLESS.† adj. [from ear.]

1. Not inclined to hear; as if deaf. This sense is not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

He who hath had the patience of Diogenes, to make orations unto statues, may more sensibly apprehend how all words fall to the ground, spent upon such a surd and earless generation of men, stupid unto all instruction, and rather requiring an exorcist than an orator for their conversion. Brown, Chr. Morals, ii. 6.

2. Without any ears.

Earless on high stood unabash'd Defoe,
And Tutchin flagrant from the scourge below. Pope.

EA'RLINESS. n. s. [from early.] Quickness of any action with respect to something else: as, earliness in the morning, the act of rising soon with respect to the sun; earliness of growth, the act of growing up soon in comparison with other things of the same kind.

The next morning we, having striven with the sun's earliness, were beyond the prospect of the highest turrets. Sidney.

The goodness of the crop is great gain, if the goodness answer the earliness of coming up. Bacon.

EA'RLY.† adj. [æp, Saxon, before, Dr. Johnson says; but he should have observed that there is another Sax. æp, which means in the morning; whence æplice, aplice; and thence directly our early. Goth. ar, day-break.] Soon with respect to something else: as, in the morning, with respect to the sun; in time, with respect to creation: in the season, in comparison with other products.

I am a tainted wether of the flock,
Meetest for death: the weakest kind of fruit
Drops earliest to the ground, and so let me. Shakspeare.

It is a curiosity to have several fruits upon one tree; and the more when some of them come early, and some come late. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

God made all the world, that he might be worshipped in some parts of the world; and therefore, in the first and most early times of the church, what care did he manifest to have such places erected to his honour? South.

The nymphs, forsaking ev'ry cave and spring,
Their early fruit and milk-white turtles bring. Pope.

Sickness is early old age: it teaches us diffidence in our earthly state, and inspires us with thoughts of a future. Pope.

Oh soul of honour!
Oh early hero! Smith, Phæd. and Hippol.

EA'RLY. adv. [from the adjective.] Soon; betimes.

Early before the morn with crimson ray
The windows of bright heav'n opened had. Spenser.

None in more languages can show
Those arts, which you so early know. Waller.

The princess makes her issue like herself, by instilling early into their minds religion, virtue, and honour. Addison.

To EARN. v. a. [eapnian, Sax.]

1. To gain as the reward or wages of labour, or any performance.

Those that have joined with their honour great perils, are less subject to envy; for men think that they earn their honours hardly. Bacon, Ess.

Winning cheap the high repute,
Which he through hazard huge must earn. Milton, P. L.

I to the evil turn
My obvious breast; arming to overcome
By suffering, and earn rest from labour won. Milton, P. L.

Men may discern
From what consummate virtue I have chose
This perfect man, by merit call'd my Son,
To earn salvation for the sons of men. Milton, P. R.

Since they all beg, it were better for the state to keep them, even although they earned nothing. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

The poems gained the plagiary wealth, while the author hardly earned his bread by repeating them. Pope on Homer.

After toiling twenty days,
To earn a stock of pence and praise,
Thy labour's grown the critick's prey. Swift.

2. To obtain, as a consequence of action.

I can't say whore;
It does abhor me, now I speak the word:
To do the act, that might th' addition earn,
Not the world's mass of vanity could make me. Shakspeare.

To EARN.* v. n. [Germ. gerinnen, to coagulate.] To curdle; to earn as cheese doth. Earning, cheese-rennet. Ray and Grose. The word is still in use in the north of England.

To EARN.* v. n. [Sax ȝýrnan, to desire.] To long for; to feel anxiety. So Spenser writes the word. But it is properly yearn. See To YEARN.

EA'RNEST. adj. [eopnepc, Sax.]

1. Ardent in any affection; warm; zealous; importunate.

He which prayeth in due sort, is thereby made the more attentive to hear; and he which heareth, the more earnest to pray for the time which we bestow, as well in the one as the other. Hooker.

2. Intent; fixed; eager.

On that prospect strange
Their earnest eyes they fix'd; imagining,
For one forbidden tree, a multitude
Now ris'n, to work them further woe or shame. Milton, P. L.

They are never more earnest to disturb us, than when they see us most earnest in this duty. Duppa.

3. Serious; important. Some say in earnest, not in jest.

They whom earnest lets do often hinder from being partakers of the whole, have yet this the length of divine service, opportunity for access unto some reasonable part thereof. Hooker.

EA'RNEST.† n. s.

1. Seriousness; a serious event, not a jest; reality, not a feigned appearance. [from the adjective.]

Take heed that this jest do not one day turn to earnest. Sidney.

I told you Klaius was the hapless wight,
Who earnest found what they accounted play. Sidney.

Therewith she laugh'd, and did her earnest end in jest. Spenser, F. Q.

That high All-seer, which I dallied with,
Hath turn'd my feigned prayer on my head,
And given in earnest what I begg'd in jest. Shakspeare.

Nor can I think that God, Creator wise!
Though threat'ning, will in earnest so destroy
Us, his prime creatures. Milton, P. L.

But the main business and earnest of the world is money, dominion, and power. L'Estrange.

We shall die in earnest, and it will not become us to live in jest. Gov. of the Tongue.

Sempronius, you have acted like yourself;
One would have thought you had been half in earnest. Addison.

2. [ernitz penge, Danish; arres, French, Dr. Johnson says. The latter word brings earnest near to the Latin arrha, the parent of our earles or arles penny; and earnest penny has long been an expression substituted for that. "Abundance or want are arrhabones mortis, the earnest pennies of dissolution of bodies." Whitlock, Mann. of the English, 1654. p. 172. See also the next definition.] Pledge; handsel; first fruits; token of something of the same kind in futurity.

The apostles term it the handsel or earnest of that which is to come. Hooker.

Which leader shall the doubtful vict'ry bless,
And give an earnest of the war's success. Waller.

It may be looked upon as a pledge and earnest of quiet and tranquillity. Bp. Smalridge.

The mercies received, great as they are, were earnests and pledges of greater. Atterbury.

3. The money which is given in token that a bargain is ratified.

You have conspir'd against our person,
Join'd with an enemy proclaim'd, and from his coffers
Receiv'd the golden earnest of our death. Shaksp.

Pay back the earnest penny receiv'd from Satan, and fling away his sin. Decay of Piety.

EA'RNESTLY.† adv. [Sax. eopnoꝛtlice.]

1. Warmly; affectionately; zealously; importunately; intensely.

When earnestly they seek
Such proof, conclude they then begun to fail. Milton, P. L.

Shame is a banishment of him from the good opinion of the world, which every man most earnestly desires. South.

Earnestly invoke the goodness and power of an all merciful and almighty God. Bp. Smalridge.

2. Eagerly; desirously.

Why so earnestly seek you to put up that letter? Shakspeare.

My soul, more earnestly releas'd,
Will outstrip hers; as bullets flown before,
A latter bullet may o'ertake, the powder being more. Donne.

EA'RNESTNESS. n. s. [from earnest.]

1. Eagerness; warmth; vehemence; impetuosity.

Often with a solemn earnestness,
More than, indeed, belong'd to such a trifle,
He begg'd of me to steal it. Shakspeare, Othello.

Audacity and confidence doth in business so great effects, as a man may doubt, that, besides the very daring and earnestness, and persisting and importunity, there should be some secret binding, and stooping of other men's spirits to such persons. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Marcus is overwarm; his fond complaints
Have so much earnestness and passion in them,
I hear him with a secret kind of horror,
And tremble at his vehemence of temper. Addison, Cato.

2. Solemnity; zeal; seriousness.

There never was a charge maintained with such a shew of gravity and earnestness which had a slighter foundation to support it. Atterbury.

3. Solicitude; care; intenseness.

With overstraining, and earnestness of finishing their pieces, they often did them more harm than good. Dryden.

EA'RNFUL.* adj. [from earn.] Full of anxiety. More properly yearnful. In Kent, earnful or ernful is still used for lamentable.

Whatever charms might move a gentle heart
I oft have tried, and shew'd the earnful smart
Which eats my breast. P. Fletcher, Pisc. Ecl. v. st. 8.

EA'RNING.* n. s. [Sax. eapnunȝ.] That which is gained as the reward or wages of any labour.

This is the great expence of the poor, that takes up almost all their earnings. Locke.

EARSH. n. s. [from ear, to plow.] A plowed field. Not now in use.

Fires oft are good on barren earshes made,
With crackling flames to burn the stubble blade. May's Virgil.

EARTH.† n. s. [Sax. eapð, eapð; Goth. airtha, airjan, to plow; Su. aeria, to till or plow. So Mr. H. Tooke says, that earth is the third person of the indicative of the Sax. epian, to plow; that which one eareth, that which is eared. Div. of Purl. ii. 417. Our word, however, may be traced to more ancient sources: Heb. aretz; Chald. artha; Syr. artho; Arab. erd.]

1. The element distinct from air, fire, or water; soil; terrene matter.

The smiling god is seen; while water, earth,
And air attest his bounty. Thomson.

2. The terraqueous globe; the world.

Nought so vile that on the earth doth live,
But to the earth some special good doth give.
Shakspeare.

This solid globe we live upon is called the earth; which word, taken in a more limited sense, signifies such parts of this globe as are capable, being exposed to the air, to give rooting and nourishment to plants, so that they may stand and grow in it. Locke.

3. Different modification of terrene matter. In this sense it has a plural.

The five genera of earths are, 1. Boles. 2. Clays. 3. Marls. 4. Ochres. 5. Tripelas.
Hill, Mat. Medica.

Earths are opake, insipid, and, when dried, friable, or consisting of parts easy to separate, and soluble in water; not disposed to burn, flame, or take fire. Woodward.

4. This world opposed to other scenes of existence.

What are these,
So wither'd, and so wild in their attire,
That look not like th' inhabitants o' th' earth,
And yet are on't? Shakspeare, K. Lear.

They can judge as fitly of his worth,
As I can of those mysteries which heav'n
Will not have earth to know. Shakspeare, Coriol.

5. The inhabitants of the earth.

The whole earth was of one language. Gen. xi. 1.

6. Country; distinct region.

In ten set battles have we driven back
These heathen Saxons, and regain'd our earth,
As earth recovers from the ebbing tide. Dryden.

7. The act of turning up the ground in tillage. [from ear, to plow.]

Such land as ye break up for barley to sow,
Two earths, at the least, ere ye sow it bestow.
Tusser.

8. The earth or hole of a fox or badger. See To EARTH. Sherwood.

To EARTH.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To hide in earth.

The devil eartheth himself in an homonymie, as a fox in the ground. Fuller, Holy War, p. 272.

The fox is earthed; but I shall send my two tarriers in after him. Dryden, Span. Friar.

The miser earths his treasure; and the thief,
Watching the mole, half-beggars him ere morn.
Young, Night Th. 9.

2. To bury; to inter.

This lord of weak remembrance,—
Who shall be of as little memory,
When he is earth'd. Shakspeare, Tempest.

3. To cover with earth.

Earth up with fresh mould the roots of those auriculas which the frost may have uncovered.
Evelyn's Kalendar.

To EARTH. v. n. To retire under ground.

Hence foxes earth'd, and wolves abhorr'd the day,
And hungry churles ensnar'd the nightly prey.
Tickell.

EA'RTHBAG.* n. s. [earth and bag.] In fortification, a sack filled with sand or earth, to keep off the shot of the enemy. Sacs à terre, Fr.

EA'RTHBANK.* n. s. [earth and bank.] In husbandry, a fence made of earth and turf; common, more particularly, about London, and in other parts of England.

EA'RTHBOARD. n. s. [earth and board.] The board of the plow that shakes off the earth.

The plow reckoned the most proper for stiff black clays, is one that is long, large, and broad, with a deep head and a square earthboard, so as to turn up a great furrow. Mortimer.

EA'RTHBORN.† adj. [earth and born.]

1. Born of the earth; terrigenous.

Concord, the only perfect pleasure,
That wretched earthborn men have ever known;
For many hearts it doth compound in one.
Sir J. Davies, Orch. (1599,) st. 109.

Creatures of other mould, earthborn perhaps,
Not spirits. Milton, P. L.

The wounds I make but sow new enemies;
Which from their blood, like earthborn brethren rise. Dryden.

The God for ever great, for ever king,
Who slew the earthborn race, and measures right
To heav'n's great habitants! Prior.

2. Meanly born.

Earthborn Lycon shall ascend the throne.
Smith.

EA'RTHBOUND. adj. [earth and bound.] Fastened by the pressure of the earth.

Who can impress the forest, bid the tree
Unfix his earthbound root? Shaksp. Macbeth.

EA'RTHBRED.* adj. [earth and bred.] Groveling; low; abject.

Peasants, I'll curb your headstrong impudence,
And make you tremble when the lion roars;
Yea, earthbred worms.
Brewer, Com. of Lingua, i. 6.

EA'RTHCREATED.* adj. [earth and create.] Formed of earth.

Great day! for which all other days were made;
For which earth rose from chaos; man from earth:
And an eternity, the date of gods,
Descended on poor earth-created man!
Young, Night Th. 9.

EA'RTHEN. adj. [from earth.] Made of earth; made of clay.

About his shelves
Green earthen pots, bladders, and musty seeds
Were thinly scatter'd. Shakspeare.

As a rustick was digging the ground by Padua, he found an urn, or earthen pot, in which there was another urn, and in this lesser a lamp clearly burning. Wilkins.

The most brittle water-carriage was used among the Egyptians, who, as Strabo saith, would sail sometimes in the boats made of earthen ware.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

EA'RTHENGENDERED.* adj. [earth and engender.] Bred of earth.

If that speak, it is
A thundering voice; and if it sigh, the hiss
Of earth-engendered winds.
Fanshaw, Transl. of Pastor Fido.

EA'RTHFED.* adj. [earth and fed.] Low; abject; delighted only with earthly pursuits.

Such earthfed minds,
That never tasted the true heaven of love.
B. Jonson, Fox.

EA'RTHFLAX. n. s. [earth and flax.] A kind of fibrous fossil.

Of English talc, the coarser sort is called plaister, or parget; the finer, earthflax, or salamander's hair. Woodward.

EA'RTHINESS.† n. s. [from earthy.]

1. The quality of containing earth; grossness.

They're not so eas'ly turn'd by sympathy,
The air there having less of earthiness.
More, Song of the Soul, ii. iii. 3. 55.

2. Intellectual coarseness. Not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

While a dull earthiness flags the rest of the creatures, these mount him like a nobler fire to the honour of the company and being a friend unto God. Feltham, Disc. upon Eccles. ii. 11.

A second hindrance was the grossness, and earthiness of their fancy, which was not able to conceive God to be any thing but a corporeous substance. Hammond, Works, iv. 641.

EA'RTHLINESS.* n. s. [from earthly.] Worldliness. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EA'RTHLING.† n. s. [Sax. eopðling.] An inhabitant of the earth; a mortal; a poor frail creature.

Earth's not alone; for earthlings creep upon it.
Davies, Wit's Pilgrim. sign. L. 2.

To earthlings, the footstool of God, that stage which he raised for a small time, seemeth magnificent. Drummond.

EA'RTHLY.† adj. [Sax. eopðlic.]

1. Not heavenly; vile; mean; sordid.

But I remember now
I'm in this earthly world, where to do harm
Is often laudable; to do good, sometime
Accounted dangerous folly. Shaksp. Macbeth.

When faith and love, which parted from thee never,
Had ripen'd thy just soul to dwell with God,
Meekly thou didst resign this earthly load
Of death, call'd life. Milton, Sonnet.

2. Belonging only to our present state; not spiritual.

Our common necessities, and the lack which we all have as well of ghostly as of earthly favours, is in each kind easily known. Hooker.

You have scarce time
To steal from spiritual labour a brief span,
To keep your earthly audit. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

It must be our solemn business and endeavour, at fit seasons, to turn the stream of our thoughts from earthly towards divine objects. Atterbury.

3. Corporeal; not mental.

Great grace that old man to him given had,
For God he often saw, from heaven hight,
All were his earthly eyen both blunt and bad.
Spenser, F. Q.

Sudden he view'd, in spite of all her art,
An earthly lover lurking at her heart. Pope.

4. Any thing in the world; a female hyperbole.

Oh! if to dance all night, and dress all day,
Charm'd the small-pox, or chas'd old age away,
Who would not scorn what housewife's cares produce?
Or who would learn one earthly thing of use?
Pope.

EA'RTHLY-MINDED.* adj. [earthly and mind.] Having a sensual or an abject mind.

The earthly-minded antichrists and hypocrites.
Bale on the Revel. P. ii. sign. k. ii.

Adam — had become so earthly-minded by listening to the voice of the deceived woman.
More, Conj. Cabb. p. 75.

EA'RTHLY-MINDEDNESS.* n. s. [from the adjective.] Grossness; sensuality.

Our other backslidings and variations from him, how wide and distant soever, yet may be thought to be but like those of the compass, more or less according to a less or greater interposition of earthly-mindedness.
Gregory, Notes on Passages in Script. p. 164.

The earthly-mindedness came from this animated earth, the body; and is to shrink up again into its own principle, and to perish. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 75.

EA'RTHNUT. n. s. [earth and nut.] A pignut; a root in shape and size like a nut.

Where there are earthnuts in several patches, though the roots lie deep in the ground, and the stalks be dead, the swine will by their scent root only where they grow. Ray.

EA'RTHQUAKE. n. s. [earth and quake.] Tremor or convulsion of the earth.

This subterranean heat or fire being in any part of the earth stopt, by some accidental glut or obstruction in the passages through which it used to ascend, and being preternaturally assembled in greater quantity into one place, causes a great rarefaction and intumescence of the water of the abyss, putting it into very great commotions; and making the like effort upon the earth, expanded upon the face of the abyss, occasions that agitation and concussion which we call an earthquake. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

These tumults were like an earthquake, shaking the very foundations of all, than which nothing in the world hath more of horrour. King Charles.

Was it his youth, his valour, or success,
These might perhaps be found in other men:
'Twas that respect, that awful homage paid me;
That fearful love which trembled in his eyes,
And with a silent earthquake shook his soul.
Dryden.

The country, by reason of its vast caverns and subterraneous fires, has been miserably torn by earthquakes, so that the whole face of it is quite changed. Addison on Italy.

EA'RTHSHAKING. adj. [earth and shake.] Having power to shake the earth, or to raise earthquakes.

By the earthshaking Neptune's mace,
And Tethy's grave majestick pace. Milton, Comus.

Now scarce withdrawn the fierce earthshaking pow'r,
Jove's daughter Pallas watch'd the fav'ring hour;
Back to their caves she bade the winds to fly,
And hush'd the blust'ring brethren of the sky.
Pope.

EA'RTHWORM. n. s. [earth and worm.]

1. A worm bred under ground.

Worms are found in snow commonly, like earthworms, and therefore it is not unlike that it may likewise put forth plants. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Upon a shower, after a drought, earthworms and landsnails innumerable come out of their lurking places. Ray.

2. A mean sordid wretch.

Thy vain contempt, dull earthworm, cease;
I won't for refuge fly. Norris.

EA'RTHY.† adj. [from earth.]

1. Consisting of earth.

Long may'st thou live in Richard's seat to sit,
And soon lie Richard in an earthy pit! Shaks.

Lamps are inflamed by the admission of new air, when the sepulchres are opened, as we see in fat earthy vapours of divers sorts. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

All water, especially that of rain, is stored with matter, light in comparison of the common earthy matter. Woodward.

2. Composed or partaking of earth; terrene.

The first man is of the earth, earthy; the second man is the Lord from heaven. As is the earthy, such are they also that are earthy; and as is the heavenly, such are they also that are heavenly. And as we have borne the image of the earthy, we shall also bear the image of the heavenly. 1 Cor. xv. 47—49.

To survey his dead and earthy image,
What were it but to make my sorrow greater?
Shakspeare.

Him lord pronounc'd, he, O indignity!
Subjected to his service angel-wings,
And flaming ministers to watch and tend
Their earthy charge. Milton, P. L.

3. Inhabiting the earth; terrestrial.

Those earthy spirits black and envious are;
I'll call up other gods of form more fair. Dryden.

4. Relating to earth.

Mine is the shipwreck, in a watry sign;
And in an earthy, the dark dungeon thine.
Dryden.

5. Not mental; gross; not refined.

Teach me, dear creature, how to think and speak;
Lay open to my earthy gross conceit,
Smother'd in errours, feeble, shallow, weak,
The folded meaning of your words' deceit. Shaks.

Nor is my flame
So earthy, as to need the dull material force
Of eyes, or lips, or cheeks. Denham, Sophy.

EASE.† n. s. [aise, French; otium, Lat. The Goth. azeits is easy, not difficult.]

1. Quiet; rest; undisturbed tranquillity; not solicitude.

We should not find her half so brave and bold
To lead it to the wars and to the seas;
To make it suffer watchings, hunger, cold,
When it might feed with plenty, rest with ease.
Davies.

By this we plainly view the two imposthumes
That choke a kingdom's welfare; ease and wantonness. Beaum. and Fl. Four Plays in One.

The priest on skins of off'rings takes his ease,
And nightly visions in his slumber sees.
Dryden, Æn.

2. Freedom from pain; a neutral state between pain and pleasure.

That which we call ease is only an indolency or a freedom from pain. L'Estrange.

Is it a small crime to wound himself by anguish of heart, to deprive himself of all the pleasures, or eases, or enjoyments of life? Temple.

3. Rest after labour; intermission of labour.

Give yourselves ease from the fatigue of waiting. Swift.

4. Facility; not difficulty.

The willing metal will obey thy hand,
Following with ease, if favour'd by thy fate,
Thou art foredoom'd to view the Stygian state;
If not, no labour can the tree constrain,
And strength of stubborn arms and steel are vain.
Dryden.

5. Unconstraint; freedom from harshness, formality, forced behaviour, or conceits.

True ease in writing comes from art, not chance;
As those move easiest who have learn'd to dance.
Pope.

6. At EASE. In a state of undisturbed leisure; without pain; without anxiety.

Lucan, content with praise, may lie at ease
In costly grots and marble palaces. Dryden, Juv.

Men of parts and penetration were not idle to dispute at their ease, but were to act according to the result of their debates. Locke.

No body is under an obligation to know every thing: knowledge and science in general is the business only of those who are at ease and leisure. Locke.

7. Chapel of EASE.* See CHAPEL.

To EASE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To free from pain.

Help and ease children the best you can; but by no means bemoan them. Locke.

2. To assuage; to mitigate; to alleviate.

Thy father made our yoke grievous, now therefore ease thou somewhat the grievous servitude. 2 Chron.

Complain, queen Margaret, and tell thy grief;
It shall be eas'd, if France can yield relief. Shaks.

As if with sports my sufferings I could ease.
Dryden.

Though he speaks of such medicines as procure sleep, and ease pain, he doth not determine their doses. Arbuthnot.

Will he for sacrifice our sorrows ease?
And can our tears reverse his firm decrees? Prior.

3. To relieve from labour, or any thing that offends: with of before the thing.

If ere night the gath'ring clouds we fear,
A song will help the beating storm to bear;
And that thou may'st not be too late abroad,
Sing, and I'll ease thy shoulders of thy load.
Dryden.

I will ease me of mine adversaries. Isaiah, i. 24.

No body feels pain that he wishes not to be eased of, with a desire equal to that pain, and inseparable from it. Locke.

EA'SEFUL.† adj. [ease and full.] Quiet; peaceable; fit for rest.

I spy a black, suspicious threat'ning cloud,
That will encounter with our glorious sun,
Ere he attain his easeful western bed.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Since it hath been our easeful happiness to enjoy both the aids and industry of so vigilant a senate, we profess to have been the more indulgent to our pleasures, not as being careless of our office, but rather secure of the necessity. B. Jonson, Sejanus.

EA'SEFULLY.* adv. [from easeful.] In a quiet manner. Sherwood.

EA'SEL.* n. s. The frame on which painters strain their canvass.

EA'SEL-PIECE.* n. s. A painting which is painted on the easel, in contradistinction to those which are painted on the wall or ceiling.

EA'SELESS.* adj. [ease and less.] Wanting ease; deprived of rest.

Send me some tokens, that my hope may live,
Or that my easeless thoughts may sleep and rest.
Donne, Poems, p. 264.

That bottomless gulf of easeless and everlasting flames. Junius, Sin Stigm. p. 271.

EA'SEMENT.† n. s. [from ease, Fr. aisement, Dict. Trev.]

1. The primary usage of this word seems to have been in the sense of evacuation. See Barret's and Sherwood's dictionaries.

See that I lack not by my beddis side a chair of easement, with a vessel under.
Vulg. Hormani, (1519,) p. 168. b.

During the time that he was in the cave, Saul, not knowing thereof, entered into the cave, to do his natural easement.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 156. b.

Surely he covereth his feet, [in the margin, doth his easement,] in his summer-chamber.
Judges, iii. 24.

2. Assistance; support; relief from expences.

Infinite other helps and easements.
Bacon on the Plant. in Ireland.

He has the advantage of a free lodging, and some other easements. Swift.

3. Relief from any evil.

To be dead, is easement; but to be still dying, is pain. More, Conj. Cabb. p. 227.

To the removal or easement of his affliction.
Barrow, Serm. i. 442.

4. [In law.] A service that one neighbour has of another by charter or prescription, without profit; as a way through his ground, a sink, or such like. Cowel.

EA'SILY. adv. [from easy.]

1. Without difficulty.

Sounds move swiftly, and at great distance; but they require a medium well disposed, and their transmission is easily stopped. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

She ask'd the reason of his woe;
She ask'd, but with an air and mien,
That made it easily foreseen
She fear'd too much to know. Prior.

2. Without pain; without disturbance; in tranquillity.

It is not to bid defiance to all mankind to condemn their universal opinions and designs, if, instead of passing your life as well and easily, you resolve to pass it as ill and as miserable as you can. Temple.

3. Readily; without reluctance.

I can easily resign to others the praise of your illustrious family. Dryden, Ded. State of Innocence.

Not soon provok'd, she easily forgives;
And much she suffers, as she much believes. Prior.

EA'SINESS. n. s. [from easy.]

1. Freedom from difficulty.

Believe me, friends, loud tumults are not laid
With half the easiness that they are rais'd. B. Jonson.

Easiness and difficulty are relative terms, and relate to some power; and a thing may be difficult to a weak man, which yet may be easy to the same person, when assisted with a greater strength. Tillotson.

The seeming easiness of Pindarick verse has made it spread; but it has not been considered. Dryden.

You left a conquest more than half atchiev'd,
And for whose easiness I almost griev'd. Dryden.

This plea, under a colour of friendship to religion, invites men to it by the easiness of the terms it offers. Rogers.

2. Flexibility; compliance; readiness; not opposition; not reluctance.

His yielding unto them in one thing might happily put them in hope, that time would breed the like easiness of condescending further unto them. Hooker.

Since the custom of easiness to alter and change laws is so evil, no doubt but to bear a tolerable sore is better than to venture on a dangerous remedy. Hooker.

Give to him, and he shall but laugh at your easiness; save his life, but, when you have done, look to your own. South.

The safest way to secure honesty, is to lay the foundations of it early in liberality, and an easiness to part with to others whatever they have or like themselves. Locke.

3. Freedom from constraint; not effort; not formality.

Abstruse and mystick thoughts you must express
With painful care, but seeming easiness;
For truth shines brightest through the plainest dress. Roscommon.

4. Rest; tranquillity; ease; freedom from pain.

I think the reason I have assigned hath a great interest in that rest and easiness we enjoy when asleep. Ray.

EA'SINGS.* n. s. pl. [perhaps from the Sax. eɑeɑe. See EAVES.]

1. The eaves of houses. A northern word, Grose, Wilbraham, Craven Dialect, and Brockett.

2. Dung: as, cow's easings. Craven Dialect.

EAST.† n. s. [eoɾ, Sax. heos, Erse; Icel. austur; Goth. eyster; Gr. ἑώς, ἠώς, the morning, the orient.]

1. The quarter where the sun rises: opposite to the West.

They counting forwards towards the east, did allow 180 degrees to the Portugals eastward. Abbot.

2. The regions in the eastern parts of the world.

I would not be the villain that thou thinkest,
For the whole space that's in the tyrant's grasp,
And the rich East to boot. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The gorgeous East, with richest hand,
Showers on her kings barbarick pearl and gold. Milton, P. L.

EAST.* adj. [Mr. H. Tooke says that "the past participle of the Sax. ẏɒɒian or ɪeɒɒian, to be angry, is ẏɒɒeð, ẏɒɒð, ẏɒɒt; dropping the ɒ (which many cannot articulate) it becomes ẏɒt; and so it is much used in the Anglo-Saxon. They who cannot pronounce r, usually supply its place by a: hence, I suppose, east, which means angry, enraged." Div. of Purl. ii. 398. This, of course, he applies to the wind. But it is too far-fetched to be admitted; even by the defaulters in r. Sax. eaɾt; as, eaɾten ɒind, the east wind; eaɾt ɾæ, east sea. So the Goth. eystra salt for the Baltick. See the etymology of east under the substantive.] Coming from, or being towards, the rising sun.

The Lord brought an east wind upon the land. Exod. x. 13.

The length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border. Ezek. xlv. 7.

On the east side of the garden place,
Where entrance up from Eden easiest climbs,

EA'STER.† n. s. [eaɾteɾe, Saxon; ooster, Dutch. "Easter is so called from the Sax. oɾteɾ, to rise, being the day of Christ's resurrection; or, as others think, from one of the Saxon goddesses called Eastre, whom they always worshipped at this season." Wheatly on the Common Prayer. That the goddess Eostre gave rise to this word, was the opinion of Bede in old time, and of Burke in our own. Wachter derives it from the Goth. urreist, he hath risen. The month of April was called by the Saxons oɾteɾmonað.] The day on which the Christian church commemorates our Saviour's resurrection.

Didst thou not fall out with a taylor for wearing his new doublet before Easter? Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Victor's unbrother-like heat towards the Eastern churches, in the controversy about Easter, fomented that difference into a schism. Decay of Piety.

EA'STERLING.† n. s. [from East.]

1. A native of some country eastward to another.

He oft in battle vanquished
Those spoilful, rich, and swarming Easterlings. Spenser.

It is most likely the Easterlings did preserve a record of many words and actions of the Holy Jesus, which are not transmitted to us. Bp. Taylor, Life of Christ, i. § 9.

2. A species of waterfowl.

EA'STERLING.* adj. See STERLING.

EA'STERLY. adj. [from East.]

1. Coming from the parts towards the East.

When the easterly winds or breezes are kept off by some high mountains from the vallies, whereby the air, wanting motion, doth become exceeding unhealthful. Ralegh.

2. Lying towards the east.

These give us a view of the most easterly, southerly, and westerly parts of England. Graunt's Bills of Mortality.

3. Looking towards the east.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell, drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbuthnot.

EA'STERN.† adj. [Sax. eaɾteɾn.]

Like eastern kings, a lazy state they keep. Pope.

Eastern tyrants from the light of heaven
Seclude their bosom-slaves. Thomson.

2. Lying or being towards the east.

The eastern end of the isle rises up in precipices. Addison.

3. Going towards the east.

A ship at sea has no certain method in either her eastern or western voyages, or even in her less distant sailing from the coasts, to know her longitude, or how much she is gone eastward or westward, as can easily be known in any clear day or night how much she is gone northward or southward. Addison.

4. Looking towards the east.

The angel caught
Our ling'ring parents, and to th' eastern gate
Led them direct. Milton, P. L.

EASTLA'NDISH.* adj. [east and land.] Lying or being towards the east.

They had among them three languages, but I should rather think that they only differed as the high Dutch, low Dutch, and eastlandish Dutch. Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

EA'STWARD. adv. [east and toward.] Towards the east.

The moon, which performs its motion swifter than the sun, gets eastward out of his rays, and appears when the sun is set. Brown, Vulg. Err.

What shall we do, or where direct our flight?
Eastward, as far as I could cast my sight,
From op'ning heav'ns, I saw descending light. Dryd.

EA'SY.† adj. [from ease. Old Fr. easez, moderate, easy. Kelham.]

1. Not difficult.

The service of God, in the solemn assembly of saints, is a work, though easy, yet withal very weighty, and of great respect. Hooker.

How much it is in every one's power to make resolutions to himself, such as he may keep, is easy for every one to try. Locke.

2. Not causing difficulty.

The whole island was probably cut into several easy ascents, and planted with variety of palaces. Addison on Italy.

3. Quiet; at rest; not harassed; unmolested; secure; not anxious.

Those that are easy in their conditions, or their minds, refuse often to enter upon publick charges and employment. Temple.

Keep their thoughts easy and free, the only temper wherein the mind is capable of receiving new informations. Locke.

A marriage of love is pleasant, a marriage of interest easy, and a marriage where both meet happy. Spectator.

When men are easy in their circumstances, they are naturally enemies to innovations. Addison, Freeholder.

A man should direct all his studies and endeavours at making himself easy now, and happy hereafter. Addison, Spect.

We plainly feel whether at this instant we are easy or uneasy, happy or miserable. Smalridge.

4. Free from pain.

Bold adventure to discover wide
That dismal world, if any clime perhaps
Might yield them easier habitation. Milton, P. L.
Pleasure has been the bus'ness of my life,
And every change of fortune easy to me,
Because I still was easy to myself. Dryden.

5. Complying; unresisting; credulous.
You have practised upon the easy yielding spirit of this woman. Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.
You will say,
I was a good, cold, easy spirited man,
Nay, laugh at my simplicity.
Ford, Love's Sacrifices.
Baited with reasons not unplausible,
Win me into the easy hearted man,
And hug him into snares. Milton, Comus.
With such deceits he gain'd their easy hearts,
Too prone to credit his perfidious arts.
Dryden, Æn.
The kindest father I have ever found him,
Easy and good, and bounteous to my wishes.
Addison, Cato.

6. Ready; not unwilling.
Pity and he are one;
So merciful a king did never live,
Loth to revenge, and easy to forgive. Dryden.

7. Free from want of more.
They should be allowed each of them such a rent as would make them easy. Swift.

8. Not constrained; not formal.
Those move easiest that have learn'd to dance.
Pope.
Praise the easy vigour of a line,
Where Denham's strength, and Waller's sweetness join. Pope.

To EAT.† v. a. preterite ate, or eat; part. eat, or eaten. [etan, Saxon; etan, or itan, Gothick; eich, Erse; eta, Icel. to eat; ett, food.]

1. To devour with the mouth.
Locusts shall eat the residue of that which is escaped from the hail, and shall eat every tree which groweth. Ex. x. 5.
Other states cannot be accused for not staying for the first blow, or for not accepting Polyphemus's courtesy, to be the last that shall be eaten up. Bacon, War with Spain.
Even wormwood, eat with bread, will not bite, because it is mixed with a great quantity of spittle.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. To consume; to corrode.
Thou best of gold art worst of gold;
Other less fine in carrat is more precious,
Preserving life in med'cine potable:
But thou, most fine, most honour'd, most renown'd,
Hast eat thy bearer up. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
And ever, against eating cares,
Lap me in soft Lydian airs. Milton, L'All.
They entail a secret curse upon their estates, which does either insensibly waste and consume it, or eat out the heart and comfort of it. Tillotson.
There arises a necessity of keeping the surface even, either by pressure or eating medicines, that the eminence of the flesh may not resist the fibres of the skin in their tendency to cover the wound.
Sharp's Surgery.

3. To swallow back; to retract. This is only used of a man's word.
They cannot hold, but burst out those words, which afterwards they are forced to eat.
Hakewill on Providence.
Credit were not to be lost
B' a brave knight errant of the post,
That eats, perfidiously, his word,
And swears his ears through a two inch board.
Hudibras.

To EAT. v. n.

1. To go to meals; to take meals; to feed.
He did eat continually at the king's table.
2 Sam. ix. 13.

EA'VER, or EE'VER.* n. s. [Mr. Wilbraham proposes the Sax. peapö, versus, in the direction of, as the etymology.] A corner or quarter of the heavens: as, the wind is in the rainy eaver. Wilbraham, Cheshire Gloss. So, in the Cumberland expression, the wind is in a cold eever. Grose.

EAVES.† n. s. [epepe, Saxon, Dr. Johnson says. It may be, however, from the old Fr. aive, or eve, which were among the many modes of spelling, in ancient times, eau, water. V. Roquefort, Gloss. Lang. Rom. Goth. aha, Icel. aa, a river. The eaves is that part of the roof, from which rain-water drops.] The edges of the roof which overhang the house.
Every night he comes
With musick of all sorts, and songs compos'd
To her unworthiness: it nothing steads us
To chide him from our eaves; for he persists,
As if his life lay on't. Shakspeare, All's Well.
His tears run down his beard, like winter drops
From eaves of reeds. Shakspeare, Tempest.
If in the beginning of winter the drops of the eaves of houses come more slowly down than they use, it portendeth a hard and frosty winter.
Bacon.
Usher'd with a shower still,
When the gust hath blown his fill,
Ending on the rustling leaves,
With minute drops from off the eaves.
Milton, Il Pens.
The icicles hang down from the eaves of houses.
Woodward.

To EA'VESDROP.† v. n. [eaves and drop.] To catch what comes from the eaves; in common phrase, to listen under windows.
Was it such a dissolute speech, telling of some politicians who were wont to eavesdrop in disguises, to say they were often liable to a night-walking cudgeller, or the emptying of an urinal?
Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

EA'VESDROPPER.† n. s. [eaves and drop.] A listener under windows; an insidious listener.
Under our tents I'll play the eavesdropper,
To hear if any mean to shrink from me. Shaks.
You are to know then, that miss, with all her flirting and ogling, had also naturally a strong curiosity in her, and was the greatest eavesdropper breathing. Tatler, No. 9.

EBB.† n. s. [ebba, ebbob, Saxon; ebbe, Dutch.]

1. The reflux of the tide towards the sea: opposed to flow.
To gratulate
So great a service done at my desire,
Ye shall have many floods, fuller and higher
Than you have wished for; no ebb shall dare
To let the day see where your dwellings are.
Beaum. and Fl. Maid's Tragedy.
The clear sun on his wide wat'ry glass
Gaz'd hot, and of the fresh wave largely drew,
As after thirst; which made their flowing shrink
From standing lake to dripping ebb, that stole
With soft foot tow'rds the deep. Milton, P. L.
Such an unstable wave of the sea, in St. James's style, tossed perpetually betwixt ebbs and floats.
Hammond, Works, iv. 499.
Hither the seas at stated times resort,
And shove the loaden vessels into port;
Then with a gentle ebb retire again,
And render back their cargo to the main.
Addison on Italy.

2. Decline; decay; waste.
You have finished all the war, and brought all things to that low ebb which you speak of.
Spenser on Ireland.
This tide of man's life, after it once turneth and declineth, ever runneth with a perpetual ebb and falling stream, but never floweth again.
Ralegh, Hist.
Thus all the treasure of our flowing years,
Our ebb of life for ever takes away. Roscommon.
The greatest age for poetry was that of Augustus Cæsar, yet painting was then at its lowest ebb, and perhaps sculpture was also declining. Dryden.
Near my apartment let him pris'ner be,
That I his hourly ebbs of life may see. Dryden.
What is it he aspires to?
Is it not this? To shed the slow remains,
His last poor ebb of blood in your defence.
Addison, Cato.

To EBB.† v. n. [ebban, Sax.]

1. To flow back towards the sea: opposed to flow.

Though my tide of blood
Hath proudly flow'd in vanity till now,
Now it doth turn and ebb back to the sea. Shaks.
From thence the tide of fortune left their shore,
And ebb'd much faster than it flow'd before.
Dryden, Æn.

2. To decline; to decay; to waste.

Well, I am standing water:
—— I'll teach you how to flow.
—— Do so: to ebb
Hereditary sloth instructs me. Shaks. Tempest.
But oh he ebbs! the smiling waves decay!
For ever, lovely stream, for ever stay! Halifax.

E'BBING.* n. s. [from ebb.] The reflux of the tide towards the sea; used figuratively.

The ebbing of the sea. Huloet.
We must have perpetual ebbings and flowings of mirth and melancholy.
Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 42.
In religious forms, what ebbings and flowings have been and daily are, as to the vulgar opinion, report, and practice of things.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 154.

E'BON.† } n. s. [Gr. ἔβενος; Lat. ebenus;
E'BONY. } Fr. ébène. Our own word has been written eben, but is now constantly ebon.] A hard, heavy, black, valuable wood, which admits a fine gloss.

If the wood be very hard, as ebony, or lignum vitæ, they are to turn: they use not the same tools they do for soft woods. Moxon, Mech. Exercises.

E'BON.* adj. [from the substantive.]

1. Dark; black.

Rouse up revenge from ebon den.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.
There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks,
As ragged as thy locks,
In dark Cimmerian desert ever dwell.
Milton, L'Allegro.
Oft by the winds extinct the signal lies,
Ere night has half roll'd round her ebon throne.
Gay.

2. Made of ebony.

From the golden quiver at her side
Rattles the ebon arrow's feather'd pride. Prior.

EBRI'ETY.† n. s. [ebrieté, old Fr.; ebrietas, Latin.] Drunkenness; intoxication by strong liquors.

Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 505.
When Noah planted the vine, Satan attended, and sacrificed a sheep, a lion, an ape, and a sow. These animals were to symbolise the gradations of ebriety.
Warton, Diss. on Gest. Rom. Hist. E. P. iii. lxvi.

EBRI'LLADE. n. s. [French.] A check of the bridle which a horseman gives a horse, by a jerk of one rein, when he refuses to turn.

EBRIO'SITY. n. s. [ebriositas, Lat.] Habitual drunkenness.

That religion which excuseth Noah in surprisal, will neither acquit ebriosity nor ebriety in their intended perversion. Brown.

EBU'LLIENCY.* n. s. [Lat. ebullio.] A boiling over.

My meaning is only this; to caution against that vulgar and popular errour of mistaking the natural and enthusiastick fervour of men's spirits, and the ebulliency of their fancy.
Cudworth, Serm. p. 93.

EBU'LLIENT.* adj. [Lat. ebulliens.] Boiling over.

They scarce can swallow their ebullient spleen.
Young, Night Th. 8.

EBULLI'TION.† n. s. [ebullio, Lat.]

1. The act of boiling up with heat.

Conscience has an eye over a man's most inward and retired behaviour; it spies out the first infant essays and inclinations of virtues, and encourages them, and discerns the first movings and ebullitions of concupiscence, and severely checks and condemns them. South, Serm. viii. S. 1.

2. Any intestine motion.

The dissolution of gold and silver disagree; so that in their mixture there is great ebullition, darkness, and, in the end, a precipitation of a black powder. Bacon.
Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication; as also a crass and fumid exhalation, caused from the combat of the sulphur of iron with the acid and nitrous spirits of aqua fortis. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. That struggling or effervescence which arises from the mingling together any alkalizate and acid liquor; any intestine violent motion of the parts of a fluid, occasioned by the struggling of particles of different properties. Quincy.

When aqua fortis, or spirit of vitriol, poured upon filings of iron, dissolves the filings with a great heat and ebullition, is not the heat and ebullition effected by a violent motion of the parts; and does not their motion argue, that the acid parts of the liquor rush towards the parts of the metal with violence, and run forcibly into its pores, till they get between its utmost particles and the main mass of the metal? Newton.
A violent cold, as well as heat, may be produced by this ebullition; for if sal ammoniack, or any pure volatile alkali, dissolved in water, be mixed with an acid, an ebullition, with a greater degree of cold, will ensue. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ECCE'NTRICAL. } adj. [eccentricus, Lat.]
ECCE'NTRICK. }

1. Deviating from the centre.
2. Not having the same centre with another circle: such circles were supposed by the Ptolemaick philosophy.

Thither his course he bends
Through the calm firmament; but up or down,
By centrick or eccentrick, hard to tell.
Milton, P. L.
They build, unbuild, contrive,
To save appearances: they gird the sphere
With centrick, and eccentrick, scribbl'd o'er,
Cycle, and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton, P. L.
Whence is it that planets move all one and the same way in orbs concentrick, while comets move all manner of ways in orbs very eccentrick?
Newton, Opticks.

3. Not terminating in the same point; not directed by the same principle.

Whatsoever affairs pass such a man's hands, he crooketh them to his own ends; which must needs be often eccentrick to the ends of his master.
Bacon, Essays.

4. Irregular; anomalous; deviating from stated and constant methods.

This motion, like others of the times, seems eccentrick and irregular. K. Charles.
A character of an eccentrick virtue, is the more exact image of human life, because it is not wholly exempted from its frailties. Dryden.
Then from whate'er we can to sense produce,
Common and plain, or wond'rous and abstruse,
From nature's constant or eccentrick laws,
The thoughtful soul this gen'ral inference draws,
That an effect must presuppose a cause. Prior.

ECCENTRI'CITY.† n. s. [from eccentrick.]

1. Deviation from a centre.
2. The state of having a different centre from another circle.

In regard of eccentricity, and the epicycle wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is unequal.
Brown.
By reason of the sun's eccentricity to the earth, and obliquity to the equator, he appears to us to move unequally. Holder.

3. Excursion from the proper orb.

The duke at his return from his eccentricity, for so I account favourites abroad, met no good news.
Wotton.

4. Eccentricity of the earth is the distance between the focus and the centre of the earth's elliptick orbit. Harris.

5. Deviation from established methods; particularity; irregularity. Dr. Johnson has omitted the notice of this meaning; but he supplies an example of it.

Akenside was a young man, warm with every notion that by nature or accident had been connected with the sound of liberty; and, by an eccentricity which such dispositions do not easily avoid, a lover of contradiction, and no friend to any thing established. Johnson, Life of Akenside.

ECCE'NTRICK.* n. s. [Lat. eccentricus.]

1. A circle not having the same centre with another circle. See the second sense of ECCENTRICAL.

Astronomers, to solve the phenomena, framed to their conceit eccentricks, and epicycles, and a wonderful engine of orbs. Bacon.

2. That which deviates from usual or common occurrence.

Let the lot decide the main of the controversy, and reserving somewhat for the publick, somewhat for the stranger, somewhat for common calamities, somewhat as it were for the universal motion of the whole body, somewhat for eccentricks.
Hammond, Works, iv. p. 551.

ECCHY'MOSIS. n. s. [ἐκχυμωσις.] Livid spots or blotches in the skin, made by extravasated blood. Quincy.

Ecchymosis may be defined an extravasation of the blood in or under the skin, the skin remaining whole. Wiseman.
Laxations are accompanied with tumour and ecchymosis. Wiseman.

ECCLE'SIAST.* n. s. [Gr. ἐκκλησιαστὴς.] Chaucer uses this word both for a preacher, and either for the book of Ecclesiastes or of Ecclesiasticus, in his Canterbury Tales. But it is now wholly obsolete.

ECCLESIA'STES.* n. s. [Greek.] One of the canonical books of Holy Scripture.

The book is in the Hebrew denominated Coheleth, a word which signifies one who speaks in public; and which, indeed, is properly translated by the Greek word Ecclesiastes, or, the Preacher. — The Hebrew word has, however, a feminine termination in respect to wisdom, personified, as it were, in Solomon. Dr. Gray, Key to the Old Test.

ECCLESIA'STICAL. } adj. [ecclesiasti-
ECCLESIA'STICK. } cus, Lat.] Relating to the church; not civil.

Is discipline an ecclesiastical matter or civil? If an ecclesiastical, it must belong to the duty of the minister. Hooker.
Clergymen, otherwise little fond of obscure terms, yet in their sermons are liberal of those which they find in ecclesiastical writers. Swift.
A church of Englandman has a true veneration for the scheme established among us of ecclesiastick government. Swift.

ECCLESIA'STICK. n. s. [from the adjective.] A person dedicated to the ministries of religion.

The ambition of the ecclesiasticks destroyed the purity of the church. Burnet, Theory.

ECCLESIA'STICUS.* n. s. [Latin.] One of the books which form the Apocrypha.

The book of Ecclesiasticus, according to some writers, is so called, because the ancients divided the books of the Old Testament volume into four sorts; the first contained the Pentateuch; the second, the Prophets; the third, the Hagiographa; the fourth, the ecclesiastical or apocryphal books, as not being in the Jewish canon. Among the ecclesiastical books, this of Jesus the son of Sirach being most remarkable and useful, it was κατ' ἐξοχὴν called Ecclesiasticus, whilst the rest of the same class have lost their name. According to others, this title was given by the Latins to it, to denote its use in the church, being read for the sake of edification in the publick religious assemblies. Or, lastly, because, like Solomon's Ecclesiastes, which it resembles in name as well as matter, it teaches and instructs such as attend to it by the admirable precepts which it delivers.

Arnald, Comment. on Eccl. Pref.

ECCOPRO'TICKS. n. s. pl. [ἔκ and κόπρος.] Such medicines as gently purge the belly, so as to bring away no more than the natural excrements lodged in the intestines.

The body ought to be maintained in its daily excretions by such means as are eccoprotick.

Harvey on the Plague.

E'CHINATE. } adj. [from echinus, Lat.]
E'CHINATED. } Bristled like an hedgehog; set with prickles.

An echinated pyrites in shape approaches the echinated crystalline balls. Woodward on Fossils.

E'CHINUS. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A hedgehog.
2. A shell fish set with prickles.
3. [With botanists.] The prickly head, cover of the seed, or top of any plant.
4. [In architecture.] A member or ornament, taking its name from the roughness of the carving, resembling the prickly rind of a chestnut, and not unlike the thorny coat of a hedgehog.

This ornament is used by modern architects in cornices of the Ionick, Corinthian, and Composite orders; and generally set next to the abacus, being carved with anchors, darts, and ovals or eggs. Harris.

E'CHO. n. s. [ἦχω; echo, Lat.]

1. Echo was supposed to have been once a nymph, who pined into a sound for love of Narcissus.

The pleasant myrtle may teach the unfortunate Echo
In these woods to resound the renowned name of a goddess. Sidney.

2. The return or repercussion of any sound.

The sound, filling great spaces in arched lines, cannot be guided; therefore there hath not been any means to make artificial echoes.

Bacon, Nat. Hist.

3. The sound returned.

Babbling echo mocks the hounds,
Replying shrilly to the well-tuned horns,
As if a double hunt were heard at once. Shaksp.
Wilt thou hunt?
Thy hounds shall make the welkin answer them,
And fetch shrill echoes from their hollow earth.
Shakspeare.
O woods, O fountains, hillocks, dales and bow'rs!
With other echo late I taught your shades
To answer, and resound far other song!
Milton, P. L.
To you I mourn, nor to the deaf I sing;
The woods shall answer, and the echo ring. Pope.
'Tis not enough no harshness gives offence;
The sound must seem an echo to the sense. Pope.

To E'CHO. v. n.

1. To resound; to give the repercussion of a voice.

At the parting
All the church echo'd. Shaksp. Tam. of the Shrew.
Through rocks and caves the name of Delia sounds;
Delia each cave and echoing rock rebounds. Pope.

2. To be sounded back.

Hark, how the sound disturbs imperious Rome!
Shakes her proud hills, and rolls from dome to dome!
Her miter'd princes hear the echoing noise,
And, Albion, dread thy wrath and awful voice.
Blackmore.

To E'CHO. v. a. To send back a voice; to return what has been uttered.

Our separatists do but echo the same note.
Decay of Piety.
With peals of shouts the Tyrians praise the song;
Those peals are echo'd by the Trojan throng.
Dryden, Æn.
One great death deforms the dreary ground;
The echo'd woes from distant rocks resound. Prior.

ECHO'METER.* n. s. [Fr. échomètre, Gr. ἦχος, sound, and μέτρον, measure.] In musick, a kind of scale, or rule, with several lines divided on it, serving to measure the duration, or length, of sounds, and to find their intervals and ratios. Chambers.

ECHO'METRY.* n. s. [Fr. échométrie, Gr. ἦχώ, an echo, and μέτρον, measure.] The art of making vaults or arches so as to produce an artificial echo.

ECLAIRCI'SSEMENT.† n. s. [Fr.] Explanation; the act of clearing up an affair by verbal expostulation, Dr. Johnson says; but it may also be by written communication.

The eclaircissement ended in the discovery of the informer. Clarendon.

I had this day the favour of your letter, and think myself much obliged to our two brethren for this good office, which I hope will have the desired effect: and to promote it all I can, I will follow your example in the frankness and openness of this eclaircissement.

Warburton, Lett. to Lowth, L. 2.

ECLA'T.† n. s. [French; as, a thing is done with eclat, i. e. with noise, with giving occasion of talk: "ce fait un grand éclat dans le monde."] Splendour; show; lustre. Not English.

Nothing more contributes to the variety, surprise, and eclat of Homer's battles, than that artificial manner of gaging his heroes by each other.

Pope, Essay on Homer.

ECLE'CTICK.* n. s. [Gr. ἐκλέκτικος, from ἐκλέγω, to choose.]

1. One of those ancient philosophers, who, without attaching themselves to any particular sect, took from any what they judged good.

He [Persius] sticks to his own philosophy; he shifts not sides, like Horace, who is sometimes an Epicurean, sometimes a Stoick, sometimes an Eclectick, as his present humour leads him.

Dryden, Orig. and Prog. of Satire.

2. One of a sect in the Christian church, called also modern Platonicks, as considering the doctrine of Plato conformable to the spirit and genius of the Christian.
3. One of a sect of physicians among the ancients.

ECLE'CTICK. adj. [ἐκλέκτικος.] Selecting; choosing at will.

Cicero was of the eclectick sect, and chose out of each such positions as came nearest truth.

Watts on the Mind.

ECLE'GM.† n. s. [ἔκ and λείχειν, Greek; eclegme, Fr. Dr. Johnson gives eclegma, without any example; but the word was anglicised two centuries since.] A form of medicine made by the incorporation of oils with syrups, and which is to be taken upon a liquorice stick. Quincy.

Confections, treacle, mithridate, eclegmes, or linctures, &c. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 380.

ECLI'PSE. n. s. [ἔκλειψις.]

1. An obscuration of the luminaries of heaven; the sun is eclipsed by the intervention of the moon; the moon by the interposition of the earth. The word originally signifies departure from the place, to which Milton alludes.

Sips of yew,
Silver'd in the moon's eclipse. Shaksp. Macbeth.
Planets, planet-struck, real eclipse
Then suffer'd. Milton, P. L.
So though the sun victorious be,
And from a dark eclipse set free,
The influence, which we fondly fear,
Afflicts our thoughts the following year. Waller.

An eclipse of the moon is when the atmosphere of the earth, being between the sun and the moon, hinders the light of the sun from falling upon and being reflected by the moon: if the light of the sun is kept off from the whole body of the moon, it is a total eclipse; if from a part only, it is a partial one. Locke.

2. Darkness; obscuration.

All the posterity of our first parents suffered a perpetual eclipse of spiritual life. Ralegh, Hist.

Experience we have of the vanity of human glory, in our scatterings and eclipses. King Charles.

To ECLI'PSE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To darken a luminary.

Let the eclipsed moon her throne resign. Sandys.
Now if the earth were flat, the darken'd moon
Would seem to all eclips'd as well as one. Creech.

2. To extinguish; to put out.

Then here I take my leave of thee, fair son,
Born to eclipse thy life this afternoon.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. To cloud; to obscure.

They had seen tokens of more than common greatness, howsoever now eclipsed with fortune.

Sidney.

Praise him to his father: —
— Let the prince's glory
Seem to eclipse, and cast a cloud on his.
Denham, Sophy.
Let other muses write his prosp'rous fate,
Of conquer'd nations tell, and kings restor'd;
But mine shall sing of his eclips'd estate,
Which, like the sun's, more wonders does afford.
Dryden.

He descended from his Father, and eclipsed the glory of his divine majesty with a veil of flesh.

Calamy's Sermons.

4. To disgrace.

She told the king, that her husband was eclipsed in Ireland by the no-countenance his majesty had shewed towards him. Clarendon.

Another now hath to himself engross'd
All pow'r, and us eclips'd. Milton, P. L.

To ECLI'PSE.† v. n. To suffer an eclipse.

The labouring moon
Eclipses at their charms. Milton, P. L.

ECLI'PTICK. n. s. [ἐκλειπτικὸς.] A great circle of the sphere, supposed to be drawn through the middle of the Zodiack, and making an angle with the Equinoctial, in the points of Aries and Libra, of 23°. 30′, which is the sun's greatest declination. This is by some called via solis, or the way of the sun, because the sun, in his annual motion, never deviates from this line. This line is drawn on the globe: but in the new astronomy the ecliptick is that path among the fixed stars, which the earth appears to describe to an eye placed in the sun, as in its annual motion it runs round the sun from west to east. If you suppose this circle to be divided into twelve equal parts, they will be the twelve signs. Harris.

All stars that have their distance from the ecliptick northwards not more than twenty-three degrees and a half, may, in progression of time, have declination southward, and move beyond the equator. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The terraqueous globe had the same site and position, in respect of the sun, that it now hath: its axis was not parallel to that of the ecliptick, but inclined in like manner as it is at present. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

You must conceive an imaginary plane, which passing through the centre of the sun and the earth, extends itself on all sides as far as the firmament: this plane is called the ecliptick, and in this the centre of the earth is perpetually carried, without any deviation. Bentley.

ECLI'PTICK.† adj.

1. Described by the ecliptick line.

The earth's rotation makes the night and day;
The sun revolving through th' ecliptick way,
Effects the various seasons of the year. Blackmore.

2. Suffering an eclipse; obscured.

The king said — that although he was at that time so eclipsed, yet either he or they might shine out bright again. To return: In this ecliptick condition was the king (the place and persons duly considered) sequestered in a manner from the comfort earth and air affords. Sir T. Herbert, Memoirs, p. 88.

E'CLOGUE. n. s. [ἐκλογή.] A pastoral poem, so called because Virgil called his pastorals eclogues. See ÆGLOGUE.

What exclaiming praises Basilius gave this eclogue any man may guess, that knows love is better than spectacles to make every thing seem great. Sidney.

It is not sufficient that the sentences be brief, the whole eclogue should be so too. Pope.

ECONO'MICK.
ECONO'MICAL. } adj. [from economy.]

1. Pertaining to the regulation of an household.

Her quick'ning power in every living part,
Doth as a nurse, or as a mother serve;
And doth employ her economick art,
And busy care, her household to preserve. Davies.

In economical affairs, having proposed the government of a family, we consider the proper means to effect it. Watts.

2. Frugal.

Some are plainly œconomical; as that the seat be well watered, and well fuelled. Wotton, Architecture.

ECONO'MICKS.* n. s. pl. [Gr. οἰκονομικα.] What apply to the management of household affairs. Formerly written œconomicks. But see the reason of rejecting this spelling under ECONOMY.

The best authors have chosen rather to handle education in their politicks, than in their œconomicks. Wotton, of Education.

ECO'NOMIST.* n. s. [Fr. economiste, from the Greek.] One who is a good manager of affairs; one who is frugal and discreet.

He did furnish his cabinets with rarities at an easy rate, being, in truth, one of the greatest œconomists of his age.

Wotton, Charact. of Ferd. di Medici, Rem. p. 244.

I cannot fancy that a shopkeeper's wife in Cheapside has a greater tenderness for the fortune of her husband than a citizen's wife in Paris; or that miss in a boarding-school is more an economist in dress than mademoiselle in a nunnery. Goldsmith, Ess. 15.

Mrs. Busy was too much an economist to feel either joy or sorrow at his death: she received the compliments and consolations of her neighbours in a dark room, out of which she stole privately every night and morning to see the cows milked. Johnson, Rambler, No. 138.

To ECO'NOMIZE.* v. a. [Fr. economizer.] To employ with economy. Both in French and English, of very recent usage.

ECO'NOMY. n. s. [οἰκονομία. This word is often written, from its derivation, œconomy; but œ being no diphthong in English, it is placed here with the authorities for different orthography.]

1. The management of a family; the government of a household.

By St. Paul's economy the heir differs nothing from a servant, while he is in his minority; so a servant should differ nothing from a child in the substantial part. Bp. Taylor.

2. Distribution of expence.

Particular sums are not laid out to the greatest advantage in his economy; but are sometimes suffered to run waste, while he is only careful of the main. Dryden.

3. Frugality; discretion of expence; laudable parsimony.

I have no other notion of economy, than that it is the parent of liberty and ease. Swift to Bolingbroke.

4. Disposition of things; regulation.

All the divine and infinitely wise ways of economy that God could use towards a rational creature, oblige mankind to that course of living which is most agreeable to our nature. Hammond.

5. The disposition or arrangement of any work.

In the Greek poets, as in Plautus, we see the economy and disposition of poems better observed than in Terence. B. Jonson.

If this economy must be observed in the minutest parts of an epick poem, what soul, though sent into the world with great advantages of nature, cultivated with the liberal arts and sciences, can be sufficient to inform the body of so great a work? Dryden, Ded. to the Æneid.

6. System of matter; distribution of every thing active or passive to its proper place.

These the strainers aid,
That by a constant separation made,
They may a due economy maintain,
Exclude the noxious parts, the good retain. Blackmore.

ECPHRA'CTICKS. n. s. pl. [ἔκ and φράττω.] Such medicines as rendered tough humours more thin, so as to promote their discharge. Quincy.

Procure the blood a free course, ventilation, and transpiration, by suitable purges and ecphractick medicines. Harvey.

E'CSTASIED. adj. [from ecstasy.] Ravished; filled with enthusiasm.

These are as common to the inanimate things as to the most ecstasied soul upon earth. Norris.

E'CSTASY. n. s. [ἔκστασις.]

1. Any passion by which the thoughts are absorbed, and in which the mind is for a time lost.

Follow them swiftly,
And hinder them from what this ecstasy
May now provoke them to. Shakspeare, Tempest.

It may be
No longer joy there, but an ecstasy. Suckling.

Whether what we call ecstasy be not dreaming with our eyes open, I leave to be examined. Locke.

2. Excessive joy; rapture.

O, love, be moderate! allay thy ecstasy! Shakspeare.

The religious pleasure of a well-dispos'd mind moves gently, and therefore constantly: it does not affect by rapture and ecstasy; but is like the pleasure of health, still and sober. South.

Each delighted, and delighting, gives
The pleasing ecstasy which each receives. Prior.

A pleasure which no language can express;
An ecstasy, that mothers only feel,
Plays round my heart. Philips, Distrest Mother.

3. Enthusiasm; excessive elevation and absorption of the mind.

He lov'd me well, and oft would beg me sing;
Which when I did, he on the tender grass
Would sit, and hearken even to ecstasy. Milton, Comus.

4. Excessive grief or anxiety. This is not now used.

Better be with the dead, —
Than on the torture of the mind to lie
In restless ecstasy. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Sighs and groans, and shrieks that rent the air,
Are made, not mark'd; where violent sorrow seems
A modern ecstasy. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

5. Madness; distraction. This sense is not now in use.

Now see that noble and most sovereign reason,
Like sweet bells jangled out of tune, and harsh,
That unmatch'd form, and feature of blown youth,
Blasted with ecstasy. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To E'CSTASY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To fill with rapture or enthusiasm.

They were so ecstasied with joy, that they made the heavens ring with triumphant shouts and acclamations. Scott, Christian Life, i. iv. § 5.

ECSTA'TICAL.
ECSTA'TICK. } adj. [ἐκστατικὸς.]

1. Ravished; rapturous; elevated beyond the usual bounds of nature.

There doth my soul in holy vision sit,
In pensive trance, and anguish, and ecstatick fit.
Milton, Ode on the Passions.

When one of them, after an ecstatical manner, fell down before an angel, he was severely rebuked, and bidden to worship God. Stillingfleet.

In trance ecstatick may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

2. Raised to the highest degree of joy.

To gain Pescennius one employs his schemes;
One grasps a Cecrops in ecstatick dreams. Pope.

3. Tending to external objects. This sense is, I think, only to be found once, though agreeable enough to the derivation.

I find in me a great deal of ecstatical love, which continually carries me out to good without myself. Norris.

E'CTYPAL.* adj. [Lat. ectypus.] Taken from the original.

Exemplars of all the ectypal copies.
Ellis, Knowl. of Divine Things, p. 417.

E'CTYPE.† n. s. [Gr. ἔκτυπος, Fr. ectype; properly, an embossed figure, or impression of a seal, ring, or medal.] A copy.

The complex ideas of substances are ectypes, copies, but not perfect ones; not adequate. Locke.

ECUME'NICAL.* adj. [French, ecumenique; Gr. οἰκουμενικὸς.] General. See OECUMENICAL.

E'CURIE. n. s. [French; equus, Lat.] A place covered for the lodging or housing of horses.

EDA'CIOUS. adj. [edax, Lat.] Eating; voracious; devouring; predatory; ravenous; rapacious; greedy.

EDA'CITY. n. s. [edacitas, Lat.] Voracity; ravenousness; greediness; rapacity.

The wolf is a beast of great edacity and digestion; it may be the parts of him comfort the bowels. Bacon.

To E'DDER. v. a. [probably from edge.] To bind or interweave a fence.

To add strength to the hedge, edder it; which is, bind the top of the stakes with some small long poles on each side. Mortimer, Husbandry.

E'DDER.† n. s. [from the verb.] Such fencewood as is commonly put upon the top of fences. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says; which remark he applies also to the verb. But it is in use, both in Essex and Norfolk; and in other parts of the kingdom. Mr. Brockett says, he has heard it in most of the northern counties. In Cheshire, raddlings in a hedge are called edderings. Wilbraham, Chesh. Gloss.

In lopping and felling, save edder and stake,
Thine hedges, as needeth, to mend or to make.
Tusser.

E'DDER.* n. s. [Sax. ættep.] A viper. Still so called in Lancashire. And so formerly, eddris for vipers, St. Matt. xi. 34. Wicliffe.

E'DDISH.* n. s. [Sax. eðiȝc.] A second crop of grass, in some parts of England; the aftermath: in others, ground on which wheat, or other corn, has grown in the same year. Written and pronounced also eadish, earsh, and etch.

E'DDY.† n. s. [eð, backward again, and ea, water, Saxon; ida, Icel. a whirlpool.]

1. The water that by some repercussion, or opposite wind, runs contrary to the main stream.

'Twould bring us to an eddy,
Where we should turn, or drown.
Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

My praises are as a bulrush upon a stream: if they sink not, 'tis because they are born up by the strength of the current, which supports their lightness; but they are carried round again, and return on the eddy where they first began. Dryden.

2. Whirlpool; circular motion.

The wild waves master'd him, and suck'd him in,
And smiling eddies dimpled on the main. Dryden.

So, where our wide Numidian wastes extend,
Sudden th' impetuous hurricanes descend,
Wheel through the air, in circling eddies play,
Tear up the sands, and sweep whole plains away.
Addison, Cato.

E'DDY. adj. Whirling; moving circularly.

And chaff with eddy winds is whirl'd around,
And dancing leaves are lifted from the ground.
Dryden, Virgil.

E'DDY-WATER.* n. s. In naval language, the dead water; the wake.

To E'DDY.* v. a. [from the noun.] To keep together in a whirl.

High-beat, the circling mountains eddy in,
From the bare wild, the dissipated storm,
And send it in a torrent down the vale.
Thomson, Autumn.

EDE'MATOSE. adj. [οἴδημα.] Swelling; full of humours: commonly written oedematous.

A serosity obstructing the glands may be watery, edematose, and schirrous, according to the viscosity of the humour. Arbuthnot.

E'DEN.* n. s. An Hebrew word signifying delectation, or a place of pleasure; paradise. Bullokar.

Aden, in the eastern dialects, is precisely the same with Eden, which we apply to the garden of Paradise: It has two senses, according to a slight difference in its pronunciation; its first meaning is a "settled abode;" its second, "delight, softness, or tranquillity." The word Eden had, probably, one of these senses in the sacred text, though we use it as a proper name. Sir W. Jones.

E'DENIZED.* adj. [from Eden.] Admitted into paradise or happiness. An old word.

For pure saints edeniz'd unfit.
Davies, Wit's Pilgrim. sign. N. 4.

EDE'NTATED. adj. [edentatus, Lat.] Deprived of teeth. Dict.

EDENTA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. edentatio.] A pulling out of teeth. Cockeram.

EDGE.† n. s. [Welsh, awch, the edge of a weapon; Sax. ecȝe. Wicliffe, after the Saxon, writes egge for edge, Heb. xi.]

1. The thin or cutting part of a blade.

Seize upon Fife; give to the edge o' th' sword
His wife, his babes. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

He that will a good edge win,
Must forge thick and grind thin. Proverb.

The edge of war, like an ill-sheathed knife,
No more shall cut his master. Shakspeare.

'Tis slander,
Whose edge is sharper than the sword.
Shakspeare, Cymb.

2. A narrow part rising from a broader.

Some harrow their ground over, and then plough it upon an edge. Mortimer, Husbandry.

3. Brink; margin; extremity.

The rays which pass very near to the edges of any body, are bent a little by the action of the body. Newton, Opticks.

We have, for many years, walked upon the edge of a precipice, while nothing but the slender thread of human life has held us from sinking into endless misery. Rogers.

Yes, the last pen for freedom let me draw,
When truth stands trembling on the edge of law.
Pope.

4. Sharpness of mind; proper disposition for action or operation; intenseness of desire.

Give him a further edge,
And drive his purpose into these delights.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

But when long time the wretches' thoughts refin'd,
When want had set an edge upon their mind,
Then various cares their working thoughts employ'd,
And that which each invented, all enjoy'd,
Creech, Manilius.

Silence and solitude set an edge upon the genius, and cause a greater application. Dryd. Dufresnoy.

5. Keenness; acrimony of temper.

Abate the edge of traitors, gracious Lord!
That would reduce these bloody days again.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

6. To set teeth on EDGE. To cause a tingling uneasiness in the teeth.

A harsh grating tune setteth the teeth on edge.
Bacon.

To EDGE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To sharpen; to enable to cut.

Though you edge every word you speak with reason and religion, evidence and demonstration, you shall never affect, nor touch, nor so much as reach his conscience; for it is kept sealed up in a bag under lock and key, and you cannot come at it! South, Serm. iii. 78.

There sat she rolling her alluring eyes,
To edge her champion's sword, and urge my ruin.
Dryden.

2. To furnish with an edge.

I fell'd along a man of bearded face,
His limbs all cover'd with a shining case;
So wond'rous hard, and so secure of wound,
It made my sword, though edg'd with flint, rebound. Dryden.

3. To border with any thing; to fringe.

Their long descending train,
With rubies edg'd, and sapphires, swept the plain.
Dryden.

I rid over hanging hills, whose tops were edged with groves, and whose feet were watered with winding rivers. Pope.

4. To exasperate; to embitter.

By such reasonings the simple were blinded, and the malicious edged. Hayward.

He was indigent and low in money, which perhaps might have a little edged his desperation. Wotton, Life of D. of Bucks.

5. To put forward beyond a line.

Edging by degrees their chairs forwards, they were in a little time got up close to one another. Locke.

To EDGE.† v. n. [perhaps from eð, backward, Saxon.]

1. To move forward against any power; going close upon a wind, as if upon its skirts or border, and so sailing slow.

I must edge upon a point of wind,
And make slow way. Dryden, Cleomenes.

2. To make room, or go aside. To edge off, is common. Wilbraham, Cheshire Gloss.

E'DGED. participial adj. [from edge.] Sharp; not blunt.

We find that subtile or edged quantities do prevail over blunt ones. Digby on Bodies.

E'DGING. n. s. [from edge.]

1. What is added to any thing by way of ornament.

The garland which I wove for you to wear,
And border'd with a rosy edging round. Dryden.

A woman branches out into a long dissertation upon the edging of a petticoat. Addison, Spect.

2. A narrow lace.

E'DGELESS. adj. [from edge.] Blunt; obtuse; unable to cut.

To-morrow in the battle think on me,
And fall thy edgeless sword; despair and die.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

They are edgeless weapons it hath to encounter. Decay of Piety.

E'DGETOOL. n. s. [edge and tool.] A tool made sharp to cut.

There must be no playing with things sacred, nor jesting with edgetools. L'Estrange.

Nurses from their children keep edgetools. Dorset.

I shall exercise upon steel, and its several sorts; and what sort is fittest for edgetools, which for springs. Moxon.

E'DGEWISE. adv. [edge and wise.] With the edge put into any particular direction.

Should the flat side be objected to the stream, it would be soon turned edgewise by the force of it. Ray.

E'DIBLE. adj. [from edo, Lat.] Fit to be eaten; fit for food.

Some flesh is not edible, as horses and dogs. Bacon.

Wheat and barley, and the like, are made either edible or potable by man's art and industry. More against Atheism.

Some of the fungus kind, gathered for edible mushrooms, have produced a difficulty of breathing. Arbuthnot.

The edible creation decks the board. Prior.

E'DICT.† n. s. [edictum, Lat. The accent of this word was, formerly, on the second syllable; as might be shewn in numerous instances from the poetry of Drayton, Niccols, &c. Shakspeare uses it on both syllables. And the accent on the last syllable, now disused, continued in the time of Milton, who so gives edict, Par. Lost, B. 5. 798.] A proclamation, or command, or prohibition; a law promulgated.

When an absolute monarch commandeth his subjects that which seemeth good in his own discretion, hath not his edict the force of a law? Hooker.

The great King of kings,
Hath in the table of his law commanded
That thou shalt do no murder; will you then
Spurn at his edict, and fulfil a man's?
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Severe decrees may keep our tongues in awe,
But to our thoughts what edict can give law?
Dryden.

The ministers are always preaching, and the governours putting out edicts, against gaming and fine clothes. Addison.

EDI'FICANT.* adj. [Lat. ædificans.] Building; constructing.

And as his pen was often militant,
Nor less triumphant; so edificant
It also was, like those bless'd builders, who Stood on their guard, and stoutly builded too.
Dugard, Verses on Gataker, (1655,) p. 73.

EDIFICA'TION.† n. s. [ædificatio, Lat.]

1. A building; but most commonly taken for instruction. See To EDIFY.
Bullokar.

2. The act of building up man in the faith; improvement in holiness.

Our blessed Saviour told us, that we must account for every idle word, not meaning that every word not designed to edification, or less prudent, shall be reckoned for a sin. Bp. Taylor.

3. Improvement; instruction.

Out of these magazines I shall supply the town with what may tend to their edification.
Addison, Guardian.

EDI'FICATORY.* adj. [from edify.] Tending to edification; instructive.

There can be no reason of restraining them from an exercise so beneficially edificatory to the church of God. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

E'DIFICE. n. s. [ædificium, Lat.] A fabrick; a building; a structure.

My love was like a fair house built on another man's ground; so that I have lost my edifice by mistaking the place where I erected it.
Shakspeare, Mer. W. of Windsor.

God built
So spacious, and his line stretch'd out so far,
That man may know he dwells not in his own;
An edifice too large for him to fill. Milton, P. L.

The edifice, where all were met to see him,
Upon their heads and on his own he pull'd.
Milton, S. A.

As Tuscan pillars owe their original to this country, the architects always give them a place in edifices raised in Tuscany. Addison on Italy.

He must be an idiot, that cannot discern more strokes of workmanship in the structure of an animal than in the most elegant edifice. Bentley.

EDIFI'CIAL.* adj. [from edifice.] Respecting the appearance of an edifice.

There are mansions, which, without any striking edificial attraction, have a certain air of appropriate hospitality and provincial dignity.
Hist. of the Rivers of Gr. Brit. (1794,) i. 232.

E'DIFIER.† n. s. [from edify.]

1. A builder. See To EDIFY. This is the only sense applied to the word in the old dictionaries of Huloet, Cotgrave, and Sherwood. Dr. Johnson has not noticed this meaning.

2. One that improves or instructs another.

To E'DIFY.† v. a. [ædifico, Lat.]

1. To build. This is the sole definition of the word in the old dictionary of Huloet. Early in the seventeenth century, it obtained the moral application; for thus Bullokar: "To edify, to build; sometimes, to instruct."

There was a holy chapel edify'd,
Wherein the hermit wont to say
His holy things each morn and eventide.
Spenser, F. Q.

Men have edify'd
A lofty temple, and perfum'd an altar to thy name.
Chapman.

There was sometime beyond the sea edify'd and founded a certain house and cloister of religious men. Palmerin of England, P. i. ch. 1.

2. To instruct; to improve.

He who speaketh no more than edifieth, is undeservedly reprehended for much speaking. Hooker.

Men are edified, when either their understanding is taught somewhat whereof, in such actions, it behoveth all men to consider, or when their hearts are moved with any affection suitable thereunto. Hooker.

Life is no life, without the blessing of a friendly and an edifying conversation. L'Estrange.

He gave, he taught; and edify'd the more,
Because he shew'd, by proof, 'twas easy to be poor.
Dryden.

3. To teach; to persuade. This is now either obsolete or ludicrous.

You shall hardly edify me, that those nations might not, by the law of nature, have been subdued by any nation that had only policy and moral virtue. Bacon, Holy War.

E'DIFYING.* n. s. [from edify.] Instruction.

Seek that ye may excel to the edifying of the church. 1 Cor. xiv. 12.

Endless genealogies, which minister questions rather than godly edifying. 1 Tim. i. 4.

E'DIFYINGLY.* adv. [from edifying.] In an instructive manner.

He will discourse unto us edifyingly, and feelingly, of the substantial and comfortable doctrines of religion. Killingbeck, Serm. p. 324.

E'DILE. n. s. [ædilis, Latin.] The title of a magistrate in old Rome, whose office seems in some particulars to have resembled that of our justices of peace.

The edile, ho! let him be apprehended. Shaksp.

To E'DIT.* v. a. [old Fr. editer, to proclaim, to publish an ordinance or law; Lat. edo.] To revise or prepare a work for publication; to publish.

If any one will be at the trouble to edit an old work with the accession of such materials as are applicable to the subject of it, he does a service that is received with gratitude. Brit. Crit. 1798, Sept.

EDI'TION. n. s. [editio, Latin.]

1. Publication of any thing, particularly of a book.

This English edition is not so properly a translation, as a new composition upon the same ground. Bacon.

2. Republication; generally with some revisal or correcting.

These are of the second edition. Shakspeare.

The business of our redemption is to rub over the defaced copy of the creation, to reprint God's image upon the soul, and to set forth nature in a second and a fairer edition. South.

I cannot go so far as he who published the last edition of him. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

The Code, composed hastily, was forced to undergo an emendation, and to come forth in a second edition. Baker.

EDI'TIONER.* n. s. [from edition. Our old word for editor.] A publisher.

They cannot be exact in any map whatever, as Mr. Norden himself, who laboured much in this matter, maketh his complaint in that necessary Guide, added to a little, but not much augmented, by the late editioner.
Gregory, Posthuma, (1650,) p. 321.

E'DITOR.† n. s. [editor, Latin.] Publisher; one that revises or prepares any work for publication.

Put case some well-minded printer (as one of the Stephens) is willing to be at an excessive charge, in the fair publication of a learned and useful work for the benefit of the present and following ages; it is most just that he should, from the hands of princes or states, receive a priviledge for the sole impression; that he may recover, with advantage, the deep expence he hath been at: otherwise, some interloper may perhaps underhand fall upon the work at a lower rate, and undo the first editor. Bp. Hall, Cases of Consc. (ed. 1650,) p. 33.

When a different reading gives us a different sense, or a new elegance in an author, the editor does very well in taking notice of it. Addison, Spect.

This nonsense got into all the editions by a mistake of the stage editors. Pope, Notes on Shaksp.

EDITO'RIAL.* adj. [from editor.] Belonging to the office of an editor.

Lambin, in the preface to his Horace, and Heyne also, in the preface to the second edition of his Virgil, seem to have considered it as part of their editorial duty, not to leave the subject of orthography wholly unnoticed.
Dr. Parr, Brit. Crit. 1794, Feb.

E'DITORSHIP.* n. s. [from editor.] The office and duty of an editor.

Lord Lyttelton puts it into the mouth of Boileau to observe to Pope, that a great poet, so tied down to so tedious a translation as that of Homer, "is a Columbus chained to an oar;" and that the editorship of Shakspeare, which Pope afterward undertook with more profit than reputation, was below him, and that his mind was unfit for the drudgery it requires.
Tyers, Hist. Rhapsod. on Pope, p. 14.

To EDI'TUATE.* v. a. [low Lat. ædituo, to perform the office of the æditui, a kind of churchwarden or overseer. Ash has placed this word in his vocabulary, with the general meaning of "to defend, to govern;" but its meaning is confined; and is now disused.] To defend or govern the house or temple. Coles.

The devotion whereof could not but move the city — to edituate such a piece of divine office, where so many gods were present by their proxies; where not only the sports themselves, but all the company, were reputed holy for that time, and some accounted so ever after.
Greg. Notes on Scr. (Acts, xix. 35.) ed. 1684, p. 49.

To E'DUCATE. v. a. [duco, Latin.] To breed; to bring up; to instruct youth.

Their young succession all their cares employ;
They breed, they brood, instruct and educate,
And make provision for the future state.
Dryden, Virg.

Education is worse, in proportion to the grandeur of the parents; if the whole world were under one monarch, the heir of that monarch would be the worst educated mortal since the creation.

Swift on Modern Education.

EDUCA'TION. n. s. [from educate.] Formation of manners in youth; the manner of breeding youth; nurture.

Education and instruction are the means, the one by use, the other by precept, to make our natural faculty of reason both the better and the sooner to judge rightly between truth and errour, good and evil. Hooker.

All nations have agreed in the necessity of a strict education, which consisted in the observance of moral duties. Swift.

E'DUCATOR.* n. s. [Lat. educator.] One that instructs youth.

Could not the educators of the lowest be consoled under their laborious duty, without detracting from those whom the public voice, and the discernment of their nominators or electors, had appointed to the management of the first seminaries in the kingdom?
Dr. Vincent, Defence of Pub. Education, p. 17.

To EDU'CE.† v. a. [educo, Latin.] To bring out; to extract; to produce from a state of occultation. Bullokar.

The Almighty Power hath given these admirable virtues to several plants, and educes them in his due seasons to these excellent perfections.
Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 3.

That the world was educed out of the power of space, and give that as a reason of its original: in this language, to grow rich, were to educe money out of the power of the pocket. Glanville.

This matter must have lain eternally confined to its beds of earth, were there not this agent to educe it thence. Woodward.

The eternal art educes good from ill,
Grafts on this passion our best principle. Pope.

EDU'CTION.† n. s. [Fr. eduction] The act of bringing any thing into view.
Sherwood.

We may manifestly perceive a strange eduction of spirits. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 474.

The eduction of the fœtus.
Biblioth. Bib. vol. i. p. 153.

To EDU'LCORATE.† v. n. [old French, edulcorer; Latin dulcoro, from dulcis, sweet.] To sweeten. A chymical term.

This [swine's dung] though not so proper for a garden, is said yet to edulcorate and sweeten fruit so sensibly, as to convert the bitterest almond into sweet. Evelyn's Earth.

EDULCORA'TION.† n. s. [from edulcorate.]
1. The act of sweetening.
2. In chymistry, the freshening or purging any thing of its salts, by repeated lotions, or washings in cold water. Chambers.
3. In metallurgy, the separating, by a solution in water, the salts that have been left adhering to a body after any operation. Ibid.

EDU'LCORATIVE.* adj. [from edulcorate.] Having the quality of sweetening.

EDU'LIOUS.* adj. [Lat. edulis; or rather from edulium, any thing to be eaten.] Eatable.

The husks of peas, beans, or such edulious pulses. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 13.

To EEK.† v. a. [eacan, ecan, ican, Sax. eak, Scott.; eck, Erse; Goth. aukan; Icel. auka, to increase. Our word is now written eke, which see. Formerly it was also eche.]
1. To supply any deficiency.
2. To make bigger by the addition of another piece.

I dempt there much to have eeked my store.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

Here endless penance for one fault I pay;
But that redoubled crime, with vengeance new,
Thou biddest me to eeke. Spenser, F. Q.

Was not your skilful hand
In this last stratagem? Were not your mischiefs Eeking the matter on?
Beaum. and Fl. Tamer Tamed.

EE'KING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Augmentation; increase. Sherwood.

I dempt there much to have eeked my store,
But such eeking hath made my heart sore.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Sept.

EEL.† n. s. [œl, Saxon; aal, German; Swedish, âl, the same.] A serpentine slimy fish, that lurks in mud.

Is the adder better than the eel,
Because his painted skin contents the eye? Shaks.

The cockney put the eels i' the pasty alive.
Shakspeare.

EE'LPOUT.* n. s. [Germ. aelput.] A fish of the eel kind, in some places called a burbot. It is common in the river Trent. See BURBOT.

E'EN. adv. Contracted from even. See EVEN.

Says the satyr, if you have a trick of blowing hot and cold out of the same mouth, I have e'en done with ye. L'Estrange.

EFF. n. s. Commonly written EFT. A small lizard. See EFT.

E'FFABLE.† adj. [effabilis, Latin.] Expressive; utterable. Dict.

He did, upon this suggestion, accommodate thereunto his universal language, to make his character effable.
Wallis, Def. of the Royal Soc. (1678,) p. 16.

To EFFA'CE. v. a. [effacer, French.]
1. To destroy any thing painted, or carved.
2. To make no more legible or visible; to blot out; to strike out.

Characters on dust, the first breath of wind effaces. Locke.

It was ordered that his name should be effaced out of all publick registers. Addison on Italy.

Time, I said, may happily efface
That cruel image of the king's disgrace. Prior.

Otway fail'd to polish or refine,
And fluent Shakspeare scarce effac'd a line. Pope.

3. To destroy; to wear away.

Nor our admission shall your realm disgrace,
Nor length of time our gratitude efface.
Dryden, Æn.

To EFFA'SCINATE.* v. a. [Lat. effascino.] To bewitch; to charm. Cockeram.

The count of Vestravia by a concubine of his was alike effascinated.
Heywood, Hierarch. of Angels, (1635,) p. 474.

EFFASCINA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. effascinatio.] The state of being bewitched or deluded.

St. Paul sets down the just judgement of God against the receivers of Antichrist, which is effascination, or strong delusion.
Shelford's Learned Disc. (Camb. 1635,) p. 317.

EFFE'CT. n. s. [effectus, Latin.]
1. That which is produced by an operating cause.

You may see by her example, in herself wise, and of others beloved, that neither folly is the cause of vehement love, nor reproach the effect. Sidney.

Effect is the substance produced, or simple idea introduced into any subject, by the exerting of power. Locke.

We see the pernicious effects of luxury in the ancient Romans, who immediately found themselves poor as soon as this vice got footing among them. Addison on Italy.
2. Consequence; event.

No man, in effect, doth accompany with others, but he learneth, ere he is aware, some gesture, or voice, or fashion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To say of a celebrated piece that there are faults in it, is, in effect, to say that the author of it is a man. Addison.
3. Purpose; meaning; general intent.

They spake to her to that effect. 2 Chron.
4. Consequence intended; success; advantage.

Christ is become of no effect unto you. Gal. v. 4.

He should depart only with a title, the effect whereof he should not be possessed of, before he deserved it. Clarendon.

The institution has hitherto proved without effect, and has neither extinguished crimes, nor lessened the numbers of criminals. Temple.
5. Completion; perfection.

Not so worthily to be brought to heroical effect by fortune or necessity, like Ulysses and Æneas, as by one's own choice and working. Sidney.

Semblant art shall carve the fair effect,
And full atchievement of thy great designs. Prior.
6. Reality; not mere appearance.

In shew, a marvellous indifferently composed senate ecclesiastical was to govern, but in effect one only man should, as the spirit and soul of the residue, do all in all. Hooker.

State and wealth, the business and the crowd,
Seems at this distance but a darker cloud;
And is to him, who rightly things esteems,
No other in effect than what it seems. Denham.
7. [In the plural.] Goods; moveables.

What form of prayer
Can serve my turn? Forgive me my foul murther!
That cannot be, since I am still possest
Of those effects for which I did the murther,
My crown, mine own ambition, and my queen.
Shakspeare.

The emperour knew that they could not convey away many of their effects. Addison, Spect.

To EFFE'CT.† v. a. [efficio, Latin.]
1. To bring to pass; to attempt with success; to achieve; to accomplish as an agent.

All that came into Solomon's heart to make in the house of the Lord, and in his own house, he prosperously effected. 2 Chron. vii. 11.

Being consul, I not doubt t' effect
All that you wish. B. Jonson.

What he decreed,
He effected. Milton, P. L.
2. To produce as a cause.

The change made of that syrup into a purple colour was effected by the vinegar. Boyle on Colours.

EFFE'CTER.* n. s. See EFFECTOR.
Sherwood.

The foreseers and effecters of all the evils which succeeded. Spencer on Prod. p. 248.

EFFE'CTIBLE. adj. [from effect.] Performable; practicable; feasible.

That a pot full of ashes will still contain as much water as it would without them, is not effectible upon the strictest experiment. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EFFE'CTION.* n. s. In geometry, a construction; a proposition; a problem, or praxis, drawn from some general proposition. Ash.

EFFE'CTIVE. adj. [from effect.]
1. Having the power to produce effects; efficacious; effectual: with of.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them. Bacon.

If any mystery, rite, or sacrament be effective of any spiritual blessings, then this much more, as having the prerogative and principality above every thing else. Bp. Taylor.

There is nothing in words and stiles but suitableness, that makes them acceptable and effective.
Glanville.

Operative; active; having the quality of producing effects.

Nor do they speak properly who say that time consumeth all things; for time is not effective, nor are bodies destroyed by it. Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Producing effects; efficient.

Whosoever is an effective real cause of doing his neighbour wrong is criminal, by what instrument soever he does it. Bp. Taylor.

4. Having the power of operation; useful: as, effective men in an army.

EFFE'CTIVELY. adv. [from effective.] Powerfully; with real operation.

This effectively resists the devil, and suffers us to receive no hurt from him. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

EFFE'CTLESS.† adj. [from effect.] Without effect; impotent; useless; unmeaning.

Sure, all's effectless; yet nothing we'll omit
That bears recovery's name. Shakspeare, Pericles.

I'll chop off my hands too;—
In bootless prayer have they been held up,
And they have serv'd me to effectless use.
Tit. Andronicus.

That, yet effectless, this enchanting witch,
Bred baneful jealousy against my lady.
Beaum. and Fl. Knight of Malta.

All proved vain and effectless.
Transl. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 89.

EFFE'CTOR.† n. s. [effector, Latin. Written also indifferently effecter.]

1. He that produces any effect; performer.

That they might be thought the effectors of what they were the foreshewers. Spencer on Prod. p. 263.

2. Maker; Creator.

We commemorate the creation, and pay worship to that infinite Being who was the effector of it. Derham.

EFFE'CTUAL. adj. [effectuel, French.]

1. Productive of effects; powerful to a degree adequate to the occasion; operative; efficacious.

The reading of Scripture is effectual, as well to lay even the first foundation, as to add degrees of farther perfection, in the fear of God. Hooker.

The communication of thy faith may become effectual, by the acknowledging of every good thing. Philem. 6.

2. Veracious; expressive of facts. A sense not in use.

Reprove my allegation, if you can;
Or else conclude my words effectual. Shakspeare.

EFFE'CTUALLY. adv. [from effectual.] In a manner productive of the consequence intended; efficaciously.

Sometimes the sight of the altar, and decent preparations for devotion, may compose and recover the wandering mind more effectually than a sermon. South.

A subject of that vast latitude, that the strength of one man will scarcely be sufficient effectually to carry it on. Woodward.

EFFE'CTUALNESS.* n. s. [from effectual.] The quality of being effectual. Scott. Sir E. Sandys somewhere uses it.

To EFFE'CTUATE.† v. a. [effectuer, French.] To bring to pass; to fulfil.

He found means to acquaint himself with a nobleman, to whom discovering what he was, he found him a fit instrument to effectuate his desire. Sidney.

This coming on so quick, after all that was to be done abroad was effectuated. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, 1708.

EFFE'CTUOUS.* adj. [Fr. effectueux.] Formerly in use for effectual; as "effectuous words, pithy in sense." Barret. Obsolete.

EFFE'CTUOUSLY.* adv. [from effectuous.] Effectually; to the purpose. Not now in use.

It shall, I trust, effectuously prove our purpose to instruct the protestant, and to comfort the catholick. Stapleton, Fortr. of Faith, (1565,) p. 59.

EFFE'MINACY.† n. s. [from effeminate.]

1. Admission of the qualities of a woman; softness; unmanly delicacy; mean submission.

But foul effeminacy held me yok'd
Her bondslave: O indignity, O blot
To honour and religion! Milton, S. A.

To doubt the passage of the blessed through this great abyss is an effeminacy of belief.
Gregory, Notes on Passages in Script. p. 117.

2. Lasciviousness; loose pleasure.

So long as idleness is quite shut out from our lives, all the sins of wantonness, softness, and effeminacy are prevented. Bp. Taylor.

EFFE'MINATE.† adj. [effeminatus, Lat.]

1. Having the qualities of a woman; womanish; soft to an unmanly degree; voluptuous; tender; luxurious: of persons.

The king, by his voluptuous life and mean marriage, became effeminate, and less sensible of honour. Bacon.

Luxurious by their wealth, and greedier still,
And from the daily scene effeminate. Milton, P. R.

2. Resembling the practice of a woman; womanish: of things.

After the slaughter of so many peers,
Shall we at last conclude effeminate peace? Shaks.

From man's effeminate slackness it begins,
Said the angel, who should better hold his place.
Milton, P. L.

Thus is it in the soul, if the upper, the manly part of it be overswelled with lust, it straight becomes effeminate, and enervate.
Hammond, Works, iv. 661.

Effeminate delicacy and dissoluteness are such vices as will emasculate the bravest mind.
Scott, Works, ii. 28.

The more effeminate and soft his life,
The more his fame to struggle to the field. Dryd.

3. Womanlike; soft without reproach. A sense not in use.

As well we know your tenderness of heart,
And gentle, kind, effeminate remorse. Shaks.

EFFE'MINATE.* n. s. An effeminate person.

I can feel
Thy follies too, and with a just disdain
Frown at effeminates, whose very looks
Reflect dishonour on the land I love.
Cowper, Task.

To EFFE'MINATE.† v. a. [effemino, Lat.] To make womanish; to weaken; to emasculate; to unman. Huloet.

Had I my tender years
Committed to the care of thy gray hairs,
That thou shouldst thus effeminate my heart
With love? Fanshawe, Transl. of Pastor Fido.

How was the strongest man, Sampson, effeminated by his impotent passion!
Bp. Hall, Balm of Gilead.

Their wickedness naturally tends to effeminate them. Scott, Works, ii. 25.

When one is sure it will not corrupt or effeminate children's minds, and make them fond of trifles, I think all things should be contrived to their satisfaction. Locke.

To EFFE'MINATE. v. n. To grow womanish; to soften; to melt into weakness.

In a slothful peace, both courages will effeminate, and manners corrupt. Bacon.

EFFE'MINATELY.* adv. [from effeminate.]

1. Weakly; softly; in an unmanly degree.

Champions in philosophy, law, and history, are not wanting to answer or confute opposers: and some of them, to say truth, have not undertook the cause effeminately.
Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. (1654,) p. 323.

I can smell his lavender water up hither: how effeminately he trips along with his snowy hands hid in a muff!
Dr. Warton, Satire on Ranelagh House.

2. By womanish arts.

What boots it at one gate to make defence,
And at another to let in the foe,

EFFE'MINATENESS.* n. s. [from effeminate.] Unmanly softness; meanness of spirit.

Poesy — not being an art of lies, but of true doctrine; not of effeminateness, but of notable stirring of courage. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

In France they sent a distaff and a spindle to all those able men that went not with them, as upbraiding their effeminateness.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 78.

EFFEMINA'TION. n. s. [from effeminate.] The state of one grown womanish; the state of one emasculated or unmanned.

Vices the hare figured; not only feneration or usury, from its fecundity and superfetation, but degenerate effemination. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To EFFERVE'SCE. v. n. [effervesco, Lat.] To generate heat by intestine motion.

The compound spirit of nitre, put to oil of cloves, will effervesce even to a flame.
Mead on Poisons.

EFFERVE'SCENCE. n. s. [from efferveo, Lat.] The act of growing hot; production of heat by intestine motion.

In the chymical sense, effervescence signifies an intestine motion, produced by mixing two bodies together that lay at rest before; attended sometimes with a hissing noise, frothing, and ebullition.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

Take chalk, ignite it in a crucible, and then powder it: put it into strong spirit of nitre, till it becomes sweetish, and makes no effervescence upon the injection of the chalk. Grew.

Hot springs do not owe their heat to any colluctation or effervescence of the minerals in them, but to subterranean heat or fire. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

E'FFEROUS.* adj. [Lat. efferus.] Fierce; wild; savage. Obsolete.

From the teeth of that efferous beast, from the tusk of the wild boar,—O Thou, that art the root and generation of David, preserve our root and all his generation.
Bp. King, Vine Palatine, (1614,) p. 34.

EFFE'TE. adj. [effætus, Latin.]

1. Barren; disabled from generation.

It is probable that females have in them the seeds of all the young they will afterwards bring forth, which, all spent and exhausted, the animal becomes barren and effete. Ray.

In most countries, the earth would be so parched and effete by the drought, that it would afford but one harvest. Bentley.

2. Worn out with age.

All that can be allowed him now, is to refresh his decrepit effete sensuality with the history of his former life. South.

EFFICA'CIOUS.† adj. [efficax, Latin, Dr. Johnson says. It is rather from the Fr. adj. efficace; old sub. efficaise, power, ability. Our adjective is not in the old dictionaries of Huloet, Barret, Cockeram, and Sherwood. But in an enlarged edition of Bullokar, published in 1656, it merely forms part of the article of efficacy, without any explanation. Dr. Johnson could find no example of earlier date than that of Philips.] Productive of effects; powerful to produce the consequence intended.

That Spirit, that first rush'd on thee
In the camp of Dan,
Be efficacious in thee now at need! Milton, S. A.
A glowing drop with hollow'd steel
He takes, and by one efficacious breath
Dilates to cube or square. Philips.

EFFICA'CIOUSLY. adv. [from efficacious.] Effectually; in such a manner as to produce the consequence desired.

If we find that any other body strikes efficaciously enough upon it, we cannot doubt but it will move that way which the striking body impels it. Digby on Bodies.

EFFICA'CIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from efficacy.] The quality of being efficacious. Ash.

E'FFICACY.† n. s. [old Fr. efficaise, power.] Power to produce effects; production of the consequence intended.

Whatsoever is spoken concerning the efficacy or necessity of God's word, they tie and restrain only into sermons. Hooker.

Whether if they had tasted the tree of life before that of good and evil, they had suffered the curse of mortality; or whether the efficacy of the one had not overpowered the penalty of the other, we leave it unto God. Brown.

Efficacy is a power of speech which represents a thing, by presenting to our minds the lively ideas or forms. Peacham.

The apostle tells us of the success and efficacy of the Gospel upon the minds of men; and, for this reason, he calls it the power of God unto salvation. Tillotson.

The arguments drawn from the goodness of God have a prevailing efficacy to induce men to repent. Rogers.

EFFI'CIENCE. } n. s. [from efficio, Lat.]
EFFI'CIENCY. } The act of producing effects; agency.

The manner of this divine efficiency being far above us, we are no more able to conceive by our reason, than creatures unreasonable by their sense are able to apprehend after what manner we dispose and order the course of our affairs. Hooker.

That they are carried by the manuduction of a rule, is evident, but what that regulating efficiency should be, is not easily determined. Glanville.

Sinning against conscience has no special productive efficiency of this particular sort of sinning, more than of any other. South.

A pious will is the means to enlighten the understanding in the truth of Christianity, upon the account of a natural efficiency: a will so disposed will engage the mind in a severe search. South.

Gravity does not proceed from the efficiency of any contingent and unstable agents; being entirely owing to the direct concourse of the power of the Author of nature. Woodward.

EFFI'CIENT. n. s. [efficiens, Latin.]

1. The cause which makes effects to be what they are.

God, which moveth mere natural agents as an efficient only, doth otherwise move intellectual creatures, and especially his holy angels. Hooker.

2. He that makes; the effector.

Observations of the order of nature carry the mind up to the admiration of the great efficient of the world. Hale.

EFFI'CIENT. adj. Causing effects; that makes the effect to be what it is.

Your answering in the final cause, makes me believe you are at a loss for the efficient.
Collier on Thought.

EFFI'CIENTLY.* adv. [from efficient.] Effectively.

Logical or consequential necessity is, when a thing does not efficiently cause an event, but yet by certain infallible consequence does infer it.
South, Serm. iii. 397.

To EFFIE'RCE.* v. a. [from fierce.] To make fierce or furious.

With fell woodness he effierced was;
And wilfully him throwing on the grass,
Did beat and bounce his head and breast full sore.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. xi. 27.

EFFI'GIAL.* adj. [from effigies.] Exhibiting an effigy.

The three volumes contain chiefly effigial cuts and monumental figures and inscriptions.
Critical Hist. of Pamphlets, (1715,) p. 6.

To EFFI'GIATE.† v. a. [effigio, Latin.] To form in semblance; to image.

Men endued with reasonable souls, effigiated to God's image, the deliberated workmanship of his own divine hands. Dean King, Serm. (1608,) p. 3.

One [of these Roman measures] was lately in the keeping of cardinal Farnese, and is exquisitely effigiated by Villalpandus in the latter end of his third tome upon the prophet Ezekiel.
Hakewill on Providence, p. 190.

I know that in the state of my body, which is more discernible than that of the soul, Thou [O God] dost effigiate my soul to me.
Donne, Devot. p. 588.

EFFIGIA'TION. n. s. [from effigiate.] The act of imaging; or forming the resemblance of things or persons. Dict.

EFFI'GIES.† } n. s. [effigies, Latin; effigy is E'FFIGY. } from being in effigy. The word effigy is reckoned by P. Heylin, in 1656, amongst unusual and uncouth expressions.] Resemblance; image in painting or sculpture; representation; idea.

We behold the species of eloquence in our minds, the effigies or actual image of which we seek in the organs of our hearing.
Dryden, Dufresnoy, Pref.

Observe those numerous wrongs in effigy,
The gods have sav'd from the devouring sea. Garth.

To EFFLA'GITATE.* v. a. [Lat. efflagito.] To demand a thing earnestly. Cockeram.

To EFFLA'TE.* v. a. [Lat. efflo.] To fill with the breath; to puff up.

Our common spirits, effiated by every vulgar breath upon every act, deify themselves; and conceit all great additions of honour below their merits.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 179.

EFFLORE'SCENCE. } n. s. [effloresco, Lat.]
EFFLORE'SCENCY. }

1. Production of flowers.

Where there is less heat, there the spirit of the plant is digested, and severed from the grosser juice in efflorescence. Bacon.

2. Excrescencies in the form of flowers.

Two white sparry incrustations, with efflorescencies in form of shrubs, formed by the trickling of water. Woodward.

3. [In physick.] The breaking out of some humours in the skin, in distempers called exanthematous; as in the measles, and the like. Quincy.

A wart beginneth in the cutis, and seemeth to be an efflorescence of the serum of the blood.
Wiseman, Surgery.

EFFLORE'SCENT. adj. [effloresco, Lat.] Shooting out in form of flowers.

Yellow efflorescent sparry incrustations on stone.
Woodward.

E'FFLUENCE.† n. s. [Fr. effluence.] That which issues from some other principle.

Bright effluence of bright essence increate.
Milton, P. L.

These scintillations are not the ascension of the air upon the collision of two hard bodies, but rather the inflammable effluences discharged from the baches collided. Brown.

From the bright effluence of his deed
They borrow that reflected light,
With which the lasting lamp they feed,
Whose beams dispel the damps of envious night.
Prior.

E'FFLUENT.* adj. [Lat. effluens.] An effluent fever is sometimes used for an inflammatory fever. Chambers.

EFFLU'VIA.† } n. s. [from effluo, Lat. The EFFLU'VIUM. } plural is sometimes also effluviums, which Dr. Johnson has not noticed.] Those small particles which are continually flying off from bodies; the subtilty which appears from their being able, a long time together, to produce very sensible effects, without any sensible diminution of the body from whence they arise. Quincy.

If the earth were an electrick body, and the air but the effluvium thereof, we might believe that from attraction, and by effluxion, bodies tended to the earth. Brown.

Neither the earth's diurnal revolution upon its axis, nor any magnetick effluvia of the earth, nor the air, or atmosphere which environs the earth, can produce gravity. Woodward.

If these effluvia, which do upward tend,
Because less heavy than the air, ascend;
Why do they ever from their height retreat,
And why return to seek their central seat?
Blackmore.

Their inspirations were owing to certain subterraneous effluviums of wind.
Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 8.

E'FFLUX.† n. s. [efluxus, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing out. Bullokar.

Through the copious efflux of matter through the orifice of a deep ulcer, he was reduced to a skeleton. Harvey.

2. Effusion; flow.

The first efflux of men's piety, after receiving of the faith, was the selling and consecrating their possessions. Hammond.

There was an efflux of time.
Annot. on Religio Medici.

3. That which flows from something else; emanation.

If he produced G only, whether that orb G be not either an arbitrarious or natural efflux from A.
More, Notes on the Infinity of Worlds.

Prime cheerer, light!
Of all material beings, first and best!
Efflux divine! Thomson, Summer.

4. The act of flowing is more properly effluence, and that which flows more properly efflux.

To EFFLU'X.† v. n. [effluo, Lat.] To run out; to flow away. This is not often in use, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Boyle. But it was in use before.

The same revolution would not bring back the same time, for that was effluxed before.
Annot. on Religio Medici, 1654.

Five thousand and some odd centuries of years are effluxed since the creation.
Boyle, Seraphick Love.

EFFLU'XION. n. s. [efluxum, Lat.]

1. The act of flowing out.

By effluxion and attraction bodies tend towards the earth. Brown.

2. That which flows out; effluvium; emanation.

There are some light effluxions from spirit to spirit, when men are one with another; as from body to body. Bacon.

To EFFO'RCE. v. a. [efforcer, Fr.]

1. To force; to break through by violence

In all that room was nothing to be seen,
But huge great iron chests and coffers strong,

All barr'd with double bonds, that ne'er could ween
Them to efforce by violence or wrong.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. To force; to ravish; to violate by force.
Then gan her beauty shine as brightest sky,
And burnt his beastly heart t' efforce her chastity.
Spenser, F. Q.

3. To strain; to exert with effort or vehemence. This word is not now used.
The palmer lent his ear into the noise,
To weet who called so importunely;
Again he heard a more efforced voice,
That bad him come in haste. Spenser, F. Q.

To EFFO'RM.† v. a. [efformo, Lat.] To make in any certain manner; to shape; to fashion.
Merciful and gracious, thou gavest us being, raising us from nothing, and efforming us after thy own image. Bp. Taylor.
Which corporeal sense, the earthly mind in man, —he saw efformed. More, Conj. Cab. p. 235.

EFFORMA'TION. n. s. [from efform.] The act of fashioning or giving form to.
Nature begins to set upon her work of efformation. More.
They pretend to solve phenomena, and to give an account of the production and efformation of the universe. Ray.

E'FFORT.† n. s. [effort, Fr. Dr. Johnson places the accent on the second syllable of the word; though the example, which he brings from Pope, presents it on the first. Yet Pope, in his imitations of Horace, uses the former accent: "Blackmore himself for any grand effort." However, the accent is now constant on the first syllable.] Struggle; strain; vehement action; laborious endeavour.
If, after having gained victories, we had made the same efforts as if we had lost them, France could not have withstood us.
Addison on the State of the War.
Though the same sun, with all diffusive rays,
Blush in the rose, and in the diamond blaze,
We prize the stronger effort of his pow'r,
And always set the gem above the flow'r. Pope.

EFFO'SSION. n. s. [effodio, Lat.] The act of digging up from the ground; deterration.
He set apart annual sums for the recovery of manuscripts, the effossion of coins, and the procuring of mummies. Arbuthnot.

EFFRA'IABLE. adj. [effroyable, Fr.] Dreadful; frightful; terrible. A word not used.
Pestilential symptoms declare nothing a proportionate efficient of their effraiable nature but arsenical fumes. Harvey.

To EFFRA'Y.* v. a. [old Fr. effrayer.] To affright; to scare.
Their dam upstart out of her den effraide,
And rushed forth. Spenser, F. Q. i. i. 16.

EFFRENA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. effrænatio.] Unruliness; unbridled rashness.
Cockeram.

E'FFRONTERY. n. s. [effronterie, Fr.] Impudence; shamelessness; contempt of reproach.
They could hardly contain themselves within one unworthy act, who had effrontery enough to commit or countenance it. K. Charles.
Others with ignorance and insufficiency have self-admiration and effrontery to set up themselves. Watts.
A bold man's effrontery, in company with women, must be owing to his low opinion of them, and his high one of himself. Richardson, Clarissa.

To EFFU'LGE.† v. n. [effulgeo, Lat.] To send forth lustre or effulgence. I know not that this word is used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the authority of Savage. But it had been repeatedly used by Thomson.
Bright at his call thy age of men effulg'd.
Thomson, Summer.
His eyes effulging a peculiar fire. Ib. Britannia.
On pure winter's eve
Gradual the stars effulge. Ib. Liberty, P. v.
The topaz charms the sight,
Like these effulging yellow streams of light.
Savage.

EFFU'LGENCE. n. s. [effulgeo, Lat.] Lustre; brightness; clarity; splendour.
On thee
Impress'd, the effulgence of his glory abides.
Milton, P. L.
Thy lustre, blest effulgence, can dispel
The clouds of errour, and the gloom of hell.
Blackmore.

EFFU'LGENT. adj. [effulgens, Lat.] Shining; bright; luminous.
How soon th' effulgent emanations fly
Through the blue gulph of interposing sky!
Blackmore.
The downward sun
Looks out effulgent, from amid the flash
Of broken clouds. Thomson, Spring.

To EFFU'ME.* v. a. [Lat. fumus, smoke.] To breathe or puff out. See EFFUMABILITY.
I can make this dog take as many whiffs as I list, and he shall retain or effume them at my pleasure.
B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

EFFUMABI'LITY. n. s. [fumus, Lat.] The quality of flying away, or vapouring in fumes. An useful word, but not adopted.
They seem to define mercury by volatility, or, if I may coin such a word, effumability. Boyle.

To EFFU'ND.* v. a. [Lat. effundo.] To pour out. A word, in old times, not uncommon, and retained in a song of great humour, towards the latter part of the seventeenth century. Now disused, though Scott and Ash present it in their vocabularies.
After this went forth the seconde angel of the seconde seal-openinge, effundinge his vial upon the sea.
Bale on the Revel. (1550,) P. ii. sign. i. ij. b.
If he his life effund
To utmost death, the high God hath design'd
That we both live.
More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 146.
Much sweat they spent in furious fight,
Much blood they did effund!
Ballad of St. George for England, P. ii.

To EFFU'SE. v. a. [effusus, Lat.] To pour out; to spill; to shed.
He fell, and, deadly pale,
Groan'd out his soul, with gushing blood effus'd.
Milton, P. L.
At last emerging from his nostrils wide,
And gushing mouth, effus'd the briny tide.
Pope, Odyss.

EFFU'SE. n. s. [from the verb.] Waste; effusion. Not used.
The air hath got into my deadly wounds,
And much effuse of blood doth make me faint.
Shakspeare.

EFFU'SE.* adj. [Lat. effusus.] Dissipated; extravagant.
Wherever the body is, yet the heart of fools is on effuse mirth.
Bp. Richardson, on the Old Test. (1655,) p. 321.
'Tis pride, or emptiness, applies the straw,
That tickles little minds to mirth effuse.
Young, Night Th. 8.

EFFU'SION. n. s. [effusio, Lat.]
1. The act of pouring out.
My heart hath melted at a lady's tears,
Being an ordinary inundation;
But this effusion of such manly drops,
This show'r blown up by tempest of the soul,
Startles mine eyes, and makes me more amaz'd.
Shakspeare.
Our blessed Lord commanded the representation of his death, and sacrifice on the cross, should be made by breaking bread and effusion of wine.
Bp. Taylor, Worthy Commun.
If the flood-gates of heaven were any thing distinct from the forty days' rain, their effusion, 'tis likely, was at this same time when the abyss was broken open. Burnet, Theory.
2. Waste; the act of spilling or shedding.
When there was but as yet one only family in the world, no means of instruction, human or divine, could prevent effusion of blood. Hooker.
Stop effusion of our Christian blood,
And 'stablish quietness. Shaksp. Hen. VI.
Yet shall she be restor'd, since publick good
For private int'rest ought not be withstood,
To save th' effusion of my people's blood.
Dryden, Homer.
3. The act of pouring out words.
Endless and senseless effusions of indigested prayers, oftentimes disgrace, in most unsufferable manner, the worthiest part of Christian duty towards God. Hooker.
4. Bounteous donation.
Such great force the gospel of Christ had then upon men's souls, melting them into that liberal effusion of all that they had.
Hammond on Fundamentals.
5. The thing poured out.
Purge me with the blood of my Redeemer, and I shall be clean; wash me with that precious effusion, and I shall be whiter than snow. K. Charles.

EFFU'SIVE.† adj. [from effuse.] Pouring out; dispersing.
The North-east spends his rage; he, now shut up
Within his iron cave, th' effusive South
Warms the wide air. Thomson, Spring.
Straight arose
These heavenly orbs, the glad abodes of life,
Effusive, kindled by his breath divine
Through endless forms of being.
Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. ii.

EFT.† n. s. [eɼeta, Sax. from the Greek ὄφις, a serpent, to which word our eft more nearly approaches. Arab. efai. See EFF.] A newt; an evet; a small kind of lizard that lives generally in the water.
Peacocks are beneficial to the places where they are kept, by clearing of them from snakes, adders, and efts, upon which they will live.
Mortimer's Husbandry.
The crododile of Egypt is the lizard of Italy, and the eft in our country. Nichols.

EFT.† adv. [eɼcan, Sax. to hasten; eɼt, soon, again, and afterwards, and likewise; in all which senses it is found in old English, but is now used in none.] Soon; quickly; speedily; shortly; again; moreover; afterwards.
Eft through the thick they heard one rudely rush,
With noise whereof he from his lofty steed
Down fell to ground, and crept into a bush,
To hide his coward head from dying dread.
Spenser, F. Q.
For notwithstanding that one soul was reft,
Yet, had the body not dismembred be, [been,]
It would have lived, and revived eft;
But, finding no fit seat, the lifeless corse it left.
Spenser, F. Q.

Yet seem'd the soil both faire and fruitful eft.
Spenser, F. Q

Eft, when years
More ripe as reason lent to choose our peers,
Ourselves in league of vowed love we knit.
Spenser, F. Q.

Quite consum'd with flame,
The idol is of that eternal maid;
For so at least I have preserv'd the same,
With hands profane, from being eft betray'd.
Fairfax.

E'FTSOONS.† adv. [eꝼt and ꝑoen.] Soon afterwards; in a short time; again. An obsolete word; formed, as it seems, by the conjunction of two words of the same meaning. Dr. Johnson. — Although both words denote posteriority as to time, they are by no means synonymous. Soen gives the idea of brevity; but eft, i. e. after, respects the future quite indefinitely. It is immediately formed from A. Sax. eft-sona, citò post: but it is also rendered, iterum, deintegro, rursus, "forthwith or again," Somner. Dr. Jamieson.

He in their stead eftsoons placed Englishmen, who possessed all their lands. Spenser on Ireland.

Eftsoons the nymphs, which now had flowers their fill,
Run all in haste to see that silver brood.
Spenser, Prothalam.

The Germans deadly hated the Turks, whereof it was to be thought that new wars would eftsoons ensue. Knolles, Hist.

Eftsoons, O sweetheart kind, my love repay,
And all the year shall then be holyday.
Gay, Pastorals.

E. G. [exempli gratia.] For the sake of an instance or example.

E'GER. n. s. [See EAGRE.] An impetuous or irregular flood or tide.

From the peculiar disposition of the earth at the bottom, wherein quick excitations are made, may arise those egers and flows in some estuaries and rivers; as is observable about Trent and Humber in England. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To EGE'RMINATE.* v. n. [Lat. egermino.] To spring or bud out. Cockeram. This old word has been revived in the terms of modern botany.

To EGE'ST.† v. a. [egero, Lat.] To throw out food at the natural vents.

Divers creatures sleep all the winter; as the bear, the hedge-hog, the bat, and the bee: these all wax fat when they sleep, and egest not.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The nature of man is proner to imbibe noxious things than to egest them.
Bp. Gauden, Hierasp. (1653,) p. 451.

EGE'STION.† n. s. [egestus, Lat.] The act of throwing out the digested food at the natural vents.

Neither the procuring of ready concoction, nor the avoiding of wearisome labouring, nor the entertaining of moderate walking, nor the disposition unto liberal recreation, nor the benefit of facile and soluble egestion; no, nor any thing else that can preserve health unto us, if God himself do not sustain us.
Fotherby, Atheom. (1626,) p. 247.

The animal soul or spirits manage as well their spontaneous actions as the natural or involuntary exertions of digestion, egestion, and circulation.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To confute your learned labours, is but to take wing, like beetles, from your egestions.
Wallis, Correct. of Hobbes, p. 3.

EGG. n s [œȝ, Sax.; ough, Erse.]

1. That which is laid by feathered and some other animals, from which their young is produced.

An egg was found, having lain many years at the bottom of a moat, where the earth had somewhat overgrown it; and this egg was come to the hardness of a stone, and the colours of the white and yolk perfect. Bacon.

Eggs are perhaps the highest, most nourishing, and exalted of all animal food, and most indigestible. Arbuthnot.

2. The spawn or sperm of other creatures.

Therefore think him as the serpent's egg,
Which, hatch'd, would, as his kind, grow mischievous. Shakspeare.

Every insect of each different kind,
In its own egg, cheer'd by the solar rays,
Organs involv'd and latent life displays.
Blackmore.

3. Any thing fashioned in the shape of an egg.

There was taken a great glass-bubble with a long neck, such as chymists are wont to call a philosophical egg. Boyle.

To EGG.† v. a. [eggia, Icelandick; egger, Danish, to provoke; eꝼꝼian, Sax. In Cheshire, and in some other parts, pronounced agg; and used in the sense of exciting persons to quarrel.] To incite; to instigate; to provoke to action: for this, edge is, I think, sometimes ignorantly used.

They that eggen or consenten to the sinne, bin partners of the sinne, and of the dampnation of the sinner. Chaucer, Parson's Tale.

All kinds of lust and luxury, and all things else which do egg forward and stir up fire in men to wantonness, he forbiddeth as severely as adultery itself. Trans. of Bullenger's Serm. p. 234.

[She] did egg him on to tell
How fair she was. Warner, Albion's England.

Study becomes pleasant to him who is pursuing his genius, and whose ardour of inclination eggs him forward, and carrieth him through every obstacle. Derham, Phys. Theol.

E'GGER.* n. s. [from the verb.] One who incites others to an action; "an egger-on." Sherwood.

E'GGERY.* See EYRY.

E'GGING.* n. s. [from the verb.] Incitement; eggment is also used by Chaucer instead of it.

Tell me, how curst an egging, with a sting
Of lust, do these unwily dances bring.
Cleaveland, Poems, &c. p. 105.

E'GGLER.* n. s. One who goes about the country collecting eggs for sale. Brockett's N. C. Words.

EGILO'PICAL.* adj. [from ægilops.] Affected with the ægilops, or tending to it. Coles.

E'GILOPS.* See ÆGILOPS.

E'GIS.* See ÆGIS.

E'GLANTINE. n. s. [esglantier, Fr.] A species of rose; sweet-briar.

O'er canopied with luscious woodbine,
With sweet musk roses, and with eglantine.
Shakspeare.

The leaf of eglantine, not to slander,
Outsweeten'd not thy breath. Shaks. Cymb.

Sycamores with eglantine were spread,
A hedge about the sides, a covering over head.
Dryden.

E'GLOGUE.* See ÆGLOGUE.

E'GOISM, or E'GOMISM.* n. s. [from ego, Lat.] The opinion of those, who profess themselves uncertain of every thing but their own existence. See EGOIST. "Une espèce de Pyrrhonisme insensé, nommé l'Egomisme, où chacun se croit le seul être existent." M. Ramsay, Disc. sur la Mythologie, P. I.

That kind of scepticism called egomism.
Baxter, on the Soul, (1737,) ii. 21.

E'GOIST.* n. s. [from ego, Lat.] A sceptick; one who pretends to doubt of every thing but his own existence.

Hitherto Des Cartes was uncertain of every thing but his own existence, and the existence of the operations and ideas of his own mind. Some of his disciples, it is said, remained at this stage of his system, and got the name of Egoists. Reid.

E'GOTISM. n. s. [from ego, Lat.] The fault committed in writing by the frequent repetition of the word ego, or I; too frequent mention of a man's self, in writing or conversation.

The most violent egotism which I have met with, in the course of my reading, is that of Cardinal Wolsey's; ego et rex meus, I and my king.
Spectator.

E'GOTIST. n. s. [from ego.] One that is always repeating the word ego, I; a talker of himself.

A tribe of egotists, for whom I have always had a mortal aversion, are the authors of memoirs, who are never mentioned in any works but their own. Spectator.

EGOTI'STICAL.* adj. [from egotist.] Self-conceited; praising one's self.

To E'GOTIZE. v. n. [from ego.] To talk much of one's self.

EGRE'GIOUS.† adj. [egregius, Lat. i. e. e grege, separated or selected from the flock. See the second sense.]

1. Eminent; remarkable; extraordinary.

If any person of good desert shall wilfully be a delinquent, the same man ought, notwithstanding his former service, to be punished. Horatio, that in combat gained the victory against the Albani, having insolently slain his own sister, was, notwithstanding his egregious act and the fresh memory thereof, called into trial of his life, and with great difficulty obtained pardon.
Ralegh, Arts of Empire, ch. 26.

Voluntarily therefore and of right we congratulate this accession of dignity to your egregious merits, and the most worthy guerdon of so much virtue. Milton, Lett. of State.

He might be able to adorn this present age, and furnish history with the records of egregious exploits, both of art and valour.
More against Atheism.

One to empire born;
Egregious prince! whose manly childhood shew'd
His mingled parents, and portended joy
Unspeakable. Philips.

An egregious and pregnant instance how far virtue surpasses ingenuity. Woodward.

2. Eminently bad; remarkably vicious. This is the usual sense, Dr. Johnson says. This remark requires further notice. In the old dictionary of Huloet, egregious is defined by excellent only. In that of Cockeram, it has the same definition; with this addition, "sometimes vile, base." At the close of the sixteenth century, however, the bad sense of the word seems to have been common; for Gabriel Harvey having used the phrase "an egregious argument," he is thus reprimanded by Nashe, in Four Letters Confuted, 1593: "Egregious is never used in English but in the extreme ill part." Yet Ralegh, and Milton, as I have shewn in the additions to the first definition, considered the word as meaning eminently good, or illustrious, or famous.

We may be bold to conclude, that these last times, for insolence, pride, and egregious contempt of all good order, are the worst. Hooker, Pref.

Ah me, most credulous fool!
Egregious murtherer. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Reader, try by this the egregious impudence of this fellow.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Marr. Clergy, p. 194.

And hence the egregious wizzard shall foredoom
The fate of Louis, and the fall of Rome. Pope.

EGRE'GIOUSLY. adv. [from egregious.] Eminently; shamefully.

Make the Moor thank me, love me, and reward me,
For making him egregiously an ass,
And practising upon his peace and quiet,
Even to madness. Shakspeare, Othello.

He discovered that, besides the extravagance of every article, he had been egregiously cheated.
Arbuthnot, John Bull.

EGRE'GIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from egregious.] The state of being eminent. Sherwood.

E'GRESS.† n. s. [egressus, Lat. Milton places the accent on the last syllable of the word. But it is now constantly on the first.] The power or act of going out of any place; departure.

Thou shalt have egress and regress.
Shakspeare, Merr. W. of Windsor.

In a nunnery a maid alone, if she cannot have egress, before her window you shall have an old woman, or some prating gossip, tell her some tales of this clerk, and that monk, describing or commending some young gentleman unto her.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 503.

Gates of burning adamant,
Barr'd over us, prohibit all egress. Milton, P. L.

This water would have been locked up within the earth, and its egress utterly debarred, had the strata of stone and marble remained continuous.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

EGRE'SSION.† n. s. [egressio, Lat.] The act of going out.

So thou may'st have a triumphal egression.
B. Jonson, Dev. an Ass.

In the days and periods of their joy and festival egressions, they chose to throw some ashes into their chalices, some sober remembrances of their fatal period. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ii. § 1.

The vast number of troops is expressed in the swarms; their tumultuous manner of issuing out of their ships, and the perpetual egression, which seemed without end, are imaged in the bees pouring out. Pope.

E'GRET.† n. s.

1. A fowl of the heron kind, with red legs.
Bailey.

2. A feather of the fowl.

Of the same work were their bases; their headtures of flowers, mixed with silver and gold, with some sprigs of egrets among; and, from the top of their dressing, a thin veil hanging down.
B. Jonson, Masques.

E'GRIMONY.* n. s.

1. The herb agrimony, formerly written egrimony. See AGRIMONY. Cotgrave.

2. Great sorrow; grief. [Lat. ægrimonia.] Obsolete. Cockeram.

E'GRIOT. n. s. [aigret, Fr.; perhaps from aigre, sour.] A species of cherry.

The cœur-cherry, which inclineth more to white, is sweeter than the red; but the egriot is more sour. Bacon.

EGY'PTIANS.* n. s. [from Egypt.] Inhabitants or natives of Egypt; but the word is here noticed as being formerly a phrase applied to gipsies; as, in Sherwood's old dictionary, "a counterfeit Egyptian, v. Gypsie." So, in old Fr. Egiptiens, "certains gueux errans et vagabonds, qui vivent des larcins." Roq. See GIPSY.

To EJA'CULATE. v. a. [ejaculor, Lat.] To throw; to shoot; to dart out.

Being rooted so little way in the skin, nothing near so deeply as the quills of fowls, they are the more easily ejaculated. Grew, Museum.

The mighty magnet from the centre darts
This strong, though subtile force, through all the parts:
Its active rays, ejaculated thence,
Irradiate all the wide circumference. Blackmore.

EJACULA'TION.† n. s. [from ejaculate.]

1. The act of darting or throwing out.

There seemeth to be acknowledged, in the act of envy, an ejaculation or irradiation of the eye.
Bacon, Ess.

There is to be observed, in those dissolutions which will not easily incorporate, what the effects are; as the ebullition, the precipitation to the bottom, the ejaculation towards the top, the suspension in the midst, and the like. Bacon.

2. A short prayer darted out occasionally, without solemn retirement.

In your dressing let there be ejaculations fitted to the several actions of dressing; as at washing your hands, pray God to cleanse your soul from sin. Bp. Taylor, Guide to Devotion.

Which prayers of our Saviour, Matt. xxvi. 39, and others of like brevity, are properly such as we call ejaculations; an elegant similitude from a dart, or arrow, shot or thrown out; and such an one, we know, of a yard long, will fly farther, and strike deeper, than one of twenty.
South, Serm. ii. 150.

EJA'CULATORY.† adj. [from ejaculate.]

1. Throwing out; having power to cast out.

Seminary vessels both preparatory and ejaculatory. Smith, Portr. of Old Age, p. 117.

2. Suddenly darted out; uttered in short sentences.

The continuance of this posture might incline to ease and drowsiness; they used it rather upon some short ejaculatory prayers, than in their larger devotions. Duppa, Devotions.

3. Sudden; hasty.

We are not to value ourselves upon the merit of ejaculatory repentances, that take us by fits and starts. L'Estrange.

EI'DER.* } n. s. [Swed. eider.] The EIDER-DOWN. } down of a Gothland duck, called eider. See Tracts by B. Stillingfleet, p. 18.

From Norway, Iceland, and Greenland, — a vast quantity of the down, known by the name of eider or edder, which these birds furnish, is annually imported. Its remarkably light, elastick, and warm qualities make it highly esteemed, as a stuffing for coverlets, by such whom age or infirmities render unable to support the weight of common blankets. The down is produced from the breast of the bird in the breeding season.
Pennant, Brit. Zool. p. 581.

To EJE'CT. v. a. [ejicio, ejectum, Lat.]

1. To throw out; to cast forth; to void.

Infernal lightning sallies from his throat!
Ejected sparks upon the billows float! Sandys.

The heart, as said, from its contracted cave,
On the left side ejects the bounding wave.
Blackmore.

Tears may spoil the eyes, but not wash away the affliction; sighs may exhaust the man, but not eject the burthen. South.

2. To throw out or expel from an office or possession.

It was the force of conquest; force with force
Is well ejected, when the conquer'd can.
Milton, S. A.

The French king was again ejected when our king submitted to the church. Dryden.

3. To expel; to drive away; to dismiss with hatred.

We are peremptory to dispatch
This viperous traitor; to eject him hence,
Were but our danger; and to keep him here,
Our certain death; therefore it is decreed
He dies to-night. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. To cast away; to reject.

To have ejected whatsoever the church doth make account of, be it never so harmless in itself, and of never so ancient continuance, without any other crime to charge it with, than only that it hath been the apt thereof to be used by the church of Rome, and not to be commanded in the word of God, could not have been defended. Hooker.

Will any man say, that if the words whoring and drinking were by parliament ejected out of the English tongue, we should all awake next morning chaste and temperate? Swift.

EJE'CTION.† n. s. [ejectio, Lat.]

1. The act of casting out; expulsion.

Our first parent comforted himself, after his ejection out of Paradise, with the foresight of that blessed seed of the woman, which should be exhibited almost four thousand years after.
Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 30.

These stories are founded on the ejection of the fallen angels from heaven. Broome.

2. [In physick.] The discharge of any thing by vomit, stool, or any other emunctory. Quincy.

A melancholy patient imagined a mouse had slipped down his throat. The doctor, perceiving his fancy to be strongly perverted, concurred with him that it was a mouse; — and that he should, upon a little physick taken, see the return of him to his great joy. The patient desired his dose; and, within a day or two, the apothecary gave him a slight vomit, which wrought very well; but, at the first and second strains, no mouse appeared; whereat the apothecary sware, he smelt him coming by the scent of the ejection!
Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. p. 158.

EJE'CTMENT.† n. s. [from eject.]

1. A legal writ by which any inhabitant of a house, or tenant of an estate, is commanded to depart.

2. Expulsion in general.

A superstitious worship of God, returning home in triumph from a six years' exile and ejectment.
Bp. Fleetwood, Four Serm. (1712,) p. 29.

EIGH. interj. An expression of sudden delight.

EIGHT.* n. s. [Sax. ıʒʒað, an island.] An island in a river.

Some do also plant osiers on their eights, like quicksets. Evelyn.

EIGHT. adj. [eahta, Saxon; ahta, Gothick; acht, Scottish.] Twice four. A word of number.

This island contains eight score and eight miles in circuit. Sandys, Journey.

EIGHTH.† adj. [Sax. ehteoða.] Next in order to the seventh; the ordinal of eight.

Another yet? — A seventh! I'll see no more;
And yet the eighth appears! Shaksp. Macbeth.

In the eighth month should be the reign of Saturn. Bacon.

I stay reluctant seven continu'd years,
And water her ambrosial couch with tears;
The eighth, she voluntary moves to part,
Or urg'd by Jove, or her own changeful heart.
Pope.

EI'GHTEEN. adj. [eight and ten.] Twice nine.

He can't take two from twenty, for his heart,
And leave eighteen. Shakspeare, Cymb.

If men naturally lived but twenty years, we should be satisfied if they died about eighteen; and yet eighteen years now are as long as eighteen years would be then. Bp. Taylor.

EI'GHTEENTH. adj. [from eighteen.] The next in order to the seventeenth; twice ninth.

In the eighteenth year of Jeroboam reigned Abijam. 1 Kings.

EI'GHTFOLD. adj. [eight and fold.] Eight times the number or quantity.

EI'GHTHLY. adv. [from eighth.] In the eighth place.

Eighthly, living creatures have voluntary motion, which plants have not. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

EI'GHTIETH. adj. [from eighty.] The next in order to the seventy-ninth; eighth tenth.

Some balances are so exact as to be sensibly turned with the eightieth part of a grain. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

EI'GHTSCORE. adj. [eight and score.] Eight times twenty; an hundred and sixty.

What! keep a week away? seven days and nights? Eightscore eight hours? and lovers' absent hours,
More tedious than the dial eightscore times?
Oh weary reckoning! Shakspeare, Othello.

EI'GHTY. adj. [eight and ten.] Eight times ten; fourscore.

Eighty odd years of sorrow have I seen,
And each hour's joy wreck'd with a week of teen. Shakspeare.

Among all other climactericks three are most remarkable; that is, seven times seven, or forty-nine; nine times nine, or eighty-one; and seven times nine, or the year sixty-three, which is conceived to carry with it the most considerable fatality. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EIGNE. adj. [aisne, Fr.] [In law.] Denotes the eldest or first born. Here it signifies unalienable, as being entailed.

It happeneth not seldom, that, to avoid the yearly oath, for averment of the continuance of some estate for life, which is eigne, and not subject to forfeiture for the alienation that cometh after it, the party will offer to sue a pardon uncompelled before the time; in all which, some mitigation of the uttermost value may well and worthily be offered. Bacon.

EILD.* See ELD.

EI'SEL.† n. s. [Sax. eirl and airil; and also old Fr. aisil, vinegar. Tres. de Borel. And so, in old Eng. aysel, used by Wicliffe.] Vinegar; verjuice; any acid. An old word.

Cast in thy mind
How thou resemblest Christ, as with sowre poison,
If thou paine thy taste; remember therewithall
How Christ for thee tasted eisel and gall. Sir T. More.

Like a willing patient, I will drink
Potions of eysel, 'gainst my strong infection. Shakspeare, Sonnet.

EI'THER.† pron. [ægðer, Saxon; auther, Scottish; aithau, Goth. atha, Icel. ἑτερος, Greek.]

1. Which soever of the two; whether one or the other.

Lepidus flatters both,
Of both is flatter'd; but he neither loves,
Nor either cares for him. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

So like in arms these champions were,
As they had been a very pair;
So that a man would almost swear,
That either had been either. Drayton, Nymph.

Goring made a fast friendship with Digby, either of them believing he could deceive the other. Clarendon.

I do not ask whether bodies do so exist, that the motion of one body cannot really be without the motion of another: to determine this either way, is to beg the question for or against a vacuum. Locke.

2. Each; both. [Either is often used improperly instead of each; as, "Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either (each) of them his censer." Each signifies both of them, taken distinctly or separately; either properly signifies only the one, or the other, of them, taken disjunctively. For which reason the like expression in the following passages seems also improper: "They crucified two other with him, on either side one, and Jesus in the midst." St. John, xix. 18. "On either side of the river was there the tree of life." Rev. xxii. 2. Lowth's Grammar.]

In the process of natural beings, there seem some to be creatures placed, as it were, in the confines of several provinces, and participating something of either. Hale.

Sev'n times the sun has either tropick view'd,
The winter banish'd, and the spring renew'd. Dryden, Virg.

3. It is used sometimes of more than two; any one of a certain number.

4. Any of an indeterminate number, as in the following passage.

Henry VIII. Francis I. and Charles V. were so provident, as scarce a palm of ground could be gotten by either of the three, but that the other two would set the balance of Europe upright again. Bacon.

EI'THER.† adv. [from the noun.] A distributive adverb, answered by or; either the one or. So far Dr. Johnson. But this is not always the case. It sometimes stands by itself, in the sense of or. Of this construction the translators of the New Testament have given several instances, which may be seen in the present Version. In the first and second instances which follow, Wicliffe's word is or; in the last, either. "Either what woman having ten pieces of silver." St. Luke, xv. 8. "Not as though I had already attained, either were already perfect." Philipp. iii. 12. "Can the fig-tree, my brethren, bear olive-berries; either a vine, figs?" James, iii. 12.

We never heard of any ship that had been seen to arrive upon any shore of Europe; no nor of either the East or West Indies. Bacon, New Atlantis.

What perils shall we find,
If either place, or time, or other course,
Cause us to alter th' order now assigned? Daniel.

Either your brethren have miserably deceived us, or power confers virtue. Swift to Pope.

EJULA'TION.† n. s. [ejulatio, Latin.] Outcry; lamentation; moan; wailing.

There's ejulation, clamour, weeping, wailing. Heywood's Hierarch. of Angels, (1635,) p. 347.

Instead of hymns and praises, he breaks out into ejulations and effeminate wailings. Government of the Tongue.

With dismal groans
And ejulation, in the pangs of death,
Some call for aid. Philips.

To EKE.† v. a. [eacan, Saxon; aukan, Goth. auka, Icel. to increase. Spenser usually writes the word eek. See To EEK.]

1. To increase.

The little strength that I have, I would it were with you. —— And mine to eke out hers. Shakspeare, As you like it.

2. To supply; to fill up deficiencies.

Still be kind,
And eke out our performance with your mind. Shakspeare.

Your ornaments hung all,
On some patch'd doghole ek'd with ends of wall. Pope.

3. To protract; to lengthen.

I speak too long; but 'tis to piece the time,
To eke it, and to draw it out in length,
To stay you from election. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

4. To spin out by useless additions. [In this sense it seems borrowed from the use of our old poets, who put eke into their lines, when they wanted a syllable.]

EKE.† conjunction. [Sax. eac; Goth. auk; Icel. och; from their respective verbs. See To EKE.] Also; likewise; beside; moreover.

If any strength we have, it is to ill:
But all the good is God's, both power and eke will. Spenser, F. Q.

Now if 'tis chiefly in the heart
That courage does itself exert,
'Twill be prodigious hard to prove,
That this is eke the throne of love. Prior.

EKE.* n. s. [from the verb.] An addition, or augmentation.

Either the words in Italicks are virtually implied in the Hebrew, or they are not. In the former case, they are a real part of the text, and should be printed in the same character: in the latter they are generally ill assorted and clumsy ekes, that may well be spared; and which often disfigure the narration under pretence of correcting it.

Geddes, Prosp. of a New Tr. of the H. Bible, p. 95.

E'KING.* n. s. Increase. See EEKING.

*E-LA. n. s. The highest note in the scale of musick.

Why this is above E-la! Beaum. and Fl. Wit without Money.

To ELA'BORATE.† v. a. [old Fr. elaborer; Lat. elaboro.]

1. To produce with labour; "to do a thing with great pains." Cockeram. Thus the plays of Ben Jonson are styled, by a contemporary applauder, "artcontrived, elaborated plays." Verses pref. to Jonson's Works.

They in full joy elaborate a sigh. Young.

2. To heighten and improve by successive endeavours or operations.

The sap is diversified, and still more elaborated and exalted, as it circulates through the vessels of the plant. Arbuthnot.

ELA'BORATE. adj. [elaboratus, Lat.] Finished with great diligence; performed with great labour.

Formalities of extraordinary zeal and piety are never more studied and elaborate than when politicians most agitate desperate designs. King Charles.

At least, on her bestow'd
Too much of ornament, of outward shew
Elaborate; of inward, less exact. Milton, P. L.

Man is thy theme, his virtue or his rage
Drawn to the life in each elab'rate page. Waller.

Consider the difference between elaborate discourses upon important occasions, delivered to parliaments, and a plain sermon intended for the common people. Swift.

ELA'BORATELY. adv. [from elaborate.] Laboriously; diligently; with great study or labour.

Politick conceptions, so elaborately formed and wrought, and grown at length ripe for delivery, do yet prove abortive. South.

Some coloured powders, which painters use, may have their colours a little changed, by being very elaborately and finely ground. Newton, Opticks.

I will venture once to incur the censure of some persons, for being elaborately trifling. Bentley.

It is there elaborately shewn, that patents are good. Swift.

ELA'BORATENESS.* n. s. [from elaborate.] Completion by successive endeavours.

It [the Old Bachelor] is apparently composed with great elaborateness of dialogue, and incessant ambition of wit. Johnson, Life of Congreve.

ELABORA'TION.† n. s. [Fr. elaboration.] Improvement by successive operations.

To what purpose is there such an apparatus of vessels for the elaboration of the sperm and eggs; such a tedious process of generation and nutrition? Ray.

ELA'BORATORY.* n. s. [Fr. elaboratoire, Cotgrave.] A chymist's work-room. See LABORATORY.

He [Mr. Sthael] built his elaboratory in an old hall or refectory. — In the year following he was called away to London, and became operator to the Royal Society; and, continuing there till 1670, he returned to Oxon, and had several classes successively. — The chymical club concluded; and A. W. paid Mr. Sthael 30 shillings, having, in the beginning of the class, given 30 shillings beforehand. Life of A. Wood, sub ann. 1668.

ELA'MPING.* adj. [Ital. lampante. Spenser uses lamping. The present word has been converted by the modern editor of Giles Fletcher's fine poem into light spreading wide.] Shining; giving light. Not now in use.

As when the cheerful sun, elamping wide,
Glads all the world.
G. Fletcher, Christ's Victory, C. 1.

To ELA'NCE.† v. a. [elancer, French.] To throw out; to dart; to cast as a dart. See LANCE.

While thy unerring hand elanc'd
Another, and another dart, the people
Joyfully repeated Io! Prior.

Harsh words, that once elanc'd, must ever fly
Irrevocable. Prior.

Elance thy thought, and think of more than man. Young, Night Th. 9.

To ELA'PSE. v. n. [elapsus, Lat.] To pass away; to glide away; to run out without notice.

There is a docible season, a learning time in youth, which, suffered to elapse, and no foundation laid, seldom returns. Richardson, Clarissa.

ELA'STICAL. } adj. [from ἐλάω.] Having
ELA'STICK. } the power of returning to the form from which it is distorted or withheld; springy; having the power of a spring.

By what elastick engines did she rear
The starry roof, and roll the orbs in air. Blackmore.

If the body is compact, and bends or yields inward to pression, without any sliding of its parts, it is hard and elastick, returning to its figure with a force rising from the mutual attraction of its parts. Newton, Opticks.

The most common diversities of human constitutions arise from the solids, as to their different degrees of strength and tension, in some being too lax and weak, in others too elastick and strong. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

A fermentation must be excited in some assignable place, which may expand itself by its elastical power, and break through where it meets with the weakest resistance. Bentley.

ELASTI'CITY.† n. s. [Fr. elasticité.] Force in bodies, by which they endeavour to restore themselves to the posture from whence they were displaced by any external force. Quincy.

A lute-string will bear a hundred weight without rupture; but, at the same time, cannot exert its elasticity: take away fifty, and it immediately raiseth the weight. Arbuthnot.

Me emptiness and dulness could inspire,
And were my elasticity and fire. Pope.

ELA'TE. † adj. [elatus, Lat. This is one of our oldest words: though Dr. Johnson has found no earlier usage of it than that by Pope. It is also in our old lexicography for "lifted up, advanced, proud, lofty." Bullokar, ed. 1656.] Flushed with success; elevated with prosperity; lofty; haughty.

This king of kinges proud was and elate.
Chaucer, Monk's Tale.

Oh, thoughtless mortals, ever blind to fate!
Too soon dejected, and too soon elate. Pope.

I of mind elate, and scorning fear,
Thus with new taunts insult the monster's ear.
Pope, Odyssey.

To ELA'TE.† v. a. [from the adjective.]

1. To elevate with success; to puff up with prosperity; "to make proud."
Cockeram.

Though elated by his victory, he still maintained the appearance of moderation. Hume, Hist.

2. To exalt; to heighten. An unusual sense.

Or truth, divinely breaking on his mind,
Elates his being, and unfolds his power. Thomson.

ELA'TEDLY.* adv. [from elated.] In a conceited manner, arising from success.

Nero, we find, defiled most in the foulest mires of luxury; and where do we find any so elatedly proud, or so unjustly rapacious as he? Feltham, Disc. on St. Luke, xiv. 20.

ELA'TER.* n. s. [from elate.] One who, or that which, elates.

Why should there not be such an elater or spring in the soul? Cudworth, Serm. (1676,) p. 82.

ELATE'RIUM. n. s. [Latin.] An inspissated juice, light, of a friable texture, and an acrid and pungent taste. It is procured from the fruit of the wild cucumber. It is a very violent and rough purge. Hill.

ELA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. elation, pride.]

1. Haughtiness proceeding from success; pride of prosperity. Bullokar.

God began to punish this vain elation of mind, by withdrawing his favours. Atterbury.

2. A carrying forth, from the elatio of the Romans; the conveyance of the dead to the grave. This meaning, which is of modern usage, is not likely to be adopted.

E'LBOW. n. s. [elboȝa, Saxon.]

1. The next joint or curvature of the arm below the shoulder.

In some fair evening, on your elbow laid,
You dream of triumphs in the rural shade. Pope.

2. Any flexure, or angle.

Fruit trees, or vines, set upon a wall between elbows or buttresses of stone, ripen more than upon a plain wall. Bacon.

3. To be at the ELBOW. To be near; to be at hand.

Straight will he come;
Wear thy good rapier bare, and put it home:
Quick, quick; fear nothing, I'll be at thy elbow.
Shakspeare, Othello.

To E'LBOW.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To push with the elbow.

One elbows him, one justles in the shoal.
Dryden, Juv.

2. To push; to drive to distance; to encroach upon.

Kent. The poor distress'd Lear — by no means
Will yield to see his daughter.
Gent. Why, good sir?
Kent. A sovereign shame so elbows him.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

It thrusts and stretches out,
And elbows all the kingdoms round about. Dryd.

If fortune takes not off this boy betimes,
He'll make mad work and elbow out his neighbours.
Dryden.

To E'LBOW.† v. n.

1. To jut out in angles. Dict.

2. To clash; to justle; to be quarrelsome.

He that grows hot and turbid, that elbows in all his philosophick disputes, must needs be very proud of his own sufficiencies, or very ignorant of the science he stickles for.
Mannyngham, Disc. (1681,) p. 50.

Purse-proud, elbowing Insolence.
Grainger, Ode on Solitude.

ELBOWCHA'IR. n. s. [elbow and chair.] A chair with arms to support the elbows.

Swans and elbowchairs, in the opera of Diocletian, have danced upon the English stage with good success. Gay.

E'LBOWROOM. n. s. [elbow and room.] Room to stretch out the elbows on each side; perfect freedom from confinement.

Now my soul hath elbowroom;
It would not out at windows nor at doors. Shaks.

The natives are not so many, but that there may be elbowroom enough for them, and for the adventives also. Bacon.

A politician must put himself into a state of liberty to provide elbowroom for conscience to have its full play in. South.

ELD.† n. s. [ealð, Sax. eld, Scottish, Dr. Johnson says. He might have added eild, as it is also sometimes found in our old writers. Mr. Horne Tooke derives this word from "the Sax. verb ỳlðan or ılðan, to remain, to stay, to continue, to last, to endure, to delay, to defer;" of which he says, it is the past participle. But may it not be the participle of the Sax. eȝlian, to ail, to trouble, to weary? Our ancient lexicography says, "Eld, eled or worne, vetustus, inveteratus, elde man or woman, senex." Prompt. Parv. Yet it must be confessed, that we had formerly the verb, to eld, Sax. ỳlðan, senescere; which Chaucer employs both as an active and neuter verb.]

1. Old age; decrepitude.

Her heart with joy unwonted inly swell'd,
As feeling wonderous comfort in her weaker eld.
Spenser, F. Q.

Thy blessed youth
Becomes as aged, and doth beg the alms
Of palsied eld. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

He thought it touch'd his deity full near,
If likewise he some fair one wedded not,
Thereby to wipe away th' infamous blot
Of long uncoupled bed and chiklless eld.
Milton, Ode.

2. Old people; persons worn out with years.

They count him of the green-hair'd eld.
Chapman.

E'LDER. adj. The comparative of eld, now changed to old. [ealb, ealbop, Saxon.] Surpassing another in years; survivor; having the privileges of primogeniture: opposed to younger.

They bring the comparison of younger daughters conforming themselves in attire to their elder sisters. Hooker.

Let still the woman take
An elder than herself; so wears she to him,
So sways she level in her husband's heart. Shaksp.

How I firmly am resolv'd, you know;
That is, not to bestow my youngest daughter,
Before I have a husband for the elder. Shaks.

Among the Lacedemonians, the chief magistrates, as they were, so they are called, elder men. Ralegh, Hist.

The elder of his children comes to acquire a degree of authority among the younger, by the same means the father did among them. Temple.

Fame's high temple stands;
Stupendous pile! not rear'd by mortal hands!
Whate'er proud Rome, or artful Greece beheld,
Or elder Babylon, its frame excell'd. Pope.

E'LDERS. n. s. plur. [from elder.]

1. Persons whose age gives them a claim to credit and reverence.

Rebuke not an elder, but intreat him as a father, and the younger men as brethren. 1 Tim. v. 1.

Our elders say,
The barren, touched in this holy chase,
Shake off their steril curse. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

The blushing youth their virtuous awe disclose,
And from their seats the reverend elders rose. Sandys.

2. Ancestors.

Says the goose, If it will be no better, e'en carry your head as your elders have done before you. L'Estrange.

I lose my patience, and I own it too,
Where works are censur'd, not as bad, but new;
While, if our elders break all reason's laws,
Those fools demand, not pardon, but applause. Pope.

3. Those who are older than others.

Many nations are very superstitious and diligent observers of old customs, which they received by continual tradition from their parents, by recording of their bards and chronicles, in their songs, and by daily use and ensample of their elders. Spenser on Ireland.

At the board, and in private, it very well becometh children's innocency to pray, and their elders to say Amen. Hooker.

4. [Among the Jews.] Rulers of the people.

5. [In the New Testament.] Ecclesiasticks.

6. [Among presbyterians.] Laymen introduced into the kirk-polity in sessions, presbyteries, synods, and assemblies.

Flea-bitten synod, an assembly brew'd
Of clerks and elders ana; like the rude
Chaos of presbytery, where laymen ride
With the tame woolpack clergy by their side. Cleaveland.

E'LDER. n. s. [ellaja, Saxon; sambucus.] The name of a tree.

The branches are full of pith, having but little wood; the flowers are monopetalous, divided into several segments, and expand in form of a rose: these are, for the most part, collected into an umbel, and are succeeded by soft succulent berries, having three seeds in each. It may be easily propagated from cuttings or seeds. Miller.

Look for thy reward
Amongst the nettles at the elder tree,
Which overshades the mouth of that same pit. Shakspeare.

E'LDERLY. adj. [from elder.] No longer young; bordering upon old age.

I have a race of orderly elderly people of both sexes at command, who can bawl when I am deaf, and tread softly when I am giddy. Swift to Pope.

E'LDERSHIP. n. s. [from elder.]

1. Seniority; primogeniture.

The world, while it had scarcity of people, underwent no other dominion than paternity and eldership. Ralegh.

That all should Alibech adore, 'tis true;
But some respect is to my birthright due:
My claim to her by eldership I prove.
Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Nor were the eldership
Of Artaxerxes worth our least of fears,
If Memnon's interest did not prop his cause. Rowe.

2. Presbytery; ecclesiastical senate; kirk-session.

That controversy sprang up between Beza and Erastus, about the matter of excommunications; whether there ought to be in all churches an eldership, having power to excommunicate, and a part of that eldership to be of necessity certain chosen out from amongst the laity. Hooker, Preface.

E'LDEST. adj. The superlative of eld, now changed to old. [ealb, ealbop, ealbyrce, Saxon.]

1. The oldest; that has the right of primogeniture.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The mother's and her eldest daughter's grace,
It seems, had brib'd him to prolong their space.
Dryden.

2. The person that has lived most years.

Eldest parents signifies either the oldest men and women that have had children, or those who have longest had issue. Locke.

E'LDING.* n. s. [Sax. æleb, fire; Icel. eldr, the same.] Wood and sticks for burning; fuel in general. A northern word: now usually written and pronounced eldin: formerly elding. See Yorkshire Gloss. 1697.

ELECAMPA'NE. n. s. [helenium, Lat.] A plant, named also starwort. Botanists enumerate thirty species of this plant. Miller.

The Germans have a method of candying elecampane root like ginger, to which they prefer it, and call it German spice. Hill, Materia Medica.

To ELE'CT.† v. a. [electus, Lat.]

1. To choose for any office or use; to take in preference to others.

Henry his son is chosen king, though young;
And Lewis of France, elected first, beguil'd.
Daniel.

Such as thou hast solemnly elected,
With gifts and graces eminently adorn'd,
To some great work. Milton, S. A.

This prince, in gratitude to the people, by whose consent he was chosen, elected a hundred senators out of the commoners. Swift.

2. [In theology.] To select as an object of eternal mercy.

Nor can they think, with the Sublapsarians, that reprobation is only God's passing by those whom he does not elect. Burnet on the Articles, Art. 17.

ELE'CT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Chosen; taken by preference from among others.

You have here, lady,
And of your choice, these reverend fathers,
Yea, the elect of the land, who are assembl'd
To plead your cause. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

2. Chosen to an office, not yet in possession.

The bishop elect takes the oaths of supremacy, canonical obedience, and against simony: and then the dean of the arches reads and subscribes the sentences. Ayliffe, Parergon.

3. [In theology.] Chosen as an object of eternal mercy.

A vicious liver, believing that Christ died for none but the elect, shall have attempts made upon him to reform and amend his life. Hammond.

Some I have chosen of peculiar grace,
Elect above the rest: so is my will. Milton, P. L.

ELE'CTANT.* n. s. [from elect; formed like expectant from expect.] One who has the power of choosing. A word not likely to be used. The same writer has adopted, which is merely to be mentioned, electancy.

You cannot go on further to entitle him a free electant too.
Search on Freewill, Foreknowl. &c. (1768,) p. 55.

ELE'CTION. n. s. [electio, Lat.]

1. The act of choosing; the act of selecting one or more from a greater number for any use or office; choice.

If the election of the minister should be committed to every several parish, do you think that they would choose the meetest? Whitgift.

Him, not thy election,
But natural necessity, begot. Milton, P. L.

As charity is, nothing can more increase the lustre and beauty than a prudent election of objects, and a fit application of it to them. Sprat.

2. The power of choice.

For what is man without a moving mind,
Which hath a judging wit, and choosing will!
Now, if God's pow'r should her election bind,
Her motions then would cease, and stand all still.
Davies.

3. Voluntary preference.

He calls upon the sinners to turn themselves and live; he tells us, that he has set before us life and death, and referred it to our own election which we will choose. Rogers.

4. Discernment; distinction; discrimination.

The discovering of these colours cannot be done but out of a very universal knowledge of things; which so cleareth men's judgement and election, as it is the less apt to slide into errour. Bacon.

In favour, to use men with much difference and election is good: for it maketh those preferred more thankful, and the rest more officious. Bacon.

5. [In theology.] The predetermination of God by which any were selected for eternal life.

The conceit about absolute election to eternal life, some enthusiasts entertaining, have been made remiss in the practice of virtue. Atterbury.

6. The ceremony of a publick choice.

I was sorry to hear with what partiality, and popular heat, elections were carried in many places. King Charles.

Since the late dissolution of the club, many persons put up for the next election. Addison, Spect.

ELECTIONEE'RING.* n. s. [from election.] The practice of soliciting votes at the election of a member for parliament; any business connected with such election. A low word.

Farewell distress, and gloomy cares!
A merrier theme my muse prepares:
For lo! to save us, on a sudden,
In shape of porter, beef, and pudding,
Though late, electioneering comes!
Strike up, ye trumpets and ye drums!
At length we change our wonted note,
And feast all winter on a vote:
Sure canvassing was never hotter!
Warton, Newsman's Verses, 1768

ELE'CTIVE.† adj. [Fr. electif.]

1. Regulated or bestowed by election or choice.

I will say positively and resolutely, that it is impossible an elective monarchy should be so free and absolute as an hereditary. Bacon.

The last change of their government, from elective to hereditary, has made it seem hitherto of less force, and unfitter for action abroad. Temple.

2. Exerting the power of choice.

To talk of compelling a man to be good, is a contradiction; for where there is force, there can be no choice: whereas all moral goodness consisteth in the elective act of the understanding will. Grew, Cosm. Sacra.

ELE'CTIVELY. adv. [from elect.] By choice; with preference of one to another.

How or why that should have such an influence upon the spirits, as to drive them into those muscles electively, I am not subtile enough to discern. Ray on the Creation.

They work not electively, or upon proposing to themselves an end of their operations. Grew.

ELE'CTOR. n. s. [from elect.]

1. He that has a vote in the choice of any officer.

From the new world her silver and her gold
Came, like a tempest, to confound the old;
Feeding with these the brib'd electors' hopes,
Alone she gave us emperours and popes. Waller.

2. A prince who has a voice in the choice of the German emperour.

ELE'CTORAL.† adj. [from elector.] Having the dignity of an elector.

Such are the subdivisions in favour of the electoral and other princes in the empire. Burke, Speech on Econ. Reform.

ELECTORA'LITY.* n. s. [from electoral.] The territory of an elector.

Not to trouble one another, or any thing to them belonging; as electoralities, principalities, subjects, towns, villages. Treaty in Wotton's Rem. Dat. 1620, p. 533.

ELE'CTORATE.† n. s. [Fr. electorat.] The territory of an elector.

He has a great and powerful king for his son-in-law; and can himself command, when he pleases, the whole strength of an electorate in the empire. Addison, Freeholder.

ELE'CTORESS.* } n. s. [from elector.] The ELE'CTRESS. } wife or widow of an elector.

In the end of his [the elector of Brandenburg's] life, the electoress had gained great credit. Burnet, Hist. Own Times, 1688.

The act of parliament settled the crown on the electress Sophia and her descendants, being protestants. Burke.

ELE'CTRE. n. s. [electrum, Lat.]

1. Amber; which, having the quality when warmed by friction of attracting bodies, gave to one species of attraction the name of electricity; and, to the bodies that so attract, the epithet electrick.

2. A mixed metal.

Change silver plate or vessel into the compound stuff, being a kind of silver electre, and turn the rest into coin. Bacon.

ELE'CTRICAL. } adj. [from electrum.
ELE'CTRICK. } See ELECTRE.]

1. Attractive without magnetism; attractive by a peculiar property, supposed once to belong chiefly to amber.

By electrick bodies do I conceive not such only as take up light bodies, in which number the ancients only placed jett and amber; but such as, conveniently placed, attract all bodies palpable. Brown, Vulg. Err.

An electrick body can by friction emit an exhalation so subtle, and yet so potent, as by its emission to cause no sensible diminution of the weight of the electrick body, and to be expanded through a sphere, whose diameter is above two feet, and yet to be able to carry up lead, copper, or leaf-gold, at the distance of above a foot from the electrick body. Newton.

2. Produced by an electrick body.

If that attraction were not rather electrical than magnetical, it was wondrous what Helmont delivereth concerning a glass, wherein the magistery of loadstone was prepared, which retained an attractive quality. Brown.

If a piece of white paper, or a white cloth, or the end of one's finger, he held at about a quarter of an inch from the glass, the electrick vapour, excited by friction, will, by dashing against the white paper, cloth, or finger, be put into such an agitation as to emit light. Newton, Opticks.

ELECTRI'CIAN.* n. s. [from electrum. Fr. electricien.] One who is skilled in the theory of electricity.

I cannot enter into this particular subject without first settling a dispute amongst electricians. Wilson, Exp. Phil. Trans. (1759,) vol. li. p. 309.

ELECTRI'CITY.† n. s. [from electrick. See ELECTRE.] A property in some bodies, whereby, when rubbed so as to grow warm, they draw little bits of paper, or such like substances, to them. Quincy.

Such was the account given a few years ago of electricity; but the industry of the present age, first excited by the experiments of Mr. S. Grey, has discovered in electricity a multitude of philosophical wonders. Bodies electrified by a sphere of glass, turned nimbly round, not only emit flame, but may be fitted with such a quantity of the electrical vapour, as, if discharged at once upon a human body, would endanger life. The force of this vapour has hitherto appeared instantaneous, persons at both ends of a long chain seeming to be struck at once. The philosophers are now endeavouring to intercept the strokes of lightning.

The mechanical theory of electricity invented by Dr. Franklin is believed by some philosophers not so well to explain the various phenomena of electricity, as may be accomplished by an hypothesis of the existence of two electrick fluids diffused together, and strongly attracting each other; one of them to be called vitreous, and the other resinous, electricity. The latter opinion I am inclined to espouse. Darwin's Phytologia, p. 310.

The theory of two electrick fluids has been forsaken by all the principal modern writers on electricity, as being incapable to explain a great number of phenomena; and the theory of a single electrick fluid is universally adopted, as being both simple and sufficient to explain the phenomena. Brit. Crit. 1801. July.

ELECTRIFICA'TION. n. s. [from electrify.] The act of electrifying.

Pumping at Bath is to be the next step; and, in case of necessity, even electrification is to be tried. Ld. Chesterfield, Miscell. (vol. 4. p. 123. ed. Maty,) Lett. dat. in 1752.

To ELE'CTRIFY.* v. a. [from electrum and fio, Lat.] To render electrick; to communicate electricity.

The explosion of a cannon in St. James's park, is observed to electrify the glass of the windows of the Treasury. Dr. Steph. Hales on Earthquakes, (1750,) p. 22.

To ELE'CTRISE.* v. a. [from electrum.] To attract by a peculiar property.

He [Dr. Lister, in 1685,] did not doubt that several things would electrise. Hist. of the Royal Soc. iv. 395.

ELECTRO'METER.* n. s. [from ἤλεκτρον and μέτρον, Gr. Fr. electrometre.] An instrument contrived for measuring the quantity, and determining the quality, of electricity in any electrified body. Chambers.

ELE'CTUARY.† n. s. [electarium, Cœlius Aurel, which is now written electuary, Dr. Johnson says. Our word was, two centuries since, electuary. V. Huloet's Dict. Adopted from the old French, electuaire. Electary has been since offered in the Hist. of Medical Transactions, but has not been followed.] A form of medicine made of conserves and powders, in the consistence of honey. Electuaries made up with honey or syrup, when the consistence is too thin, ferment; and when too thick, candy. By both which the ingredients will be altered or impaired. Quincy.

We meet with divers electuaries, which have no ingredient, except sugar, common to any two of them. Boyle.

ELEEMO'SYNARY.† adj. [ἐλεημοσύνη, Gr. See Alms.]

1. Living upon alms; depending upon charity. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing a solitary passage from Glanville, in which the word is no adjective but a substantive. Yet an elegant writer of modern times has not scrupled to employ the adjective in this sense.

In the accounts of Maxtoke priory near Coventry, in the year 1430, it appears, that the eleemosynary boys, or choristers, of that monastery, acted a play. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 390.

2. Given in charity; "given in alms." Bullokar. This is also the present use.

All crown lands and eleemosynary lands. Stephens, Add. to Spelm. Hist. of Sac. p. 173.

He had done several eleemosynary cures amongst them, for they are generally very poor. Relat. in Sprat's Hist. of the R. Soc. p. 209.

ELEEMO'SYNARY.* n. s. One who subsists upon alms or charity.

Living as an eleemosynary upon a perpetual contribution from all and every part of the creation. South, Serm. iii. S. 1.

It is little better than an absurdity, that the cause should be an eleemosynary for its subsistence to its effects, as a nature posteriour to and dependent on itself. Glanville, Scepsis.

E'LEGANCE.† } n. s. [elegance, Fr. elegantia,
E'LEGANCY. } Lat.]

1. Beauty rather soothing than striking: beauty without grandeur; the beauty of propriety not of greatness.

St. Augustine, out of a kind of elegancy in writing, makes some difference. Raleigh, Hist.

These questions have more propriety, and elegancy, understood of the old world. Burnet.

2. Any thing that pleases by its nicety. In this sense it has a plural.

The beauty, ornament, and elegancies of life. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 85.

My compositions in gardening are altogether Pindarick, and run into the beautiful wildness of nature, without the nicer elegancies of art. Spectator.

E'LEGANT.† adj. [elegant, Fr. elegans, Lat.]

1. Nice; accurate in discerning. I place this sense first, of which Dr. Johnson has taken no notice whatever, because it applies to the mind; and because the examples under the two following definitions are only those modern ones, which Pope and his own London afforded Dr. Johnson. Yet I must observe, that our old lexicography considers the word as applicable only to personal ornaments or accomplishments; as neat, fresh, gorgeous, gay, pretty, fine, trim, &c. See the Dictionaries of Barret and Bullokar. Milton, however, has left these trappings, and thus described the power of distinguishing for which Adam compliments his spouse.

Eve, now I see thou art exact of taste,
And elegant, of sapience no small part;
Since to each meaning savour we apply,
And palate call judicious. Milton, P. L. ix. 1018.

2. Pleasing by minuter beauties.

Trifles themselves are elegant in him. Pope.
There might'st thou find some elegant retreat.
London.

3. Nice; not coarse; not gross.

Polite, with candour, elegant with ease. Pope.

E'LEGANTLY. adv. [from elegant.]

1. In such a manner as to please.

Now read with them those organick arts which enable men to discourse and write perspicuously, elegantly, and according to the fittest style of lofty, mean, or lowly. Milton on Education.
In a poem elegantly writ,
I will not quarrel with a slight mistake.
Roscommon.

2. Neatly; nicely; with minute beauty; with pleasing propriety.

They describe her in part finely and elegantly, and in part gravely and sententiously. Bacon.
Whoever would write elegantly, must have regard to the different turn and juncture of every period: there must be proper distances and pauses. Pope, Odyssey, Notes.

ELEGI'ACAL.* adj. [Lat. elegiacus; Fr. elegiaque.] Belonging to an elegy; lamenting; mournful.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

ELEGI'ACK.† adj. [elegiacus, Lat.]

1. Used in elegies.

Another thing yet more considerable is conduct, and design, in whatever kind of poetry, whether the epick, the dramatick, the lyrick, the elegiack.
Phillips, Theat. Poetarum, Pref.
That Ovid among the Latin poets was Milton's favourite, appears not only from his elegiack but his hexametrick poetry.
Warton, Milton's Smaller Poems, Pref.
Why Hammond, or other writers, have thought the quatrain of ten syllables elegiack, it is difficult to tell. Johnson, Life of Hammond.

2. Pertaining to elegies.

Elegy speaks here her own proper native language, the unaffected plaintive language of the tender passions: the true elegiack dignity and simplicity are preserved and united, the one without pride, the other without meanness.
Ld. Chesterfield, Pref. to Hammond's Elegies.

3. Mournful; sorrowful. Bullokar.

Let elegiack lay the woe relate,
Soft as the breath of distant flutes. Gay, Trivia.

ELEGI'ACK.* n. s. Elegiack verse.

His Latin elegiacks are pure.
Warton, Hist. Eng. Poetry.

ELEGI'AST.* } n. s. [from elegy. Our old
E'LEGIST. } word for writers of this class was the more stately term of "elegiographer, one who writes mournful songs" Cockeram; which has now found a welcome in France; "élégiographe, auteur d'élégies," Morin, Fr. et Gr. Dict. Etym. 1809.] A writer of elegies.

The great fault of these elegiasts is, that they are in despair for griefs that give the sensible part of mankind very little pain.
Goldsmith, Vicar of Wakefield.
Our elegist, and the chroniclers, impute the crime of withholding so pious a legacy to the advice of the king of France.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 108.

E'LEGY.† n. s. [old Fr. elegie; Lat. elegus, elegia, and elegeia, from the Gr. ἔλεγος, complaint, grief.

Flebilis indignos, Elegeia, solve capillos;
Heu nimis ex vero nunc tibi nomen inest. Ovid.]

1. A mournful song.

He hangs odes upon hawthorns, and elegies upon brambles, all forsooth deifying the name of Rosalind. Shakspeare.

2. A funeral song.

So on Meander's banks, when death is nigh,
The mournful swan sings her own elegy. Dryden.

3. A short poem without points or affected elegancies.

A versification is desirable, which, by indulging a free and unconstrained expression, may admit of that simplicity, which elegy requires.
Shenstone, Pref. to his Elegies.

ELE'GIT. n. s. [Latin.] In law, a writ, so called.

It is generally known, a judgement being obtained or acknowledged for any debt since the statute of Westm. 2. 13 Ed. I. c. 18. one half of the debtor's land is to be delivered unto the creditor until the obligation is satisfied, under a writ called Elegit, and this writ has been ever since the ordinary assurance of the land, and the great foundation of general credit in the nation.
Burke, Tracts on the Popery Laws.

E'LEMENT. n. s. [elementum, Lat.]

1. The first or constituent principle of any thing.

If nature should intermit her course, those principal and mother elements of the world, whereof all things in this lower world are made, should lose the qualities which now they have. Hooker.
A man may rationally retain doubts concerning the number of those ingredients of bodies, which some call elements, and others principles. Boyle.
Simple substances are either spirits, which have no manner of composition, or the first principles of bodies, usually called elements, of which other bodies are compounded. Watts.

2. The four elements, usually so called, are earth, fire, air, water, of which our world is composed. When it is used alone, element commonly means the air.

The king is but a man: the violet smells to him as it doth to me; and the element shews to him as it doth to me. Shakspeare.
My dearest sister, fare thee well;
The elements be kind to thee, and make
Thy spirits all of comfort. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.
The king
Contending with the fretful elements,
Bids the wind blow the earth into the sea,
Or swell the curled waters. Shaks. K. Lear.
The heavens and the earth will pass away, and the elements melt with fervent heat. 2 Peter, iii. 10.
Here be four of you were able to make a good world; for you are as differing as the four elements. Bacon.
He from his flaming ship his children sent,
To perish in a milder element. Waller.

3. The proper habitation or sphere of any thing: as water of fish.

We are simple men; we do not know she works by charms, by spells, and such daubry as is beyond our element. Shakspeare.
Our torments may, in length of time,
Become our elements. Milton, P. L.
They shew that they are out of their element, and that logick is none of their talent.
Baker on Learning.

4. An ingredient; a constituent part.

Who set the body and the limbs
Of this great sport together, as you guess?
—— One sure that promises no element
In such a business. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

5. The letters of any language.

6. The lowest or first rudiments of literature or science.

With religion it fareth as with other sciences; the first delivery of the elements thereof must, for like consideration, be framed according to the weak and slender capacity of young beginners. Hooker.
Every parish should keep a petty schoolmaster, which should bring up children in the first elements of letters. Spenser on Ireland.
We, when we were children, were in bondage under the elements of the world. Gal. iv. 3.
There is nothing more pernicious to a youth, in the elements of painting, than an ignorant master.
Dryden.

To E'LEMENT.† v. a. [from the noun. Sir Kenelm Digby uses elementate for this verb, Supplem. to Cabala, p. 247. But he will hardly be followed.]

1. To compound of elements.

Whether any one such body be met with, in those said to be elemented bodies, I now question.
Boyle.
Fond creature! thou art elemented and organed for other apprehensions, for a lower commerce of perception: such immediate displays of divinity infinitely transcend the analogy of thy order, and the immoderate glory of such a revelation would but absorb thy soul.
Mannyngham, Disc. (1681,) p. 89.

2. To constitute; to make as a first principle.

Dull sublunary lover's love,
Whose soul is sense, cannot admit
Absence, because it doth remove
Those things which elemented it.
Donne, Poems, p. 41.
His very soul was elemented of nothing but sadness. Walton, Life of Donne.

ELEME'NTAL.† adj. [from element.]

1. Produced by some of the four elements.

God made
The firmament, expanse of liquid, pure,
Transparent, elemental air. Milton, P. L.
If dusky spots are vary'd on his brow,
And streak'd with red, a troubl'd colour show;
That sullen mixture shall at once declare
Winds, rain, and storms, and elemental war.
Dryden, Virg.
The heavens, and the simple or elemental bodies, as the earth, the water, and the air.
Pearson on the Creed, Art. I.
Soft yielding minds to water glide away,
And sip, with nymphs, their elemental tea. Pope.

2. Arising from first principles.

Leeches are by some accounted poison not properly, that is, by temperamental contrariety, occult form, or so much as elemental repugnancy; but inwardly taken, they fasten upon the veins, and occasion an effusion of blood. Brown.

3. Rude; elementary.

The druids are said to be very expert in astronomy, in geography, and in all parts of mathematical knowledge. And authors speak, in a very exaggerated strain, of their excellence in these, and in many other sciences. Some elemental knowledge, I suppose, they had; but I can scarcely be persuaded, that their learning was either deep or extensive.

Burke, Abridg. of Eng. Hist. i. 2.

ELEMENTA'LITY.* n. s. [from elemental.] Composition; combination of ingredients.

By this I hope the elementality (that is, the universality) of detraction, or disparagement, (or what else you will call this mal dire,) is out of dispute. Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 456.

ELEMENTA'RITY. n. s. [from elementary.] The simplicity of nature; absence of composition; being uncompounded.

A very large class of creatures in the earth, far above the condition of elementarity.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

ELEME'NTARY.† adj. [Fr. elementaire.]

1. Uncompounded; having only one principle or constituent part.

All rain water contains in it a copious sediment of terrestrial matter, and is not a simple elementary water. Ray.

The elementary salts of animals are not the same as they appear by distillation.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Initial; rude.

Your courtier elementary is one but newly entered, or as it were in the alphabet.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

It is probable, that before the time of Aristotle there were elementary treatises of geometry, which are now lost. Reid's Inquiry.

3. Of or belonging to the elements.
Cockeram.

The harmony of heaven and the elements was put out of tune, in the elementary part of the world, by the sin of man.
Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Serm. (1587,) p. 257.

Some luminous and fiery impressions in the elementary region. Spencer on Prod. p. 33.

ELE'MI. n. s.

This drug is improperly called gum elemi, being a resin. The genuine elemi is brought from Æthiopia in flattish masses, or in cylinders, of a yellowish colour. It is very rare in Europe, and supposed to be produced by a tree of the olive kind. The spurious or American elemi, almost the only kind known, is of a whitish colour, with a greater or less greenish or yellowish tinge. It proceeds from a tall tree, which the Brasilians wound, and collect the resin.
Hill, Mat. Med.

ELE'NCH.† n. s. [elenche, old Fr. elenchus, Lat.] An argument; a sophism.

The first delusion Satan put upon Eve, and his whole tentation might be the same elench continued, as when he said, Ye shall not die; that was, in his equivocation, you shall not incur present death. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Of these sophisms and elenchs of merchandize I skill not. Milton, Areopagitica.

All your elenchs in logick come within the compass of juggling. Selden, Table-Talk.

Discover the fallacies of our common adversary, that old sophister, who puts the most abusive elenchs on us. Decay of Piety.

To ELE'NCHIZE.* v. n. [from elench; coined perhaps by Ben Jonson, in order to ridicule the pretended accomplishments of "Fly, professor in the Inn."] To dispute.

Tip. Hear him problematize.
Pru. Bless us, what's that?
Tip. Or syllogize, elenchize.
B. Jonson, New Inn.

ELE'NCHICAL.* adj. [Lat. elencticus.] Serving to confute.

Doctrinal application—is of two kinds; didactical, elenchtical.—Elenchtical, πρὸς ἔλεγχον, in some controverted point, which is usually called an use of confutation, for the refuting of such erroneous positions as do subvert the truth.
Wilkins, Ecclesiastes or Gift of Preaching, § 2.

ELE'OTS. n. s. Some name the apples in request in the cider countries so; not known by that name in several parts of England. Mortimer, Husbandry.

E'LENGE.* See ELLINGE.

E'LEPHANT.† n. s. [elephas, Lat. The learned Hyde refers to the Arabick phil, a mountain, as the etymon.]

1. The largest of all quadrupeds, of whose sagacity, faithfulness, prudence, and even understanding, many surprising relations are given. This animal feeds on hay, herbs, and all sorts of pulse; and it is said to be extremely long lived. He is supplied with a trunk or long hollow cartilage, which hangs between his teeth, and serves him for hands. His teeth are the ivory. Calmet.

He loves to hear,
That unicorns may be betray'd with trees,
And bears with glasses, elephants with holes.
Shakspeare.

The elephant hath joints, but not for courtesy;
His legs are for necessity, not flexure.
Shakspeare.

2. Ivory; the teeth of elephants.

High o'er the gate, in elephant and gold,
The crowd shall Cæsar's Indian war behold.
Dryden, Virg.

ELEPHANTI'ASIS.† n. s. [elephantiasis, Lat.] A species of leprosy, so called from covering the skin with incrustations like those on the hide of an elephant.

He differed in the temper of his body, being inclined to the leprosy called elephantiasis, noisome to the patient, but not infectious to the company.
Fuller, Holy War, p. 94.

ELEPHA'NTINE. adj. [elephantinus, Lat.] Pertaining to the elephant.

To E'LEVATE.† v. a. [elevo, Lat.]

1. To raise up aloft.

O, the noble combat, that, 'twixt joy and sorrow, was fought in Paulina! She had one eye declined for the loss of her husband; another elevated that the oracle was fulfilled.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

This subterranean heat or fire, which elevates the water out of the abyss. Woodward.

2. To exalt; to dignify.

A gentleman of the popular faction had been long declaiming against any kind of honours, that tended to elevate a body of people into a distinct species from the rest of the nation. Shenstone.

3. To raise with great conceptions.

In all that great extent, wherein the mind wanders, in those remote speculations it may seem to be elevated with, it stirs not beyond sense or reflection. Locke.

Now rising fortune elevates his mind,
He shines unclouded, and adorns mankind. Savage.

4. To elate with vicious pride.

To mischief swift, hope elevates, and joy
Brightens his crest. Milton, P. L.

5. To lessen by detraction. This sense, though legitimately deduced from the Latin, is not now in use.

When the judgements of learned men are alleged against you, what do they but either elevate their credit, or oppose unto them the judgements of others as learned? Hooker.

E'LEVATE.† part. adj. [from elevated.]

1. Exalted; raised aloft.

On each side an imperial city stood,
With tow'rs and temples proudly elevate
On seven small hills. Milton, P. R.

2. Raised with great conceptions.

Others apart sat on a hill retired,
In thoughts more elevate, and reason'd high
Of providence, foreknowledge, will, and fate.
Milton, P. L.

ELEVA'TION. n. s. [elevatio, Lat.]

1. The act of raising aloft.

The disruption of the strata, the elevation of some, and depression of others, did not fall out by chance, but were directed by a discerning principle. Woodward.

2. Exaltation; dignity.

Angels, in their several degrees of elevation above us, may be endowed with more comprehensive faculties. Locke.

3. Exaltation of the mind by noble conceptions.

We are therefore to love him with all possible application and elevation of spirit, with all the heart, soul, and mind. Norris.

4. Exaltation of style.

His style was an elegant perspicuity, rich of phrase, but seldom any bold metaphors; and so far from tumid, that it rather wanted a little elevation. Wotton.

5. Attention to objects above us.

All which different elevations of spirit unto God, are contained in the name of prayer. Hooker.

6. The height of any heavenly body with respect to the horizon.

Some latitudes have no canicular days, as those which have more than seventy-three degrees of northern elevation, as Nova Zembla.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

E'LEVATOR.† n. s. [from elevate; formerly our word was elevatory, Fr. elevatoire. Cotgrave.] A raiser or lifter up, applied to some chirurgical instruments put to such uses. Quincy.

*ELE'VE. n. s. [French.]

1. Literally, a scholar or disciple; one who has studied under a particular master.

He attached himself to sir Robert Walpole, and was one of his ablest eleves.
Ld. Chesterfield, Characters.

2. One brought up, or protected, by another; as the Italian allievo, "a foster child or servant of our bringing up." Florio's Ital. Dict. 1598.

ELE'VEN.† adj. [ænbleſen, Saxon; æn, one, and lyfan, to leave: one left above ten. V. Skinner, Etym.] Ten and one; one more than ten.

Had I a dozen sons, and none less dear than Marcius, I had rather eleven die nobly for their country, than one voluptuously surfeit out of action. Shakspeare.

ELE'VENTH. adj. [from eleven.] The next in order to the tenth.

In the eleventh chapter he returns to speak of the building of Babel. Ralegh, Hist.

ELF.† n. s. plural elfs and elves. [eilf, Welsh. Baxter's Gloss. This is all which Dr. Johnson offers respecting the etymology. We may trace the word to a different origin. Alp and alf, in the northern languages, signified both a mountain and a spirit or demon of the mountains. V. Keysleri Antiq. Septentr. p. 500. Goth. and Icel. alf, a good or evil genius; ælf, Sax. munt-ælfen, mountain elves; pudu-ælfen, wood elves, fæ-ælfen, sea elves. Thus Shakspeare distinguishes them; "Ye elves of hills, brooks, standing lakes, and groves, &c." Tempest. Fletcher, in the Faithful Shepherdess, distinguishes between the elf and the fairy, though he places both among "the powers that haunt the grove;" as, the "goblin, wood-god, fairy, elf, or fiend." The general opinion of elves was, that they were a kind of diminutive demons, called also duergar or dwarfs. Shakspeare calls them demy-puppets. Hence the word has passed into our language for dwarfs in general, of which meaning Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. It is conjectured by some that these little people have been imported into Europe by the crusaders from the East. "What indeed are the genii of the Arabs, the peris of the Persians, but the elfs and fairies of England?" Hole on the Arabian Nights' Entert. p. 12.

1. A wandering spirit, supposed to be seen in wild unfrequented places; a fairy.

Through this house give glimmering light,
By the dead and drowsy fire;
Every elf, and fairy sprite,
Hop as light as bird from briar. Shakspeare.

Fairy elves,
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant sees,
Or dreams he sees. Milton, P. L.

The king of elfs and little fairy queen
Gambol'd on heaths, and danc'd on every green. Dryden.

If e'er one vision touch'd thy infant thought,
Of all the nurse and all the priest have taught;
Of airy elves by moon-light shadow seen,
The silver token, and the circled green. Pope.

2. A devil.

That we may angels seem, we paint them elves;
And are but satires to set up ourselves. Dryden.

However it was civil, an angel or elf;
For he ne'er could have fill'd it so well of himself. Swift.

3. A dwarf, or little person. Huloet, and Barret.

Though now he crawl along the ground so low,
Nor weeting how the muse should soar on high,
Wisheth, poor starv'ling elf, his paper-kite may fly. Shenstone.

To ELF. v. a. [from the noun.] To entangle hair in so intricate a manner, that it is not to be unravelled. This the vulgar have supposed to be the work of fairies in the night; and all hair so matted together, hath had the name of elf-locks. Hanmer.

My face I'll grime with filth,
Blanket my loins, elf all my hair in knots. Shaks.

ELF-LOCK.† n. s. [elf and lock.] Hair twisted by elves; a common superstition, which seems to have had its rise from the horrid disease called the plica Polonica. Warburton.

This is that very Mab,
That plats the manes of horses in the night;
And bakes the elf-locks in foul sluttish hairs,
Which, once entangled, much misfortune bodes. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

E'LFIN. adj. [from elf.] Relating to fairies; elfish; belonging to elves.

Now when that idle dream was to him brought,
Unto that elfin knight he bade him fly,
Where he slept soundly. Spenser, F. Q.

E'LFIN.* n. s. A child; an urchin. See the third sense of ELF.

She was just and friend to virtuous lore,
And pass'd much time in truly virtuous deed;
And in those elfins' ears would oft deplore
The times when truth by popish rage did bleed. Shenstone, Schoolmistress, st. 15.

E'LFISH.* adj. [from elf.] Relating to elves or demons. See ELVISH.

In Chaucer's Tale of the Chanon Yeman, chymistry is termed an elfish art, that is, taught or conducted by spirits. This is an Arabian idea. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. 169.

To ELI'CIT. v. a. [elicio, Lat.] To strike out; to fetch out by labour or art.

Although the same truths may be elicited, and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

He elicits those acts out of the mere lapsed state of human nature. Cheyne.

ELI'CIT. adj. [elicitus, Lat.] Brought into act; brought from possibility to real existence.

It is the virtue of humility and obedience, and not the formal elicit act of meekness: meekness being ordinarily annexed to these virtues. Hammond.

The schools dispute whether, in morals, the external action superadds any thing of good or evil to the internal elicit act of the will. South.

To ELI'CITATE.* v. a. [Lat. elicio.] To elicit; to fetch out by labour or art.

Thus may a skilful man hid truth elicitate. More, Song of the Soul, iii. ii. 41.

ELICITA'TION. n. s. [from elicio, Latin.]

That elicitation which the schools intend, is a deducing of the power of the will into act: that drawing which they mention, is merely from the appetibility of the object. Bp. Bramhall.

To ELI'DE.† v. a. [elido, Lat.]

1. To break in pieces; to crush.

We are to cut off that whereunto they, from whom these objections proceed, fly for defence, when the force and strength of the argument is elided. Hooker.

2. To cut off a syllable. See ELISION.

Mr. Wolf remarks the care with which the ancients, in apostrophized words, connected the consonant belonging to the elided syllable with that immediately following; whereas, among us, it is by well-informed readers often made to terminate the former syllable. Brit. Crit. 1796. Sept.

ELIGIBI'LITY.† n. s. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen.

Sickness hath some degrees of eligibility, at least by an after-choice; because to all persons, which are within the possibilities and state of pardon, it becomes a great instrument of pardon for sin. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, § vi. ch. 3.

The business of the will is not to judge concerning the nature of things, but to choose them in consequence of the report made by the understanding, as to their eligibility or goodness. Fiddes, Serm.

E'LIGIBLE. adj. [eligibilis, Lat.] Fit to be chosen; worthy of choice; preferable.

A British ministry ought to be satisfied, if, allowing to every particular man that his private scheme is wisest, they can persuade him that, next to his own plan, that of the government is the most eligible. Addison, Freeholder.

Did they really think, that going on with the war was more eligible for their country than the least abatement of those conditions? Swift.

That the most plain, short, and lawful way to any good end, is more eligible than one directly contrary in some or all of these qualities. Swift.

Certainty, in a deep distress, is more eligible than suspense. Richardson, Clarissa.

E'LIGIBLENESS. n. s. [from eligible.] Worthiness to be chosen; preferableness.

To ELI'MINATE.* v. a. [elimino, Lat.] To open; to release from confinement; to put out of doors.

Lock'd up, thou'rt hood all o'er,
And ne'er eliminat'st thy door.
Lovelace, Lucast. Posth. (of the Snail,) p. 16.

Loose me from earth's inclosure, from the sun's
Contracted circle set my heart at large;
Eliminate my spirit, give it range
Through provinces of thought yet unexplor'd;
Teach me, by this stupendous scaffolding,
Creation's golden steps, to climb to thee.
Young, Night Th. 9.

ELIMINA'TION.† n. s. [elimino, Lat.] The act of banishing; the act of turning out of doors; rejection. Dict.

He [St. Peter] writes this [his first epistle] to his countrymen, the Jews; amongst whom, notwithstanding their dispersion, there were doubtless many rich owners, as there are still in many parts of the world, after all their disgraceful eliminations. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 201.

ELIQUA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. eliquatus.] In metallurgy, a separation of the different parts of mixed bodies, by the different degrees of fire required to melt them. Chambers.

ELI'SION. n. s. [elisio, Latin.]

1. The act of cutting off; as, can't th' attempt, there is an elision of a syllable.

You will observe the abbreviations and elisions, by which consonants of most obdurate sounds are joined together, without any softening vowel to intervene. Swift.

2. Division; separation of parts.

The cause given of sound, that it would be an elision of the air, whereby, if they mean any thing, they mean a cutting or dividing, or else an attenuating of the air, is but a term of ignorance. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

ELI'TE. n. s. [French. Prendre la fleur, l'élite d'une chose.] A word, of military adoption, not wanted in our language; for the flower of an army much better expresses, what elite pretends, the selection or chosen part of it; "the choice and flower of all the troops," as Denham writes. Yet elite is old, in the Scottish terms, for one elected to a bishoprick.

To ELI'XATE.* v. a. [Latin, elixo.] To seeth or boil. Cockeram.

ELIXA'TION.† n. s. [from elixate.] The act of boiling or stewing any thing.

Elixation is the seething of meat in the stomach, by the said natural heat, as meat is boiled in a pot; to which corruption, or putrefaction, is opposite. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 21.

Even to ourselves, and more perfect animals, water performs no substantial nutrition; serving for refrigeration, dilution of solid aliment, and its elixation in the stomach. Brown.

ELI'XIR. n. s. [Arabick.]

1. A medicine made by strong infusion, where the ingredients are almost dissolved in the menstruum, and give it a thicker consistence than a tincture. Quincy.

For when no healing art prevail'd,
When cordials and elixirs fail'd,
On your pale cheek he dropp'd the show'r,
Reviv'd you like a dying flow'r. Waller.

2. The liquor, or whatever it be, with which chymists hope to transmute metals to gold.

No chymist yet the elixir got,
But glorifies his pregnant pot,
If by the way to him befal
Some odoriferous thing, or medicinal. Donne.

3. The extract or quintessence of any thing.

In the soul, when the supreme faculties move regularly, the inferiour passions and affections following, there arises a serenity infinitely beyond the highest quintessence and elixir of worldly delight. South.

4. Any cordial; or invigorating substance.

What wonder then, if fields and regions here
Breathe forth elixir pure! Milton, P. L.

ELK. n. s. [ælc, Saxon.]

The elk is a large and stately animal of the stag kind. The neck is short and slender; the ears nine inches in length, and four in breadth. The colour of its coat in winter is greyish, in summer it is paler. The horns of the male elk are short and thick near the head, where it by degrees expands into a great breadth, with several prominences in its edges. Hill.

And, scarce his head
Rais'd o'er the heapy wreath, the branching elk
Lies slumb'ring sullen in the white abyss. Thomson.

ELKE.* n. s. [Welsh alarch; Cornish, elerch; a swan. Lat. olor.] A wild swan, sometimes also called hooper. It is of less size than the tame swan.

ELL.† n. s. [eln, Saxon; alleina, Goth, ulna, Lat. Thus our own word was formerly written eln. "An ell or elne." Huloet. "It was xv elnes compass." Barret.]

1. A measure containing forty-five inches, or a yard and a quarter.

They are said to make yearly forty thousand pieces of linen cloth, reckoning two hundred ells to the piece. Addison.

2. It is taken proverbially for a long measure.

Acquit thee bravely, play the man;
Look not on pleasures as they come, but go:
Defer not the last virtue; life's poor span
Make not an ell by trifling in thy woe. Herbert.

E'LLER.* n. s. [Germ. eller.] The alder-tree. Our northern word. Craven Dialect, and Brockett. Grose notices it, with the mistaken interpretation of elder.

E'LLINGE.* adj. [perhaps from the Sax. ælenge, long, not soon ceasing, tedious, troublesome. But Ray proposes the Fr. esloigner, Lat. elongatus, and the ancient Sax. ellenbe, far off, far from. He then mentions the usage of the word in Sussex, as Grose mentions the same in Kent, viz. solitary, lonely, melancholy, far from neighbours. Bullokar defines it strange. Others consider it merely in the sense of dull or melancholy.] Cheerless; sad.

Heavy-chered I yede, and elenge in herte.
Vis. of P. Ploughman, fol. iii. b.

E'LLINGNESS.* n. s. [from ellinge.] Loneliness; dulness; cheerlessness.

This shall be to advertise you of the great ellingness that I find here since your departing.
K. H. VIII. to Ann Bol. Lett. pub. 1714. p. 29.

ELLI'PSIS. n. s. [ἔλλειψις.]

1. A figure of rhetorick, by which something is left out necessary to be supplied by the hearer: as, the thing I love, for the thing which I love.

The words are delivered by way of ellipsis, Rom. iv. 18. Hammond.

2. [In geometry.] An oval figure, being generated from the section of a cone, by a plane cutting both sides of the cone, but not parallel to the base, which produces a circle, and meeting with the base when produced. Harris.

On the cylinder inclined, describe an ellipsis parallel to the horizon. Wilkins, Dædalus.

The planets could not possibly acquire such revolutions in circular orbs, or in ellipses very little eccentrick. Bentley.

ELLI'PTICAL.† / ELLI'PTICK. } adj. [from ellipsis.]

1. Having the form of an ellipsis; oval.

Since the planets move in elliptick orbits, in one of whose foci the sun is, and by a radius from the sun describe equal areas in equal times, which no other law of a circulating fluid, but the harmonical circulation, can account for; we must find out a law for the paracentrical motion, that may make the orbits elliptick. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

In animals, that gather food from the ground, the pupil is oval or elliptical; the greatest diameter going transversely from side to side. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

2. Denoting the use of the rhetorical figure. Dr. Johnson overpasses this meaning. See ELLIPSIS.

We may more rightly say, that ἐν ὑμῖν is an elleiptical expression instead of τοὺς ἐν ὑμῖν.
Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. (1693,) p. 174.

ELLI'PTICALLY.* adv. [from elliptical.] According to the rhetorical figure.

"Looked upon as dull" [is] elliptically expressed to avoid the repetition of as. The sentence, if drawn out at length, would be, "looked upon as being as dull as." Hurd on Addison, vi. 179.

ELM. n. s. [ulmus, Latin; elm, Saxon.]

1. The name of a tree. The species are, the common rough-leaved elm; the witch hazel, or broad-leaved elm, by some called the British elm; the smooth-leaved or witch elm. Neither of them were originally natives of this country; but they have propagated themselves by seeds and suckers in such plenty as hardly to be rooted out; especially in hedgerows, where there is harbour for their roots. They are very proper to place in hedgerows upon the borders of fields, where they will thrive better than when planted in a wood or close plantation, and their shade will not be very injurious to whatever grows under them; for they may be trained up in form of an hedge, keeping them cut every year, to the height of forty or fifty feet: but they should not be planted too near fruit-trees; because the roots of the elm will intermix with the roots of other trees, and deprive them of nourishment. Miller.

The rural seat,
Whose lofty elms and venerable oaks,
Invite the rook, who high amid the boughs,
In early spring, his airy city builds. Thomson.

2. It was used to support vines, to which the poets allude.

Thou art an elm, my husband; I a vine,
Whose weakness married to thy stronger state,
Makes me with thy strength to communicate.
Shakspeare.

E'LMEN.* adj. [from elm.] Of or belonging to elm; made of elm. Jennings, W. Country Words.

E'LMY.* adj. [from elm.] Abounding with elm trees.

The simple spire, and elmy grange.
T. Warton, Ode xi.

ELOCA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. elocatus.]

1. A removal from the usual place of residence.

When the child either by general permission, or former elocation, shall be out of the parent's disposing. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

2. A departure from usual method; an ecstasy.

In all poesy (if it be good and worthy) there must be not only an incitation, and commotion, but also an elocation, and emotion of the mind. The poet must be extra se positus, et à mente alienatus. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 30.

ELOCU'TION. n. s. [elocutio, Lat.]

1. The power of fluent speech.

A travelled doctor of physick, of bold, and of able elocution. Wotton.

2. Power of speaking; speech.

Whose taste, too long forborne, at first essay
Gave elocution to the mute, and taught
The tongue not made for speech to speak thy praise.
Milton, P. L.

3. The power of expression or diction; eloquence; beauty of words.

The third happiness of this poet's imagination is elocution, or the art of clothing or adorning that thought so found, and varied, in apt, significant, and sounding words. Dryden.

As I have endeavoured to adorn it with noble thoughts, so much more to express those thoughts with elocution. Dryden.

E'LOCUTIVE.* adj. [elocutus, Lat.] Having the power of eloquent expression or diction.

Though preaching, in its elocutive part, be but the conception of man. Feltham, Res. ii. 48.

E'LOGE. n. s. [French.] A funeral oration; a panegyrick on the dead.

I return you, sir, the two eloges, which I have perused with pleasure. I borrow that word from your language, because we have none in our own that exactly expresses it.
Atterbury to Mons. Thiriot, Ep. Corr. i. 179.

E'LOGIST.* n. s. [old Fr. elogiste.] One who pronounces a panegyrick.

[One] made the funeral sermon, who had been one of her professed suitors; and so she did not want a passionate elogist, as well as an excellent preacher. Wotton, Rem. p. 366.

E'LOGY. n. s. [eloge, Fr.] Praise; panegyrick.

Buckingham lay under millions of maledictions, which at the prince's arrival did vanish into praises and elogies. Wotton.

If I durst say all I know of the elogies received concerning him, I should offend the modesty of our author. Boyle.

Some excellent persons, above my approbation or elogy, have considered this subject.
Holder, Elem. of Speech.

To ELOI'GNATE.* v. a. [Fr. eloigner, Lat. elongo.] To remove.

Nor is some vulgar Greek so far adulterated, and eloignated from the true Greek, as Italian is from the Latin.
Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 149.

To ELO'IGNE.† v. a. [eloigner, Fr.] To put at a distance; to remove one far from another. Now disused. Spenser's word is esloyne.

From worldly cares himself he did esloyne,
And greatly shunned manly exercise.
Spenser, F. Q.

I'll tell thee now, dear love! what thou shalt do
To anger destiny, as she doth us;
How I shall stay though she eloigne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too. Donne.

ELOI'GNMENT.* n. s. [Fr. eloignement.] Remoteness; distance.

He discovers an eloignment from vulgar phrases much becoming a person of quality. Shenstone.

To ELO'NG.* v. a. [old Fr. ehlonguer, to delay, to keep back; Lat. elongo. Our expressive old word has been converted, in a modern edition of Giles Fletcher's poem, into keeping back.] To put or set far off; to retard. Bullokar.

Upon the roof the bird of sorrow sate
Elonging joyful day with her sad note.
G. Fletcher, Christ's Vict. ii. 24.

To ELO'NGATE.† v. a. [elongo, Lat.]

1. To lengthen; to draw out; to protract; to stretch.

I have perused some of your private letters, which were written not in your elongated hand for the purpose of deception, but in your usual character for common concerns.
Chalmers, Suppl. Apol. Shaksp. Papers, p. 504.

2. To put further off.

The first star of Aries, in the time of Meton the Athenian, was placed in the very intersection, which is now elongated and moved eastward twenty-eight degrees. Brown.

To ELO'NGATE. v. n. To go off to a distance from any thing.

About Cape Frio in Brasilia, the south point of the compass varieth twelve degrees unto the west; but elongating from the coast of Brasilia, towards the shore of Africa, it varieth eastward.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

ELONGA'TION.† n. s. [from elongate.]

1. The act of stretching or lengthening itself.

To this motion of elongation of the fibres, is owing the union or conglutination of the parts of the body, when they are separated by a wound.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The state of being stretched.

This whole universality of things, which we call the world, is indeed nothing else but a production, and elongation, and dilatation of the natural goodness of Almighty God.
Fotherby, Atheom. p. 297.

3. [In medicine.] An imperfect luxation, when the ligament of any joint is so extended or relaxed as to lengthen the limb, but yet not let the bone go quite out of its place. Quincy.

Elongations are the effect of an humour soaking upon a ligament, thereby making it liable to be stretched, and to be thrust quite out upon every little force. Wiseman, Surgery.

4. Distance; space at which one thing is distant from another.

The distant points in the celestial expanse appear to the eye in so small a degree of elongation from another, as bears no proportion to what is real.
Glanville, Scepsis.

5. Departure; removal.

Our voluntary elongation of ourselves from God's presence, must needs be a fearful introduction to an everlasting distance from him.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 89.

Nor then had it been placed in a middle point, but that of descent, or elongation.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ELO'PE.† v. a. [loopen, to run, Dutch, Dr. Johnson says. It is rather from the Sax. hleapan, which also means to run; whence our verb to leap, the old preterite of which is lope. "He laughing lope to a tree." Spenser, Shep. Cal. March, ver. 81.] To run away; to break loose; to escape from law or restraint.

It is necessary to treat women as members of the body politick, since great numbers of them have eloped from their allegiance.
Addison, Freeholder.

What from the dame can Paris hope?
She may as well from him elope. Prior.

The fool whose wife elopes some thrice a quarter,
For matrimonial solace dies a martyr. Pope.

ELO'PEMENT. n. s. [from elope.] Departure from just restraint; rejection of lawful power: commonly used of a wife.

An elopement is the voluntary departure of a wife from her husband to live with an adulterer, and with whom she lives in breach of the matrimonial vow.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

The negligent husband, trusting to the efficacy of his principle, was undone by his wife's elopement from him. Arbuthnot.

E'LOPS.† n. s. [ἔλοψ.] A fish; reckoned however by Milton among the serpents, Dr. Johnson says; in which circumstance, it may be added, Milton is supported by the authority of Pliny and Nicander.

Scorpion and asp, and amphisbena dire,
Cerastes horn'd, hydrus, and elops drear,
And dipsas. Milton, P. L.

E'LOQUENCE. n. s. [eloquentia, Lat.]

1. The power of speaking with fluency and elegance; oratory.

Action is eloquence, and the eyes of th' ignorant
More learned than the ears. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Athens or free Rome, where eloquence
Flourish'd, since mute. Milton, P. L.

His infant softness pleads a milder doom,
And speaks with all the eloquence of tears. Heigh.

2. Elegant language uttered with fluency.

Say she be mute, and will not speak a word;
Then I'll commend her volubility,
And say she uttereth piercing eloquence. Shaksp.

Fit words attended on his weighty sense,
And mild persuasion flow'd in eloquence.
Pope, Odyssey.

E'LOQUENT. adj. [eloquens, Lat.] Having the power of oratory; having the power of fluent and elegant speech.

The Lord of hosts doth take away the captain of fifty, and the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator.
Isaiah, iii. 3.

O death! all eloquent, you only prove
What dust we dote on, when 'tis man we love.
Pope.

E'LOQUENTLY.* adv. [from eloquent.] In elegant language, written or uttered with fluency.

An orator, by others' instruction perfectly furnished, may in every matter and learning, commend or dispraise or exhort or dissuade, accuse or defend eloquently, as occasion happeneth.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 41. b.

Remembering the wisdomes, advertisements, counsels, dissuasions from vice, and other profitable sentences, most eloquently and familyarlye shewed in those comedies. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 43.

A thing written or spoken very eloquently.
Barret's Alvearie.

For, as a great man justly and eloquently reasons, men are naturally more watchful in a matter so dear to them. Blackwall, Sac. Class. ii. 316.

ELSE.† pronoun. [ellep, Saxon; alia, Goth. alius, Lat. ἄλλος, Gr. another.] Other; one besides: it is applied both to persons and things.

To stand stained with travel, and sweating with desire to see him; thinking of nothing else, putting all affairs else in oblivion, as if there were nothing else to be done but to see him. Shaksp. Hen. IV.

Should he or any else search, he will find evidence of the Divine Wisdom.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

He says, 'twas then with him, as now with you; He did it when he had nothing else to do.
Denham.

ELSE.† conj. [ellep, Sax. Germ. alles; Su. Goth. ella, or; Lat. alias, Gr. ἄλλως, otherwise. Our word was formerly elles or alles; and Mr. Horne Tooke asserts that it is no other than alep or alýr, the imperative of alepan or alýran, to dismiss.]

1. Otherwise.

1 Ser. They are ready to attend.
2 Ser. Sure some great person,
They would not make this hurry else.
Beaum. and Fl. Custom of the Country.

Dare not, on thy life,
Touch ought of mine beside, by lot my due,
But stand aloof, and think profane to view;
This faulchion, else, not hitherto withstood,
These hostile fields shall fatten with thy blood.
Dryden.

What ways are there whereby we should be assured, but either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause. Tillotson.

2. Beside; except that mentioned.

Pleasures which no where else were to be found,
And all Elysium in a spot of ground. Dryden.

3. It has sometimes or before it superfluously.

Be more abstemious,
Or else, good night your vow. Shakspeare

E'LSEN.* See ELSIN.

ELSEWHE'RE.† adv. [Sax. ellep-hpæp.]

1. In any other place.

There are here divers trees, which are not to be found elsewhere. Abbot, Descript. of the World.

As he proved that Pison was not Ganges, or Gehon, Nilus; so where to find them elsewhere he knew not. Ralegh, Hist.

For if we chance to fix our thoughts elsewhere,
Though our eyes open be, we cannot see. Davies.

Henceforth oracles are ceas'd,
And thou no more with pomp and sacrifice
Shalt be enquir'd at Delphos, or elsewhere.
Milton, P. R.

Although seasoned bodies may and do live near as long in London as elsewhere, yet new-comers and children do not. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

2. In other places; in some other place.

They which elsewhere complain, that injury is offered to the meanest minister, when the magistrate appointeth him what to wear, think the gravest prelates no competent judges where it is fit for the minister to stand. Hooker.

Let us no more contend, nor blame
Each other, blam'd enough elsewhere.
Milton, P. L.

Bestow, base man, thy idle threats elsewhere;
My mother's daughter knows not how to fear.
Dryden.

If it contradict what he says elsewhere, it is no new or strange thing. Tillotson.

E'LSIN.* n. s. [Teut. aelsene, and elssen. See also AWL.] A shoemaker's awl. A northern word. Grose and Craven Dialect. Sometimes written and pronounced elsen.

To ELU'CIDATE.† v. a. [elucido, Lat.] To explain; to clear; to make plain; "to make bright." Bullokar.

To elucidate a little the matter, let us consider it. Boyle.

By this way we may not only divert ourselves, but elucidate our own thoughts.
Goodman, Wint. Even. Conf. P. i.

ELUCIDA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. elucidation.] Explanation; exposition.

We shall, in order to the elucidation of this matter, subjoin the following experiment. Boyle.

I know not any that has received so little elucidation. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, Pref.

ELU'CIDATIVE.* adj. [from elucidate.] Throwing light; explanatory.

ELU'CIDATOR. n. s. [from elucidate.] Explainer; expositor; commentator.

Obscurity is brought over them by the course of ignorance and age, and yet more by their pedantical elucidators. Abbot.

ELUCTA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. eluctatus.]

1. The act of bursting forth.

There is nothing more acceptable unto the ingenious world than this noble eluctation of truth.
Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 5.

2. Escape.

By the power of our faith, which is the victory that overcomes the world, at last we do happily recover, and find ourselves freed by a comfortable and joyful eluctation. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 268.

To ELU'DE.† v. a. [eludo, Lat.]

1. To escape by stratagem; to avoid any mischief or danger by artifice.

Several pernicious vices, notorious among us, escape or elude the punishment of any law yet invented. Swift.

He who looks no higher for the motives of his conduct than the resentments of human justice, whenever he can presume himself cunning enough to elude, rich enough to bribe, or strong enough to resist it, will be under no restraint. Rogers.

2. To mock by an unexpected escape; "to deceive." Bullokar.

Me gentle Delia beckons from the plain,
Then, hid in shades, eludes her eager swain;
But feigns a laugh to see me search around,
And by that laugh the willing fair is found. Pope.

ELU'DIBLE. adj. [from elude.] Possible to be defeated.

There is not any common place more insisted on than the happiness of trials by juries; yet if this blessed part of our law be eludible by power and artifice, we shall have little reason to boast. Swift.

E'LVELOCKS. n. s. [from elves and lock.] Knots in the hair superstitiously supposed to be tangled by the fairies. See ELFLOCK.

From the like might proceed the fears of polling elvelocks, or complicated hairs of the head.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

E'LVERS.* n. s. Small eels, caught in some parts of the kingdom, particularly about Gloucester and Tewkesbury. These are, in reality, young congers, or sea-eels. They get up into rivers while very small; and, as they precede the shads, it is conjectured that they supply them with food. Chambers.

ELVES. The plural of elf. See ELF.

Fairy elves
Whose midnight revels by some forest side,
Or fountain, some belated peasant secs,
Or dreams he sees. Milton, P. L.

Ye sylphs and sylphids, to your chief give ear;
Fays, fairies, genii, elves, and demons, hear! Pope.

E'LVISH.† adj. [from elves, the plural of elf: it had been written more properly elfish, Dr. Johnson says. One of his contemporaries so wrote it. See ELFISH. The old word elvish is applied, by Chaucer, to chymistry, which he calls "elvish craft," and "elvish lore," Chan. Yeoman's Tale; where Mr. Tyrwhitt supposes the meaning to be fairy-like or fantastick. But see ELFISH. Elsewhere, by the father of our poetry, the word is used for sullen, reserved, morose; a sense unnoticed by Dr. Johnson.]

1. Relating to elves, or wandering spirits.

Here no night-ravens lodge, more black than pitch,
Nor elvish ghosts, nor ghastly owls do flee.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. June.

Thou elvish markt, abortive, rioting hog!
The slave of nature, and the son of hell! Shaksp.
No muse hath been so bold,
Or of the latter or the old,
Those elvish secrets to unfold,
Which lie from others reading. Drayton.

2. Reserved; coy; disdainful.

He seemeth elvish by his countenance,
For unto no wight doth he dalliance.
Chaucer, Prol. to Sir Thopas.

Thou art too elvish, faith thou art; too elvish, and too coy:
Am I, I pray thee, beggarly, that such a flocke enjoy? Warner, Albion's England, (1597.)

ELU'MBATED. adj. [elumbis, Lat.] Weakened in the loins. Dict.

ELU'SION.† n. s. [old Fr. elusion, Lat. elusio. This is also a very old English word, though Dr. Johnson has produced no other example than the comparatively modern one from Woodward.] An escape from enquiry or examination; a fraud; an artifice.

If our senses be dayly decyved in this matter, then is the sensible sacrament nothyng els but an elusion of our senses.
Abp. Cranmer to Bp. Gardiner, p. 307.

This place of our Apostle stands for us unshaken by any the impotent blasts of his frivolous elusions, and shall warrant us against earth and hell, that a bishop may be the husband of one wife.
Bp. Hall, Honour of the Marr. Clergy, p. 108.

An appendix, relating to the transmutation of metals, detects the impostures and elusions of those who have pretended to it. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

ELU'SIVE.† adj. [from elude.]

1. Practising elusion; using arts to escape.

Elusive of the bridal day, she gives
Fond hopes to all, and all with hopes deceives.
Pope, Odyss.

2. Tending to deceive; fallacious.

Pleasures, and enjoyments, which their religion convinced them were insubstantial, elusive, and transitory. Student, ii. 364.

ELU'SORINESS.* n. s. [from elusory.] The state of being elusory. Ash.

ELU'SORY. adj. [from elude.] Tending to elude; tending to deceive; fraudulent; deceitful; fallacious.

It may be feared they are but Parthian flights, ambuscade retreats, and elusory tergiversation.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ELU'TE. v. a. [eluo, Lat.] To wash off.

The more oily any spirit is, the more pernicious; because it is harder to be eluted by the blood.
Arbuthnot, on Aliments.

To ELU'TRIATE. v. a. [elutrio, Lat.] To decant; or strain out.

The pressure of the air upon the lungs is much less than it has been computed by some; but still it is something, and the alteration of one tenth of its force upon the lungs must produce some difference in elutriating the blood as it passes through the lungs. Arbuthnot on Air.

ELUTRIA'TION.* n. s. [from elutriate.] The act of straining off; in metallurgy, the separating the lighter matters, from the mixed ores of metals, by means of great quantities of fair water. Chambers.

After all its transmutations, elutriations, and filtrations in the body.
Acc. of Origen, Phenix, (1707,) vol. i. p. 44.

ELY'SIAN. adj. [elysus, Lat.] Pertaining to Elysium; pleasant; deliciously soft and soothing; exceedingly delightful.

The river of life, through midst of heaven,
Rolls o'er elysian flowers her amber stream.
Milton, P. L.

ELY'SIUM. n. s. [Latin.] The place assigned by the heathens to happy souls; any place exquisitely pleasant.

To have thee with thy lips to stop my mouth,
So should'st thou either turn my flying soul,
Or I should breathe it so into thy body,
And then it liv'd in sweet Elysium.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

'EM. A contraction of them.

For he could coin and counterfeit
New words with little or no wit;
And when with hasty noise he spoke 'em,
The ignorant for current took 'em. Hudibras.

To EMA'CERATE.* v. n. [Lat. emacero.] Our old word for emaciate. Thus Bullokar: "To emacerate, or emaciate; to wax lean; to pine away with sorrow, envy, toil, or the like." We now use macerate and maceration.

EMACERA'TION.* n. s. [from emacerate.] Leanness, or falling away in flesh.
Bullokar.

To EMA'CIATE. v. a. [emacio, Lat.] To waste; to deprive of flesh.

Men after long emaciating diets wax plump, fat, and almost new. Bacon.

All dying of the consumption, die emaciated and lean. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

To EMA'CIATE. v. n. To lose flesh; to pine; to grow lean.

He emaciated and pined away in the too anxious enquiry of the sea's reciprocation, although not drowned therein. Brown.

EMA'CIATE.* adj. [Lat. emaciatus.] Sunk; wasted; deprived of flesh.

The vivid vermeil fled his fady cheek,
And his big paunch, distended with the spoils
Of half his flock, emaciate, groan'd beneath
Superiour pride, and mightier lust of power.
Shenstone's Ruin'd Abbey.

EMACIA'TION. n. s. [emaciatus, Lat.]

1. The act of making lean.

2. The state of one grown lean.

Searchers cannot tell whether this emaciation or leanness were from a phthisis, or from an hectick fever. Graunt.

To EMA'CULATE.* v. a. [Lat. emaculo.] To make clean; to take out spots.
Cockeram.

Lipsius, Savile, Pichena, and others have taken great pains with him, [Tacitus,] in emaculating the text, settling the reading, &c. Hales, Rem. p. 273.

EMACULA'TION. n. s. [emaculo, Lat.] The act of freeing any thing from spots or foulness. Dict.

E'MANANT.† adj. [emanans, Lat. South writes our word emanent, unless it be an errour of the press, which is not agreeable to its etymon emano, emanas, &c. emanans. In a modern periodical publication I have seen emane for emanate, to which, if it could be tolerated, South's emanent, supposing it not a corruption, might then be added.] Issuing from something else.

The first act of the divine nature, relating to the world and his administration thereof, is an emanant act: the most wise counsel and purpose of Almighty God terminate in those two great transient or emanant acts or works, the work of creation and providence. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Evidence brings a property emanent from the essence and being of knowledge. South, Serm. ix. 322.

To E'MANATE.† v. n. [emano, Lat.] To issue or flow from something else.

Beams that emanate perpetually from our bodies to them. Hales, Rem. (Lett. dat. 1630,) p. 290.

They have their residence in a city, whose constitution has emanated, neither from the charter of their king, nor from their legislative power. Burke.

EMANA'TION.† n. s. [emanatio, Lat. Our word was considered as unusual in 1655, and is placed among others, then not familiar, at the end of Bagwell's Mystery of Astronomy.]

1. The act of issuing or proceeding from any other substance.

Aristotle said, that it streamed by connatural result and emanation from God, the infinite and eternal Mind, as the light issues from the sun. South.

2. That which issues from another substance; an efflux; effluvium.

The experience of those profitable and excellent emanations from God, may be, and commonly are, the first motive of our love. Bp. Taylor.

Another way of attraction is delivered by a tenuous emanation, or continued effluvium, which, after some distance, retracteth unto itself; as in syrups, oils, and viscosities, which spun, at length retire into their former dimensions. Brown.

Such were the features of her heav'nly face;
Her limbs were form'd with such harmonious grace;
So faultless was the frame, as if the whole
Had been an emanation of the soul. Dryden.

The letters every judge will see, were by no means efforts of the genius, but emanations of the heart. Pope.

Each emanation of his fires
That beams on earth, each virtue he inspires;
Each art he prompts, each charm he can create:
Whate'er he gives, are giv'n for you to hate. Pope.

E'MANATIVE. adj. [from emano, Lat.] Issuing from another. Dict.

To EMA'NCIPATE. v. a. [emancipo, Lat.] To set free from servitude; to restore to liberty.

Having received the probable inducements of truth, we become emancipated from testimonial engagements. Brown.

By the twelve tables, only those were called unto the intestate succession of their parents that were in the parents' power, excluding all emancipated children. Ayliffe, Parergon.

They emancipated themselves from dependance. Arbuthnot.

EMANCIPA'TION.† n. s. [from emancipate.] The act of setting free; deliverance from slavery.

Obstinacy in opinions holds the dogmatist in the chains of errour, without hope of emancipation. Glanville, Scepsis.

A certain freedom and activity of mind which immediately followed the national emancipation from superstition, contributed also to produce innumerable compositions in poetry. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 1.

EMA'NCIPATOR.* n. s. [from emancipate.] One who releases from any confinement or restriction.

Let us review and refute the sophisms of both; and first of the emancipators. The Merits of the Catholicks, &c. p. 358.

To EMA'RGINATE.† v. a. [Lat. emargino, to take away the scurf about the edge of a wound. In this sense also it stands in the old English vocabulary of Cockeram. At present it furnishes the sense of indent; as in botany, "an emarginated leaf."] To take away the margin or edge of any thing.

To EMA'SCULATE. v. a. [emasculo, Lat.]

1. To castrate; to deprive of virility.

When it is found how many ewes, suppose twenty, one ram will serve, we may geld nineteen, or thereabouts; for if you emasculate but ten, you shall, by promiscuous copulation, hinder the increase. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

2. To effeminate; to weaken; to vitiate by unmanly softness.

From wars and from affairs of state abstain;
Women emasculate a monarch's reign. Dryden.

Dangerous principles impose upon our understandings, emasculate our spirits, and spoil our temper. Collier.

EMA'SCULATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Unmanned; effeminate; vitiated.

The harassed, degenerous, emasculate slave is offended with a jubilee, a manumission; servitude is his sensuality; he will not go out free. Hammond, Works, iv. 515.

Store enough of such emasculate theology as this! Hammond, Works, iv. 571.

EMASCULA'TION.† n. s. [from emasculate.]

1. Castration.

About the time that author came out purged, a reverend doctor had the book, and singularly commended it, as it stood now corrected and amended; for it had passed the stool of repentance, and I believe the emasculations were some Scotchman's. Gayton, Notes on D. Quixote.

2. Effeminacy; womanish qualities; unmanly softness.

To EMBA'LE. v. a. [emballer, Fr.]

1. To make up into a bundle.

2. To bind up; to enclose.

Below her ham her weed did somewhat train,
And her straight legs most bravely were embal'd
In golden buskins of costly cordwain. Spenser, F. Q.

To EMBA'LM.† v. a. [embaumer, French; embalsamer, Spanish.] To impregnate a body with aromaticks, that it may resist putrefaction.

Embalm me,
Then lay me forth; although unqueen'd, yet like
A queen, and daughter to a king, inter me. Shakspeare.

I would shew future times
What you were, and teach them t' urge towards such:
Verse embalms virtue, and tombs or thrones of rhymes,
Preserve frail transitory fame as much
As spice doth bodies from corrupt air's touch. Donne.

Muse! at that name thy sacred sorrows shed;
Those tears eternal that embalm the dead. Pope.

2. To fill with sweet scent.

The buxom air embalm'd
With odours. Milton, P. L.

EMBA'LMER. n. s. [from embalm.] One that practises the art of embalming and preserving bodies.

The Romans were not so good embalmers as the Egyptians, so the body was utterly consumed. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To EMBA'R. v. a. [from bar.]

1. To shut; to enclose.

Themselves for fear into his jaws to fall,
He forc'd to castle strong to take their flight:
Where fast embarr'd in mighty brazen wall,
He has them now four years besieged to make them thrall. Spenser, F. Q.

In form of airy members fair embarr'd
His spirits pure were subject to our sight. Fairfax.

2. To stop; to hinder by prohibition; to block up.

Translating the mart unto Calais, he embarred all further trade for the future. Bacon, Hen. VII.

If this commerce 'twixt heav'n and earth were not
Embarr'd, and all this traffick quite forgot,
She, for whose loss we have lamented thus,
Would work more fully and pow'rfully on us. Donne.

EMBARCA'TION. n. s. [from embark.]

1. The act of putting on shipboard.

The French gentlemen were very solicitous for the embarcation of the army, and for the departure of the fleet. Clarendon.

2. The act of going on shipboard.

EMBA'RGO. n. s. [embargar, Spanish.] A prohibition to pass; in commerce, a stop put to trade.

He knew that the subjects of Flanders drew so great commodity from the trade of England, as by embargo they would soon wax weary of Perkin. Bacon, Hen. VII.

After an embargo of our trading ships in the river of Bourdeaux, and other points of sovereign affront, there did succeed the action of Rheez. Wotton.

I was not much concerned, in my own particular, for the embargo which was laid upon it. Dryd.

To EMBA'RGO.* v. a. [from the noun.] To lay an embargo upon. This word is not modern, as it may seem; for Coles, in his Lat. Dict. 1679, has "to imbargue, or lay an imbargo upon."

To EMBA'RK.† v. a. [embarquer, Fr.]

1. To put on shipboard.

Of mankind, so numerous late,
All left, in one small bottom swam embark'd. Milton, P. L.

The king had provided a good fleet, and had caused a body of three thousand foot to be embarked on those ships. Clarendon.

Straight to the ships Æneas took his way,
Embark'd his men, and skimm'd along the sea. Dryden, Æn.

2. To engage another in any affair.

All the propositions he could make to Spain could not induce them to enter into such an alliance with him as might embark them against France. Ld. Clarendon, Life, iii. 956.

To EMBA'RK. v. n.

1. To go on shipboard.

I should with speed embark,
And with their embassy return to Greece. A. Philips.

2. To engage in any affair.

EMBARKA'TION.* See EMBARCATION.

To EMBA'RRASS. v. a. [embarasser, French.] To perplex; to distress; to entangle.

I saw my friend a little embarrassed, and turned away. Spectator.

EMBA'RRASSMENT. n. s. [from embarrass.] Perplexity; entanglement.

Let your method be plain, that your hearers may run through it without embarrassment, and take a clear view of the whole. Watts, Logick.

To EMBA'SE. v. a. [from base.]

1. To vitiate; to depauperate; to lower; to deprave; to impair.

Grains are annual, so that the virtue of the seed is not worn out; whereas in a tree it is embased by the ground. Bacon.

I have no servile or ignoble end in my present labour, which may, on either side, restrain or embase the freedom of my poor judgement. Wotton.

I will rather choose to wear a crown of thorns, than to exchange that of gold for one of lead, whose embased flexibleness shall be forced to bend. King Charles.

A pleasure, high, rational, and angelical; a pleasure embased with no appendant sting; but such a one as being honey in the mouth, never turns to gall or gravel in the belly. South.

2. To degrade; to vilify.

Joy of my life, full oft for loving you
I bless my lot, that was so lucky plac'd:
But then the more your own mishap I rue,
That are so much by so mean love embased.
Spenser.

EMBA'SEMENT.* n. s. [from embase.] Deterioration; depravation.

What shall we think of the pleasures of sin, which receive a farther embasement, and diminution, from the superaddition of a curse. South, Serm. viii. S. iv.

Queen Elizabeth did by little and little rectify this detestable embasement of coin. Hale, Hist. Pl. Cr. ch. 17.

EMBA'SSADE.* n. s. [French, embassade.] Used by Spenser in the sense either of on embassy, or as embassadors; but now disused. See AMBASSADE.

But when her words embassade forth she sends,
Lord, how sweet musick that unto them lends.
Spenser, Hymn in Hon. of Beauty.

EMBA'SSADOUR.† n. s. [old Fr. embassadeur. Barbazan prefers the spelling with em to that of am, the word, as he thinks, being derived from the Lat. immittere, to send out. V. Roq. Gloss. Lang. Rom. But see AMBASSADOUR.] One sent on a publick message.

Mighty Jove's embassadour appear'd
With the same message. Denham.

Myself my king's embassador will go. Dryden.

EMBA'SSADRESS.† n. s.

1. A woman sent on a publick message.

With fear the modest matron lifts her eyes,
And to the bright embassadress replies. Garth, Ovid.

2. The wife of an embassador.

Do you frequent the Dutch embassador or embassadress? Ld. Chesterfield.

E'MBASSAGE.† } n. s. [It may be observed,
E'MBASSY. } that though our authors write almost indiscriminately embassador or ambassador, embassage or ambassage; yet there is scarcely an example of ambassy all concurring to write embassy, Dr. Johnson says. This is not, universally, however, the case. The Cyclopædia of Chambers presents EMBASSY with the accompaniment of AMBASSY; and a writer in the Modern Universal History has followed the spelling of ambassy. I mention this to shew the exception, but not to propose a deviation from embassy. Spenser has once placed the accent upon the second syllable of embassage, F. Q. iii. ix. 28. And so on embassade. But the accent is now fixed upon the first.]

1. A publick message; a message concerning business between princes or states.

Fresh embassy and suits,
Nor from the state nor private friends, hereafter,
Will I lend ear to. Shakspeare, Coriol.

When he was at Newcastle, he sent a solemn embassage unto James king of Scotland, to treat and conclude a peace with him. Bacon, Henry VII.

The peace polluted thus, a chosen band
He first commissions to the Latian land,
In threat'ning embassy. Dryden, Æn.

2. Any solemn message.

He sends the angels on embassies with his decrees. Bp. Taylor.

3. An errand, in an ironical sense.

A bird was made fly with such art to carry a written embassage among the ladies, that one might say, If a live bird, how taught? If dead, how made? Sidney.

Nimble mischance, that art so light of foot,
Doth not thy embassage belong to me;
And am I last that know it? Shakspeare, Rich. II.

To EMBA'THE.* See To IMBATHE.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. a. [from battle.] To range in order or array of battle.

The English are embattl'd;
To horse! you gallant princes, straight to horse!
Shakspeare.

I could drive her from the ward of her reputation, her marriage vow, and a thousand other her defences, which now are too strongly embattled against me. Shakspeare.

On their embattled ranks the waves return,
And overwhelm the war! Milton, P. L.

Embattled nations strive in vain
The hero's glory to restrain:
Streams arm'd with rocks, and mountains red with fire,
In vain against his force conspire. Prior.

To EMBA'TTLE. v. n. To be ranged in battle array.

The night
Is shiny, and they say we shall embattle
By the second hour of the morn. Shakspeare.

EMBA'TTLED.* adj. Indented like a battlement; a term still used in heraldry; and of very ancient usage in our poetry.

His comb was redder than the fine corall,
Embattelled, as it were a castel wall.
Chaucer, N. Pr. Tale.

Wearing a diademe embattild wide
With hundred turrets, like a turribant.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 28.

To EMBA'Y. v. a.

1. [from baigner, to bathe, French.] To bathe; to wet; to wash. Not used.

In her lap a little babe did play
His cruel sport;
For in her streaming blood he did embay
His little hands, and tender joints embrew.
Spenser, F. Q.

Every sense the humour sweet embayed,
And slumb'ring soft, my heart did steal away.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. [from bay.] To enclose in a bay; to landlock.

If that the Turkish fleet
Be not inshelter'd and embay'd, they're drown'd.
Shakspeare.

EMBE'DDED.* adj. [en and bed.] Sunk in another substance.

When we reflect upon the number of muscles, not fewer than four hundred and forty-six, in the human body, known and named, how contiguous they lie to each other in layers, as it were, over one another, crossing one another, sometimes embedded in one another, sometimes perforating one another; an arrangement, which leaves to each its liberty and its full play, must necessarily require meditation and counsel. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 9.

To EMBE'LLISH.† v. a. [embellir, French. Our word was formerly without the h. "Her tears embellissed her wifely chastity." Chaucer, Leg. of Lucrece.] To adorn; to beautify; to grace with ornaments; to decorate.

Bayleaves between,
And primroses green,
Embellish the sweet violet. Spenser, Shep. Cal. April.

The work as of a kingly palace-gate,
With frontispiece of diamond and gold
Embellish'd. Milton, P. L.

How much more beauteous had the fountain been,
Embellish'd with her first created green;
Where crystal streams through living turf had run,
Contented with an urn of native stone. Dryden, Juv.

The names of the figures that embellished the discourses of those who understood the art of speaking, are not the art and skill of speaking well. Locke.

That which was once the most beautiful spot of Italy, covered with palaces, embellished by emperours, and celebrated by poets, has now nothing to shew but ruins. Addison on Italy.

EMBE'LLISHER.* n. s. [from embellish.] One who embellishes; one who graces with ornaments.

EMBE'LLISHMENT. n. s. [from embellish.] Ornament; adventitious beauty; decoration; adscititious grace; any thing that confers the power of pleasing.

Cultivate the wild licentious savage
With wisdom, discipline, and liberal arts,
The embellishments of life. Addison, Cato.

Apparitions, visions, and intercourses of all kinds between the dead and the living, are the frequent and familiar embellishments of the legends of the Romish church. Atterbury.

E'MBERING. n. s. The ember days. A word used by old authors, now obsolete.

For causes good so many ways,
Keep emb'rings well, and fasting days;
What law commands we ought to obey,
For Friday, Saturn, and Wednesday. Tusser.

E'MBERS. n. s. without a singular. [æmýpia, Saxon, ashes; einmyria, Icelandick, hot ashes or cinders.] Hot cinders; ashes not yet extinguished.

Take hot embers, and put them about a bottle filled with new beer, almost to the very neck: let the bottle be well stopped, lest it fly out; and continue it, renewing the embers every day for the space of ten days. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If the air will not permit,
Some still removed place will fit,
While glowing embers through the room
Teach light to counterfeit a gloom. Milton, Il Pens.

While thus heav'n's highest counsels, by the low
Footsteps of their effects, he trac'd too well,
He tost his troubled eyes, embers that glow
Now with new rage, and wax too hot for hell.
Crashaw.

He said, and rose, as holy zeal inspires;
He rakes hot embers, and renews the fires.
Dryden, Virgil.

E'MBERWEEK. n. s. [The original of this word has been much controverted: some derive it from embers or ashes strewed by penitents on their heads: but Nelson decides in favour of Mareschal, who derives it from ymbren or em-

bren, a course or circumvolution.] A week in which an ember day falls.

The ember days at the four seasons are the Wednesday, Friday, and Saturday after the first Sunday in Lent, the feast of Pentecost, September 14, December 13. Common Prayer.

Stated times appointed for fasting are Lent, and the four seasons of the year called emberweeks. Ayliffe, Parergon.

To EMBE'ZZLE.† v. a. [This word seems corrupted by an ignorant pronunciation from imbecil, Dr. Johnson says; which is a great mistake. It is derived from the old Fr. besler, or embesler. See Kelham's Norm. Dict. "embeasiler, to filch." See also To BEZZLE.]

1. To appropriate by breach of trust; to turn what is entrusted in his hands to his own use.

He had embezzled the king's treasure, and extorted money by way of loan from all men. Hayward.

2. To waste; to swallow up in riot.

When thou hast embezzl'd all thy store,

EMBE'ZZLEMENT. n. s. [from embezzle.]

1. The act of appropriating to himself that which is received in trust for another.
2. The thing appropriated.

EMBE'ZZLER.* n. s. [from embezzle.] One who appropriates to himself what is received in trust for another.

To EMBI'BE.* See To IMBIBE. Embibe, or enbibe, is the spelling of Chaucer.

To EMBLA'ZE. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

1. To adorn with glittering embellishments.

Th' unsought diamonds
Would so emblaze the forehead of the deep,
And so bestud with stars, that they below
Would grow inur'd to light. Milton, Comus.

No weeping orphan saw his father's stores
Our shrines irradiate, or emblaze the floors. Pope.

2. To blazon; to paint with ensigns armorial.

Nor shall this blood be wiped from thy point,
But thou shalt wear it as a herald's coat,
T' emblaze the honour which thy master got. Shakspeare.

He from the glittering staff unfurl'd
Th' imperial ensign, streaming to the wind,
With gems and golden lustre rich emblaz'd,

To EMBLA'ZON. v. a. [blasonner, Fr.]

1. To adorn with figures of heraldry; to grace with ensigns armorial.
2. To deck in glaring colours; to set out pompously to shew.

We find Augustus, for some petty conquest, emblazoned by the poets to the highest pitch. Hakewill on Providence.

EMBLA'ZONER.* n. s. [from emblazon.]

1. One who publishes in a pompous manner.

But I step again to this emblazoner of his title-page, (whether it be the same man or no, I leave it in the midst,) and here I find him pronouncing, without reprieve, those animadversions to be a slanderous and scurrilous libel. Milton, Apology for Smectymnuus.

2. A herald; a blazoner. See BLAZONER.

EMBLA'ZONRY. n. s. [from emblazon.] Pictures upon shields.

Him round
A globe of fiery seraphim inclos'd
With bright emblazonry and horrent arms. Milton, P. L.

E'MBLEM.† n. s. [ἔμβλημα, Gr. embleme, French.]

1. Inlay; enamel; any thing inserted into the body of another.

Underfoot the violet,
Crocus, and hyacinth, with rich inlay
Broider'd the ground, more colour'd than with stone
Of costliest emblem. Milton, P. L.

2. An occult representation; an allusive picture; a typical designation.

She had all the royal makings of a queen,
The rod, and bird of peace, and all such emblems,
Laid nobly on her. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

If you draw your beast in an emblem, shew a landscape of the country natural to the beast. Peacham on Drawing.

Gentle Thames,
Thy mighty master's emblem, in whose face
Sate meekness, heighten'd with majestick grace. Denham.

He is indeed a proper emblem of knowledge and action, being all head and paws. Addison, Guardian.

To E'MBLEM.† v. a. [from the noun.] To represent in an occult or allusive manner. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing a solitary instance from Glanville; but it was apparently very common, and has been well employed by Glanville's contemporaries, or rather his seniors.

Jacob is as man; Laban is the churlish, envious, ungrateful world; Leah is the pleasure it pays us with: blemished in that which is the life of beauty; perished even in the eye; emblemed too by the sex of frailty, Women. Feltham, Res. i. 81.

The story of the world doth often afford such a kind of representation: sometimes it presenteth a fair view of glorious monarchs and flourishing nations, symbolized by the magnificence of cities and palaces; high and eminent prosperity in the grandees of the earth, figured by the cedars; plentiful and opulent private estates, emblemed by the pregnancy of the fields. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. p. 362.

I observe many of these airy forms bearing equal date almost with the evils emblemed in them. Spencer on Prod. p. 220.

The primitive fight of elements doth fitly emblem that of opinions. Glanville, Scepsis.

EMBLEMA'TICAL.
EMBLEMA'TICK. } adj. [from emblem.]

1. Comprising an emblem; allusive; occultly representative.

In the well fram'd models,
With emblematick skill and mystick order,
Thou shew'dst where tow'rs on battlements should rise,
Where gates should open, or where walls should compass. Prior.

The poets contribute to the explication of reverses purely emblematical, or when the persons are allegorical. Addison.

2. Dealing in emblems; using emblems.

By tongue and pudding to our friends explain
What does your emblematick worship mean. Prior.

EMBLEMA'TICALLY. adv. [from emblematical.] In the manner of emblems; allusively; with occult representation.

Others have spoken emblematically and hieroglyphically, as to the Egyptians; and the phœnix was the hieroglyphick of the sun. Brown, Vulg. Err.

He took a great stone, and put it up under the oak, emblematically joining the two great elements of masonry. Swift.

EMBLE'MATIST. n. s. [from emblem.] A writer or inventer of emblems.

These fables are still maintained by symbolical writers, emblematists, and heralds. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To EMBLE'MATIZE.* v. a. [from emblem.] To represent by an emblem.

How the senary should emblematize the world, you shall understand thus: The world is self-complete, filled and perfected by its own parts: so is the senarius, which has no denominated part but a sixth, third, and second, viz. 1, 2, 3, which put together make six; and Euclid defines a perfect number from this property, "a perfect number is that which is equal to its parts." More, Conj. Cabb. (1653,) p. 159.

This garden of Eden may emblematize, while Adam is discoursed of as innocent and obedient to God, the delights of the Spirit. Ibid. p. 239.

E'MBLEMENTS.* n. s. plur. [Fr. emblaver, to sow the ground with corn; Greek, ἐμβαλλειν.] Profits arising from land sown, or generally from the ground.

If tenant for life sow the land, and afterwards die, the executor of the tenant for life shall have the emblements, and not he in reversion. Cowel.

The doctrine of emblements extends not only to corn sown, but to roots planted, or their annual artificial profit. Blackstone.

E'MBLEMIZING.* n. s. [from emblem. Fr. emblemature.] A making of emblems. Cotgrave.

To EMBO'DY.* See To IMBODY. Dr. Johnson writes embody under the word incorporate, though he takes no other notice of it in his Dictionary.

EMBO'GUING.* n. s. [from the Fr. embouchure. Though we have disembogue in almost all our dictionaries, yet embogue perhaps will be found in none. Nor have I met with an instance of it in any other shape than that of the following noun.] The mouth of a river or fen; the place where it empties itself into the sea.

The frosts are so hard and sharp in the emboguing of the Meotis fens, that in the very place where Mithridates' lieutenant had delivered a battle to his enemies on hard ground, and dry-footed, and there defeated them, the next summer he there obtained another sea-battle against them. Florio, Transl. of Montaigne, (1613,) p. 113.

To EMBOI'L.* See To IMBOIL.

To EMBO'LDEN.* See To IMBOLDEN. Yet embolden seems to be the best authorized method of writing the word. So Milton wrote it; so the translators of our present version of the Bible; and so Chaucer.

E'MBOLISM. n. s. [ἐμβολισμὸς, Gr.]

1. Intercalation; insertion of days or years to produce regularity and equation of time.

The civil constitutions of the year were after different manners in several nations; some using the sun's year, but in divers fashions; and some following the moon, finding out embolisms or equations, even to the addition of whole months, to make all as even as they could. Holder on Time.

2. The time inserted; intercalatory time.

E'MBOLUS. n. s. [ἔμβολος, Gr.] Any thing inserted and acting in another, as the sucker in a pump.

Our members make a sort of an hydraulick engine, in which a chymical liquor, resembling blood, is driven through elastick channels by an embolus, like the heart. Arbuthnot.

To EMBO'RDER.* v. a. [old Fr. emborder.] To adorn with a border. See To IMBORDER. Dr. Johnson has neither. Milton writes it imborder.

To EMBO'SK.* See To IMBOSK.

To EMBO'SS.† v. a. [from bosse, a protuberance, Fr.]

1. To form with protuberances; to cover with something rising into lumps or bunches.

Timon hath made his everlasting mansion
Upon the breached verge of the salt flood;
Which once a-day, with his embossed froth,
The turbulent surge shall cover. Shaks. Timon.

Thou art a bile,
A plague sore, or embossed carbuncle,
In my corrupted blood. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Botches and blains must all his flesh emboss,
And all his people. Milton, P. L.

All croud in heaps, as at a night alarm
The bees drive out upon each other's backs,
To emboss their hives in clusters.
Dryden, Don Sebast.

2. To engrave with relief, or rising work.

On the sides of this (which began the other part) were placed two great statues, feigned of gold, one of Atlas, the other of Hercules, in varied postures, bearing up the clouds, which were of relievo, embossed, and tralucent as naturals.
B. Jonson, Masques.

Then o'er the lofty gate his art emboss'd
Androgeo's death, and off'rings to his ghost.
Dryden, Virg.

3. To enclose; to include; to cover. [from emboister, French, to enclose in a box. See To IMBOX.]

The knight his thrillant spear again essay'd
In his brass-plated body to emboss. Spenser, F. Q.

And in the way, as she did weep and wail,
A knight her met, in mighty arms emboss'd.
Spenser, F. Q.

4. To enclose in a thicket. [emboscare, Ital.]

Like that self-begotten bird
In the Arabian woods embost. Milton, S. A.

5. To hunt hard. "When a deer is hard run, and foams at the mouth, he is said to be embost: a dog also, when he is strained with hard running, especially upon hard ground, will have his knees swelled, and then he is said to be embost, from bosse, Fr. a tumour." Hanmer. It is rather, in the present sense, from the Spanish emboçar, to cast out of the mouth. And it is thus often applied, by our old writers, to a hunted deer.

As a dismayed deer in chase embost.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. xii. 17.

Oh, he is more mad
Than Telamon for his shield; the boar of Thessaly
Was never so embost. Shakspeare.

We have almost embost him: you shall see his fall to-night. Shakspeare.

Look as an hart, with sweat and blood imbrued,
Chas'd and embost, thirsts, in the soil to be.
P. Fletcher, Poet. Misc. p. 86.

EMBO'SSMENT. n. s. [from emboss.]

1. Any thing standing out from the rest; jut; eminence.

I wish also, in the very middle, a fair mount, with three ascents and alleys, enough for four to walk a-breast; which I would have to be perfect circles, without any bulwarks or embossments.
Bacon, Essays.

2. Relief; rising work.

They are at a loss about the word pendentis; some fancy it expresses only the great embossment of the figure, others believe it hung off the helmet in alto relievo. Addison on Italy.

To EMBO'TTLE. v. a. [bouteille, Fr.] To include in bottles; to bottle.

Stirom, firmest fruit
Embottled, long as Priamean Troy
Withstood the Greeks, endures. Philips.

To EMBO'UND.* See To IMBOUND.

To EMBO'W.* v. a. [from bow.] To bend like a bow; to arch; to vault. Dr. Johnson writes this word imbow; but his examples from Spenser and Milton are against it, being in the authors' own editions embow. Bacon indeed has imbow. Our old lexicography, on the other hand, gives embow; as, "roofs carved and embowed," Barret.

Prince Arthur gave a box of diamond sure
Embow'd with gold and gorgeous ornament.
Spenser, F. Q. i. ix. 19.

I saw a bull as white as driven snow,
With gilden horns embowed like the moon.
Spenser, Vis. of World's Vanity.

The gilted roofs embow'd with curious work.
Gascoigne's Jocasta, i. 2.

The inner part is hollow or embowed, [i. e. vaulted,] and the outward is bended.
Bryskett, Disc. of Civ. Life, (1606,) p. 47.

The high embowed roof,
With antick pillars massy proof. Milton, Il Pens.

To EMBO'WEL.† v. a. [from bowel. Norm. Fr. embouellecz, embowelled.]

1. To eviscerate; to deprive of the entrails; to exenterate.

The schools,
Embowelled of their doctrine, have left off
The danger to itself. Shakspeare.

Embowell'd will I see thee by and by;
Till then, in blood, by noble Percy lye.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

The roar
Embowell'd with outrageous noise the air,
And all her entrails tore. Milton, P. L.

Fossils and minerals that th' embowell'd earth
Displays. Philips.

2. To bury within any other substance.

His dreadfull hand he heaved up aloft,
And with his dreadfull instrument of yre
Thought sure have pownded him to powder soft,
Or deepe embowell'd in the earth entyre.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 15.

He conceals the loss, and counterfeits another ring like it of silver, embowelling a motto to this purpose, "O pertinaces, O pœnitentes!" from which pattern most Mahometans to this day wear rings of silver. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 267.

EMBO'WELLER.* n. s. [from embowel.] One who takes out entrails.

We shall next proceed to speak of the surgeon or embalmer, and of all other inferior officers under him, such as the dissector, emboweller, pollinctor, salter, and other dependant servants, as dressers of the dead, painters, carvers, and the like.
Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 283.

To EMBO'WER.* v. n. [from bower.] To lodge; to build; to bower. See To BOWER.

But the small birds, in their wide boughs embowering,
Chaunted their sundry tunes.
Spenser, Virgil's Gnat.

To EMBO'X.* See To IMBOX.

To EMBRA'CE.† v. a. [embrasser, Fr.]

1. To hold fondly in the arms; to squeeze in kindness.

Embrace again, my sons! be foes no more;
Nor stain your country with her children's gore.
Dryden.

2. To seize ardently or eagerly; to lay hold on; to welcome; to accept willingly any thing offered. Chaucer uses it in the sense of take hold of.

[She] could so the people's heart embrace,
That each her loveth that loketh on her face.
Clerk's Tale.

I take it, your own business calls on you,
And you embrace th' occasion to depart. Shaksp.

At first, her mother-earth she holdeth dear,
And doth embrace the world, and worldly things.
Davies.

They who are represented by the wise virgins, embraced the profession of the Christian religion, as the foolish virgins also had done. Tillotson.

3. To comprehend; to take in: as, natural philosophy embraces many sciences.

4. To comprise; to enclose; to contain; to encompass; to encircle.

Low at his feet a spacious plain is plac'd,
Between the mountain and the stream embrac'd.
Denham.

5. To admit; to receive.

Fenton, Heav'n give thee joy!
What cannot be eschew'd, must be embraced.
Shakspeare.

If a man can be assured of any thing, without having examined, what is there that he may not embrace for truth? Locke.

6. To find; to take.

Fleance, his son,
Whose absence is no less material to me
Than is his father's, must embrace the fate
Of that dark hour. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

7. To squeeze in a hostile manner.

8. To fasten; to fit close. [Ital. imbracciare, "porsi ed avvoltarsi al braccio, cappa, scudo, &c." Vocab. Della Crusca.]

Who, seeing him from far so fierce to pricke,
His warlike arms about him gan embrace,
And in the rest his ready spear did sticke.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. i. 26.

To EMBRA'CE. v. n. To join in an embrace.

Let me embrace with old Vincentio;
And wander we to see thy honest son,
Who will of thy arrival be full joyous. Shakspeare.

EMBRA'CE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Clasp; fond pressure in the arms; hug.

Thames, the most lov'd of all the ocean's sons
By his old sire, to his embraces runs. Denham.

2. An hostile squeeze; crush.

EMBRA'CEMENT.† n. s. [from embrace.]

1. Clasp in the arms; hug; embrace.

Thus death becomes a rival to us all,
And hopes with foul embracements her to get,
In whose decay virtue's fair shrine must fall.
Sidney.

There cherishing one another with dear, though chaste embracements, with sweet, though cold kisses, it might seem that Love was come to play him there without darts. Sidney.

2. Hostile hug; grapple.

These beasts, fighting with any man, stand upon their hinder feet, and so this did, being ready to give me a shrewd embracement. Sidney.

3. Comprehension.

Nor can her wide embracements filled be. Davies.

4. State of being contained; enclosure.

The parts in man's body easily reparable, as spirits, blood, and flesh, die in the embracement of the parts hardly reparable, as bones, nerves, and membranes. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. Conjugal endearment.

I would freelier rejoice in that absence, wherein he won honour, than in the embracements of his bed, where he would shew most love.
Shakspeare, Coriol.

6. Admission; reception.

Both of them being God's instruments for the conversion of the Northumbrians to the embracement of Christian religion. Weever.

EMBRA'CER.† n. s. [from embrace.] The person embracing.

Yet are they the greatest embracers of pleasure of any other upon earth; and they esteem of pearls as pebbles, so they may satisfy their gust, in point of pleasure or revenge. Howell.

The errour once broached, found many embracers. Fuller, Holy War, p. 96.

EMBRA'CING.* n. s. [from embrace.] An embrace. Huloet, and Barret.

Such wanton tunes, [and] homely embracings. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 496.

To EMBRA'ID.* v. a. [from braid, which, I have already observed, is the parent of our word upbraid.] To censure in opprobrious terms. Not now in use. See To BRAID.

[He] embrayded him with cowardise. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 167. b.

EMBRA'SURE. n. s. [embrasure, French.] An aperture in the wall, through which the cannon is pointed; battlement.

To EMBRA'VE.† v. a. [from brave.]

1. To decorate; to embellish; to deck; to grace; to adorn. Not now in use.

So, both agree their bodies to engrave;
The great earth's womb they open to the sky,
And, with sad cypress, seemly it embrave.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. To inspire with fortitude.

Psyche, embrav'd by Chari's generous flame,
Strives in devotion's furnace to refine
Her pious self.
Beaumont's Psyche, (1651,) xvii. Arg.

To E'MBROCATE. v. a. [ἐμβρέχω.] To rub any part diseased with medicinal liquors.

I returned her a glass with oil of roses and vinegar, to embrocate her arm.
Wiseman on Inflammations.

EMBROCA'TION.† n. s. [from embrocate. This word is of no great age in our language. When Sir William Petty addressed Hartlib on the Advancement of Learning, it was embrocha. "Administring to each patient his physick — embrochaes, fomentations, frictions." Advice of Sir W. Petty, &c. 1648. p. 16.]

1. The act of rubbing any part diseased with medicinal liquors or spirits.

2. The lotion with which any diseased part is washed or embrocated.

We endeavoured to ease by discutient and emollient cataplasms, and embrocations of various sorts. Wiseman, Surg.

To EMBRO'IDER.† v. a. [broder, Fr. Our word at first was embroid or embroud. "Mantles embrouded well," Chaucer's Flower and Leaf; and even so late, as in 1630. "The dew — with pearl embrouds each meadow," Drayton's Muses Elysium. It was also embroder before embroider, as in Barret's Dictionary of 1580.] To border with ornaments; to decorate with figured work; to diversify with needlework; to adorn a ground with raised figures of needlework.

Such an accumulation of favours is like a kind of embroidering or lifting of one favour upon another. Wotton.

Embroider'd so with flowers it had stood,
That it became a garden of a wood. Waller.

Let no virgin be allowed to receive her lover, but in a suit of her own embroidering. Spectator, No. 606.

Embroider'd purple clothes the golden beds;
This slave the floor, and that the table spreads.
Pope.

EMBRO'IDERER. n. s. [from embroider.] One that adorns clothes with needlework.

Blue silk and purple, the work of the embroiderer. Ecclus. xlv. 10.

EMBRO'IDERY. n. s. [from embroider.]

1. Figures raised upon a ground; variegated needlework.

Write,
In emerald tuffs, flowers purfled, blue and white,
Like sapphire, pearl, in rich embroidery,
Buckled below fair knighthood's bending knee.
Shakspeare.

Laces and embroideries are more costly than either warm or comely. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

Next these a youthful train their vows express'd,
With feathers crown'd, with gay embroidery dress'd.
Pope.

2. Variegation; diversity of colours.

If the natural embroidery of the meadows were helpt and improved by art, a man might make a pretty landskip of his own possessions. Spectator, No. 414.

To EMBRO'IL. v. a. [brouiller, French.]

1. To disturb; to confuse; to distract; to throw into commotion; to involve in troubles by dissension and discord.

I had no passion, design, or preparation to embroil my kingdom in a civil war. K. Charles.

Rumour next, and chance,
And tumult and confusion, all embroil'd,
And discord with a thousand various mouths.
Milton, P. L.

When she found her venom spread so far,
The royal house embroil'd in civil war,
Rais'd on her dusky wings she cleaves the skies.
Dryden.

2. To perplex; to entangle.

The Christian antiquities at Rome, though of a fresher date, are so embroiled with fable and legend, that one receives but little satisfaction. Addison on Italy.

3. In the following passage the word seems improperly used for broil or burn.

That knowledge, for which we boldly attempt to rifle God's cabinet, should, like the coal from the altar, serve only to embroil and consume the sacrilegious invaders. Decay of Piety.

EMBRO'ILMENT.* n. s. [from embroil.] Confusion; disturbance.

The cause of this uncertainty was, the embroilments and factions that were then amongst the Arabs. Maundrell's Journey, p. 56.

To EMBRO'THEL. v. a. [brothel, brodel.] To enclose in a brothel.

Men, which choose
Law practice for mere gain, boldly repute,
Worse than embrothel'd strumpets prostitute.
Donne.

To EMBRO'WN.* See To IMBROWN.

To EMBRU'E.* See To IMBRUE. The most ancient method of writing this word which I have found is, in 1555, with em. And so Barret in his Dict. 1580.

E'MBRYO.† } n. s. [ἔμβρυον, Gr. The E'MBRYON. } word embryon was asserted by Addison to be of Milton's coinage; but it existed, before Milton wrote, both as an adjective and a substantive; though Dr. Johnson has omitted to notice it as an adjective; nor has he any instance of it in the plural number as a substantive.]

1. The offspring yet unfinished in the womb.

The bringing forth of living creatures may be accelerated, if the embryo ripeneth and perfecteth sooner. Bacon.

An exclusion before conformation, before the birth can bear the name of the parent, or be so much as properly called an embryon. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The reverence I owe to that one womb,
In which we both were embrions, makes me suffer
What's past. Beaum. and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

Embryos, and idiots, eremites, and friars.
Milton, P. L.

The earth was form'd, but in the womb as yet
Of waters, embryon immature involv'd,
Appear'd not. Milton, P. L.

When the crude embryo careful nature breeds,
See how she works, and how her work proceeds.
Blackmore.

While the promis'd fruit
Lies yet a little embryo, unperceiv'd
Within its crimson folds. Thomson, Spring.

2. The state of any thing yet not fit for production; yet unfinished.

The company little suspected what a noble work I had then in embryo. Swift.

E'MBRYON.* adj. Yet unfinished; not yet ready for production.

The embrion blossome of each spray.
W. Browne, Brit. Past. (1613,) i. 4.

Join sense unto reason, and experiment unto speculation; and so give life unto embryon truths, and verities yet in their chaos.
Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 5.

For hot, cold, moist, and dry, four champions fierce,
Strive here for mastery, and to battle bring
Their embryon atoms. Milton, P. L.

A kind of embryon, imperfect, heathen.
Hammond's Works, iv. 571.

To EMBU'RSE.* See To IMBURSE.

To EMBU'SY.* v. a. [from busy.] To employ.

The accustome and usage
Of auncient poets, ye wote full wele, hath bene
Them selfs to embusy with all their whole corage.
Skelton's Poems, p. 11.

The heads and senses of our people have been imbusied.
Necessary Erudition, (1543,) sign. A. iii. b.

EME.† n. s. [eame, Saxon.] Uncle. Now obsolete, Dr. Johnson says; which is not exactly the case. See EAME.

To EME'ND.* v. a. [Lat. emendo.] To amend; to correct.

Have us excused, that we no better do,
An other time to emende it if we can.
Mystery of Candlemas-day, (1512.)

EME'NDABLE. adj. [emendo, Lat.] Capable of emendation; corrigible.

EME'NDATELY.* adj. [Lat. emendatus.] Without fault; correct.

The printers were very desirous to have the Bible come forth as faultless and emendately as the shortness of the time for the recognising of the same would require.
Taverner, Dedic. of the Bible to K. H. VIII. (1539.)

EMENDA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. emendation.]

1. Correction; alteration of any thing from worse to better.

Nor is the Divine goodness less to be seen, venerated, and praised, in those emendations, which follow, to our ease and comfort, the lawful applications of art, and ingenuity.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 57.

The essence and the relation of every thing in being is fitted, beyond any emendation, for its action and use; and shews it to proceed from a mind of the highest understanding. Grew.

2. An alteration made in the text by verbal criticism.

Who ever heard either of ὀπλαίνω or πλαίνω? — Παπλαίνω comes forty times in Homer, and if he [Barnes] had been, as he thinks himself, "Mæonides, sextus pavone ex Pythagoreo," he might have found out the emendation.
Bentley to Dr. Davies.

E'MENDATOR.† n. s. [emendo, Lat.] A corrector; an improver; an alterer for the better.

In the copies, which they bring us out of the pretended original, there is so great an uncertainty and disagreement betwixt them, that the Roman emendators of Gratian themselves know not how to trust it.

Bp. Cosin, Canon of Scripture, (1672,) p. 123.

EME'NDATORY.* adj. [Lat. emendatus.] Contributing correction or emendation.

Jortin used frequently to mention this attempt to discredit emendatory criticism, with strong marks of derision. Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

The high credit in which emendatory criticism was held at the beginning of this [the eighteenth] century. Hurd, Life of Warburton.

To EME'NDICATE.* v. a. [Lat. emendico.] To beg. See To MENDICATE.

Cockeram.

E'MERALD. n. s. [emeraude, Fr.; smaragdus, Lat.] A green precious stone.

The emerald is evidently the same with the ancient smaragdus; and, in its most perfect state, is perhaps the most beautiful of all the gems. The rough emerald is usually of a very bright and naturally polished surface, and is ever of a pure and beautiful green, without the admixture of any other colour. The oriental emerald is of the hardness of the sapphire and ruby, and is second only to the diamond in lustre and brightness.

Hill on Fossils.

Do you not see the grass how in colour they excel the emerald? Sidney.

The emerald is a bright grass green: it is found in fissures of rocks, along with copper ores.

Woodward on Fossils.

Nor deeper verdure dies the robe of spring,
When first she gives it to the southern gale,
Than the green emerald shows. Thomson, Summer.

To EME'RGE.† v. n. [emergo, Lat. Dr. Johnson's earliest authority is that of Boyle. In 1656, the word was enumerated, by Heylin, amongst the uncouth and uncommon.]

1. To rise out of any thing in which it is covered.

They emerged, to the upper part of the spirit of wine, as much of them as lay immersed in the spirit. Boyle.

The mountains emerged, and became dry land again, when the waters retired. Burnet, Theory.

Thetis, not unmindful of her son,
Emerging from the deep, to beg her boon,
Pursued their track. Dryden, Homer.

2. To issue; to proceed.

If the prism was turned about its axis that way, which made the rays emerge more obliquely out of the second refracting surface of the prism, the image soon became an inch or two longer or more. Newton, Opticks.

3. To rise; to mount from a state of depression or obscurity; to rise into view.

Darkness, we see, emerges into light;
And shining suns descend to sable night.
Dryden, Fab.

When from dewy shade emerging bright,
Aurora streaks the sky with orient light,
Let each deplore his dead. Pope, Odyss.

I have often studied, and admired, why their parents would, under such mean encouragements, design their sons for the church; and those the most towardly and capable and select geniuses among their children, who must needs have emerged in a secular life. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 40.

Then from ancient gloom emerg'd
A rising world. Thomson, Summer.

EME'RGENCE. } n. s. [from emerge.]
EME'RGENCY. }

1. The act of rising out of any fluid by which any thing is covered.

We have read of a tyrant, who tried to prevent the emergence of murdered bodies.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. The act of rising or starting into view.

The emergency of colours, upon coalition of the particles of such bodies, as were neither of them of the colour of that mixture whereof they are ingredients, is very well worth our attentive observation. Boyle on Colours.

The white colour of all refracted light, at its very first emergence, where it appears as white as before its incidence, is compounded of various colours. Newton, Opticks.

3. Any sudden occasion, unexpected casualty.

Most of our rarities have been found out by casual emergency, and have been the works of time and chance rather than of philosophy.

Granville, Scepsis.

4. Pressing necessity; exigence. A sense not proper.

In any case of emergency, he would employ the whole wealth of his empire, which he had thus amassed together in his subterraneous exchequer. Addison, Freeholder.

EME'RGENT.† adj. [from emerge.]

1. Rising out of that which overwhelms or obscures it.

Love made my emergent fortune once more look
Above the main, which now shall hit the stars.
B. Jonson.

Immediately the mountains huge appear
Emergent, and their broad bare backs upheave
Into the clouds. Milton, P. L.

2. Rising into view, or notice, or honour.

The man that is once hated, both his good and his evil deeds oppress him; he is not easily emergent. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

3. Proceeding or issuing from any thing.

Is't not
A perfect act and absolute in law?
Seal'd and deliver'd before witnesses?
The day and date emergent.
B. Jonson, Staple of News.

The Stoicks held a fatality, and a fixed unalterable course of events; but then they held also, that they fell out by a necessity emergent from and inherent in the things themselves, which God himself could not alter. South.

4. Sudden; unexpectedly casual.

She composed certain prayers, herself, upon emergent occasions. Bacon, Collect. of Q. Elizabeth.

All the lords declared, that, upon any emergent occasion, they would mount their servants upon their horses. Clarendon.

Christ was of that infinite wisdom and knowledge, as to enact laws of that universal compliance with all the conditions of man, that there can be no new emergent inconvenience unforeseen by him, that should at any time make the obligation of them to cease. South, Serm. vii. 117.

EME'RITED.* adj. [emeritus, Lat.] Allowed to have done sufficient public service.

I had the honour to lay one of the first foundation stones of that royal structure, erected for the reception and encouragement of emerited and well-deserving seamen. Evelyn, iii. vii. § 15.

E'MERODS. } n. s. pl. [corrupted by ig-
E'MEROIDS. } norant pronunciation from hemorrhoids, αἱμορῥοιδες.] Painful swellings of the hemorrhoidal veins; piles.

He destroyed them, and smote them with emerods. 1 Sam. v. 6.

EME'RSION.† n. s. [from emerge.]

1. The act of rising out of any fluid.

They demonstrate or set forth by their baptism, that is, by their immersion into the water, and their emersion out of the same, their death and resurrection. Knatchbull, Annot. (1693,) p. 207.

2. The time when a star, having been obscured by its too near approach to the sun, appears again.

The time was in the heliacal emersion, when it becomes at greatest distance from the sun.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

E'MERY. n. s. [smyris, Lat.; esmeril, Fr.]

Emery is an iron ore, considerably rich. It is found in the island of Guernsey, in Tuscany, and many parts of Germany. It has a near relation to the magnet. The lapidaries cut the ordinary gems on their wheels by sprinkling the wetted powder over them; but it will not cut diamonds. It is useful in cleaning and polishing steel.

Hill, Mat. Med.

EME'TICAL. } adj. [ἐμέω.] Having the EME'TICK. } quality of provoking vomits.

Various are the temperaments and operations of herbs; some purgative, some emetick, and some sudorifick. Hale.

EME'TICALLY. adv. [from emetical.] In such a manner as to provoke to vomit.

It has been complained of, that preparations of silver have produced violent vomits; whereas we have not observed duly refined silver to work emetically, even in women and girls. Boyle.

EME'TICK.* n. s. A medicine provoking vomits.

There is a vast deal of propriety, as well as pleasantry, in the weapons Garth [in his Dispensary] has given to his warriours. They are armed much in character, with causticks, emeticks, &c.

Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

E'MEU, or E'MEW.* n. s. In zoology, a name of the cassowary, a large bird of the ostrich kind; used in our heraldick language.

EMICA'TION. n. s. [emicatio, Lat.] Sparkling; flying off in small particles, as sprightly liquors.

Iron, in aqua fortis, will fall into ebullition with noise and emication, as also a crass and fumid exhalation. Brown.

EMI'CTION. n. s. [from emictum, Latin.] Urine; what is voided by the urinary passages.

Gravel and stone grind away the flesh, and effuse the blood apparent in a sanguine emiction.

Harvey on Consumptions.

E'MIGRANT.* n. s. [Lat. emigrans.] One who emigrates. A modern word. See EMIGRATE.

All these emigrants were to receive pay and subsistence for some years at the publick expence.

Robertson.

In these expeditions the northern emigrants were attended by their poets.

Warton, Hist. E. Poet. i. Diss. 1.

E'MIGRATE.* part. adj. [Lat. emigratus. This word, a century and a half since, was in use, apparently as a philosophical term; for it is ridiculed as such, by a quaint author, among several Platonical expressions, in the passage which I cite. The accent is there placed on the second syllable. Of the verb emigrate the use is probably modern. Dr. Johnson gives no example.] Wandering; roving.

But let our souls emigrate meet,
And in abstract embraces greet;
(Till that the fates permit) let's live
Intranced by love intuitive.
Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. p: 228.

To E'MIGRATE.† v. n. [emigro, Lat.] To remove from one place to another.

A man who stays at home, gains nothing by his neighbour's emigrating.
Conversation in Boswell's Life of Johnson, in 1778.

They don't emigrate, till they could earn their livelihood in some way at home. Ibid.

The surplus parts of this plethorick body always must emigrate. Pownall on Antiq. (1782,) p. 60.

EMIGRA'TION. n. s. [from emigrate.] Change of habitation; removal from one place to another.

We find the originals of many kingdoms either by victories, or by emigrations, or intestine commotions. Hale.

E'MINENCE.† } n. s. [eminence, Fr. eminen-
E'MINENCY. } tia, Lat.]

1. Loftiness; height.
2. Summit; highest part.

Mountains abound with different vegetables, every vertex or eminency affording new kinds.
Ray on the Creation.

3. A part rising above the rest.

They must be smooth, almost imperceptible to the touch, and without either eminence or cavities.
Dryden, Dufresnoy.

4. A place where one is exposed to general notice.

A satire or libel on one of the common stamp, never meets with that reception as what is aimed at a person whose merit places him upon an eminence, and gives him a more conspicuous figure.
Addison, Spectator.

5. Exaltation; conspicuousness; state of being exposed to view; reputation; celebrity; fame; preferment; greatness.

You've too a woman's heart, which ever yet
Affected eminence, wealth, sovereignty.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Alterations are attributed to the powerfullest under princes, where the eminency of one obscureth the rest. Wotton.

He deserv'd no such return
From me, whom he created what I was,
In that bright eminence; and with his good
Upbraided none. Milton, P. L.

Where men cannot arrive to any eminency of estate, yet religion makes a compensation, by teaching content. Tillotson.

These two were men of eminency, of learning as well as piety. Stillingfleet.

6. Supreme degree.

Whatever pure thou in the body enjoy'st,
And pure thou wert created, we enjoy
In eminence. Milton, P. L.

7. Notice; distinction.

Let your remembrance still apply to Banquo;
Present him eminence both with eye and tongue.
Shakspeare.

8. A title given to cardinals, Dr. Johnson says. It should be added, that cardinal Barberini first caused the title of eminenza to be affixed to the ecclesiasticks of this rank; in order to equal the phrase of excellency applied to sovereign princes in Italy; but the princes, upon the assumption of eminency by the cardinals, took that of highness, altezza; thus leaving the cardinals to toil after them up the hill of title in vain! The grand master of Malta had also the appellation of eminency.

The late most grievous cruelties, and most bloody slaughters perpetrated upon the inhabitants of the vallies of Piedmont, within the duke of Savoy's dominions, occasioned the writing of the enclosed letters to his majesty, and these other to your eminency. Milton, Lett. of State, to Card. Mazarine.

E'MINENT.† adj. [eminent, old Fr. eminens, Lat.]

1. High; lofty.

Thou hast built unto thee an eminent place.
Ezek. xvi. 24.

Mischief, 'gainst goodness aim'd, is like a stone,
Unnaturally forc'd up an eminent hill,
Whose weight falls on our heads, and buries us.
Beaum. and Fl. Q. of Corinth.

Satan, in gesture proudly eminent,
Stood like a tow'r. Milton, P. L.

2. Dignified; exalted.

Rome for your sake shall push her conquests on,
And bring new titles home from nations won,
To dignify so eminent a son. Dryden, Juv.

3. Conspicuous; remarkable.

She is eminent for a sincere piety in the practice of religion. Addison, Freeholder.

Eminent he mov'd
In Grecian arms, the wonder of his foes. Glover.

E'MINENTLY. adv. [from eminent.]

1. Conspicuously; in a manner that attracts observation.

Thy love, which else
So eminently never had been known. Milton, P. L.

Lady, that in the prime of earliest youth,
Wisely hast shunn'd the broad way and the green,
And with those few art eminently seen,
That labour up the hill of heavenly truth.
Milton, Sonnet.

Such as thou hast solemnly elected,
With gifts and graces eminently adorn'd
To some great work. Milton, S. A.

2. In a high degree.

All men are equal in their judgement of what is eminently best. Dryden.

That simplicity, without which no human performance can arrive to perfection, is no where more eminently useful than in this. Swift.

E'MIR. n. s.* A title of dignity among the Turks and Persians. "Mortis Ally by the Persians is called emyr el memumin, i. e. prince of the faithful." Sir T. Herbert's Travels, p. 268. "Amir or emir ul omra, a lord of lords or chief of the nobles." Flowers of Pers. Literature, p. 7. Among the Turks it is usually applied to the descendants of Mahomet.

We may here bring in the emirs into the number of religious men, because they are of the race of Mahomet, who, for distinction sake wear about their heads turbans of a deep sea-green. Ricaut.

E'MISSARY.† n. s. [emissarius, Lat. Dr. Johnson has, under the first definition, given the passage from B. Jonson, which I cite to illustrate the word as an adjective.]

1. One sent out on private messages; a spy; a secret agent.

Clifford, an emissary and spy of the king's, fled over into Flanders with his privity.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

The Jesuits send over emissaries, with instructions to personate themselves members of the several sects amongst us. Swift.

2. One that emits or sends out. A technical sense.

Wherever there are emissaries, there are absorbent vessels in the skin; and, by the absorbent vessels, mercury will pass into the blood.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

E'MISSARY.* adj. [adopted from the Latin emissitius, which is applied by Plautus to the eye, as the reverend Mr. Whalley long since observed on the passage in B. Jonson; and which, he might have added, is literally adopted by a better writer than the facetious bard. See EMISSITIOUS.] Looking about; prying.

You shall neither eat nor sleep,
No, nor forth your window peep,
With your emissary eye,
To fetch in the forms go by.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.

EMI'SSION. n. s. [emissio, Lat.] The act of sending out; vent.

Tickling causeth laughter: the cause may be the emission of the spirits, and so of the breath by a flight from titillation. Bacon.

Populosity necessarily requireth transmigration and emission of colonies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Cover them with glasses; but upon all warm and benign emissions of the sun, and sweet showers, give them air. Evelyn.

Affection, in the state of innocence, was happily pitched upon its right object; it flamed up in direct fervours of devotion to God, and in collateral emissions of charity to its neighbour. South.

EMISSI'TIOUS.* adj. [Lat. emissitius.] Prying; narrowly examining.

Malicious mass-priest, cast back those emissitious eyes to your own infamous chair of Rome.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Married Clergy, p. 184.

To EMI'T.† v. a. [emitto, Lat.]

1. To send forth; to let go; to give vent to.

These baths continually emit a manifest and very sensible heat; nay, some of them, at some times, send forth an actual and visible flame.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The soil being fruitful and rich, emits steams consisting of volatile and active parts.
Arbuthnot on Air.

2. To let fly; to dart.

Pay sacred rev'rence to Apollo's song,
Lest, wrathful, the far-shooting god emit
His fatal arrows. Prior.

3. To issue out juridically.

That a citation be valid, it ought to be decreed and emitted by the judge's authority, and at the instance of the party. Ayliffe.

By this Act of Uniformity, there was an end put to all the liberty and licence which had been practised in all churches from the time of his majesty's return, and by his declaration that he had emitted afterwards. Ld. Clarendon, Life, ii. 296.

EMME'NAGOGUES. n. s. pl. [ἔμμηνα and ἄγω.] Medicines that promote the courses, either by giving a greater force to the blood in its circulation, or by making it thinner. Quincy.

Emmenagogues are such as produce a plethora, or fulness of the vessels, consequently such as strengthen the organs of digestion, so as to make good blood.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

E'MMET.† n. s. [æmette, Saxon. Formerly written emote. "The emote, or ant." Barret, Dict. 1580. From the Saxon word, æmt is conjectured to have been formed; and then ænt, whence ant. See ANT.] An ant; a pismire.

When cedars to the ground fall down by the weight of an emmet,
Or when a rich ruby's just price be the worth of a walnut. Sidney.

First crept
The parsimonious emmet, provident
Of future. Milton, P. L.

To EMME'W. v. a. [from mew.] To mew or coop up.

This outward sainted deputy,
Whose settl'd visage and deliberate word,

Nips youth i' the head, and follies doth emmew,
As falcon doth a fowl, is yet a devil. Shakspeare.

To EMMO'VE.† v. a. [emmouvoir, Fr.] To excite; to rouse; to put into emotion. Not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing the first of the examples from Spenser. But it was not overlooked in later times by Thomson, who has well employed it.

One day, when him high courage did emmove,
He pricked forth. Spenser, F. Q.

Her humblesse low —
Did much emmove his stout heroick heart.
Spenser, F. Q.

Ten thousand throats that, from the flowering thorn,
Hymn their good God, and carol sweet of love;
Such grateful kindly raptures them emmove.
Thomson, Castle of Indolence.

EMO'LLIENT. adj. [emolliens, Lat.] Softening; suppling.

Barley is emollient, moistening, and expectorating. Arbuthnot.

Diureticks are decoctions, emulsions, and oils of emollient vegetables, so far as they relax the urinary passages: such as relax ought to be tried before such as stimulate. Arbuthnot.

EMO'LLIENTS. n. s. pl. Such things as sheath and soften the asperities of the humours, and relax and supple the solids at the same time. Quincy.

Emollients ought to be taken in open air, to hinder them from perspiring, and on empty stomachs. Arbuthnot.

EMO'LLIMENT.* n. s. [Lat. emollimentum.] An assuaging. Cockeram.

EMOLLI'TION. n. s. [emollitio, Lat.] The act of softening.

Lassitude is remedied by bathing, or anointing with oil and warm water: the cause is, for that all lassitude is a kind of contusion and compression of the parts, and bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollition. Bacon.

Powerful menstruums are made for its emollition, whereby it may receive the tincture of minerals. Brown.

EMO'LUMENT.† n. s. [emolumentum, Lat. Profit gotten properly by grist, molendini merces; hence its general application; but the word was, in 1656, reckoned by Heylin as uncouth and unusual.] Profit; advantage.

Let them consult how politick they were, for a temporal emolument to throw away eternity. South.

Nothing gives greater satisfaction than the sense of having dispatched a great deal of business to publick emolument. Tatler.

EMOLUME'NTAL.* adj. [from emolument.] Useful; yielding profit.

Who receive and promote his dictates in all that is laudable and truly emolumental of this nature. Evelyn's Preface.

EMO'NGST. prep. [So written by Spenser.] Among.

The merry birds of every sort,
Chaunted aloud their cheerful harmony;
And made emongst themselves a sweet consort,
That quicken'd the dull spirit with musical comfort.
Spenser, F. Q.

EMO'TION. n. s. [emotion, French.] Disturbance of mind; vehemence of passion, either pleasing or painful.

I will appeal to any man who has read this poet, whether he finds not the natural emotion of the same passion in himself, which the poet describes in his feigned persons. Dryden.

Those rocks and oaks that such emotion felt,
Were rural maids whom Orpheus taught to melt.
Granville.

To EMPA'IR.* v. a. [Fr. empirer, "to impair, imbase, or make worse," &c. Cotgrave. The orthography, therefore, is empair. In fact our old lexicographers so give the word; as Huloet and Barret. And, before them, Chaucer wrote it empeire; by whose example Spenser was also guided; for he writes it not impair, though Dr. Johnson has cited him to sanction that spelling. However, see To IMPAIR.] To injure; to diminish.

Wend with me, that ye may see and know
How fortune will your ruin'd name repaire,
And knights of maidenhead, whose praise she would empaire.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 34.

To EMPA'IR.* v. n. To become less; to grow worse.

His [land] encreased, but mine did empaire.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 8.

To EMPA'LE.† v. a. [empaler, French.]

1. To fence with a pale.

How happy's he, which hath due place assign'd
T' his beasts, and disaforested his mind!
Empal'd himself to keep them out, not in;
Can sow, and dares trust corn, where they have been. Donne.

2. To fortify.

All that dwell near enemies empale villages, to save themselves from surprize. Ralegh, Essays.

The English empaled themselves with their pikes, and therewith bare off their enemies. Hayward.

3. To enclose; to shut in.

Round about her work she did empale,
With a fair border wrought of sundry flowers.
Spenser.

Keep yourselves in breath,
And when I have the bloody Hector found,
Empale him with your weapons round about.
Shakspeare.

They have empal'd within a zodiack
The free-born sun, and keep twelve signs awake
To watch his steps; the Goat and Crab controul
And fright him back. Donne.

Thank my charms,
I now empale her in my arms. Cleaveland.

Impenetrable, empal'd with circling fire,
Yet unconsum'd. Milton, P. L.

4. To put to death by spitting on a stake fixed upright.

Who can bear this, resolved to be empal'd?
His skin flead off, and roasted yet alive? Southerne.

Let them each be broken on the rack;
Then, with what life remains, empal'd and left
To writhe at leisure round the bloody stake.
Addison, Cato.

Nay, I don't believe they will be contented with hanging; they talk of empaling, or breaking on the wheel. Arbuthnot.

EMPA'LEMENT.* n. s. [from empale.]

1. The punishment of empaling, yet practised in Turkey. See the 4th sense of EMPALE.

2. In heraldry, a conjunction of coats of arms, pale-ways.

Two coats of arms, containing empalements of Cannynge, and of his friends or relations.
Warton, Hist. E. Poet. ii. 154.

3. In botany, the cup or outmost part of the flower of a plant, or that encompassing the foliation of the attire.
Chambers.

It [the lupine] has a papilionaceous flower, out of whose empalement rises the pale, which afterwards turns into a pod. Miller, Gard. Dict.

EMPA'NNEL. n. s. [from panne, French.] The writing or entering the names of a jury into a parchment schedule or roll of paper by the sheriff, which he has summoned to appear for the performance of such publick service as juries are employed in. Cowel.

Who can expect upright verdicts from such packed, corrupt juries? Why may we not be allowed to make exceptions against this so incompetent a pannel? Decay of Piety.

To EMPA'NNEL. v. a. [from the noun.] To summon to serve on a jury. A law term.

I shall not need to empannel a jury of moralists or divines, every man's own breast sufficiently instructing him. Gov. of the Tongue.

To EMPA'RADISE.* So Donne, and others, improperly write the word. It is from the Italian imparadisare, and therefore Milton and others write it imparadise. See To IMPARADISE.

To EMPA'RK.* v. a. [old French emparcher, "enfermer dans un parc," Roquefort; "emparcher, to impound," Cotgrave.] To enclose as with a fence or pale; to shut in.

The wild boar of the forest, wilder than the wilderness itself, that will not be held nor emparked within any laws or limits.
Bp. King, Vine Palatine, (1614,) p. 32.

EMPA'RLANCE.† n. s. [from parler, Fr.]

1. It signifieth, in common law, a desire or petition in court of a day to pause what is best to do; and it is sometimes used for the conference of a jury in the cause committed to them. Cowel.

2. Parley. Obsolete.

That damzell loudly him bespake,
And shew'd that with his lord she would emparlaunce make. Spenser, F. Q. v. iv. 50.

EMPA'SM. n. s. [εμπάσσω.] A powder to correct the bad scent of the body.

To EMPA'SSION.† v. a. [from passion.] To move with passion; to affect strongly; to throw off from equanimity.

Unto my eyes strange shows presented were,
Picturing that which I in mind embrac'd,
That yet those sights empassion me full near.
Spenser.

Being empassioned more effectually with the death, bloodshed, and bitter passion of our Saviour, when we see that story fully and lively represented unto us in colours or work by a skilful hand.
Montagu, App. to Cæs. p. 254.

So, standing, moving, or to height upgrown,
The tempter, all empassion'd, thus began.
Milton, P. L.

EMPA'SSIONATE.* adj. [from empassion.] Strongly affected. In some editions of Spenser, this expressive word is unwarrantably converted into compassionate.

On the contrary part,
Rose many advocates for her to plead: —
And lastly Grief did plead, and many tears fourth pour.
With the near touch whereof in tender heart
The Briton prince was sore empassionate,
And woxe inclined much unto her part.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 46.

To EMPA'ST.* See To IMPAST.

To EMPEA'CH.* v. a. [Fr. empescher. Minsheu, under impeach, gives the two senses of accuse and hinder; and so does Dr. Johnson, who, in the very first example cited by him, has converted empeach into impeach. It is the first of the following passages in Spenser. But some editors have, in several places of that poet, taken this unwarrantable liberty. The word, in the present sense, should perhaps be always written empeach. See To IMPEACH.] To hinder; to oppose;

That he be not endomaged or empeched by his adversaries. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 73.

There was no bar to stop, nor foe him to empeach. Spenser, F. Q. i. viii. 34.

Such superfluities they would despise,
Which with sad cares empeach our native joys.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 15.

EMPEI'RAL.* adj. See EMPIRICK.

To EMPE'OPLE. v. a. [from people.] To form into a people or community.

He wonder'd much and gan enquire
What stately building durst so high extend
Her lofty towers unto the starry sphere,
And what unknowen nation there empeopled were?
Spenser.

E'MPERESS.† n. s. [from emperour, now written empress, Dr. Johnson says. Our word, however, is the old French empereis, emperix; thus, at its introduction by Chaucer, "as any lady emperice, or queen," Wife of Bath's Tale.]

1. A woman invested with imperial power.

Long, long, may you on earth our emperess reign,
Ere you in heaven a glorious angel stand. Davies.

2. The wife of an emperour.

Lavinia will I make my emperess,
Rome's royal mistress, mistress of my heart.
Tit. Andron.

To EMPE'RIL.* v. a. [from peril.] To endanger.

His person to emperil so in fight.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. iv. 10.

EMPE'RISHED.* part. adj. [so written by Spenser; yet we write imperishable from the French imperissable.] Decayed; perished; destroyed.

I deem thy brain emperished be
Through rusty eld, that hath rotted thee.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

E'MPEROUR. n. s. [empereur, French; imperator, Lat.] A monarch of title and dignity superiour to a king; as the emperour of Germany.

Charles the emperour,
Under pretence to see the queen his aunt,
Makes visitation. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

E'MPERY.† n. s. [empere, old French; imperium, Latin.] Empire; sovereignty; dominion. A word out of use.

A lady
So fair, and fasten'd to an empery,
Would make the greatest king double.
Shakspeare, Cymb.

Take on you the charge
And kingly government of this your land;
Not as protector, steward, substitute,
But as successively from blood to blood,
Your right of birth, your empery, your own.
Shakspeare.

E'MPHASIS. n. s. [ἔμφασις, Gr.] A remarkable stress laid upon a word or sentence; particular force impressed by style or pronunciation.

O, that brave Cæsar!
— Be chok'd with such another emphasis. Shaksp.

Emphasis not so much regards the time as a certain grandeur, whereby some letter, syllable, word, or sentence is rendered more remarkable than the rest, by a more vigorous pronunciation, and a longer stay upon it. Holder.

These questions have force and emphasis, if they be understood of the antediluvian earth.
Burnet, Theory.

EMPHA'TICAL.† } adj. [ἐμφαίνω, Gr. to ap-
EMPHA'TICK. } pear; emphatisque, old Fr. emphatique, modern. Cotgrave renders the word by the English "emphastical, spoken or done with an emphasis;" but Cockeram, his contemporary, gives emphatical, as meaning "that which is uttered with most express signification." The expression is adopted from the term, as applied by the ancient philosophers to those colours which are apparent in clouds before the rising or after the setting of the sun, or in the rainbow. See the second definition.]

1. Forcible; strong; striking.

When the mind is once drooping, things which before passed away as matters of course and casualty, are now drawn within the compass of presages and emphatical evils.
Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 28.

Where he endeavours to dissuade from carnivorous appetites, how emphatical is his reasoning!
Garth.

In proper and emphatick terms, thou didst paint the blazing comet's fiery tail.
Arbuthnot, John Bull.

2. Striking the sight.

It is commonly granted that emphatical colours are light itself, modified by refractions.
Boyle on Colours.

EMPHA'TICALLY. adv. [from emphatical.]

1. Strongly; forcibly; in a striking manner.

How emphatically and divinely does every word proclaim the truth that I have been speaking of!
South.

2. According to appearance.

What is delivered of the incurvity of dolphins, must be taken emphatically, not really, but in appearance, when they leap above water, and suddenly shoot down again. Brown.

EMPHYSE'MA. n. s. [ἐμφυσήμα.]

Emphysema is a light puffy humour, easily yielding to the pressure of the finger, arising again in the instant you take it off. Wiseman.

EMPHYSE'MATOUS. adj. [ἐμφυσήμα, Gr.] Bloated; puffed up; swollen.

The signs of a gangrene are these: the inflammation loses its redness, and becomes duskish and livid; the tenseness of the skin goes off, and feels to the touch flabby or emphysematous; and vesications, filled with ichor of different colours, spread all over it. Sharp, Surgery.

To EMPIE'RCE. v. a. [from pierce.] To pierce into; to enter into by violent appulse.

The weapon bright,
Taking advantage of his open jaw,
Ran through his mouth with so importune might,
That deep empierc'd his darksome hollow maw.
Spenser, F. Q.

EMPI'GHT. preterite and part. from To pight, or pitch. [See PITCH.] Set; fixed; fastened.

But he was wary, and, ere it empight
In the meant mark, advanc'd his shield atween.
Spenser, F. Q.

E'MPIRE.† n. s. [empıpe, Sax. empire, Fr. imperium, Lat.]

1. Imperial power; supreme dominion; sovereign command.

Assert, ye fair ones, who in judgement sit,
Your ancient empire over love and wit. Rowe.

2. The region over which dominion is extended.

A nation extended over vast tracts of land, and numbers of people, arrives in time at the ancient name of kingdom, or modern of empire. Temple.

Sextus Pompeius
Hath given the dare to Cæsar, and commands
The empire of the sea. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

3. Command over any thing.

EMPI'RICK.† n. s. [ἐμπειρικὸς, Gr. This word seems to have been pronounced empírick by Milton, and émpirick by Dryden. Milton's pronunciation is to be preferred. So far Dr. Johnson. It may be added, that the word was formerly written, improperly, emperick; long before Dryden's time, as in the Proceedings against the Jesuit Garnet, 1606, &c. whence perhaps the accent on the first syllable of the word, which, however, is not peculiar to Dryden; for Shakspeare uses it. But it is not to be defended. The etymon is the Gr. πεῖρα, experiment; whence our word was originally empeiral, and the quacks were called "empeirall practicks, who use the medicines which they call narcoticall, &c." Harmar's Transl. of Beza, 1587, p. 421. Hence also the Fr. empirique.]

1. One of a sect of the ancient physicians, who formed for themselves rules and methods on their own practice and experience, and not on any knowledge of natural causes, or the study of good authors.

Galen mentions in his time but three sects of physicians; Empericks, [Empiricks,] Methodists, and Dogmaticks. Hakewill on Providence, p. 244.

2. A trier; an experimenter; a quack; such persons as have no true education in, or knowledge of, physical practice, but venture upon hearsay and observation only. Quincy.

The name of Hippocrates was more effectual to persuade such men as Galen, than to move a silly empirick. Hooker.

To prostitute our past-cure malady
To empiricks; or to dissever so
Our great self and our credit. Shaksp. All's Well.

That every plant might receive a name, according unto the diseases it cureth, was the wish of Paracelsus; a way more likely to multiply empiricks than herbalists. Brown.

Such an aversion and contempt for all manner of innovators, as physicians are apt to have for empiricks, or lawyers for pettifoggers. Swift.

The illiterate writer, emp'rick-like applies
To each disease unsafe chance remedies;
The learn'd in school, whence science first began,
Studies with care the anatomy of man. Dryden.

EMPI'RICAL.† } adj. [from the noun.]
EMPI'RICK. }

1. Versed in experiments.

By fire
Of sooty coal, the empirick alchymist
Can turn, or holds it possible to turn,
Metals of drossiest ore to perfect gold.
Milton, P. L.

2. Known only by experience; practised only by rote, without rational grounds.

The most sovereign prescription in Galen is but empirick to this preservative. Shakspeare.

No popular empirical means so probable.
Hammond, Works, iv. 484.

In extremes, bold counsels are the best;
Like empirick remedies, they last are try'd,
And by the event condemn'd or justify'd. Dryden.

EMPI'RICALLY. adv. [from empirical.]

1. Experimentally; according to experience.

We shall empirically and sensibly deduct the causes of blackness from originals, by which we generally observe things denigrated.

Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. Without rational ground; charlatanically; in the manner of quacks.

EMPI'RICISM.† n. s. [from empirick. Fr. empiricisme.] Dependence on experience without knowledge or art; quackery.

Paracelsus was the father of empiricism.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iv. 21.

Mere empiricism without some foundation in nature. Pownall on Antiq. p. 152.

EMPLA'STER.† n. s. [ἔμπλασμα, Gr. This word is now always pronounced, and generally written, plaster.] An application to a sore of an oleaginous or viscous substance, spread upon cloth. See PLASTER.

Let us lay on the sovereign emplaisters of the most precious and meritorious mercy of our Blessed Redeemer. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 79.

All emplasters, applied to the breasts, ought to have a hole for the nipples. Wiseman, Surgery.

To EMPLA'STER.† v. a. [Fr. emplastrer; from ἔμπλασμα. One of our oldest verbs.] To cover with a plaster; figuratively, to hide.

Faire as ye his name emplastre,
He was a lechour and an idolastre.

Chaucer, March. Tale.

They must be cut out to the quick, and the sores emplastered with tar. Mortimer, Husbandry.

EMPLA'STICK. adj. [ἐμπλάσσω, Gr.] Viscous; glutinous; fit to be applied as a plaster.

Resin, by its emplastick quality, mixed with oil of roses perfects the concoction. Wiseman, Surgery.

Emplastick applications are not sufficient to defend a wound from the air. Arbuthnot on Air.

To EMPLEA'D.† v. a. [old Fr. emplaider.] To indict; to prefer a charge against; to accuse.

To terrify and torture them, their tyrannous masters did often emplead, arrest, cast them into prison, and thereby consume them to worse than nothing. Hayward.

Antiquity thought thunder the immediate voice of Jupiter, and empleaded them of impiety that referred it to natural casualties. Glanville, Scepsis.

Since none the living villains dare emplead,
Arraign them in the persons of the dead.

Dryden, Juv.

To EMPLO'Y. v. a. [emploier, Fr.]

1. To busy; to keep at work; to exercise. It is used both as agent; as, the king employed the minister; or cause, as, the publick credit employed the minister.

For thrice, at least, in compass of the year,
Thy vineyard must employ the sturdy steer
To turn the glebe. Dryden, Virg.

2. In the following quotations it is used with in, about, to, and upon, before the object. To seems less proper.

Their principal learning was applied to the course of the stars, and the rest was employed in displaying the brave exploits of their princes.

Temple.

Our reason is often puzzled, because of the imperfection of the ideas it is employed about. Locke.

The proper business of the understanding is not that which men always employ it to. Locke.

Labour in the beginning gave a right of property, wherever any one was pleased to employ it upon what was common. Locke.

On the happy change, the boy
Employ'd his wonder and his joy. Prior.

This is a day in which the thoughts of our countrymen ought to be employed on serious subjects. Addison, Freeholder.

3. To use as an instrument.

The cleanly cheese-press she could never turn,
Her awkward fist did ne'er employ the churn.

Gay, Past.

4. To use as means.

The money was employed to the making of gallies. 2 Mac. iv. 20.

Peace is not freed from labour, but from noise; And war more force, but not more pains employs.

Dryden.

5. To use as materials.

The labour of those who felled and framed the timber employed about the plough, must be charged on labour. Locke.

6. To commission; to intrust with the management of any affairs.

Jonathan and Jahaziah were employed about this matter. Ezra, x. 15.

Jesus Christ is furnished with superiour powers to the angels, because he is employed in superiour works, and appointed to be the Sovereign Lord of all the visible and invisible worlds. Watts.

7. To fill up with business.

If you're idle, you're destroy'd;
All his force on you he tries,
Be but watchful and employ'd,
Soon the baffled tempter flies.

Motteux, Don Quixote.

To study nature will thy time employ;
Knowledge and innocence are perfect joy. Dryden.

8. To pass or spend in business.

Why, whilst we struggle in this vale beneath,
With want and sorrow, with disease and death,
Do they more bless'd perpetual life employ
In songs of pleasure, and in scenes of joy? Prior.

EMPLO'Y.† n. s. [Fr. emploi.]

1. Business; object of industry.

We are obliged by duty to keep ourselves in constant employ. Guardian, No. 158.

Present to grasp, and future still to find,
The whole employ of body and of mind. Pope.

2. Publick office.

Lest animosities should obstruct the course of justice, if one of their own number had the distribution of it, they have always a foreigner for this employ. Addison on Italy.

The honours and the burdens of great posts and employs were joined together. Atterbury.

EMPLO'YABLE. adj. [from employ.] Capable to be used; proper for use.

The objections made against the doctrine of the chymists, seem employable against this hypothesis. Boyle.

EMPLO'YER.† n. s. [from employ.]

1. One that uses or causes to be used.

That man drives a great trade, and is owner or employer of much shipping, and continues and increases in trade and shipping. Child on Trade.

2. One that sets others to work.

Troilus, the first employer of pandars. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

EMPLO'YMENT.† n. s. [from employ.]

1. Business; object of industry; object of labour.

Creatures who have the labours of the mind, as well as those of the body, to furnish them with employments. Guardian, No. 158.

2. Business; the state of being employed.

They shall sever out men of continual employment. Ezek. xxxix. 14.

3. Office; post of business.

If any station, any employment upon earth be honourable, theirs was. Atterbury.

Leaders on each side, instead of intending the publick weal, have their hearts wholly set to get or to keep employments. Swift.

4. Business intrusted.

Call not your stocks for me; I serve the king,
On whose employment I was sent to you.

Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To EMPLU'NGE.* v. a. [from plunge.] To force suddenly.

When she was thus inshipp'd, and woefully
Had cast her eyes about to view that hell
Of horrour, whereinto she was so suddenly emplung'd,
She spies a woman sitting with a child
Sucking her breast, which was the captain's wife.

Daniel, Hymen's Triumph.

To EMPO'ISON.† v. a. [empoisonner, Fr.]

1. To destroy by poison; to destroy by venomous food or drugs; to poison.

Leaving no means unattempted of destroying his son, that wicked servant of his undertook to empoison him. Sidney.

Mushrooms cause the incubus, or mare in the stomach, therefore the surfeit of them may suffocate and empoison. Bacon.

2. To taint with poison; to evenom. This is the more usual sense.

Empoisoning the beholders with wanton looks, and all manner of wicked examples.

Harmar, Transl. of Beza's Serm. (1587,) p. 187.

One doth not know
How much an ill word may empoison liking.

Shakspeare, Much Ado.

The whole earth appears unto him blasted with a curse, empoisoned with the venom of the serpent.

Situation of Paradise, &c. (1683,) p. 62.

EMPO'ISONER. n. s. [empoisonneur, Fr.] One who destroys another by poison.

He is vehemently suspected to have been the empoisoner of his wife, thereby to make vacant his bed. Bacon, Hen. VII.

EMPO'ISONING.* n. s. [from empoison.] Empoisonment.

They fell in conference touching the empoisoning of the queen. Bacon, Rep. of Lopez's Treason.

EMPO'ISONMENT. n. s. [empoisonnement, French.] The practice of destroying by poison.

It were dangerous for secret empoisonments.

Bacon.

EMPO'RETICK. adj. [ἐμπορήτικος.] That is used at markets, or in merchandize.

EMPO'RIUM.† n. s. [ἐμπόριον, Gr. Of much older authority than that of Dryden, the earliest example of the word given by Dr. Johnson; and used also in the plural, which had escaped notice.] A place of merchandize; a mart; a town of trade; a commercial city.

No village shall stand above six, seven, or eight miles from a city, except those emporiums which are by the sea side, general staples, marts, as Antwerp, Venice, &c.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader, p. 61.

And while this fam'd emporium we prepare,
The British ocean shall such triumphs boast,
That those who now disdain our trade to share,
Shall rob like pirates on our wealthy coast. Dryden.

I take the prosperous estate of this great emporium to be owing to those instances of charity.

Atterbury.

To EMPO'VERISH. v. a. [pauvre, Fr.]

1. To make poor; to depauperate; to reduce to indigence.

Since they might talk better as they lay together, they empoverished their clothes to enrich their bed, which, for that night, might well scorn the shrine of Venus. Sidney.

Yours sounds aloud, and tells us you excel
No less in courage than in singing well;
While, unconcern'd, you let your country know,
They have empoverish'd themselves, not you.

Waller.

For sense of honour, if it empoverisheth a man, it is, in his esteem, neither honour nor sense. South.

Fresh roses bring,
To strow my bed, till the empoverish'd spring
Confess her want. Prior.

2. To lessen fertility; as, tillage impoverishes land.

EMPO'VERISHER. n. s. [from empoverish.]

1. One that makes others poor.

2. That which impairs fertility.

They destroy the weeds, and fit the land for after-crops, being an improver and not an empoverisher of land. Mortimer.

EMPO'VERISHMENT. n. s. [from empoverish.] Depauperation; cause of poverty; drain of wealth.

Being paid as it is, now some, and then some, it is no great burden unto her, nor any great empoverishment to her coffers. Spenser on Ireland.

All appeals for justice, or appellations for favour or preferment to another country, are so many grievous empoverishments. Swift, View of Ireland.

To EMPO'WER. v. a. [from power.]

1. To authorize; to commission; to give power or authority to any purpose.

You are empowered, when you please, to give the final decision of wit. Dryden, Juv. Dedic.

The government shall be empowered to grant commissions to all Protestants whatsoever. Swift.

2. To give natural force; to enable.

Does not the same power that enables them to heal, empower them to destroy? Baker on Learning.

E'MPRESS. n. s. [contracted from emperess, which is retained by Jonson in the following lines.]

1. The wife of an emperour.

Let your nimble feet
Tread subtile circles, that may always meet
In point to him; and figures, to express
The grace of him, and his great emperess.
B. Jonson.

2. A female invested with imperial dignity; a female sovereign.

Empress of this fair world, resplendent Eve!
Milton, P. L.

Yet, London, empress of the northern clime,
By an high fate thou greatly didst expire. Dryden.

Wisdom, thou say'st, from heav'n receiv'd her birth;
Her beams transmitted to the subject earth:
Yet this great empress of the human soul,
Does only with imagin'd power controul,
If restless passion, by rebellious sway,
Compels the weak usurper to obey. Prior.

EMPRI'SE.† n. s. [emprise, French. This abbreviation of enterprise was introduced into our language by Chaucer. The Spanish thus use empresa, and the Italians imprese.] An attempt of danger; undertaking of hazard; enterprise.

Noble minds, of yore, allied were
In brave pursuit of chivalrous emprise.
Spenser, F. Q.

A double conquest must you make,
If you atchieve renown by this emprise. Fairfax.

Fierce faces threat'ning wars;
Giants of mighty bone, and bold emprise.
Milton, P. L.

Thus, till the sun had travell'd half the skies,
Ambush'd we lie, and wait the bold emprise.
Pope, Odyssey.

To EMPRI'SON.* v. a. [Fr. emprisonner, Lacombe.] To put in prison. Yet our word is almost uniformly written imprison. See To IMPRISON.

E'MPTIER.† n. s. [from empty.] One that empties; one that makes any place void by taking away what it contained.

The emptiers have emptied them out, and marred their vine-branches. Nahum, ii. 2.

Hail, hail, plump paunch, O the founder of taste,
For fresh meats, or powder'd, or pickle, or paste,
Devourer of broil'd, bak'd, roasted, or sod;
And emptier of cups, be they even or odd.
B. Jonson, Masques.

E'MPTINESS. n. s. [from empty.]

1. Absence of plenitude; inanity.

Where cities stood,
Well fenc'd, and numerous, desolation reigns,
And emptiness; dismay'd, unfed, unhous'd,
The widow and the orphan stroll. Philips.

2. The state of being empty.

His coffers sound
With hollow poverty and emptiness.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

3. A void space; vacuity; vacuum.

Nor could another in your room have been,
Except an emptiness had come between. Dryden.

The ordinary air in which we live and respire, is of so thin a composition, that sixteen thousand one hundred and forty-nine parts of its dimensions are mere emptiness and nothing; and the remaining one only, material and real substance. Bentley.

4. Want of substance or solidity.

'Tis this which causes the graces and the loves to take up their habitations in the hardest marble, and to subsist in the emptiness of light and shadow. Dryden, Dufresnoy, Pref.

5. Unsatisfactoriness; inability to fill up the desires.

O frail estate of human things,
Now to our cost your emptiness we know. Dryden.

Form the judgement about the worth or emptiness of things here, according as they are or are not of use, in relation to what is to come after. Atterbury.

6. Vacuity of head; want of knowledge.

Eternal smiles his emptiness betray,
As shallow streams run dimpling all the way. Pope.

E'MPTION.† n. s. [emption, old French; emptio, Lat.] The act of purchasing; a purchase.

There is a dispute among the lawyers, whether Glaucus, his exchanging his golden armour with the brazen one of Tydides, was emption or commutation. Arbuthnot on Coins.

E'MPTY. adj. [emtiz, Saxon.]

1. Void; having nothing in it; not full.

I did never know so full a voice issue from so empty a heart; but the saying is true, the empty vessel makes the greatest sound. Shaks. Henry V.

The pit was empty, there was no water in it.
Gen. xxxvii.

If you have two vessels to fill, and you empty one to fill the other, you gain nothing by that; there still remains one vessel empty.
Burnet, Theory.

2. Evacuated; no longer full.

Himself he frees by secret means unseen,
His shackles empty left, himself escaped clean.
Spenser, F. Q.

Devoid; unfurnished.

Art thou thus boldened, man, by thy distress,
That in civility thou seem'st so empty? Shaks.

Mr. Boyle has shewed, that air may be rarified above ten thousand times in vessels of glass; and the heavens are much emptier of air than any vacuum we can make below. Newton.

4. Unsatisfactory; unable to fill the mind or desires.

Pleas'd in the silent shade with empty praise.
Pope.

5. Without any thing to carry; unburthened; unfreighted.

They beat him, and sent him away empty.
St. Mark, xii. 3.

When ye go, ye shall not go empty.
Exodus, iii. 21.

He alleges that the satyrs carried platters full of fruit in their hands; but if they had been empty handed, had they been ever the larger satyrs? Dryden, Juv. Dedic.

Yet all the little that I got, I spent;
And still return'd as empty as I went.
Dryden, Virg.

6. Hungry.

My falcon now is sharp and passing empty,
And till she stoop, she must not be full-gorg'd,
For then she never looks upon her lure. Shaks.

7. Vacant of head; ignorant; unskilful; unfurnished with materials for thought.

How comes it that so many worthy and wise men depend upon so many unworthy and empty headed fools? Ralegh.

His answer is a handsome way of exposing an empty, trifling, pretending pedant; the wit lively, the satire courtly and severe.
Felton on the Classicks.

8. Unfruitful; barren.

Seven empty ears blasted with the east wind.
Genesis, xli. 27.

Israel is an empty vine. Hosea, x. 1.

9. Wanting substance; wanting solidity; vain.

The god of sleep there hides his heavy head,
And empty dreams on every leaf are spread.
Dryden, Æn.

To E'MPTY.† v. a. [Sax. emptian. In some places to empt is vulgarly used for empty.] To evacuate; to exhaust; to deprive of that which was contained in it.

Boundless intemperance,
In nature is a tyranny: it hath been
Th' untimely emptying of the happy throne,
And fall of many kings. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The emptiers have emptied them out, and marred their vine-branches. Nahum, ii. 2.

Sheep are often blind by fulness of blood: cut their tails, and empty them of their blood.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

The Euxine sea is conveniently situated for trade, by the communication it has both with Asia and Europe, and the great navigable rivers that empty themselves into it. Arbuthnot.

To E'MPTY.* v. n. To become empty.

The chapel empties; and thou may'st be gone
Now, sun. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

To EMPU'RPLE.† v. a. [Ital. imporporare; and Milton writes our word with im, though Spenser writes it em.] To make of a purple colour; to discolour with purple.

Oft from the forrest wildings he did bring,
Whose sides empurpled were with smiling red.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. vii. 17.

Now in loose garlands, thick thrown off, the bright
Pavement, that like a sea of jasper shone,
Impurpled with celestial roses smil'd.
Milton, P. L.

The deep,
Empurpled ran, with gushing gore distain'd.
Philips.

E'MPUSE.* n. s. [Lat. empusa; Gr. ἐμπουσα.] A phantom; a spectre.

It were well if the exorcist would rail upon, mock, and jeer at the devil; for he cannot endure a witty and a sharp taunt, and loves jeering and railing no more than he loves holy water; and this was well tried of old against an empuse that met Apollonius Tyanæus at mount Caucasus, against whom he railed, and exhorted his company to do so.
Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 2. § 10.

A painted lady is to be looked upon rather as some spectre, or empusa, than as a handsome woman. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 107.

To EMPU'ZZLE. v. a. [from puzzle.] To perplex; to put to a stand.

It hath empuzzled the enquiries of others to apprehend, and enforced them into strange conceptions to make out. Brown.

EMPYE'MA. n. s. [ἐμπύημα.] A collection of purulent matter in any part whatsoever; generally used to signify that in the cavity of the breast only, and which sometimes happens upon the opening of abscesses, or ulcerations of the lungs, or membranes inclosing the breast. Quincy.

An empyema, or a collection of purulent matter in the breast, if not suddenly cured, doth undoubtedly impel the patient into a phthisical consumption. Harvey.

There is likewise a consumption from an empyema, after an inflammation of the lungs; which may be known from a weight upon the diaphragm, oppression of the lungs, a difficulty of breathing, and inability to lie on one side, which is that which is sound. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EMPY'REAL.† adj. [ἔμπυρος, Greek; empireo, Ital. Dante.] Formed of the element of fire; refined beyond aerial; pertaining to the highest and purest region of heaven. Tickell accents it on the penult. The word is not wholly poetical, as Dr. Johnson's examples might lead the reader to suppose; nor is Milton, whose authority is the earliest of those cited by him, the coiner of it.

It is easy to say much in exalting this happy state of solitude, all the space between earth and the empyreal heaven, the seat of the blessed, being the scope we have to extend our thoughts upon. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. (1648,) P. i. p. 321.

Now went forth the morn,
Such as in highest heav'n, array'd in gold
Empyreal. Milton, P. L.

Go, soar with Plato to th' empyreal sphere,
To the first good, first perfect, and first fair. Pope.
But empyreal forms, howe'er in fight
Gash'd and dismember'd, easily unite. Tickell.

EMPYRE'AN.† n. s. [ἔμπυρος, Gr. empyrée, French. Crashaw uses it in the Latin form of empyræum.] The highest heaven where the pure element of fire is supposed to subsist.

Through all the spheres
Of musick's heaven; and seat it there on high
In th' empyræum of pure harmony.
Crashaw, Musick's Duel.

The Almigbty Father from above,
From the pure empyrean, where he sits
High thron'd above all height, bent down his eye.
Milton, P. L.

Under his burning wheels
The stedfast empyrean shook throughout,
All but the throne itself of God. Milton, P. L.

The empyrean rung
With hallelujahs. Milton, P. L.

EMPYRE'AN.* adj. Empyreal.

The clouds
Disparting wide in midway sky, withdrew
Their airy veil, and left a bright expanse
Of empyrean flame.
Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

EMPY'REUM. } n. s. [ἐμπύρευμα]. The EMPYREU'MA. } burning of any matter in boiling or distillation, which gives a particular offensive smell. Quincy.

It is so far from admitting an empyreum, that it burns clear away without leaving any cinders, or dust about it. Harvey.

The hopes of an elixir insensibly evaporate, and vanish to air, or leave in the recipient a foul empyreuma. Decay of Piety.

EMPYREUMA'TICAL. adj. [from empyreuma.] Having the smell or taste of burnt substances.

Empyreumatical oils distilled by strong fires in retorts, may be brought to emulate essential oils drawn in limbicks. Boyle.

EMPYREUMA'TICK.* adj. Having the taste or smell of burnt substances.

It [the whisky] was strong, but not pungent, and was free from the empyreumatick taste or smell. Johnson, Journey to the W. Islands.

EMPY'RICAL. adj. [Gr. ἔμπυρος.] Containing the combustible principle of coal.

Of these and some other empyrical marks, I shall say no more, as they do not tell us the defects of the soils. Kirwan on Manures, p. 81.

EMPYRO'SIS. n. s. [ἐμπυρόω.] Conflagration; general fire.

The former opinion that held these cataclisms and empyroses universal, was such as held that it put a total consummation unto things in this lower world, especially that of conflagration. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To E'MULATE.† v. a. [æmulor, Latin; from ἄμιλλα, Gr. a combat, a dispute.]

1. To rival; to propose as one to be equalled or excelled.
2. To imitate with hope of equality, or superiour excellence.

I would have
Him emulate you: 'tis no shame to follow
The better precedent. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Those fair ideas to my aid I'll call,
And emulate my great original.
Dryden, Aurengzebe.

What though no weeping loves thy ashes grace,
Nor polish'd marble emulate thy face. Pope.

3. To be equal to; to rise to equality with.

I see how thy eye would emulate the diamond.
Shakspeare.

We see no new-built palaces aspire,
No kitchens emulate the vestal fire. Pope.

4. To imitate; to copy; to resemble.

It is likewise attended with a delirium, fury, and an involuntary laughter, the convulsion emulating this motion. Arbuthnot.

E'MULATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Ambitious; desirous to rival or excel.

Thereto prick'd on by a most emulate pride.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

EMULA'TION.† n. s. [æmulatio, Lat.]

1. Rivalry; desire of superiority.

Mine emulation
Hath not that honour in't it had; for where
I thought to crush him in an equal force,
True sword to sword, I'll pitch at him some way,
Or wrath or craft may get him. Shaks. Coriol.

There was neither envy nor emulation amongst them. 1 Mac. viii. 16.

Aristotle allows that some emulation may be good, and may be found in some good men; yet envy he utterly condemns as wicked in itself, and only to be found in wicked minds. Sprat.

The apostle exhorts the Corinthians to an holy and general emulation of the charity of the Macedonians, in contributing freely to the relief of the poor saints at Jerusalem. South.

A noble emulation heats your breast,
And your own fame now robs you of your rest:
Good actions still must be maintain'd with good,
As bodies nourish'd with resembling food.
Dryden.

2. Envy; desire of depressing another; contest; contention; discord.

Idolatry, witchcraft, hatred, variance, emulations, wrath, strife. Galat. v. 20.

What madness rules in brainsick men,
When for so light and frivolous a cause,
Such factious emulations shall arise! Shakspeare.

E'MULATIVE.† adj. [from emulate.] Inclined to emulation; rivalling; disposed to competition.

Nor can a fairer kindred title move
His emulative age to glory's love
Than Edward, laureate prince.
T. Warton, Verses on the Birth of Pr. of W. 1762.

E'MULATOR.† n. s. [old Fr. emulateur; Lat. æmulator.] A rival; a competitor; "one who envies another." Huloet.

In superiours it quencheth jealousy, and layeth their competitors and emulators asleep. Bacon, Essays.

I'll tell thee, Charles; it is the stubbornest young fellow of France; full of ambition, an envious emulator of every man's good parts. Shakspeare, As you like it.

A youth at first despised and slighted by the experience and haughtiness of his jealous emulators; but after bowed and kneeled to, by all that drew breath under the wing of the Roman eagle. Feltham, Res. ii. 85.

Shenaar, signifieth, Dens Æmuli, the tongue of the envious, or emulator, the same with Dens Theoninus. Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 444.

E'MULATRESS.* n. s. [from emulator.] She who is desirous to equal or excel.

Historiographers should be very precise, true, and unpassionate; neither profit or fear, rancour or affection, should make them to tread awry from the truth, whose mother is history; the emulatress of time, the depository of actions, the witness of things past, and advertiser of things to come. Shelton, Tr. of Don Quix. p. 16.

To E'MULE.† v. a. [emulor, Latin.] To emulate. Not in use, Dr. Johnson says. One of his contemporaries, however, thought it worthy to be revived.

He, sitting me beside in that same shade,
Provoked me to play some pleasant fit;—
Yet, æmuling my pipe, he took in hond
My pipe, before that æmuled of many,
And plaid thereon; for well that skill he cond.
Spenser, Colin Clout.

Whom emuling I deftly learn'd to sing.
Edwards, Sonnet, Canons of Crit. (1758,) p. 296.

To EMU'LGE. v. a. [emulgeo, Lat.] To milk out.

EMU'LGENT. adj. [emulgens, Lat.]

1. Milking or draining out.
2. Emulgent vessels [in anatomy] are the two large arteries and veins which arise, the former from the descending trunk of the aorta, or great artery; the latter from the vena cava. They are both inserted into the kidneys; the emulgent arteries carrying blood with the serum to them, and the emulgent veins bringing it back again, after the serum has been separated therefrom by the kidneys. Harris.

It doth furnish the left emulgent with one vein. Brown.

Through the emulgent branches the blood is brought to the kidneys, and is there freed of its serum. Cheyne.

E'MULOUS.† adj. [æmulus, Lat.]

1. Rivalling; engaged in competition.

What the Gaul or Moor could not effect,
Nor emulous Carthage, with her length of spite,
Shall be the work of one. B. Jonson, Catiline.

Like emulous courtiers, that gape and vie for the next preferment. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

One of those great controversies which were agitated between the emulous schools of Sammai and Hillel. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

May we live so far
From difference, or emulous competition,

That all the world may say, although two bodies,
We have one mind.
Beaum. and Fl. The Prophetess.

She is in perpetual diffidence, or actual enmity with her, but always emulous and suspectful of her.
Howell, Voc. Forest.

2. Desirous of superiority; desirous to rise above another; desirous of any excellence possessed by another: with of before the object of emulation.

By strength
They measure all, of other excellence
Not emulous, nor care who them excels.
Milton, P. L.

By fair rewards our noble youth we raise
To emulous merit, and to thirst of praise. Prior.

Good Howard, emulous of the Grecian art.
Prior.

3. Factious; contentious.

Whose glorious deeds, but in these fields of late,
Made emulous missions 'mongst the gods themselves,
And drave great Mars to faction. Shakspeare.

E'MULOUSLY.† adv. [from emulous.] With desire of excelling or outgoing another.

So tempt they him, and emulously vie
To bribe a voice, that empires would not buy.
Granville.

Of friendship's fairest fruits, the fruit most fair
Is virtue kindling at a rival fire,
And, emulously, rapid in her race.
Young, Night Th. 2.

EMU'LSION. n. s. [emulsio, Lat.] A form of medicine, by bruising oily seeds and kernels, and drawing out their substances with some liquor, that thereby becomes milky. Quincy.

The aliment is dissolved by an operation resembling that of making an emulsion; in which operation the oily parts of nuts and seeds, being gently ground in a marble mortar, and gradually mixed with some watery liquor, or dissolved into a sweet, thick, turbid, milky liquor, resembling the chyle in an animal body.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EMU'NCTORIES. n. s. [emunctorium, Latin.] Those parts of the body where any thing excrementitious is separated and collected, to be in readiness for ejectment.
Quincy.

Superfluous matter deflows from the body unto their proper emunctories. Brown, Vulg. Err.

There are receptacles in the body of man, and emunctories to drain them of superfluous choler.
More against Atheism.

Discoursing of the lungs, I shew that they are the grand emunctory of the body; that the main end of respiration is continually to discharge and expel an excrementitious fluid out of the mass of blood. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

The regimen in quinsies, which proceed from an obstruction of the glands, must be to use such warm liquors as relax those glands, such as, by stimulating, open the emunctories to secern the humour. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EMUSCA'TION.* n. s. [from emuscor, Lat.] The act of clearing from moss.

The most infallible art of emuscation is taking away the cause by dressing with lime.
Evelyn, ii. vii. § 8.

EN.† An inseparable particle borrowed by us from the French, and by the French formed from the Latin in. Many words are uncertainly written with en or in. In many words en is changed into em for more easy pronunciation.

The uncertainty, which Dr. Johnson notices, in respect to en and in, might be removed, if due attention were paid to the derivation. Thus, as entire is admitted to be derived from the French entier, the form of intire should not be observed; thus enquire, as being from the French enquirer, seems preferable to inquire, from the Latin inquiro; and enclose, from the French enclos, to the Latin inclusus; while, on the other hand, include is directly from the Latin includo.

EN.* The plural number, in our old language, of the verb; as, I escape, they escapen; and of the substantive, as, children, housen, eyen, oxen.

To ENA'BLE.† v. a. [from able; old Fr. enhabler. But see ABLE.] To make able; to empower; to supply with strength or ability.

If thou would'st vouchsafe to overspread
Me with the shadow of thy gentle wing,
I should enabled be thy acts to sing.
Spenser, Hymn on Love.

I thank Christ Jesus our Lord, who hath enabled me, for that he counted me faithful, putting me into the ministry. 1 Tim. i. 12.

His great friendship with God might enable him, and his compassion might incline him.
Atterbury.

He points out to him the way of life, strengthens his weakness, restores his lapses, and enables him to walk and persevere in it. Rogers.

ENA'BLEMENT.* n. s. [from enable.] Ability; power to do a thing; the act of enabling.

Learning hath no less power and efficacy in enablement towards martial and military virtue and prowess. Bacon, Adv. of Learning, B. i.

They owe much of these furtherances and enablements to the civil discipline and politick literature of courts.
W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. (1648,) p. 118.

To ENA'CT. v. a. [from act.]

1. To act; to perform; to effect. Not now in use.

In true balancing of justice, it is flat wrong to punish the thought or purpose of any before it be enacted. Spenser on Ireland.

Valiant Talbot, above human thought,
Enacted wonders with his sword and lance. Shaks.

2. To establish by law; to decree.

It is enacted in the laws of Venice,
If it be proved against an alien,
He seeks the life of any citizen,
The party, 'gainst the which he doth contrive,
Shall seize on half his goods. Shakspeare.

The senate were authors of all counsels in the state; and what was by them consulted and agreed, was proposed to the people, by whom it was enacted or commanded. Temple.

3. To represent by action.

I did enact Hector. Shakspeare.

ENA'CT. n. s. [from the verb.] Purpose; determination.

ENA'CTIVE.* adj. [from enact.] Having power to establish or decree.

An enactive statute regardeth only what shall be, but a declarative regardeth what is and what hath been.
Bp. Bramhall, Schism Guarded, (1658,) p. 271.

ENA'CTMENT.* n. s. [from enact.] The act of decreeing or establishing by law.

ENA'CTOR.† n. s. [from enact. In Sherwood's old Dictionary, it is enacter.]

1. One that forms decrees, or establishes laws.

The great Author of our nature, and enactor of this law of good and evil, is highly dishonoured.
Atterbury.

2. One who practises or performs any thing. Not used.

The violence of either grief or joy,
Their own enactors with themselves destroy.
Shakspeare.

ENA'CTURE.* n. s. [from enact. Many editions read enactors in the following line of Shakspeare.] Purpose; determination; decree.

What to ourselves in passion we propose,
The passion ending, doth the purpose lose:
The violence of either grief or joy
Their own enactures with themselves destroy.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

ENA'LLAGE.† n. s. [ἐναλλαγὴ.] A figure in grammar, whereby some change is made of the common modes of speech, as when one mood or tense of a verb is put for another.

Beza is pleased to blame this version, saying it was an harsh enallage, forgetting himself, I suppose, that with the Greeks the participle is frequently put for the infinitive with words that signify any affection of the mind.
Knatchbull, Annot. N. Test. p. 253.

To ENA'MBUSH. v. a. [from ambush.] To hide in ambush; to hide with hostile intention.

They went within a vale, close to a flood, whose stream
Us'd to give all their cattle drink, they there enambush'd them. Chapman's Iliad.

To ENA'MEL. v. a. [from amel. See AMEL.]

1. To inlay; to variegate with colours, properly with colours fixed by fire.

Must I, alas!
Frame and enamel plate, and drink in glass?
Donne.

See Pan with flocks, with fruits Pomona crown'd;
Here blushing Flora paints th' enamell'd ground.
Pope.

I bequeath to the earl of Orrery the enamelled silver plates, to distinguish bottles of wine by.
Swift's Last Will.

2. To lay upon another body so as to vary it.

Higher than that wall, a circling row
Of goodliest trees, loaden with fairest fruit,
Blossoms, and fruits at once of golden hue,
Appear'd with gay enamell'd colours mix'd.
Milton, P. L.

To ENA'MEL. v. n. To practise the use of enamel.

Though it were foolish to colour or enamel upon the glasses of telescopes, yet to gild the tubes of them may render them more acceptable to the users, without lessening the clearness of the object.
Boyle.

ENA'MEL. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Any thing enamelled, or variegated with colours, fixed by fire.

Down from her eyes welled the pearles round,
Upon the bright enamel of her face;
Such honey drops on springing flowers are found,
When Phœbus holds the crimson morn in chace.
Fairfax.

There are various sorts of coloured glasses, pastes, enamels, and factitious gems.
Woodward on Fossils.

2. The substance inlaid in other things.

ENA'MELLER.† n. s. [from enamel.] One that practises the art of enamelling; encaustes, Lat. Huloet.

ENA'MELLING.* n. s. [from enamel.] The art of applying enamels on metals.

The colouring of furs; enameling, and anealing.
Sir W. Petty, Sprat's Hist. R. S. p. 286.

To ENA'MOUR.† v. a. [from amour, Fr. Dr. Johnson says. But it is the old French verb enamourer; upon the participle of which, enamouré, Lacombe makes this observation: "qui est devenu tout-à-coup amoureux d'une femme: Les Anglois se servent de cette expression." It is originally from the Latin amare.] To inflame with love; to make fond: often with of before the thing or person loved.

Affliction is enamour'd of thy parts,
And thou art wedded to calamity.
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

My Oberon! What visions have I seen!
I thought I was enamour'd of an ass.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

You are very near my brother in his love: he is enamoured on Hero. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

Or should she, confident,
As sitting queen ador'd on beauty's throne,
Descend with all her winning charms begirt,
To enamour, as the zone of Venus once
Wrought that effect on Jove, so fables tell.
Milton, P. R.

He, on his side,
Leaning half-rais'd, with looks of cordial love
Hung over her enamour'd. Milton, P. L.

Your uncle cardinal
Is not so far enamour'd of a cloyster,
But he will thank you for the crown. Dryden.

'Tis hard to discern whether is in the greatest errour, he who is enamour'd of all he does, or he whom nothing of his own can please.
Dryden, Dufresnoy.

ENAMORA'DO.* n. s. [from enamour. Ital. innamorato.] One deeply in love.

An enamorado neglects all other things to accomplish his delight. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 74.

ENA'RMED.* adj. [probably from the old French enarme, "anse ou courroie d'un bouclier;" Lat. arma. V. Lacombe, Suppl. and Roq.] A term of heraldry, signifying that the horns, hoofs, beak, talons, &c. of any beast or bird of prey, being their arms or weapons, are of a different colour from that of the body. It is used, in Scottish writings, simply for armed, wearing armour; but I have not found it so employed by English authors. "He beareth this boar azure enarmyd with gold." Poem supposed to be written by Chaucer. See Illustr. of Gower and Chaucer, 1810, p. 306.

ENARRA'TION.† n. s. [enarro, Lat.] Explanation; exposition.

St. Augustine in his enarration upon this psalm, according to his wont, betakes him to an allegorical exposition. Hakewell on Providence, p. 77.

I might further yet confirm this truth by an anatomical enarration of the several compounding parts of these limbs.
Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 68.

ENARTHRO'SIS. n. s. [ἐν and ἄρθρον.] The insertion of one bone into another to form a joint.

Enarthrosis is where a good round head enters into a cavity, whether it be cotyla, or profound cavity, as that of os coxæ, receiving the head of the os femoris; or glene, which is more shallow, as in the scapula, where it receives the humerus. Wiseman, Surgery.

ENATA'TION. n. s. [enato, Lat.] The act of swimming out; escape by swimming. Dict.

ENA'TE.* adj. [Lat. enatus.] Growing out.

Osteologers have very well observed, that the parts appertaining to the bones, which stand out at a distance from their bodies, are either the adnate or the enate parts, either the epiphyses, or the apophyses of the bones.
Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 176.

To ENA'VIGATE.* v. a. [Lat. enavigo.] To sail over. Cockeram.

ENA'UNTER.† adv. [probably from anent, which see.] The contemporary commentator on Spenser's Shepherds' Calendar explains this old word by lest that. And it is still used in part of Yorkshire for lest. See the Craven Dialect, 1824.

Anger nould let him speak to the tree,
Enaunter his rage might cooled be,
But to the root bent his sturdy stroke.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

ENCÆ'NIA.* See ENCENIA.

To ENCA'GE.† v. a. [Fr. encager, to imprison; Cotgrave.] To shut up as in a cage; to coop up; to confine.

He suffer'd his kinsman March,
Who is, if every owner were right plac'd,
Indeed, his king, to be encag'd in Wales,
There without ransom to lie forfeited.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Like Bajazet encag'd, the shepherd's scoff,
Or like slack-sinew'd Sampson, his hair off.
Donne, Poems, p. 145.

And more than life I lov'd my liberty,
And much suspected all that would engage
My heart to their own sect, and free-born soul encage. More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 121.

To ENCA'MP.† v. n. [from camp.] To pitch tents; to sit down for a time in a march; to settle a temporary habitation.

He encamped at the mount of God. Ex. xiii. 5.

On the foughten field
Michaël, and his angels prevalent,
Encamping, plac'd in guard their watches round.
Milton, P. L.

To ENCA'MP. v. a. To form an army into a regular camp; to order to encamp.

The people were encamped against Gibbethon.
1 Kings, xvi. 15.

ENCA'MPING.* n. s. The place where tents are pitched; a camp.

In such and such a place shall be my camp, [in the margin, encamping.] 2 Kings, vi. 8.

The French knew how to make war with the English, by not putting things to the hazard of a battle, but wearing them by long sieges of towns and strong fortified encampings. Bacon.

ENCA'MPMENT. n. s. [from encamp.]

1. The act of encamping, or pitching tents.
2. A camp; tents pitched in order.

Their enemies served to improve them in their encampments, weapons, or something else. Grew.

When a general bids the martial train
Spread their encampment o'er the spacious plain,
Thick rising tents a canvass city build.
Gay, Trivia.

To ENCA'NKER.* v. a. [from canker.] To corrode; to corrupt.

What needeth me for to extoll his fame
With my rude pen encanker'd all with rust?
Shelton, Eleg. on the E. of Northumberland.

To ENCA'SE.* v. a. [from case.] To enclose or hide as in a case or cover.

You would encase yourself, and I must credit you,
So much my old obedience compels from me.
Beaum. and Fl. Little Thief.

To ENCA'VE.† v. a. [old Fr. encaver.] To hide as in a cave.

Do but encave yourself,
And mark the fleers, the gibes, and notable scorns,
That dwell in ev'ry region of his face;
For I will make him tell the tale anew.
Shakspeare, Othello.

ENCA'USTICE.* n. s. [Gr. ἐγκαυστικὴ.] The art of enamelling or painting by fire. Bailey.

ENCA'USTICK.* adj. [Gr. ἐγκαυστικὸς, Fr. encaustique, from καίω, to burn.] Belonging to the act of painting with burnt wax; sometimes applied to enamelling. Encaustick painting was practised by the ancients, and lately revived. Chambers. "C'est une sorte de peinture, dont le secret a été retrouvé par M. Requeno, Jesuite Espagnol, et qui consiste à coucher, avec le pinceau, des cires colorées et liquefiées au feu, ou à fixer les couleurs par le moyen du feu." Morin, Etym. Dict. Fr. et Gr.

ENCE'INTE. n. s. [French; Lat. incingo.] Enclosure; ground enclosed with a fortification. A military term.

ENCE'INTE.† adj. [Fr.] With child. A law term.

A. died without issue born, but leaving his wife enseint [enceinte,] or big with child. Blackstone.

ENCE'NIA. n. s. plur. [Gr. ἐγκαίνια, from καινὸς, new.] Festivals anciently kept on the days, on which cities were built; by the Jews, on which their temple was dedicated; by Christians, on which their churches were consecrated; and, in later time, ceremonies renewed at certain periods, as at Oxford, where the word signifies the solemnities at the celebrations of founders and benefactors.

The encenia, and publick collections of the university upon state subjects, were never in such esteem either for elegy or congratulation, as when he contributed most largely to them.
Oldisworth, in Johnson's Life of Smith.

To ENCHA'FE. v. a. [eschauffer, Fr.] To enrage; to irritate; to provoke.

The wind-shak'd surge, with high and monstrous main,
Seems to cast water on the burning bear,
I never did like molestation view
On the enchafed flood. Shakspeare, Othello.

To ENCHA'IN. v. a. [enchainer, Fr.]

1. To fasten with a chain; to hold in chains; to bind; to hold in bondage.

What should I do! while here I was enchain'd,
No glimpse of godlike liberty remain'd.
Dryden, Virgil.

2. To link together; to concatenate.

The one contracts and enchains his words, speaking pressingly and short; the other delights in long-breathed accents. Howell.

To ENCHA'NT. v. a. [enchanter, Fr.]

1. To give efficacy to any thing by songs of sorcery.

And now about the cauldron sing,
Like elves and fairies in a ring,
Enchanting all that you put in. Shaksp. Macbeth.

These powerful drops thrice on the threshold pour,
And bathe with this enchanted juice her door;
That door where no admittance now is found,
But where my soul is ever hov'ring round.
Granville.

2. To subdue by charms or spells.

Arcadia was the charmed circle, where all his spirits for ever should be enchanted. Sidney.

John thinks them all enchanted: he enquires if Nick had not given them some intoxicating potion. Arbuthnot.

3. To delight in a high degree.

One whom the musick of his own vain tongue
Doth ravish, like enchanting harmony.
Shakspeare, L. Lab. Lost.

Too dear I priz'd a fair enchanting face;
Beauty unchaste is beauty in disgrace.
Pope, Odyssey.

ENCHA'NTER. n. s. [enchanteur, French.] A magician; a sorcerer; one who has spirits or demons at his command; one who has the power of charms and spells.

Such phasms, such apparitions, are excellencies which men applaud in themselves, conjured up by the magick of a strong imagination, and only seen within that circle in which the enchanter stands. Decay of Piety.

Gladio, by valour and stratagem, put to death tyrants, enchanters, monsters, and knights. Spect.

Arden, that black enchanter, whose dire arts,
Enslav'd our knights, and broke our virgin hearts.
Granville.

ENCHA'NTINGLY.† adv. [from enchant.] With the force of enchantment. It is improperly used in a passive sense in the following passage of Shakspeare, Dr. Johnson says. It was in use, however, for charmingly, in Shakspeare's time; as Cotgrave illustrates enchantingly by that word.

He's gentle; never school'd, and yet learn'd; full of noble device; of all sorts enchantingly beloved. Shakspeare, As you like it.

ENCHA'NTMENT. n. s. [enchantement, Fr.]

1. Magical charms; spells; incantation; sorcery.

The Turks thought that tempest was brought upon them by the charms and enchantments of the Persian magicians. Knolles.

2. Irresistible influence; overpowering delight.

Warmth of fancy will carry the loudest and most universal applause, which holds the heart of a reader under the strongest enchantment. Pope, Pref. to Iliad.

ENCHA'NTRESS. n. s. [enchantress, Fr.]

1. A sorceress; a woman versed in magical arts.

Fell banning hag! enchantress, hold thy tongue. Shakspeare.

I have it by certain tradition, that it was given to the first who wore it by an enchantress. Tatler.

2. A woman whose beauty or excellencies give irresistible influence.

From this enchantress all these ills are come:
You are not safe till you pronounce her doom.
Dryden.

Oft with th' enchantress of his soul he talks,
Sometimes in crowds distress'd. Thomson.

To ENCHA'RGE.* v. a. [from charge.] To intrust with; to give in charge to.

We know that the evil spirits cannot be more full of malice to work our harm, than the blessed angels are full of charity, and well-wishing to mankind; and the evil are only let loose to tempt us by a permission of the Almighty, whereas the good are by a gracious delegation from God encharged with our custody. Bp. Hall, Soliloq. § 8.

To ENCHA'SE.† v. a. [enchasser, French; Gr. ἐν and κάψα, a chest or box.]

1. To infix; to enclose in any other body so as to be held fast, but not concealed.

We enchase our discourse with bitter language as with pearls, and never think we reprove except we be contumelious. Hales, Rem. Serm. p. 8.

Like polish'd ivory, beauteous to behold;
Or Parian marble, when enchas'd in gold.
Dryden, Virgil.

Words, which, in their natural situation, shine like jewels enchased in gold, look, when transposed into notes, as if set in lead. Felton on the Classicks.

2. To adorn by being fixed upon it.

What see'st thou there? King Henry's diadem,
Enchas'd with all the honours of the world!
Shakspeare.

They houses burn, and household gods deface,
To drink in bowls which glitt'ring gems enchase.
Dryden.

3. To adorn by raised or embossed work.

When was old Sherwood's head more quaintly curl'd,
Or look'd the earth more green upon the world,
Or nature's cradle more enchas'd and purl'd.
B. Jonson.

4. To engrave.

A mazer wrought of the maple ware,
Wherein is enchased many a fair sight
Of bears and tigers. Spenser, Shep. Cal. Aug.

5. To paint strongly.

My ragged rimes are all too rude and base
Her heavenly lineaments for to enchase.
Spenser, F. Q. i. xii. 23.

ENCHE'ASON.† n. s. [old Fr. enchaison; Lat. occasio. Gower might be thought to have introduced this word into our language, "If that I had encheason," &c. if it did not occur in the stat. 5 Edw. III.] Cause; occasion. Skinner, Cowel, Bailey.

Certes, said he, well mote I shame to tell
The fond encheason that me hither led.
Spenser, F. Q.

ENCHIRI'DION. n. s. [Lat. enchiridium; Gr. ἐν, in, and χεὶρ, the hand.] A little book, which one may carry in his hand; a manual. Bullokar.

As witnesseth Bartholinus in his enchiridion of natural philosophy. Hakewill on Providence, p. 152.

ENCI'NDERED.* adj. [from cinder.] Burnt to cinders. Cockeram.

To ENCI'RCLE.† v. a. [old Fr. encercler.] To surround; to environ; to enclose in a ring or circle; to enring.

That stranger guest the Paphian realm obeys,
A realm defended with encircling seas.
Pope, Odyssey.

Beneath the sculptur'd arch he sits enthron'd;
The peers encircling, form an awful round.
Pope, Odyssey.

ENCI'RCLET. n. s. [from circle.] A circle; a ring.

In whose encirclets if ye gaze,
Your eyes may tread a lover's maze. Sidney.

ENCLI'TICK.† n. s. [ἐγκλιτικὸς.] A particle which throws back the accent upon the foregoing syllable.

It is observed too often that men of wit do so much employ their thoughts upon fine speculations, that things useful to mankind are wholly neglected; and they are busy in making emendations upon some encliticks in a Greek author, while obvious things, that every man may have use for, are wholly overlooked. Tatler, No. 18.

When we say, "Give me content," the me in this case is a perfect enclitick. But when we say, "Give me content, give him his thousands," the me and him are no encliticks, but, as they stand in opposition, assume an accent of their own, and so become the true ὀρθοτονούμενα, i. e. uprightly accented. Harris, Hermes, i. 5.

ENCLI'TICK.* adj. The diversity between the contradistinctive pronouns, and the enclitick, is not unknown, even to the English tongue. When we say, Give me, &c. Harris's Herm. i. 5. See the substantive.

To ENCLO'ISTER.* v. a. [Fr. enclostrer, Cotgrave. Our word should therefore be written with en, though Dr. Johnson gives it with in, without authority or example, however. Yet Lovelace, a poet of the 17th century, might have furnished him with "incloyster," Lucasta, p. 47. But a better writer, of the same time, uses encloister.] To shut up as in a cloister.

The Gentiles appropriated the name of a temple to this notion of encloistering a deity by an idol. Mede on Churches, (1638,) p. 65.

To ENCLO'SE. v. a. [enclos, Fr.]

1. To part from things or grounds common by a fence.

The protector caused a proclamation to be set forth against enclosures, commanding that they who had enclosed lands, accustomed to lie open, should lay them open again. Hayward.

As much land as a man tills, and can use the product of, so much he, by his labour, encloses from the common. Locke.

For enclosing of land, the usual way is with a bank set with quick. Mortimer, Husbandry.

2. To environ; to encircle; to surround; to encompass; to shut in between other things; to include.

The fourth row a beryl, and an onyx, and a jasper: they shall be set in gold in their enclosings. Ex. xxviii. 20.

The peer now spreads the glitt'ring forfex wide,
T' enclose the lock, now joins it to divide. Pope.

3. To hold by an exclusive claim.

ENCLO'SER. n. s. [from enclose.]

1. One that encloses or separates common fields in several distinct properties.

If God had laid all common, certainly
Man would have been th' encloser; but since now
God hath impal'd us, on the contrary,
Man breaks the fence. Herbert.

2. Any thing in which another is enclosed.

ENCLO'SURE.† n. s. [old Fr. enclosure.]

1. The act of enclosing or environing any thing.

The membranes are for the comprehension or enclosure of all these together.
Wilkins, Math. Magick.

2. The separation of common grounds into distinct possessions.

Enclosures began to be frequent, whereby arable land was turned into pasture. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Touching enclosures, a company of lands enclosed are thereby improved in worth two or three parts at the least. Hayward.

3. The appropriation of things common.

Let no man appropriate what God hath made common; that is against justice and charity, and by miraculous accidents God hath declared his displeasure against such enclosure. Bp. Taylor.

4. State of being shut up in any place; encompassed, or environed.

This expresses particularly the enclosure of the waters within the earth. Burnet, Theory.

For the young, during its enclosure in the womb, there are formed membranes enveloping it, called secundines. Ray.

5. The space enclosed; the space comprehended within certain limits.

And all, that else this world's enclosure base
Hath great or glorious in mortal eye,
Adorns the person of her majesty. Spenser, F. Q.

They are to live all in a body, and generally within the same enclosure; to marry among themselves, and to eat no meats that are not prepared their own way. Addison, Spectator.

6. Several; ground enclosed; ground separated from the common.

'Tis not the common, but the enclosure must make him rich. South.

To ENCO'ACH.* v. a. [from coach.] To carry in a coach.

Like Phaëton encoach'd in burnish'd gold. Davies, Wit's Pilgrim. sign. I. 3. b.

To ENCO'FFIN.* v. a. [from coffin.] To enclose in a coffin.

His body rested here in quietness until the dissolution, when for the gain of the lead in which it was encoffined, it was taken up and thrown into the next water. Weever, Funer. Mon.

To ENCO'MBER.* See To ENCUMBER.

ENCO'MBERMENT.* n. s. [Fr. encombrement, annoyance; Cotgrave.] Disturbance; molestation.

The best advizement was, of bad, to let her Sleepe out her fill, without encomberment. Spenser, F. Q. vi. viii. 38.

ENCO'MIAST.† n. s. [encomiaste, old Fr. ἐγκωμιαστὴς, Gr.] A panegyrist; a proclaimer of praise; a praiser.

The Jesuits are the great encomiasts of the Chinese. Locke.

Most of the learned and ingenious men of that age, appear to have courted the favours of this polite and popular encomiast. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 392.

ENCOMIA'STICAL.†‖ adj. [Fr. encomiastique, "extolling to the skies," Cotgrave; Gr. ἐγκωμιάστικος.] Panegyrical; laudatory; containing praise; bestowing praise.

ENCOMIA'STICK.

When Sixtus Quintus began his encomiastical oration of the Jacobine that killed the French king, &c. Dean King, Serm. 5 Nov. 1608, p. 15.

Of his [Golding's] original poetry, I recollect nothing more, than an encomiastick copy of verses prefixed to Barret's Alvearie published in 1580. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 414.

ENCOMIA'STICK.* n. s. Used by Ben Jonson for the panegyrick itself.

Dia. I thank you, Mr. Compass, for your short Encomiastick.

Rut. It is much in little, sir. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

ENCO'MION.* n. s. [Gr. ἐγκώμιον. This was the word in use for praise or panegyrick, before encomium; from which also a verb was formed, viz. to encomionize, to praise. V. Cockeram's Vocabulary.] Panegyrick.

The people (after the manner of their hyperbolical flattering) applauded him with this blasphemous encomion, that he spake like a god, and not like a man. Fotherby, Atheom. (1626,) p. 157.

But these puling lovers! I cannot but laugh at them, and their encomions of their mistresses. Brewer, Com. of Lingua, (1657,) ii. 2.

ENCO'MIUM. n. s. [ἐγκώμιον.] Panegyrick; praise; elogy.

How eagerly do some men propagate every little encomium their parasites make of them! Gov. of the Tongue.

A vile encomium doubly ridicules; There's nothing blackens like the ink of fools. Pope.

To ENCO'MPASS. v. a. [from compass.]

1. To enclose; to encircle.

Look how my ring encompasseth thy finger; Ev'n so thy breast encloseth my poor heart. Shaks.

Two strong ligaments encompass the whole head of the femur. Wiseman, Surgery.

Poetick fields encompass me around, And still I seem to tread on classick ground. Addison.

2. To shut in; to surround; to environ.

He, having scarce six thousand in his troop, By three-and-twenty thousand of the French Was round encompassed, and set upon. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

3. To go round any place; as, Drake encompassed the world.

ENCO'MPASSMENT. n. s. [from encompass.] Circumlocution; remote tendency of talk.

Finding By this encompassment and drift of question, That they do know my son, come you more near. Shakspeare.

ENCO'RE. adj. [French.] Again; once more. A word used at publick shows when a singer, or fiddler, or buffoon is desired by the audience to do the same thing again.

To the same notes thy sons shall hum or snore, And all thy yawning daughters cry encore. Pope, Dunciad.

To ENCO'RE.* v. a. [from the adverb.] To call on the singer or speaker for the repetition of a song or speech.

Dolly, in her master's shop, Encores them, as she twirls her mop. Whitehead, Apology for Laureats.

ENCO'UNTER. n. s. [encontre, French.]

1. Duel; single fight; conflict.

The doctrines of the reformation have kept the field against all encounterers. Atterbury.

2. One that loves to accost others. An old term.

Oh, these encounterers! so gilt of tongue, They give a coasting welcome ere it comes; And wide unclasp the tables of their thoughts To every ticklish reader. Shaks. Troil. and Cress.

To ENCO'URAGE. v. a. [encourager, Fr.]

1. To animate; to incite to any thing.

They encourage themselves in an evil matter. Ps. lxiv. 5.

2. To give courage to; to support the spirits; to inspirit; to embolden.

Kinds of musick encourage men, and make them warlike, or make them soft and effeminate. Bacon.

I would neither encourage the rebels, nor discourage the protestants' loyalty. King Charles.

3. To raise confidence; to make confident.

I doubt not but there are ways to be found, to assist our reason in this most useful part; and this the judicious Hooker encourages me to say. Locke.

ENCO'URAGEMENT. n. s. [from encourage.]

1. Incitement to any action or practice; incentive.

2. Increase of confidence.

Such strength of heart
Thy conduct and example gives; nor small
Encouragement, Godolphin, wise and just. Philips.

3. Favour; countenance; support.

For when he dies, farewel all honour, bounty,
All generous encouragement of arts.
Otway, Orphan.

The reproach of immorality will lie heaviest against an established religion, because those who have no religion will profess themselves of that which has the encouragement of the law. Rogers.

ENCO'URAGER.† n. s. [from encourage.] One that supplies incitements to any thing; a favourer.

He would have women follow the camp, to be spectators and encouragers of noble actions.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 537.

Live then, thou great encourager of arts,
Live ever in our thankful hearts. Dryden.

As the pope is a master of polite learning, and a great encourager of arts; so at Rome those arts immediately thrive, under the encouragement of the prince. Addison.

ENCO'URAGINGLY.* adv. [from encourage.] In a manner that gives encouragement; in a way that raises confidence.

To ENCRA'DLE.* v. a. [from cradle.] To lay in a cradle.

Begin from first, where he encradled was
In simple cratch, wrapt in a wad of hay.
Spenser, Hymn of Heav. Love.

To ENCREA'SE.* v. a. [old Fr. encresser; yet Dr. Johnson has given all the words of this family with in; although, under the verb increase, he refers to encrease, of which there is no notice in its place. Our old lexicography gives encrease, and the word is now most frequently written with en.] To augment. See To INCREASE.

ENCRI'MSONED.* adj. [from crimson.] Having a crimson colour.

Grief and blushes, aptly understood
In bloodless white and the encrimson'd mood.
Shakspeare, Lover's Complaint.

ENCRI'SPED.* adj. [from crisp.] Curling; formed in curls.

Hairs encrisped, yellow as the gold.
Skelton, Poems, p. 18.

To ENCRO'ACH. v. a. [accrocher, from croc, a hook, Fr.]

1. To make invasions upon the right of another; to put a hook into another man's possessions to draw them away.

Those Irish captains of counties have encroached upon the queen's freeholders and tenants.
Spenser on Ireland.

2. To advance gradually and by stealth upon that to which one has no right: with on before the subject.

This hour is mine; if for the next I care, I grow too wide,
And do encroach upon death's side. Herbert.

Tisiphone, let loose from under ground,
Before her drives diseases and affright;
And every moment rises to the sight,
Aspiring to the skies, encroaching on the light.
Dryden.

To ENCRO'ACH. v. n.

1. To creep on gradually without right.

The superstition that riseth voluntarily, and by degrees mingleth itself with the rites, even of every divine service, done to the only true God, must be considered of as a creeping and encroaching evil.
Hooker.

Th' encroaching ill you early should oppose;
Flatter'd, 'tis worse, and by indulgence grows.
Dryden.

2. To pass bounds.

They fabled how the serpent, whom they call'd
Ophion, with Eurynome, the wide
Encroaching Eve perhaps, had first the rule
Of high Olympus. Milton, P. L.

Next, fenc'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' encroaching cattle from thy ground.
Dryden.

ENCRO'ACH.* n. s. [from the verb.] Gradual advance; advance by stealth.

I cannot imagine that those hereticks who err fundamentally, and by consequence damnably, took their first rise, and began to set up with a fundamental errour; but grew into it by insensible encroaches, and gradual insinuations.
South, Serm. iv. 370.

ENCRO'ACHER.† n. s. [from encroach.]

1. One who seizes the possession of another by gradual and silent means.

An encroacher upon the publick liberty.
Dr. Spenser, Serm. Camb. 28 June, 1660, p. 18.

The bold encroachers on the deep
Gain by degrees huge tracts of land,
Till Neptune, with one general sweep,
Turns all again to barren strand. Swift.

2. One who makes slow and gradual advances beyond his rights.

Full dress creates dignity, augments consciousness, and keeps at distance an encroacher.
Richardson, Clarissa.

ENCRO'ACHINGLY.* adv. [from the part. encroaching.] By way of encroachment. Bailey.

ENCRO'ACHMENT. n. s. [from encroach.]

1. An unlawful gathering in upon another man. For example: if two men's grounds lie together, the one presses too far upon the other; or if a tenant owe two shillings rent-service to the lord, and the lord takes three: so the Spencers encroached to themselves royal power and authority. Cowel.

But this usurper his encroachment proud
Stays not on man: to God his tow'r intends Siege, and defiance. Milton, P. L.

If it be a man's known principle to depart from his right, ill men will make unjust encroachments upon him. Atterbury.

2. An advance into the territories or rights of another.

As a man had a right to all he could employ his labour upon, so he had no temptation to labour for more than he could make use of: this left no room for controversy about the title, nor for encroachment on the right of others. Locke.

The ancient Romans made many encroachments on the sea, and laid the foundations of their palaces within the very borders of it. Addison on Italy.

The people, since the death of Solon, had already made great encroachments. Swift.

To ENCRU'ST.* v. a. [old Fr. encrouster.] To cover as with a crust. See To INCRUST.

To ENCU'MBER.† v. a. [encombrer, Fr.; encombrare, low Latin, from combrus, as some suppose, which was formerly used to denote trees cut down, and so laid with their branches as to block up the way. See Du Cange in V. COMBRI. Our word was formerly accomber, whence also comber, which see; and Spenser wrote encomberment. See also To INCUMBER.]

1. To clog; to load; to impede.

We have, by this many years' experience, found that exceeding great good, not encumbered with any notable inconvenience. Hooker.

Encumber'd with his vest, without defence.
Dryden.

2. To entangle; to embarrass; to obstruct.

The verbal copier is encumbered with so many difficulties at once, that he can never disentangle himself. Dryden.

The god awak'd,
And thrice in vain he shook his wing,
Encumber'd in the silken string. Prior.

3. To load with debts; as, his estate is encumbered with mortgages.

ENCU'MBRANCE. n. s. [from encumber.]

1. Clog; load; impediment.

Philosophers agreed in despising riches, at best, considering them as unnecessary encumbrances of life. Temple.

Dead limbs are an encumbrance to the body, instead of being of use to it. Addison, Freeholder.

2. Excrescence; useless addition.

Strip from the branching Alps their piny load,
The huge encumbrance of horrifick woods.
Thomson.

3. Burthen upon an estate.

In respect of the encumbrances of a living, consider whether it be sufficient for his family, and to maintain hospitality. Ayliffe.

ENCY'CLICAL. adj. [ἐγκυκλικὸς.] Circular; sent round through a large region.

This council was not received in patriarchal sees, which is evident from Photius's encyclical epistle to the patriarch of Alexandria. Stillingfleet.

ENCY'CLOPEDE.* n. s. [from encyclopædia; not so old perhaps in our language as that, but full as convenient and expressive. So cyclopede, which see.] The round of learning.

They are so vigorous for the evidence of sense, that they scarce allow any other, but make the most sublimated knowledge a tumult of phantasms; all thought, local motion; all reason, mechanism; and the whole encyclopede of arts and sciences but a brisker circulation of the blood!
Mannyngham's Disc. (1681,) p. 54.

ENCYCLOPE'DIA.† } n. s. [encyclopedie, Fr. Cotgrave; Gr.
ENCYCLOPE'DY. } ἐγκυκλοπαιδεία, of ἐν, in, κύκλος, a circle, and παιδεία, instruction, science, of which the root is παῖς, a child.] The circle of sciences; the round of learning.

In this encyclopædia and round of knowledge, like the great wheels of heaven, we must observe two circles, that while we are daily carried about, and whirled on by the swing and rapt of the one, we may maintain a natural and proper course in the sober wheel of the other. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Every science borrows from all the rest, and we cannot attain any single one without the encyclopædy. Glanville.

This art may justly claim a place in the encyclopædia, especially such as serves for a model of education for an able politician. Arbuthnot, J. Bull.

ENCYCLOPE'DIAN.* adj. [from encyclopedia.] Embracing the whole round of learning.

Let them have that encyclopædian, all the learning in the world, they must keep it to themselves.
Burton, Anat. of Melanch. p. 131.

ENCYCLOPE'DIST.* n. s. [Fr. encyclopediste.] One who assists in compiling books which illustrate the whole round of learning. Both the French and English words are modern.

It became the only resource of the reader, in many cases where explanation was wanted, to have recourse to Chambers's Dictionary, in four large volumes folio; or to the Encyclopædia Britannica, now in eighteen large volumes quarto; or to the still more stupendous performance of the French encyclopedists.
Hutton's Mathemat. and Phil. Dict. (1796,) Pref.

ENCY'STED. adj. [κύστις, Gr.] Enclosed in a vesicle or bag.

Encysted tumours borrow their names from a cyst or bag in which they are contained.
Sharp, Surgery.

END.† n. s. [ende, Saxon; ende, Su. Goth. andei, M. Goth. from the Icelandick an, defect, according to Serenius.]

1. The extremity of the length of any thing materially extended. Of bodies that have equal dimensions we do not use end: the extremity of breadth is side.
Jonathan put forth the end of the rod that was in his hand, and dipt it in a honeycomb.
1 Sam. xiv. 27.

2. Extremity or last part in general.
The extremity and bounds of all bodies we have no difficulty to arrive at; but, when the mind is there, it finds nothing to hinder its progress into this endless expansion: of that it can neither find, nor conceive any end. Locke.

3. The last particle of any assignable duration.
Behold the day groweth to an end. Judges, xix. 9.
At the end of two months she returned.
Judges, xi. 30.
If the world's age and death be argu'd well
By the sun's fall, which now tow'rds earth doth bend,
Then we might fear that virtue, since she fell
So low as woman, should be near her end. Donne.

4. The conclusion or cessation of any action.
Jacob had made an end of commanding his sons.
Gen. xlix. 33.
Yet vainly most their age in study spend;
No end of writing books, and to no end. Denham.
The causes and designs of an action are the beginning: the effects of these causes, and the difficulties met with in the execution of these designs, are the middle; and the unravelling and resolution of these difficulties, are the end.
Broome of Epick Poetry.

5. When end is not used materially, it is opposed to beginning.
Better is the end of a thing than the beginning thereof. Eccles. vii. 8.

6. The conclusion or last part of any thing: as, the end of a chapter; the end of a discourse.

7. Ultimate state; final doom.
Mark the perfect man, and behold the upright, for the end of that man is peace. Psalm xxxvii. 37.

8. The point beyond which no progression can be made.
They reel to and fro, and stagger like a drunken man, and are at their wits' end. Psalm cvii. 27.

9. Final determination; conclusion of debate or deliberation.
My guilt be on my head, and there's an end.
Shakspeare.

10. Death; fate; decease.
I determine to write the life and the end, the nature and the fortunes of George Villiers. Wotton.
The soul receives intelligence,
By her near genius, of the body's end,
And so imparts a sadness to the sense.
Daniel, Civil Wars.
'Tis the great business of life to fit ourselves for our end, and no man can live well that has not death in his eye. L'Estrange.
Remember Milo's end,
Wedg'd in that timber which he strove to rend.
Roscommon.
My God, my father, and my friend,
Do not forsake me in my end. Roscommon.
Unblam'd through life, lamented in thy end.
Pope.

11. Cessation; period.
What shall be the sign of thy coming and of the end of the world? St. Matthew, xxiv. 3.
Great houses shall have an end. Amos, iii. 15.

12. Limit; termination.
There is none end of the store. Nahum, ii. 9.

13. Abolition; total loss.
There would be an end of all civil government, if the assignment of civil power were by such institution. Locke.

14. Cause of death; destroyer.
Take heed you dally not before your king,
Lest he that is the supreme King of kings,
Confound your hidden falsehood, and award
Either of you to be the other's end.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

15. Consequence; conclusive event; conclusion.
O, that a man might know
The end of this day's business ere it come!
But it sufficeth that the day will end.
Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.
The end of these things is death. Rom. vi. 21.

16. Fragment; broken piece.
Thus I clothe my naked villainy
With old odd ends, stol'n forth of Holy Writ,
And seem a saint. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

17. Purpose; intention.
There was a purpose to reduce the monarchy to a republick, which was far from the end and purpose of that nation. Clarendon.
I have lov'd!
What can thy ends, malicious beauty, be?
Can he who kill'd thy brother, live for thee?
Dryden.
Heav'n, as its instrument, my courage sends;
Heav'n ne'er sent those who fight for private ends.
Dryden.
Others are apt to attribute them to some false end or intention. Addison, Spect.

18. Thing intended; final design; the termination of intellectual prospect.
Wisdom may have framed one and the same thing to serve commodiously for divers ends, and of those ends any one may be sufficient cause for continuance, though the rest have ceased. Hooker.
All those things which are done by him, have some end for which they are done; and the end for which they are done, is a reason of his will to do them. Hooker.
Her only end is never-ending bliss;
Which is, the eternal face of God to see,
Who last of ends, and first of causes is;
And to do this, she must eternal be. Davies.
The end of the commandment is charity.
1 Tim. i. 5.
Two things I shall propound to you, as ends; since the wise men of this world have made them theirs. Suckling.
Such conditions did fully comply with all those ends, for which the parliament had first taken up arms. Clarendon.
Hear, and mark,
To what end I have brought thee hither.
Milton, P. R.
Life, with my Indamora, I would choose;
But, losing her, the end of living lose. Dryden.
For when success a lover's toil attends,
Few ask if fraud or force attain'd his ends. Pope.
The end of our fast is to please God, and make him propitious. Smalridge.

19. An END. [Probably corrupted from on end, Dr. Johnson says; of which there can be no doubt, as a friend also has observed with me the form of on end in our elder translation of the Bible.] Upright; erect: as, his hair stands an end.
This stone which I have set up on an ende.
Genesis, xxviii. 22. Transl. of 1572.

20. An END has a signification in low language not easily explained; as, most an end, i. e. commonly: perhaps it is properly on end, at the conclusion; or corrupted from some old word not easily recoverable.
Stay'st thou to vex me here?
A slave, that, still an end, turns me to shame!
Shakspeare, Two Gent. Ver.
What will that girl do? — Sure no harm at all, sir,
For she sleeps most an end.
Massinger, Very Woman.

To END.† v. a. [Sax. ænbian.]

1. To terminate; to conclude; to finish.
They have ended all my harvest. Ruth, ii. 21.
He would in one battle end quarrel with them, either win or lose the empire.
Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.
That expensive war under which we have so long groaned, is not yet ended. Smalridge.

2. To destroy; to put to death.
The lord of Stafford dear to-day hath bought
Thy likeness; for instead of thee, King Harry,
This sword hath ended him. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

To END.† v. n.

1. To come to an end; to be finished.
Then ease your weary Trojans will attend,
And the long labours of your voyage end.
Dryden, Æn.

2. To die. [τελευτάω.] See ENDING.

3. To terminate; to conclude.
Our laughing, if it be loud and high, commonly ends in a deep sigh; and all the instances of pleasure have a sting in the tail.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.
The one seem'd woman to the waist, and fair;
But ended foul in many a scaly fold. Milton, P. L.
His starry helm unbuckled shew'd him prime
In manhood where youth ended. Milton, P. L.

4. To cease; to fail.
His sovereignty, built upon either of these titles, could not have descended to his heir, but must have ended with him. Locke.

5. To conclude action or discourse.
The angel ended, and in Adam's ear
So charming left his voice. Milton, P. L.

END-ALL.* n. s. [from end and all.] Complete termination.
That but this blow
Might be the be-all and the end-all here.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To ENDA'MAGE.† v. a. [Fr. endommager; and so our own word was formerly written: "that he be not endomaged or impeached by his adversaries," Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 73.] To mischief; to prejudice; to harm.
Nor ought he car'd whom he endamaged
By tortous wrong, or whom bereav'd of right.
Spenser, F. Q.
It cometh sometime to pass, that a thing unnecessary in itself doth notwithstanding appear convenient to be still held, even without use, lest, by reason of that coherence which it hath with somewhat most necessary, the removal of the one should endamage the other. Hooker.
Where your good word cannot advantage him,
Your slander never can endamage him. Shakspeare.
Gather our soldiers, scatter'd and disperst,
And lay new platforms to endamage them.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
The trial hath indamag'd thee no way;
Rather more honour left, and more esteem.
Milton, P. R.
When an erroneous opinion is published, the publick is endamaged, and therefore it becomes punishable by the magistrate. South.
A great alteration doth seldom any wise endamage or disorder the globe.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

ENDA'MAGEABLE.* adj. [from endamage.] Hurtful; capable of doing hurt. Huloet.

ENDA'MAGEMENT.† n. s. [French endommagement.] Damage; loss.
See that Curius have no endamagement or hurt.
Huloet.

These flags of France that are advanced here,
Have hither march'd to the endamagement.
Shakspeare, K. John.

ENDA'MAGING.* n. s. [from endamage.] Injury; damage;

That which was the endamaging only of their estates. Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

To ENDA'NGER.† v. a. [from danger.]

1. To put into hazard; to bring into peril.

Whoso removeth stones, shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood, shall be endangered thereby. Eccles. x. 9.

Then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king. Dan. i. 10.

Every one desires his own preservation and happiness, and therefore hath a natural dread of every thing that can destroy his being, or endanger his happiness. Tillotson.

He rais'd the rest,
To force the foes from the Lavinian shore,
And Italy's endanger'd peace restore. Dryden, Æn.

My kingdom claims your birth; my late defence,
Of our endanger'd fleet, may claim your confidence.
Dryden.

Volatile salts never exist in an animal body; the heat required to make them volatile, endangers the animal. Arbuthnot.

The interest endangered is our title to heaven.
Rogers.

2. To incur the danger of; to hazard.

He that turneth the humours back, and maketh the wound bleed inwards, endangereth malign ulcers. Bacon.

ENDA'NGERMENT.* n. s. [from endanger.] Hazard; peril.

[He] bade his servant to invent
Which way he enter might without endangerment.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ii. 20.

Wherefore serves our happy redemption, and the liberty we have in Christ, but to deliver us from calamitous yokes, not to be lived under without the endangerment of our souls, and to restore us in some competent measure to a right in every good thing both of this life, and the other?
Milton, Tetrachordon.

To ENDE'AR.† v. a. [from dear.]

1. To make dear; to make beloved.

All those instances of charity which usually endear each other, sweetness of conversation, frequent admonition, all significations of love must be expressed towards children. Bp. Taylor.

And in the mixture of all these appears
Variety, which all the rest endears. Denham.

The only thing that can endear religion to your practice, will be to raise your affections above this world. Wake.

2. To make dear; to raise the price of a thing.

Whereas — the excesse of newe buildings and erections hath daily more and more encreased, and is still like to do so; whereby and by the immoderate confluence of people thither, our said city [of London] and the places adjoyning, are and daily will be more and more pestred, all victualls and other provisions endeared, &c.
K. Ja. I.'s Proc. conc. Build. 1618, Rym. Fœd. i. 107.

ENDE'ARMENT.† n. s. [from endear.]

1. The cause of love; means by which any thing is endeared.

No kisses; no endearments.
Beaum. and Fl. Wom. Pleased.

Her first endearments twining round the soul,
With all the witchcraft of ensnaring love.
Thomson, Spring.

2. The state of being endeared; the state of being loved.

Is not the separate property of a thing the great cause of its endearment amongst all mankind?
South.

When a man shall have done all that he can to make one his friend, and emptied his purse to create endearment between them, he may, in the end, be forced to write vanity and frustration.
South.

ENDEA'VOUR.† n. s. [devoir, French; endevoir. See DEVOIR. Formerly we had endeavourance, and endeavourment, in use for this word; the former by Bale, the latter by Spenser. Endeavour has been elegantly and justly termed "the child of Hope." Decay of Christian Piety, p. 182.] Labour directed to some certain end; effort to obtain or avoid.

My studied purposes went Beyond all man's endeavours. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

Heav'n doth divide
The state of man in divers functions,
Setting endeavour in continual motion.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Here their appointment we may best discover,
And look on their endeavour.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

I take imitation of an author to be an endeavour of a later poet to write like one who has written before him on the same subject. Dryden.

The bold and sufficient pursue their game with more passion, endeavour, and application, and therefore often succeed. Temple.

She could not make the least endeavour towards the producing of any thing that hath vital and organical parts. Ray.

Such an assurance as will quicken men's endeavours for the obtaining of a lesser good, ought to animate men more powerfully in the pursuit of that which is infinitely greater. Tillotson.

This is the hinge on which turns the liberty of intellectual beings, in their constant endeavours after, and steady prosecution of true felicity. Locke.

To ENDEA'VOUR. v. n. [from the noun.] To labour to a certain purpose; to work for a certain end. It has commonly after before the thing.

I could wish that more of our country clergy would endeavour after a handsome elocution.
Addison, Spect.

Of old, those met rewards who could excel;
And those were prais'd who but endeavour'd well.
Pope.

To ENDEA'VOUR. v. a. To attempt; to essay.

To pray'r, repentance, and obedience due,
Though but endeavour'd with sincere intent,
Mine ear shall not be slow, mine ear not shut.
Milton, P. L.

ENDEA'VOURER. n. s. [from endeavour.] One who labours to a certain end.

He appears an humble endeavourer, and speaks honestly to no purpose.
Rymer, Trag. of the last Age.

ENDE'CAGON. n. s. [ἐνδεκαγον.] A plain figure of eleven sides and angles.

ENDE'MIAL.† } adj. [ἐνδημιος, Gr.] Peculiar ENDE'MICAL. } to a country; used of any
ENDE'MICK. } disease proceeding from some cause peculiar to the country where it reigns: such as the scurvy to the northern climes. Quincy.

We may bring a consumption under the notion of a pandemick, or endemick, or rather a vernacular disease, to England. Harvey on Consumptions.

The place seemed to be healthful; but they speak much of the Colica Austriaca as an endemical and local disease, very hardly yielding unto good medicines. Brown, Travels, (1685,) p. 156.

Solenander, from the frequency of the plants springing up in any region, could gather what endemial diseases the inhabitants were subject to.
Ray on the Creation.

An endemial disease is what is common to the people of the country. Arbuthnot on Air.

What demonstrates the plague to be endemial to Egypt, is its invasion and going off at certain seasons. Arbuthnot.

To ENDE'NIZE. v. a. [from denizen.] To make free; to enfranchise.

It [the English tongue] hath been beautified and enriched out of other good tongues, by enfranchising and endenizing strange words.
Camden, Remains.

To ENDE'NIZEN.* v. a. [from denizen.] To make free; to naturalize.

It is virtue that gives glory; that will endenizen a man every where. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

E'NDER.* n. s. [from end. One of our oldest words.] A finisher.

The maker of faith, and the parfyte endere, Jesu, [the author and finisher of our faith. Present Version.] Wicliffe, Heb. xii. 2.

E'NDING.* n. s. [Sax. enbung.]

1. Conclusion; consequence.

The times also of the Highest have plain beginnings in wonders and powerful works, and endings in effects and signs. 2 Esdr. ix. 6.

2. Termination of life.

Will. If these men do not die well, it will be a black matter for the king that led them to it. —
K. Hen. The king is not bound to answer the particular endings of his soldiers.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. V.

Yet happy were my death, mine ending blest,
If this I could obtain; that, breast to breast,
Thy bosom might receive my yielded spright.
Fairfax.

3. Cessation of any action.

The fight was deep imprinted in their hearts,
Who saw this bloody fray to ending brought.
Fairfax.

4. End of words as employed for rhymes.

I can find out no rhyme to lady but baby, an innocent rhyme; for scorn, horn, a hard rhyme; for school, fool, a babbling rhyme; very ominous endings. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

E'NDIRONS.* n. s. pl. [end and irons.] Irons on each side of the fire. The northern word. But see also ANDIRON.

To ENDI'CT. } v. a. [enditer, French;
To ENDI'TE. } dictum, Latin.]

1. To charge any man by a written accusation before a court of justice: as, he was endited for felony. It is often written indict.

2. To draw up; to compose; to write.

How shall Filbert unto me indite,
When neither I can read nor he can write? Gay.

Hear how learn'd Greece her useful rules indites,
When to repress, and when indulge our flights!
Pope.

To ENDI'TE. v. n. To compose.

Your battles they hereafter shall indite,
And draw the image of our Mars in fight. Waller.

ENDI'CTMENT. } n. s. [from endite.] A bill
ENDI'TEMENT. } or declaration made in form of law, for the benefit of the commonwealth; or an accusation for some offence exhibited unto jurours, and by their verdict found to be true, before an officer can have power to punish the same offence. Cowel.

'Tis necessary that the species of the crime be described in the libel or articles, which our English lawyers call an indictment or information.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

We never drew any indictment at all against them, but think commendably even of them. Hooker.

The hand-writing against him may be cancelled in the court of heaven, and yet the indictment run on in the court of conscience. South.

Attend the court, and thou shalt briefly find
In that one place the manners of mankind;
Hear the endictments, then return again,
Call thyself wretch, and, if thou dar'st, complain.
Dryden.

ENDI'TER.* n. s. [from endite. One of our oldest words.]

1. An accuser. Huloet.
2. A composer; a writer; an author.

Enditours of the old cronike.
Gower, Conf. Amant.

Himself will be acknowledged, by all that read him, the basest and hungriest enditer, that could take the boldness to look abroad. Milton, Colast.

E'NDIVE. n. s. [endive, French; intybum, Latin.] A plant.

Endive, or succory, is of several sorts; as the white, the green, and the curled. Mortimer, Husb.

E'NDLESS.† adj. [Sax. enðeleaſ.]

1. Having no end; being without conclusion or termination.

Nothing was more endless than the common method of comparing eminent writers by an opposition of particular passages in them.
Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

2. Infinite in longitudinal extent.

As it is pleasant to the eye to have an endless prospect, so it is some pleasure to a finite understanding to view unlimited excellencies. Tillotson.

3. Infinite in duration; perpetual.

None of the heathens, how curious soever in searching out all kinds of outward ceremonies, could ever once endeavour to resemble herein the church's care for the endless good of her children. Hooker.

But after labours long, and sad delay,
Brings them to joyous rest, and endless bliss.
Spenser.

All our glory extinct, and happy state,
Here swallow'd up in endless misery. Milton, P.L.

4. Incessant; continual.

All the priests and friars in my realm,
Shall in procession sing her endless praise. Shaks.

This worthy Roman
Was such another piece of endless honour,
Such a brave soul dwelt in him.
Beaum. and Fl. Bonduca.

Each pleasing Blount shall endless smiles bestow,
And soft Belinda's blush for ever glow. Pope.

E'NDLESSLY.† adv. [Sax. enðeleaſlice.]

1. Incessantly; perpetually.

Though God's promise has made a sure entail of grace to all those who humbly seek, yet it no where engages that it shall importunately and endlessly renew its assaults on those who have often repulsed it. Decay of Piety.

2. Without termination of length.

E'NDLESSNESS.† n. s. [Sax. enðleaſneſſe.]

1. Extension without limit.

It is to be feared — that the endlessness and ill fruits of these contentions — tend mainly to the encrease of atheism. Sir E. Sandys, State of Relig.

2. Perpetuity; endless duration.
3. The quality of being round without an end.

The tropick circles have,
Yea, and those small ones, which the poles engrave,
All the same roundness, evenness, and all
The endlessness of the equinoctial.
Donne, Poems, p. 248.

E'NDLONG.† adv. [Sax. anðlanᵹ, onlonᵹ; Su. Goth. aendalongs.]

1. Length-ways.

The dore was all of adamant eterne,
Yclenched overthwart and endelong
With iron tough. Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

[He] gave him then a shielde of silver white,
A crosse endlong and overthwart full perfect.
Hardyng's Chronicle.

[He] takes in hond
To seeke her endlong both by sea and lond.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. x. 19.

2. In a straight line.

Then spurring at full speed, ran endlong on,
Where Theseus sat on his imperial throne. Dryden.

E'NDMOST.† adj. [Sax. enðemeaſt.] Remotest; furthest; at the farther end. Dict.

To ENDO'CTRINE.* v. a. [old French, endoctriner, from the Lat. doctrina.] To instruct; to teach.

Ptolomeus Philadelphus was endoctrined, in the science of good letters, by Strabo.
Donne, Hist. of the Sept. (1633), p. 2.

To ENDO'RSE.† v. a. [endorsser, old Fr. Roquef. endosser, modern; from dorsum, Lat.]

1. To register on the back of a writing; to superscribe.

A French gentleman speaking with an English of the law salique, the English said that was meant of the women themselves, not of males claiming by women. The French gentleman said, Where do you find that gloss? The English answered, Look on the backside of the record of the law salique, and there you shall find it endorsed.
Bacon, Apophthegms.

Upon credential letters was endorsed this superscription, To the king who hath the sun for his helmet. Howell.

All the letters I can find of yours I have fastened in a folio cover, and the rest in bundles endorsed. Swift to Pope.

2. To write on the back of a bill of exchange. See the second sense of ENDORSEMENT.

Kelly is particularly directed to indorse the bill.
Report of Com. H. of Com. on Layer, (1722,) p. 63.

3. To cover on the back. This is not used, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Milton. But Milton had good authority for his usage of it. And the old language of romance used endoss for putting on the back; as, "they endossed on their armours." Knight of the Sea, p. 145.

Nay, so your seat his beauties did endorse,
As I began to wish myself a horse.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.

Chariots, or elephants endors'd with towers
Of archers. Milton, P.R.

ENDO'RSEMENT.† n. s. [from endorse.]

1. Superscription; writing on the back.

As this collection will grow daily, I have digested it into several bundles, and made proper endorsements on each particular letter.
Tatler, No. 164.

2. In commerce, the name of the proprietor or endorser of a bill of exchange.
Chambers.

His endorsement on a foreign bill (which is not usually made payable to the bearer) would not have entitled him to have received the money, nor have been a sufficient discharge, except the bill had been made payable to him.
Rep. of Com. H. of Com. on Layer, (1722,) p. 63.

3. Ratification.

The endorsement of supreme delight,
Writ by a friend, and with his blood. Herbert.

ENDO'RSER.* n. s. The proprietor of a bill of exchange, who transferring it to some other, or rendering it payable to the order of some other, or making it serve as an acquittance or receipt, writes his name on the back of it. See the second sense of ENDORSEMENT.

To ENDO'SS.* v. a. [French, endosser.] To engrave; to carve.

He gave me arms in field to fight,
Gave me a shield, in which he did endoss
His dear Redeemer's badge upon the boss.
Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 53.

Her name in every tree I will endoss.
Spenser, Colin Clout.

To ENDO'W. v. a. [indotare, Latin; endouairer, French.]

1. To enrich with a portion.

He shall surely endow her to be his wife.
Exodus, xxii. 16.

2. To supply with any external goods.

An alms-house I intend to endow very handsomely for a dozen superannuated husbandmen.
Addison, Spect.

3. To enrich with any excellence.

I at first with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness
And immortality; that fondly lost,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton, P.L.

Among those who are the most richly endowed by nature, and accomplished by their own industry, how few are there whose virtues are not obscured! Addison.

God did never command us to believe, nor his ministers to preach any doctrine contrary to the reason he hath pleased to endow us with. Swift.

4. To be the fortune of any one.

I do not think
So fair an outward, and such stuff within,
Endows a man but him. Shakspeare, Cymb.

ENDO'WER.* n. s. [from endow.] One who enriches with a portion. Fr. dotateur.
Sherwood.

To ENDO'WER.* v. a. [from endow.] To endow; to enrich with a portion.

This once renowned church — was gloriously decked with the jewels of her espousals, richly clad in the tissues of learning, and frankly endowered, Waterhouse, Apol for Learn. (1653,) p. 142.

ENDO'WMENT. n. s. [from endow.]

1. Wealth bestowed to any person or use.
2. The bestowing or assuring a dower; the setting forth or severing a sufficient portion for a vicar toward his perpetual maintenance, when the benefice is appropriated. Cowel.
3. Appropriation of revenue.

A chapel will I build, with large endowment.
Dryden.

4. Gifts of nature. In this sense it is commonly plural.

By a desire of fame, great endowments are not suffered to lie idle and useless to the publick.
Addison.

If providence shews itself even in the blemishes of these creatures, how much more does it discover itself in their several endowments, according to the condition in which they are posted! Addison.

To ENDU'E.† v. a. [induo, Lat.]

1. To supply with mental excellencies; to invest with intellectual powers.

Endue them with thy holy Spirit.
Common Prayer.

Wisdom was Adam's instructor in Paradise: wisdom endued the fathers, who lived before the law, with the knowledge of holy things. Hooker.

These banish'd men that I have kept withal,
Are men endu'd with worthy qualities. Shaksp.

With what ease,
Endu'd with royal virtues as thou art,
Might'st thou expel this monster from his throne.
Milton, P. R.

Whatsoever other knowledge a man may be endued withal, he is but an ignorant person who doth not know God, the author of his being. Tillotson.

Every Christian is endued with a power, whereby he is enabled to resist and conquer temptations. Tillotson.

2. In the following passage of Genesis it seems incorrectly printed for endow, Dr. Johnson says. But endue was formerly used in the sense also of investing with other powers and advantages than those of the mind; though Dr. Johnson gives the definition only as it applies to mental excellencies. Not such was the opinion of Barret, who, in his dictionary of 1580, renders indued by prædítus, applying it to the ornaments of honour and fortune as well as of wit and virtue. In short, endue is to clothe, to invest as with clothes. And Spenser uses it, with the very phrase in question, "to endue with a dowry." Nor is the pretended misprint to be found only in our present Version of the Bible. It is endued in other Versions long before it. In Bishop Wilson's Bible, published in 1785, the word, however, is changed into endowed. The editors of the Bible which the Society for promoting Christian Knowledge has lately caused to be published with a selection of annotations by those accomplished scholars, have neither regarded the word as incorrect, nor unwarrantably dismissed it from the text.

Returne from whence ye came, and rest a while,
Till morrow next, that I the Elfe subdew,
And with Sansfoy's dead dowry you endew.
Spenser, F. Q. i. iv. 51.

Like a faerie knight himself he drest,
For every shape on him he could endew.
Spenser, F. Q. iii. viii. 40.

Thou losel base,
Thou hast with borrowed plumes thyself endewed.
Spenser, F. Q. v. iii. 20.

Leah said, God hath endued me with a good dowry. Gen. xxx. 20.

To ENDRU'DGE.* v. a. [from drudge.] To make a slave or drudge of.

A slave's slave goes in rank with a beast: such is every one that endrudgeth himself to any known sin. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 29.

ENDU'RABLE.* adj. [old Fr. endurable.] Tolerable; sufferable. Cotgrave.

ENDU'RANCE. n. s. [from endure.]

1. Continuance; lastingness.

Some of them are of very great antiquity and continuance, others more late and of less endurance. Spenser on Ireland.

2. Patience; sufferance.

Great things of small
One can create; and in what place soe'er
Thrive under evil, and work ease out of pain,
Through labour and endurance. Milton, P. L.

Their fortitude was most admirable in their patience and endurance of all evils, of pain, and of death. Temple.

3. State of suffering.

I would fain know whether that man takes a rational course to preserve himself, who refuses the endurance of these higher troubles, to secure himself from a condition infinitely more miserable? South.

4. Delay; procrastination. Obsolete.

I should have ta'en some pains to bring together
Yourself and your accusers, and have heard you,
Without endurance further. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

To ENDU'RE.† v. a. [endurer, French; durare, Latin. Our word had formerly the sense of the Latin induro, to harden, to make hard; which Wicliffe adopted, and Spenser once has used, F. Q. iv. viii. 27. The old French language has endurir in the same meaning.]

1. To bear; to sustain; to support unbroken.

The hardness of bodies is caused chiefly by the jejuneness of the spirits, and their imparity with the tangible parts, which make them not only hard, but fragile, and less enduring of pressure. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Both were of shining steel, and wrought so pure,
As might the strokes of two such arms endure.
Dryden.

2. To bear with patience.

So dear I love him, that with him all deaths
I could endure; without him, live no life.
Milton, P. L.

The gout haunts usually the easy and the rich, the nice and the lazy, who grow to endure much, because they can endure little. Temple.

By thine own tongue thou art condemn'd, and must Endure our law. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Taking into the city all such things as they thought needful for the enduring of the siege, they destroyed all the rest. Knolles, Hist.

3. To undergo; to sustain.

I wish to die, yet dare not death endure.
Dryden, Aurengzebe.

4. To continue in. Not used.

The deer endureth the womb but eight months, and is complete at six years. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ENDU'RE. v. n.

1. To last; to remain; to continue.

Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life. St. John, vi. 27.

Doth the crown endure to every generation. Proverbs, xxvii. 24.

By being able to repeat measures of time, or ideas of stated length of duration in our minds, we can imagine duration, where nothing does really endure or exist. Locke.

A charm, that shall to age endure,
The mind benevolent and pure. Anon.

2. To brook; to bear; to admit.

For how can I endure to see the evil that shall come unto my people? Or how can I endure to see the destruction of my kindred? Esth. viii. 6.

Our great English lords could not endure that any kings should reign in Ireland but themselves; nay, they could hardly endure that the crown of England should have any power over them. Davies on Ireland.

ENDU'RER.† n. s. [from endure.]

1. One that can bear or endure; sustainer; sufferer.

They are very valiant and hardy; for the most part great endurers of cold, labour, hunger, and all hardiness. Spenser on Ireland.

I'll fit you with my scholars, new practitioners, Endurers of the time. Beaum. and Fl. Nice Valour.

2. Continuer; laster.

E'NDWISE. adv. [end and wise.] Erectly; uprightly; on end.

A rude and unpolished America, peopled with slothful and naked Indians, living in pitiful huts and cabins, made of poles set endwise. Ray on the Creation.

To E'NECATE. v. a. [eneco, Lat.] To kill; to destroy.

Some plagues partake of such a pernicious degree of malignity, that, in the manner of a most presentaneous poison, they enecate in two or three hours, suddenly corrupting or extinguishing the vital spirits. Harvey on the Plague.

E'NEMY.† n. s. [ennemi, French; inimicus, Latin.]

1. A public foe.

All the statutes speak of English rebels and Irish enemies, as if the Irish had never been in condition of subjects, but always out of the protection of the law. Davies on Ireland.

The enemy thinks of raising threescore thousand men for the next summer. Addison on the War.

2. A private opponent; an antagonist.

I say unto you, love your enemies. St. Matt. v. 44.

3. Any one who regards another with malevolence; not a friend.

Kent, in disguise,
Follow'd his enemy king, and did him service,
Improper for a slave. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. One that dislikes.

He that designedly uses ambiguities, ought to be looked on as an enemy to truth and knowledge. Locke.

Bold is the critick, who dares prove
These heroes were no friends to love;
And bolder he who dares aver,
That they were enemies to war. Prior.

5. In theology, the fiend, the devil. Dr. Johnson merely notices the word in the Book of Common Prayer. It is an old expression for the great foe to man, founded, most probably, on the passage in St. Luke, x. 19. "Over all the power of the enemy;" — "vim inimici, id est, diaboli." Poli Synopsis Crit. in locum. The French long since adopted the same meaning: "Nos anciens auteurs employoient ce mot [enemi ou ennemi] pour designer le diable." Roquefort in V. ANEMI. See also Douce's Illustr. of Shakspeare, i. 100.

Defend us from the danger of the enemy. Common Prayer.

O cunning enemy, that, to catch a saint,
With saints dost bait thy hook.
Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

ENERGE'TICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἐνεργητικος.]

1. Forcible; strong. Cockeram.

2. Operative; active.

The presence of this Holy Spirit — by energetical communion induceth a nature, and condition, apt to quicken and assure devotion. Gregory, Notes on Pass. of Script. p. 141.

That energetical powerful instrument, the Gospel of Christ, which is the power of God unto salvation, even to every Jew, nay, and Heathen. Hammond, Works, iv. 563.

ENERGE'TICALLY.* adv. [from energetical.] In an operative manner.

Against and above which [the Church of Christ] the cardinals of Rome do most energetically oppose and advance themselves. Potter on the Number 666, (1647,) p. 140.

ENERGE'TICK. adj. [ἐνεργητικος.]

1. Forcible; active; vigorous; powerful in effect; efficacious.

These miasms entering the body, are not so energetick as to venenate the entire mass of blood in an instant. Harvey.

2. Operative; active; working; not at rest.

If then we will conceive of God truly, and, as far as we can, adequately, we must look upon him not only as an eternal Being, but also as a Being eternally energetick. Grew.

ENE'RGICAL.* adj. [from energy.] Vigorous; active; powerful in effect.

The learned and moderate of the reformed churches abhor the foppery of such conceits, and confess our polity to be productive of more ener-

gical and powerful preachers than any church in Europe.
Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653.) p. 85.

ENE'RGICK.* adj. [from energy. Fr. energique. Both our own, and the French word, modern.] Powerful in effect.

O Musick, sphere-descended maid! —
Arise, as in that elder time,
Warm, energick, chaste, sublime!
Collins, Ode on the Passions.

To E'NERGIZE.* v. a. [from energy.] To give energy; to excite action.

As all energies are attributes, they have reference of course to certain energizing substances.
Harris, Hermes, i. 9.

It is less the purpose of our present meeting to feast the ravished ear with the enchanting sounds of harmony, (which afford indeed the purest of the pleasures of the senses,) than to taste those nobler exercises of energizing love, of which flesh and blood, the animal part of us, can no more partake than it can inherit heaven.
Bp. Horsley, Serm. Sons of the Clergy, 1786.

E'NERGIZER.* n. s. [from energize.] That which occasions or causes.

Every energy is necessarily situate between two substantives; an energizer which is active, and a subject which is passive. Harris, Hermes, i. 9.

E'NERGY.† n. s. [ἐνέργεια, Gr. I have not been able to trace our word to any author before Bacon. Sidney, in his Defence of Poesy, written soon after 1580, shews that it was not then in use; for he there introduces, in its stead, "energia, as the Greeks call it." Henry More, in his Interpretation General at the end of his Song of the Soul in 1647, calls "energy a peculiar Platonical term."]

1. Power not exerted in action.

They are not effective of any thing, nor leave no work behind them, but are energies merely; for their working upon mirrours, and places of echo, doth not alter any thing in those bodies. Bacon.

2. Force; vigour; efficacy; influence.

Whether with particles of heav'nly fire
The God of nature did his soul inspire;
Or earth, but new divided from the sky,
And pliant still, retain'd th' ethereal energy.
Dryden.

God thinketh with operation infinitely perfect, with an omnipotent as well as an eternal energy.
Grew.

Beg the blessed Jesus to give an energy to your imperfect prayers, by his most powerful intercession. Smalridge.

What but God!
Inspiring God! who, boundless spirit all,
And unremitting energy, pervades,
Adjusts, sustains, and agitates the whole. Thomson.

3. Faculty; operation.

Matter, though divided into the subtilest parts, moved swiftly, is senseless and stupid, and makes no approach to vital energy. Ray on the Creation.

How can concussion of atoms beget self-consciousness, and powers and energies that we feel in our minds? Bentley.

4. Strength of expression; force of signification; spirit; life.

Who did ever, in French authors, see
The comprehensive English energy? Roscommon.

Swift and ready, and familiar communication is made by speech; and, when animated by elocution, it acquires a greater life and energy, ravishing and captivating the hearers. Holder.

Many words deserve to be thrown out of our language, and not a few antiquated to be restored, on account of their energy and sound. Swift.

To ENE'RVATE. v. a. [enervo, Lat.] To weaken; to deprive of force; to emasculate.

Great empires, while they stand, do enervate and destroy the forces of the natives which they have subdued, resting upon their own protecting forces. Bacon.

Sheepish softness often enervates those who are bred like fondlings at home. Locke.

Footmen exercise themselves, whilst their enervated lords are softly lolling in their chariots.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

ENE'RVATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Weakened; deprived of force.

On each enervate string they taught the note
To pant, or tremble, through an eunuch's throat.
Pope.

Away, enervate bards, away,
Who spin the courtly, silken lay!
Dr. Warton, Ode on West's Pindar.

ENERVA'TION.† n. s. [enervation, Fr.]

1. The act of weakening; emasculation.
2. The state of being weakened; effeminacy.

This colour of meliority and preheminence is a sign of enervation and weakness.
Bacon, Ess. Table of Colours of Good and Evil.

To ENE'RVE.† v. a. [enerver, old Fr. enervo, Lat.] To weaken; to break the force of; to crush.

We shall be able to solve and enerve their force.
Digby.

Such object hath the pow'r to soft'n and tame
Severest temper, smooth the rugged'st brow,
Enerve, and with voluptuous hope dissolve.
Milton, P. R.

To ENFA'MISH. v. a. [from famish.] To starve; to famish; to kill with hunger.
Dict.

To ENFE'EBLE. v. a. [from feeble.] To weaken; to enervate; to deprive of strength.

I've belied a lady,
The princess of this country; and the air on't
Revengingly enfeebles me. Shaksp. Cymb.

My people are with sickness much enfeebled.
Shakspeare.

Much hath hell debas'd, and pain
Enfeebl'd me, to what I was in heaven!
Milton, P. L.

Some employ their time in affairs below the dignity of their persons; and being called by God, or the republick, to bear great burdens, do enfeeble their understandings by sordid and brutish business. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Sure, nature form'd me of her softest mould,
Enfeebled all my soul with tender passions,
And sunk me even below my own weak sex.
Addison, Cato.

ENFE'LONED.* adj. [Fr. enfelonnir, to become fierce, to grow cruel; Cotgrave.] Full of fierceness; inclined to cruelty.

With that, like one enfelon'd or distraught,
She forth did roam whither her rage her bore,
With frantick passion and with furie fraught.
Spenser, F. Q. v. viii. 48.

To ENFE'OFF.† v. a. [feoffamentum, low Lat.]

1. To invest with any dignities or possessions. A law term.

If the eldest son enfeoff the second, reserving homage, and that homage paid, and then the second son dies without issue, it will descend to the eldest as heir, and the seignory is extinct.
Hale, Com. Law of England.

2. To give up entirely; to surrender.

[He] grew a companion to the common streets, Enfeoff'd himself to popularity.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

ENFE'OFFMENT. n. s. [from enfeoff.]

1. The act of enfeoffing.
2. The instrument or deed by which one is invested with possessions.

To ENFE'TTER. v. a. [from fetter.] To bind in fetters; to enchain. Not in use.

His soul is so enfetter'd to her love,
That she may make, unmake, do what she list.
Shakspeare.

To ENFE'VER.* v. a. [Fr. enfievrer, "to drive into a fever;" Cotgrave.] To produce fever. Modern in our language.

In vain the purer stream
Courts him, as gently the green bank it laves,
To blend the enfevering draught with its pellucid waves. Seward's Sonnets.

To ENFIE'RCE.* v. a. [Fr. enfierir.] To make fierce.

Abashed now, not fighting so;
But, more enfierced through his currish play,
Him sternly grypt. Spenser, F. Q. ii. iv. 8.

*ENFILA'DE.† n. s. [Fr.] A strait passage; any thing through which a right line may be drawn.

The trees have swelled out beyond the line traced for them, and destroyed the enfilade, by advancing into the walks, or retiring from them.
Swinburne, Trav. through Spain, L. 38.

To ENFILA'DE. v. a. [from the noun.] To pierce in a right line.

The avenues, being cut through the wood in right lines, were enfiladed by the Spanish canon.
Expedition to Carthagena.

To ENFI'RE.† v. a. [from fire.] To fire; to set on fire; to kindle.

So hard those heavenly beauties he enfir'd
As things divine, least passions do impress.
Spenser, Hymn on Love.

As for his holy sisters at Bruxells, the touch of whom hath so much enfired his ghostly zeal, I intended no quarrel to them in particular.
Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 63.

To ENFLE'SH.* v. a. [from flesh.] To harden; to establish in any practice. See To FLESH.

Vices which are habituated, inbred, and enfleshed in him.
Florio's Transl. of Montaigne's Ess. (1613,) p. 173.

To ENFO'LD.* See To INFOLD.

To ENFO'RCE. v. a. [enforcir, Fr.]

1. To give strength to; to strengthen; to invigorate.
2. To make or gain by force.

The idle stroke, enforcing furious way,
Missing the mark of his misaimed sight,
Did fall to ground. Spenser, F. Q.

Sometimes with lunatick bans, sometimes with prayers
Enforce their charity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

3. To put in act by violence.

Sker away as swift as stones
Enforced from the old Assyrian slings.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

4. To instigate; to provoke; to urge on; to animate.

Fear gave her wings, and rage enforc'd my flight
Through woods and plains. Spenser, F. Q.

If you knew to whom you shew this honour,
I know you would be prouder of the work,
Than customary bounty can enforce you. Shaksp.

5. To urge with energy.

All revoke
Your ignorant election; enforce his pride,
And his old hate to you. Shakspeare, Coriol.

He prevailed with him, by enforcing the ill consequence of his refusal to take the office, which would be interpreted to his dislike of the court. Clarendon.

To avoid all appearance of disaffection, I have taken care to enforce loyalty by an invincible argument. Swift.

6. To compel; to constrain.

For competence of life I will allow you,
That lack of means enforce you not to evil.
Shakspeare.

A just disdain conceived by that queen, that so wicked a rebel should prevail against her, did move and almost enforce her to send over that mighty army. Davies on Ireland.

7. To press with a charge. Little used.

In this point charge him home, that he affects
Tyrannick power: if he evade us there,
Enforce him with his envy to the people,
And that the spoils got on the Antiates
Was ne'er distributed. Shakspeare, Coriol.

To ENFO'RCE.† v. n.

1. To attempt by force.

He also enforsid [in the present version, hath gone about] to defoule the temple.
Wicliffe, Acts, xxiv. 6.

2. To prove; to evince; to shew beyond contradiction.

Which laws in such case we must obey, unless there be reason shewed, which may necessarily enforce that the law of reason, or of God, doth enjoin the contrary. Hooker.

ENFO'RCE. n. s. [from force.] Power; strength. Not used.

He now defies thee thrice to single fight,
As a petty enterprise of small enforce.
Milton, S. A.

ENFO'RCEABLE.* adj. [from enforce.] Having power to compel or constrain.

ENFO'RCEDLY. adv. [from enforce.] By violence; not voluntarily; not spontaneously; not by choice.

If thou didst put this sow'r cold habit on,
To castigate thy pride, 'twere well; but thou
Do'st it enforcedly: thou'dst courtier be,
Wert thou not beggar. Shakspeare, Timon.

ENFO'RCEMENT. n. s. [from enforce.]

1. An act of violence; compulsion; force offered.

Confess 'twas hers, and by what rough enforcement
You got it from her. Shakspeare.

He that contendeth against these enforcements, may easily master or resist them. Ralegh, Hist.

2 Sanction; that which gives force to a law.

The rewards and punishments of another life, which the Almighty has established as the enforcements of his law, are of weight enough to determine the choice. Locke.

3. Motive of conviction; urgent evidence.

The personal descent of God himself, and his assumption of our flesh to his divinity, was an enforcement beyond all the methods of wisdom that were ever made use of in the world.
Hammond on Fundamentals.

4. Pressing exigence.

More than I have said,
The leisure and enforcement of the time
Forbids to dwell on. Shakspeare, Rich. III.

ENFO'RCER.† n. s. [from enforce.] Compeller; one who effects by violence.

Pardon me, sir, I'll be no love enforcer;
I use no power of mine unto those ends.
Beaum. and Fl. Maid of the Mill.

When a man tumbles a cylinder or roller down an hill, 'tis certain that the man is the violent enforcer of the first motion of it.
Hammond, Fundamentals.

To ENFO'RM.* v. a. [old Fr. enformer.] To fashion; to direct.

He knew the diverse went of mortal ways,
And in the minds of men had great insight;
Which with sage counsel, when they went astray,
He could enforme, and them reduce aright.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. vi. 3.

ENFO'ULDRED.† adj. [from fouldroyer, Fr.] Mixed with lightning. Obsolete.

Heart cannot think what outrage and what cries,
With foul enfouldred smoake and flashing fire,
The hell-bred beast threw forth unto the skies.
Spenser, F. Q.

To ENFRA'NCHISE. v. a. [from franchise.]

1. To admit to the privileges of a freeman.

The English colonies, and some septs of the Irishry, enfranchised by special charters, were admitted to the benefit of the laws.
Davies on Ireland.

Romulus was the natural parent of all those people that were the first inhabitants of Rome, or of those that were after incorporated and enfranchised into that name, city, or government.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. To set free from slavery.

Men, forbearing wine, come from drinking healths to a draught at a meal; and, lastly, to discontinue altogether: but if a man have the fortitude and resolution to enfranchise himself at once, that is the best. Bacon, Essays.

If they won a battle, prisoners became slaves, and continued so in their generations, unless enfranchised by their masters. Temple.

3. To free or release from custody.

His mistress
Did hold his eyes lockt in her crystal looks.
— Belike, that now she hath enfranchis'd them,
Upon some other pawn for fealty. Shakspeare.

4. To denizen; to endenizen.

These words have been enfranchised amongst us.
Watts.

ENFRA'NCHISEMENT.† n. s. [from enfranchise.]

1. Investiture of the privileges of a denizen.

The incorporating a man into any society, or body politick. For example, he that is by charter made denizen of England, is said to be enfranchised; and so is he that is made a citizen of London, or other city, or burgess of any town corporate, because he is made partaker of those liberties that appertain to the corporation. Cowel.

His coming hither hath no farther scope,
Than for his lineal royalties, and to beg
Enfranchisement immediate on his knees.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

2. Release from prison or from slavery.

Never did captive with a freer heart
Cast off his chains of bondage, and embrace
His golden uncontroul'd enfranchisement.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

To make me captive, where enfranchisement
Cannot be gotten. Browne, Brit. Past. i. 1.

That false enfranchisement with ease is found:
Slaves are made citizens by turning round.
Dryden, Persius.

ENFRA'NCHISER.* n. s. [from enfranchise.] One who gives freedom. Sherwood.

To ENFRO'WARD.* v. a. [from froward.] To make perverse or ungovernable. An old and very useful word, but hitherto unnoticed.

The multitude of crooked and side respects, which are the only clouds that eclipse the truth from shining more lightly on the face of the world, and the only pricks which so enfroward men's affections as not to consider and follow what were for the best, do cause that this chief unity findeth small acceptation. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

ENFRO'ZEN. particip. [from frozen.] Congealed with cold. Not used.

Yet to augment the anguish of my smart,
Thou hast enfrozen her disdainful breast,
That no one drop of pity there doth rest.
Spenser, Hymn on Love.

To ENGA'GE.† v. a. [engager, French.]

1. To make liable for a debt to a creditor.

I have engag'd myself to a dear friend,
Engag'd my friend to his mere enemy,
To feed my means. Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

2. To impawn; to stake; [perhaps from the German wagen, to hazard.]

They most perfidiously condemn
Those that engag'd their lives for them. Hudibras.

3. To enlist; to bring into a party.

All wicked men are of a party against religion: some lust or interest engageth them against it.
Tillotson.

4. To embark in an affair.

So far had we engaged ourselves, unfortunate souls, that we listed not to complain, since our complaints could not but carry the greatest accusation to ourselves. Sidney.

Before I engage myself in giving any answer to this objection of inconsumptible lights, I would see the effect certainly averred. Digby on Bodies.

5. To unite; to attach; to make adherent.

Good-nature engages every body to him. Addison.

6. To induce; to win by pleasing means; to gain.

To ev'ry duty he could minds engage,
Provoke their courage, and command their rage.
Waller.

His beauty these, and those his blooming age,
The rest his house and his own fame engage.
Dryden, Æn.

So shall I court thy dearest truth,
When beauty ceases to engage;
So thinking on thy charming youth,
I'll love it o'er again in age. Prior.

7. To bind by any appointment or contract.

We have been firm to our allies, without declining any expence to which we had engaged ourselves, and we have even exceeded our engagement.
Atterbury.

8. To seize by the attention: as, he was deeply engaged in conversation.

9. To employ; to hold in business.

For I shall sing of battles, blood, and rage,
Which princes and their people did engage. Dryd.

10. To encounter; to fight.

Our little fleet was now engag'd.
Dryden, Annus Mirabilis.

The army was engag'd before the cannon was turned, or the ground made choice of upon which they were to fight. Clarendon, Hist. Reb. B. ix.

The rebel knave, who dares his prince engage,
Proves the just victim of his royal rage. Pope.

To ENGA'GE. v. n.

1. To conflict; to fight.

Upon advertisement of the Scots army, the earl of Holland was sent with a body to meet and engage with it. Clarendon.

2. To embark in any business; to enlist in any party.

'Tis not indeed my talent to engage
In lofty trifles, or to swell my page
With wind and noise. Dryden, Persius.

ENGA'GEDLY.* adv. [from the part. engaged.] In a way bespeaking attachment to a party.

Far better it were for publick good there were more (deserving the name of Johannes de Indagine) progressive pioners in the mines of knowledge, than controverters of what is found: it would lessen the number of conciliatours; which cannot themselves now write, but as engagedly biassed to one side or other.

Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 233.

ENGA'GEMENT.† n. s. [from engage; engagement, French.]

1. The act of engaging, impawning, or making liable to a debt.
2. Obligation by contract.
We have, in expence, exceeded our engagements.
Atterbury.
3. Adherence to a party or cause; partiality.
This practice may be obvious to any who impartially, and without engagement, is at the pains to examine. Swift.
4. Employment of the attention.
Play, either by our too constant or too long engagement in it, becomes like an employment or profession. Rogers.
5. Fight; conflict; battle. A word very poetical, Dr. Johnson says, citing the examples from Dryden and Philips; and certainly very common, it may be added, being the usual phrase for a sea-fight, whether particular or general, between single ships or squadrons.
Our army, led by valiant Torrismond,
Is now in hot engagement with the Moors. Dryden.
He [the French admiral] tacked, and would not venture an engagement.
Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times.
Encourag'd by despair, or obstinate
To fall like men in arms, some dare renew
Feeble engagement, meeting glorious fate
On the firm land. Philips.
6. Obligation; motive.
This is the greatest engagement not to forfeit an opportunity. Hammond, Fundamentals.
7. In the history of this country, the obligation imposed by Oliver Cromwell, after he was declared protector; which required every member of parliament to engage himself to be true and faithful to him and the commonwealth, and not to consent to any alteration of the government then settled.

ENGA'GER.* n. s. [from engage.] One who signs a particular engagement; one who imbarks in an affair.
Rash motions have lost noble enterprises and their engagers.
Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653,) p. 125.
He [Sir W. Davenant] contrives to set up an opera, wherein serjeant Maynard and several citizens were engagers. Aubrey, Anecd. vol. 2. p. 308.
We may safely give leave to the covenanter, the engager, and the rest of a schismatical people, to pretend as high as they can, whilst we are sure we are as much as they can pretend to.
Ellis, Serm. 29 May, 1661, p. 39.

ENGA'GINGLY.* adv. [from the part. engaging.] In a winning or obliging manner.

To ENGA'OL.† v. a. [old French, enjaioler, "mettre en géole, emprisonner." Lacombe, Suppl. Rendered, by Cotgrave, to encage as well as to engaol. See also To CAJOLE.] To imprison; to confine.
Within my mouth you have engaol'd my tongue,
Doubly portcullis'd with my teeth and lips.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.
The British mountaineer, who first uprear'd
A mouse-trap, and engaol'd the little thief.
Transl. of Holdsworth's Muscipula, (1715,) p. 5.

To ENGA'LLANT.* v. a. [from gallant.] To make a gallant of.
If you could but endear yourself to her affections, you were eternally engallanted.
B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

To ENGA'RBOIL.* v. a. [from garboil.] To disorder; to disturb.
It is strange, that for wishing, advising, and in his own particular using and ensuing that moderation, thereby not to engarboil the church, and disturb the course of piety, he should so, by you and yours, be blamed, accused, and traduced for a Papist and an Armenian; calumniated almost in every ordinary by your means, for a dangerous driver at popery and sedition.
Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 80.

To ENGA'RLAND.* v. a. [Fr. enguirlander, "to crown with a garland." Cotgrave.] To encircle with a garland.
Let us rather plant more laurels for to engarland the poets' heads. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

To ENGA'RRISON.† v. a. [from garrison.] To protect by a garrison.
Those strangers were no otherwise engaged, than as they that would hold fair correspondence with the citizens where they were engarrisoned.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.
Neptune with a guard doth engarrison her strongly. Howell.
Every man has corrupt sinful habits that have overspread, and, as it were, engarrisoned themselves in the most inward parts of his soul.
South, Serm. vii. 51.

ENGA'STRIMUTH.* n. s. [old Fr. engastrimythe, from the Gr. ἐν, in, γαστὴρ, the belly, and μῦθος, speech. In Cockeram's old vocabulary, our word is written engastromich, (probably an errour of the press,) "one who seems to speak in his belly."] A ventriloquist. See VENTRILOQUIST.

To ENGE'NDER. v. a. [engendrer, Fr.]

1. To beget between different sexes.
This bastard love is engendered betwixt lust and idleness. Sidney.
2. To produce; to form.
Oh nature! thou, who of the self-same mettle,
Whereof thy proud child, arrogant man, is pufft,
Engender'st the black toad and adder blue.
Shakspeare, Timon.
Again, if souls do other souls beget,
'Tis by themselves, or by the body's pow'r:
For by themselves, what doth their working let,
But they might souls engender ev'ry hour? Davies.
3. To excite; to cause; to produce.
Say, can you fast? Your stomachs are too young,
And abstinence engenders maladies. Shakspeare.
The presence of a king engenders love
Amongst his subjects and his loyal friends. Shaksp.
That engenders thunder in his breast,
And makes him roar these accusations forth.
Shakspeare.
It unloads the mind, engenders thoughts, and animates virtue. Addison.
4. To bring forth.
Vice engenders shame, and folly broods o'er grief. Prior.

To ENGE'NDER. v. n. To be caused; to be produced.
Thick clouds are spread, and storms engender there. Dryden.

ENGE'NDERER.* n. s. [Fr. engendreur, "an engenderer, a begetter, breeder, &c." Cotgrave.] One who begets.
The ingenderers and ingendered.
Davies, Wit's Pilgrim, sign. O. i.

To ENGI'LD.* v. a. [from gild.] To brighten; to illuminate.
Fair Helena, who more engilds the night
Than all you fiery o's and eyes of light.
Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dream.

E'NGINE.† n. s. [engin, French; ingegno, inganno, Italian; engano, Spanish; ingenium, Lat.]

1. Any mechanical complication, in which various movements and parts concur to one effect.
In all engines it must be considered, what weight every beam is to carry. Adams.
2. A military machine.
This is our engine, towers that overthrows;
Our spear that hurts, our sword that wounds our foes. Fairfax.
3. An instrument of torture; the rack.
O most small fault,
How ugly didst thou in Cordelia show!
Which, like an engine, wrench'd my frame of nature
From the fix'd place. Shakspeare, K. Lear.
Their souls shot through with adders, torn on engines. Beaum. and Fl. Night-Walker.
4. Any instrument.
The sword, the arrow, the gun, with many terrible engines of death, will be well employed.
Ralegh, Essays.
He takes the scissars, and extends
The little engine on his fingers' ends. Pope.
5. Any instrument to throw water upon burning houses.
Some cut the pipes, and some the engines play;
And some, more bold, mount ladders to the fire.
Dryden.
6. Any means used to bring to pass, or to effect. Usually in an ill sense.
Prayer must be divine and heavenly, which the devil with all his engines so violently opposeth.
Duppa, Rules for Devotion.
Nor did he 'scape
By all his engines, but was headlong sent
With his industrious crew to build in hell.
Milton, P. L.
7. An agent for another. In contempt.
They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up into the state they were. Daniel.

ENGINE'ER.† n. s. [old Fr. enginier, "an enginer;" Cotgrave; so our word was formerly written, by others also, as well as engineer. So Sherwood; so, in Partheneia Sacra published in 1633, p. 70. "he [the bee] is the great enginer in that mould, working his subtle mines till he be all in a sweat." But the word, thus anglicised, has not obtained.]

1. One who manages engines; one who directs the artillery of an army.
For 'tis the sport to have the engineer
Hoist with his own petard. Shakspeare, Hamlet.
Him thus enrag'd,
Descrying from afar, some engineer,
Dext'rous to guide th' unerring charge, design'd
By one nice shot to terminate the war. Philips.
An author, who points his satire at a great man, is like the engineer who signalized himself by this ungenerous practice. Addison.
2. A maker of engines. Bullokar.

E'NGINERY.† n. s. [from engine.]

1. The act of managing artillery.
They may descend in mathematicks to fortification, architecture, enginery, or navigation.
Milton on Education.
2. Engines of war; artillery.
We saw the foe
Approaching, gross and huge, in hollow cube
Training his dev'lish enginery. Milton, P. L.
3. Any device, or contrivance.
The fraudful enginery of Rome.
Shenstone, Economy.

To ENGI'RD.† v. a. part. engirt. [from gird. Dr. Johnson has hastily placed, as an example of this word, the verb engirt from Shakspeare's King Henry the Sixth; of which verb, however, he takes no other notice, though it is certainly not uncommon. He made a similar mistake in begirt. See To BEGIRT.] To encircle; to surround; to environ; to encompass.

Let cruel Discord bear thee company,
Engirt with snakes. Gascoigne, Jocasta, (1577.)

My heart is drown'd with grief,
My body round engirt with misery;
For what's more miserable than discontent?
Shakspeare.

To ENGI'RT.* v. a. To encircle; to surround; to engird.

That gold must round engirt these brows of mine. Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI. P. II.

A lily prison'd in a gaol of snow; —
So white a friend engirts so white a foe.
Shakspeare, Ven. and Ad.

He who call'd with thought to birth
Yon tented sky, this laughing earth,
And dress'd with springs and forests tall,
And pour'd the main engirting all.
Collins, Ode on the Poetical Character.

To ENGLA'D.* v. a. [from glad.] To make glad.

The lark upon the somer's day, ———
Mounteth on high, with hir melodious lay,
Of the sun shine engladded with the light.
Skelton, Poems, p. 26.

ENGLA'IMED.* adj. [from the Sax. clæman.] Nauseated, according to Coles; but it is rather furred, clammy. Obsolete.

His tongue engleymed, and his nose black.
Lib. Festiv. fol. 16. b.

E'NGLAND.* n. s. [Sax. Englа-lanb, i. e. Anglorum terra, Angles' Land.] The southern division of Great Britain.

Egbert [ann. 819,] caused all the south of the island to be called England, after the Angles, of whom himself came. Speed, Hist. of Gr. Brit.

Whence this name of England, and consequently of English, should come, is to be considered. — Very apparent it is, that many countries have aptly taken their names from the very nature of their soil, or from the manner of their situation; — and most manifest it is, that in the ancient Teutonick, as well as the modern, either high or low, the word eng signifieth narrow or straight, and sometimes a nook; and if a man at this present should ask any Dutchman in some language, besides his own, that he understandeth, how he would in his own language call a narrow country or region, he would straightways answer and say, Engeland or England. Not unfitly then may old England, [between Ivitsland and Holsatia,] by the little or narrow situation thereof in a very nook of land bordering upon Mare Balticum, have had at the first, in the ancient Teutonick language, that denomination. And not only this old England whereof we speak, but OUR PRESENT COUNTRY OF ENGLAND, also growing to a narrowness or straightness both towards the north and towards the west, doth not disagree from this reason; though perhaps another reason might also move king Egbert to cause it to be called England.
Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 5.

England hath bred more princes renowned for sanctity than any Christian nation whatsoever. It doth also redound to the eternal honour of England, that our countrymen have twice been schoolmasters to France: first, when they taught the Gauls the discipline of the Druids; and after, when they and the Scottishmen first taught the French the liberal arts, and persuaded Carolus Magnus to found the university of Paris. Camden, Remains.

E'NGLISH.† adj. [Sax. englиc. The old Fr. englesche was in use in 1300. V. Lacombe.] Belonging to England; thence English is the language of England.

Most foreign writers who have given any character of the English nation, whatever vices they ascribe to it, allow in general that the people are naturally modest. Addison, Spect. No. 407.

Of English talc, the coarser sort is called plaister, or parget; the finer, spoad. Woodward.

E'NGLISH.* n. s.

1. The people of England.

The Angles, Englishmen, or Saxons, by God's wonderful providence, were transplanted hither out of Germany. — They made themselves by conquest absolute lords of all the better soil as far as Orkney; which cannot be doubted of, when their English tongue reacheth so far along the east coast unto the farthest parts of Scotland; and the people thereof are called by the Highlanders, which are the true Scots, by no other name than Saxons, by which they also call us the English.
Camden, Rem.

The world stands in admiration of the capacity and docibleness of the English, that persons of ordinary breeding, extraction, and calling, should become statesmen and soldiers, commanders and counsellors, both in the art of war and mysteries of state. Howell, Lett. iv. 47.

2. The language of England.

He hath neither Latin, French, nor Italian; and you may come into the court, and swear that I have a poor pennyworth in the English.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

I can speak English, my lord, as well as you.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

Chaucer was a great mingler of English with French. Verstegan, Rest. of Dec. Intell. ch. 7.

To E'NGLISH. v. a. [from the noun.] To translate into English.

The hollow instrument terebra, we may english piercer. Bacon.

We find not a word in the text can properly be rendered anise, which is what the Latins call anethum, and properly englished dill.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

E'NGLISHRY.* n. s. The state or privilege of being an Englishman. An old law expression. Cowel. Irishry was thus used for being Irish, in queen Elizabeth's time.

To ENGLU'T. v. a. [engloutir, French.]

1. To swallow up. It is now little used in any sense.

Neither my place, nor ought I heard of business,
Hath rais'd me from my bed; nor doth the general
Take hold on me: for my particular grief
Engluts and swallows other sorrows.
Shakspeare, Othello.

Certainly, thou art so near the gulf,
Thou needs must be englutted. Shaksp. Hen. V.

How many prodigal bits have slaves and peasants
This night englutted! Shakspeare, Timon.

2. To fill.

Whose grieved minds, which choler did englut,
Against themselves turning their wrathful spight.
Spenser.

3. To glut; to pamper.

Being once englutted with vanity, he will straightway loath all learning.
Ascham, Schoolmaster.

To ENGO'RE. v. a. [from gore.] To pierce; to prick. Not used.

As savage bull, whom two fierce mastives bait,
When rancour doth with rage him once engore,
Forgets with wary ward them to await,
But with his dreadful horns them drives afore.
Spenser, F. Q.

To ENGO'RGE.† v. a. [old Fr. engorger, from gorge, a throat.] To swallow; to devour; to gorge.

Then fraught with rancour, and engorged ire,
He cast at once him to avenge for all.
Spenser, F. Q.

That is the gulf of greediness, they say,
That deep engorgeth all this world is prey.
Spenser, F. Q.

With pleasures cloy'd, engorged with the fill.
Mir. for Mag. p. 425.

To ENGO'RGE.† v. n. To devour; to feed with eagerness and voracity; to riot.

Nor was it wonder that he thus did swell,
Who had engorged and drunken was with Hell.
Beaumont's Psyche, (1651,) xv. 293.

Greedily she engorg'd without restraint,
And knew not eating death! Milton, P. L.

To ENGRA'FF.* v. a. [from graff. Fr. greffer.] To fix deeply; to attach. See To INGRAFF.

You have been so much engraffed to Falstaff.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. II.

ENGRA'FFMENT.* n. s. [from engraff.] Root; that which is engrafted.

Thus the relations between men and men are changed, we may be obliged to act against those very instincts, which, from their deep engraffment, have (though improperly) been called the laws of nature. Ellis, Knowl. of Div. Things, p. 425.

ENGRA'FTED.* part. adj. Planted; inserted into a body to which it does not belong.

Receive with meekness the engrafted word, which is able to save your souls. James, i. 21.

All filthiness and superfluity of naughtiness must be first laid aside, that we may be fitted to receive with meekness this engrafted word; which shews it cannot import any thing, which is by nature always in us. Whitby.

To ENGRA'IL. v. a. [from grele, French, hail.] To variegate; to spot as with hail. A word now used only in heraldry, for to indent in curve lines.

Æacides then shews
A long lance, and a caldron, new, engrail'd with twenty hues. Chapman's Iliads.

Polwheel beareth a saltier engrail'd.
Carew's Survey.

To ENGRA'IN. v. a. [from grain.] To die deep; to die in grain.

Seest how fresh my flowers bene spread,
Dyed in lilie white and crimson red,
With leaves engrain'd in lusty grain?
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Feb.

To ENGRA'PPLE. v. n. [from grapple.] To close with; to contend with hold on each other.

There shall young Hotspur, with a fury led,
Engrapple with thy son, as fierce as he. Daniel.

To ENGRA'SP. v. a. [from grasp.] To seize; to hold fast in the hand; to gripe.

Now gan Pyrrocles wax as wood as he,
And him affronted with impatient might;
And both together fierce engrasped be,
Whiles Guyon standing by, their uncouth strife does see. Spenser.

To ENGRA'VE.† v. a. preter. engraved; part. pass. engraved or engraven. [engraver, Fr.]

1. To picture by incisions in any matter.

Her ivory forehead, full of bounty brave,
Like a broad table, did itself dispread,
For love his lofty triumphs to engrave,
And write the battles of his great godhead.
Spenser, F. Q.

O'er all, the heav'n's refulgent image shines;
On either gate were six engraven signs.
Addison, Ovid.

Names fresh engrav'd appear'd of wits renown'd;
I look'd again, nor could their trace be found.
Pope.

2. To mark wood or stone.
Engrave the two stones with the names.
Ex. xxviii. 11.

3. To impress deeply; to imprint.
It will scarce seem possible, that God should engrave principles, in men's minds, in words of uncertain signification. Locke.
Our Saviour makes this return, fit to be engraven in the hearts of all promoters of charity. Atterbury.
Sounds which address the ear, are lost and die
In one short hour; but that which strikes the eye,
Lives long upon the mind: the faithful sight
Engraves the knowledge with the beam of light.
Watts.

4. [from grave.] To bury; to inhume; to inter.
The sixth had charge of them now being dead,
In seemly sort their corses to engrave,
And deck with dainty flowers their bridal bed.
Spenser, F. Q.
So both agree their bodies to engrave.
Spenser, F. Q.
[They] did end their honest life,
And lye here engraved under the marble stone.
Ashmole's Berksh. ii. 348.

ENGRA'VEMENT.* n. s. [from engrave.] The work of an engraver.
We being the offspring of God ought not to think that the Godhead is like unto gold, or silver, or stone, the engravement of art and man's device.
Barrow on the Decalogue.

ENGRA'VER.† n. s. [from engrave, Fr. engraveur.] A cutter in stone or other matter.
All manner of work of the engraver.
Exod. xxxv. 35.
Images are not made in the brain itself, as the pencil of a painter or engraver makes the images in the table, but are imprinted in a wonderful method in the soul. Hale.

ENGRA'VERY.* n. s. [from engraver.] The work of an engraver.
Some handsome engraveries and medals.
Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 210.

ENGRA'VING.* n. s. [from engrave.]
1. The work of an engraver; the picture or mark engraved.
With the work of an engraver in stone, like the engravings of a signet, shalt thou engrave the two stones with the names of the children of Israel.
Exod. xxviii. 11.
2. The art of engraving, as a modern invention, either in wood or in copper.

To ENGRIE'VE. v. a. [from grieve.] To pain; to vex; to afflict; to disconsolate.
The gnawing anguish, and sharp jealousy,
Which his sad speech infixed in my breast,
Rankled so sore, and fester'd inwardly,
That my engrieved mind could find no rest.
Spenser, F. Q.
Aches, and hurts, and corns, do engrieve either towards rain, or towards frost. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To ENGRO'SS. v. a. [grossir, Fr.]
1. To thicken; to make thick.
But more happy he than wise,
Of that sea's nature did him not avise;
The waves thereof so slow and sluggish were,
Engross'd with mud, which did them foul agriese,
That every weighty thing they did upbear.
Spenser, F. Q.
2. To increase in bulk.
Though pillars, by channeling, be seemingly engrossed to our sight, yet they are truly weakened in themselves. Wotton.
3. To fatten; to plump up.
Not sleeping, to engross his idle body;
But praying, to enrich his watchful soul.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.
4. To seize in the gross; to seize the whole of any thing.
If thou engrossest all the griefs as thine,
Thou rob'st me of a moiety. Shakspeare.
Those two great things that so engross the desires and designs of both the nobler and ignobler sort of mankind, are to be found in religion; namely, wisdom and pleasure. South.
A dog, a parrot, or an ape,
Or some worse brute in human shape,
Engross the fancies of the fair. Swift.
5. To purchase any commodity for the sake of selling at a high price.
6. To copy in a large hand.
Here is th' indictment of the good lord Hastings,
Which in a set hand fairly is engross'd.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.
A clerk, foredoom'd his father's soul to cross,
Who pens a stanza when he should engross. Pope.

ENGRO'SSER.† n. s. [from engross.] One that purchases large quantities of any commodity, in order to sell it at a high price.
Ye engrossers and regraters, ye sellers with false weights and with false measures — will ye never leave to content yourselves with honest and lawful gain?
Harmar, Trans. of Beza's Serm. (1587,) p. 176.
Should ye set an oligarchy of twenty engrossers over it, to bring a famine upon our minds again, when we shall know nothing but what is measured to us by the bushel? Milton, Areopagitica.
A new sort of engrossers, or forestallers, having the feeding and supplying this numerous body of workmen in the woollen manufactures, out of their warehouses, set the price upon the poor landholder. Locke.

ENGRO'SSING.* n. s. [from engross.]
1. In commerce, the buying up of any commodity in the gross, or forestalling the market.
2. In law, the copying of any written instrument. See the second sense of ENGROSSMENT.

ENGRO'SSMENT.† n. s. [from engross.]
1. Appropriation of things in the gross; exorbitant acquisition.
Our thighs are packt with wax, our mouths with honey:
We bring it to the hive; and, like the bees,
Are murder'd for our pains! This bitter taste
Yield his engrossments to the dying father.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
Those held their immoderate engrossments of power and favour by no other tenure than presumption. Swift.
2. Copy of a written instrument.
Which clause, being approved by all parties, was in the king's presence entered in the bill that his majesty had signed; and being afterwards added to the engrossment, it was again thus reformed. Ld. Clarendon's Life, ii. 495.

To ENGUA'RD. v. a. [from guard.] To protect; to defend; to surround as guards. Not used.
A hundred knights! yes, that on ev'ry dream
He may enguard his dotage with their pow'rs,
And hold our lives at mercy. Shaksp. K. Lear.

To ENGU'LF.* v. a. [Milton and others write this word ingulf. Some have preferred engulf; and it should be so written, being from the French engolfer, "to engulf." Cotgrave.] To cast into a gulf.
They might suffice to make us advised to keep rather the known and beaten way with safety, than upon every giddy and brainless warrant to engulph ourselves in those passages, wherein so many have perished before us.
Hayward, Answ. to Doleman, (1603,) ch. 8.
Seeing myself engaged, yea and engulfed in so many anguishes and perplexities.
Transl. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 36.
My thoughts shall be
Almost engulf'd in an infinity.
J. Hall's Poems, (1646,) p. 35.
Luxury engulphs the soul in such base pleasures, and makes it like the worst of devils.
Hewyt's Serm. (1658,) p. 206.

To ENHA'NCE.† v. a. [hausser, enhausser, Fr.]
1. To lift up; to raise on high. A sense now obsolete, Dr. Johnson says. This, it may be added, was the primary usage of the word; for Wicliffe and Chaucer so employ it. It is still an heraldick term in this sense.
Both of them high at once their hands enhanc'd,
And both at once their huge blows down did sway.
Spenser, F. Q.
2. To raise; to advance; to heighten in price.
The desire of money is every where the same; its vent varies very little, but as its greater scarcity enhances its price, and increases the scramble.
Locke.
3. To raise in esteem.
What is it but the experience of want that enhances the value of plenty? L'Estrange.
The remembrance of the difficulties we now undergo, will contribute to enhance our pleasure.
Atterbury.
4. To aggravate; to increase from bad to worse.
To believe or pretend that whatever our hearts incite is the will of God within us, is the principle of villainy that hath acted in the children of disobedience, enhanced and improved with circumstances of greater impudence than the most abominable heathens are guilty of. Hammond.
The relation which those children bore to the priesthood, contributed to enhance their guilt, and increase their punishment. Atterbury.

ENHA'NCEMENT. n. s. [from enhance.]
1. Increase; augmentation of value.
Their yearly rents are not improved, the landlords making no less gain by fines than by enhancement of rents. Bacon.
2. Aggravation; increase of ill.
Jocular slanders have, from the slightness of the temptation, an enchancement of guilt.
Gov. of the Tongue.

ENHA'NCER.* n. s. [from enhance.] One who raises the price of a thing.
In such cases we must be so affected as that we grudge to ourselves our own gain, that we be not in the first file of enhancers.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

To ENHA'PPY.* v. a. [from happy.] To render happy.
What better than at once to see our kingdom enhappied, and Christ advanced?
Serm. by J. Symonds, (1641,) Ep. Ded. ¶. 3.

To ENHA'RBOUR.* v. a. [from harbour.] To dwell in; to inhabit.
O true delight, enharbouring the brests
Of those sweet creatures with the plumy crests.
W. Browne.

To ENHA'RDEN.* v. a. [Fr. enhardir, "to hearten, to embolden;" Cotgrave.] To encourage.
France useth — to enharden one with confidence; for the gentry of France have a kind of loose becoming boldness, &c.
Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. (1642,) p. 192.

ENHARMO'NICK.* adj. [from harmony; Fr. enharmonique.] A term applied to the last of the three divisions of musick by the ancients; and applied also to the manner of so disposing the voice in singing, as to render the melody more affecting. Dr. Ash has inconsiderately defined this word inharmonious, which is the very reverse of its meaning.

In passing from one song to another, she [Leonora Baroni] shews sometimes the divisions of the enharmonick and chromatick species with so much air and sweetness, that every hearer is ravished with that delicate and difficult mode of singing.
Warton, from M. Maugars, Notes on Milton.

ENI'GMA. n. s. [ænigma, Lat. αἴνιγμα.] A riddle; an obscure question; a position expressed in remote and ambiguous terms.

The dark enigma will allow
A meaning; which, if well I understand,
From sacrilege will free the god's command.
Dryden.

A custom was amongst the ancients of proposing an enigma at festivals, and adjudging a reward to him that solved it. Pope.

ENIGMA'TICAL. adj. [from enigma.]

1. Obscure; ambiguously or darkly expressed.

Your answer, sir, is enigmatical.
Shaksp. Much Ado.

Enigmatical deliveries comprehend useful verities; but being mistaken by liberal expositors at first, they have been misunderstood by most since.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

Whilst they affect enigmatical obscurity, they puzzle the readers of their divulged processes.
Boyle.

Athenæus gives instances of the enigmatical propositions in use at Athens, and of the forfeitures and rewards upon the solution or non-solution.
Broome, Notes on the Odyssey.

2. Cloudy; obscurely conceived or apprehended.

Faith here is the assent to those things which come to us by hearing, and are so believed by adherence, or dark enigmatical knowledge, but hereafter are seen or known demonstratively.
Hammond.

ENIGMA'TICALLY. adv. [from enigma.] In a sense different from that which the words in their familiar acceptation imply.

Homer speaks enigmatically, and intends that these monsters are merely the creation of poetry.
Broome.

ENIGMA'TICK.* adj. [Fr. enigmatique.] Obscure; ambiguously described.

An enigmatick foe, whose ammunition
Is nothing else but want of all provision.
Beaumont's Psyche, ix. 53.

ENI'GMATIST. n. s. [from enigma.] One who deals in obscure and ambiguous matters; maker of riddles.

That I may deal more ingenuously with my reader than the abovementioned enigmatist has done, I shall present him with a key to my riddle.
Addison, Whig Exam.

To ENI'GMATIZE.* v. n. [from enigma.] To deal in enigmas.

To ENJO'IN. v. a. [enjoindre, French.] To direct; to order; to prescribe. It is more authoritative than direct, and less imperious than command.

To satisfy the good old man,
I would bend under any heavy weight
That he'll enjoin me to. Shaks. Much Ado.

Monks and philosophers, and such as do continually enjoin themselves. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

It endeavours to secure every man's interest, by enjoining that truth and fidelity be inviolably preserved. Tillotson.

ENJO'INER. n. s. [from enjoin.] One who gives injunctions. Dict.

ENJO'INMENT. n. s. [from enjoin.] Direction; command.

Critical trial should be made by publick enjoinment, whereby determination might be settled beyond debate. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To ENJO'Y. v. a. [jouir, enjouir, Fr.]

1. To feel or perceive with pleasure; to have a pleasing sense of; to be delighted with.

I could enjoy the pangs of death,
And smile in agony. Addison, Cato.

2. To obtain possession or fruition of.

Edward the saint, in whom it pleased God, righteous and just, to let England see what a blessing sin and iniquity would not suffer it to enjoy. Hooker.

He, who to enjoy
Plato's Elysium, leap'd into the sea,

3. To please; to gladden; to exhilarate; to glad; to delight. This sense is usual with the reciprocal pronoun, and is derived from enjouir.

Creatures are made to enjoy themselves, as well as to serve us. More against Atheism.

When a man shall, with a sober, sedate, diabolical rancour, look upon and enjoy himself in the sight of his neighbour's sin and shame, can he plead the instigation of any appetite in nature?
South.

To ENJO'Y. v. n. To live in happiness.

Then I shall be no more!
And Adam, wedded to another Eve,
Shall live with her enjoying, I extinct.
Milton, P. L.

ENJO'YABLE.* adj. [from enjoy.] Capable of enjoyment; yielding enjoyment.

The evening of our days is generally the calmest and the most enjoyable of them. Pope, Lett.

ENJO'YER.† n. s. [from enjoy.] One that has fruition or possession.

It [the beatifical vision] relates to an intrinsick worth, and some proportionateness in the enjoyer.
W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. P. ii. (1654,) p. 31.

They were the greatest enjoyers, and the greatest abusers of mercy that ever lived.
South, Serm. viii. 365.

ENJO'YMENT. n. s. [from enjoy.] Pleasure; happiness; fruition.

His hopes and expectations are bigger than his enjoyments. Tillotson.

To ENKI'NDLE. v. a. [from kindle.]

1. To set on fire; to inflame; to put in a flame.

Edmund enkindle all the sparks of nature
To quit this horrid act. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

2. To rouse passions; to set the soul into a flame.

Your hand
Gave sign for me to leave you: so I did,
Fearing to strengthen that impatience,
Which seem'd too much enkindled.
Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

3. To incite to any act or hope.

Do you not hope your children shall be kings,
When those that gave the thane of Cawder to me,
Promis'd no less to them?
—— That, trusted home,
Might yet enkindle you unto the crown.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

To ENLA'RD.* v. a. [from lard; old Fr. enlarder, "embrocher," Roquef.] To grease; to baste. Both our own and the French word are borrowed from the kitchen. Shakspeare, just before the following passage, speaks of "basting arrogance."

That were to enlard his fat-already pride.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

To ENLA'RGE. v. a. [enlargir, French.]

1. To make greater in quantity or appearance.

The wall, in lustre and effect like glass,
Which o'er each object casting various dyes,
Enlarges some and others multiplies. Pope.

2. To increase any thing in magnitude; to extend.

Where there is something both lasting and scarce, and so valuable to be hoarded up, there men will not be apt to enlarge their possessions of land. Locke.

3. To increase by representation; to magnify; to exaggerate.

4. To dilate; to expand.

O ye Corinthians, our mouth is open unto you, our heart is enlarged. 2 Cor. vi. 11.

5. To set free from limitation.

Though she appear honest to me, yet at other places she enlargeth her mirth so far, that there is shrewd construction made of her.
Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

6. To extend to more purposes or uses.

It hath grown from no other root than only a desire to enlarge the necessary use of the word of God, which desire hath begotten an errour, enlarging it farther than soundness of truth will bear. Hooker.

7. To amplify; to aggrandize.

This is that science which would truly enlarge men's minds, were it studied. Locke.

Could the mind, as in number, come to so small a part of extension or duration as excluded divisibility, that would be the indivisible unit, or idea; by repetition of which it would make its more enlarged ideas of extension and duration. Locke.

8. To release from confinement.

Enlarge the man committed yesterday,
That rail'd against our person. Shaks. Hen. V.

9. To diffuse in eloquence.

They enlarged themselves upon this subject with all the invidious insinuations they could devise.
Clarendon.

To ENLA'RGE. v. n.

1. To expatiate; to speak in many words.

They appointed the Chancellor of the Exchequer to enlarge upon any of those particulars.
Clarendon.

This is a theme so unpleasant, I delight not to enlarge on it; rather wish the memory of it were extinct. Decay of Piety.

2. To be further extended.

The caliphs obtained a mighty empire, which was in a fair way to have enlarged, until they fell out among themselves. Ralegh, Essays.

ENLA'RGEDLY.* adv. [from the part. enlarged.] In an enlarged manner.

Justification is taken two ways in Scripture; "strictè magis, et extensivè; precisely, for the remission of sins by the only merits and satisfaction of Christ, accepted for us, and imputed to us; and enlargedly, for that act of God, and the necessary and immediate concomitants unto and consequents upon that, the whole and entire state and quality and condition of man regenerate, changed; by which a sinner, guilty of death, is acquitted, cleansed, made just in himself, reconciled unto God, appointed to walk, and beginning to walk, in holiness and newness of life.
Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 172.

ENLA'RGEMENT. n. s. [from enlarge.]

1. Encrease; augmentation; farther extension.

The king afterwards enlarged the constant obedience of the city, with enlargement both of liberties and of revenues. Hayward.

The ocean, which so long our hopes confin'd,
Could give no limits to his vaster mind:
Our bounds' enlargement was his latest toil,
Nor hath he left us pris'ners to our isle. Waller.

There never were any islands, or other considerable parcels of land, amassed or heaped up; nor any enlargement, or addition of earth, made to the continent by the mud that is carried down into the sea by rivers. Woodward.

The commons in Rome generally pursued the enlargement of their power by more set quarrels of one entire assembly against another. Swift.

The Greek tongue received many enlargements between the time of Homer and that of Plutarch. Swift.

2. Release from confinement or servitude.

Lieutenant,
At our enlargement what are thy due fees?
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

If thou altogether holdest thy peace at this time, then shall there enlargement and deliverance arise to the Jews from another place. Esther, iv. 14.

3. Magnifying representation.

And all who told it added something new;
And all who heard it made enlargements too.
Pope.

4. Expatiating speech; copious discourse.

He concluded with an enlargement upon the vices and corruptions which were got into the army. Clarendon.

ENLA'RGER. n. s. [from enlarge.] Amplifier; one that increases or dilates any thing.

We shall not contentiously rejoin, but confer what is in us unto his name and honour, ready to be swallowed in any worthy enlarger.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

ENLA'RGING.* n. s. [from enlarge.] Enlargement; extension.

There was an enlarging and a winding about still upward to the side chambers. Ezek. xli. 7.

To ENLI'GHT. v. a. [from light.] To illuminate; to supply with light; to enlighten.

Wit from the first has shone on ages past,
Enlights the present, and shall warm the last.
Pope.

To ENLI'GHTEN.† v. a. [Sax. enlihtan.]

1. To illuminate; to supply with light.

God will enlighten my darkness. Psalms.

As one sun shineth to the whole world, so there is no faith but this one published, the brightness whereof must enlighten all that come to the knowledge of the truth. Hooker.

2. To quicken in the faculty of vision.

His eyes were enlightened. 1 Sam. xiv. 27.

Love never fails to master what he finds;
The fool enlightens, and the wise he blinds. Dryden.

3. To instruct; to furnish with increase of knowledge.

This doctrine is so agreeable to reason, that we meet with it in the writings of the enlightened heathens. Spectator.

'Tis he who enlightens our understanding, corrects our wills, and enables us to subdue our affections to the law of God. Rogers.

4. To cheer; to exhilarate; to gladden.

5. To illuminate with divine knowledge.

Those who were once enlightened. Heb. vi. 4.

ENLI'GHTENER.† n. s. [from enlighten.]

1. Illuminator; one that gives light.

O, sent from heaven,
Enlightener of my darkness! gracious things
Thou hast reveal'd. Milton, P. L.

The two great lights, or luminaries, inlighteners, as the word signifies, are the sun, which inlightens us by day; and the moon, which inlightens us by night. Patrick on Genesis.

It represented the sun, the great enlightener of the universe. A. Smith, Hist. Astron § 4.

2. Instructor.

Is it possible to suppose them [the Apostles] to be deserted by this inlightener, when they sat down to the other part of the work; to frame a rule for the lasting service of the church?
Warburton, Disc. concern. the Holy Spirit.

To ENLI'NK. v. a. [from link.] To chain to; to connect.

Enlinkt to waste and desolation. Shaks. Hen. V.

To ENLI'ST.* v. a. [from list.] To enrol or register. Dr. Johnson has twice used this word in his definitions of list. See To LIST.

To ENLI'VE.* v. a. [from life, live.] To animate; to make alive.

This dissolved body shall be raised out of the dust, and enlived with this very soul wherewith it is now animated. Bp. Hall, Select Thoughts, § 30.

Prince of the orchard, fair as dawning morn,
Fenc'd with the law, and ripe as soon as born,
That apple grew; which this soul did enlive,
Till the then climbing serpent, that now creeps
For that offence for which all mankind weeps,
Took it. Donne, Poems, p. 296.

See, see! the darts by which we burn'd
Are bright Loÿsa's pencills turn'd:
With which she now enliveth more
Beauties than they destroy'd before.
Lovelace, Luc. p. 19.

To ENLI'VEN.† v. a. [from life, live. Our elder word, we see, was enlive, which hitherto has passed unnoticed.]

1. To make quick; to make alive; to animate.

There warm'd alike by Sol's enlivening power,
The weed, aspiring, emulates the flower.
Shenstone.

2. To make vigorous or active.

These great orbs thus radically bright,
Primitive founts and origins of light,
Enliven worlds denied to human sight. Prior.

In a glass-house, the workmen often fling in a small quantity of fresh coals, which seems to disturb the fire, but very much enlivens it. Swift.

3. To make sprightly or vivacious.

4. To make gay or cheerful in appearance.

ENLI'VENER. n. s. [from enliven.] That which animates; that which puts in motion; that which invigorates.

But fire, th' enlivener of the general frame,
Is one, its operation still the same:
Its principle is in itself; while ours
Works, as confederates war, with mingled pow'rs.
Dryden.

ENLI'VENING.* n. s. [from enliven.] That which makes cheerful.

The good man is full of joyful enlivenings.
Feltham, Res. i. 84.

To ENLU'MINE. v. a. [enluminer, Fr.] To illumine; to illuminate; to enlighten. Not now in use.

For having yet, in his deducted spright,
Some sparks remaining of that heav'nly fire,
He is enlumin'd with that goodly light,
Unto like goodly semblance to aspire. Spenser.

To ENMA'RBLE. v. a. [from marble.] To turn to marble; to harden. Obsolete.

Their dying to delay,
Thou dost enmarble the proud heart of her,
Whose love before their life they do prefer.
Spenser.

To ENME'SH. v. a. [from mesh.] To net; to entangle; to intrap.

So will I turn her virtue into pitch;
And out of her own goodness make the net,
That shall enmesh them all. Shaks. Othello.

To ENME'W.† See To EMMEW.

E'NMITY.† n. s. [from enemy; as if enemity, inamity, Dr. Johnson says. The fact is, that our word was formerly written enimitie, or enemitie, as in Barret's Alveary, 1580; and in Sherwood's old dictionary, where it is translated the Fr. inimitié, and in the more ancient French it was ennemistié; Lat. inimicitia.]

1. Unfriendly disposition; malevolence; aversion.

Their being forced to their books, in an age at enmity with all restraint, has been the reason why many have hated books. Locke.

2. Contrariety of interests or inclinations; mutual malignity.

They shall within this hour,
On a dissension of a doit, break out
In bitterest enmity. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Between thee and the woman I will put
Enmity; and between thine and her seed:
Her seed shall bruise thy head, thou bruise his heel. Milton, P. L.

How far these controversies, and appearing enmities of those glorious creatures, may be carried, is not my business to shew or determine.
Dryden, Juv. Ded.

3. State of opposition.

Know ye not that the friendship of the world is enmity with God? Jam. iv. 4.

You must firmly be convinced, that every sin you commit sets you at enmity with heaven, and will, if not forsaken, render you incapable of it.
Wake, Prepar. for Death.

4. Malice; mischievous attempts.

I abjure all roofs, and chuse
To wage against the enmity o' th' air. Shakspeare.

He who performs his duty in a station of great power, must needs incur the utter enmity of many, and the high displeasure of more.
Atterbury.

To ENMO'VE.† See To EMMOVE.

ENNE'AGON. n. s. [ἔννεα and γωνία.] A figure of nine angles.

ENNEA'TICAL. adj. [ἔννεα.] Enneatical days, are every ninth day of a sickness; and enneatical years, every ninth year of one's life.

To ENNE'W.* v. a. [from new.] To make new.

Our natural tongue is rude,
And hard to be ennew'd
With polish'd termes. Skelton, Poems, p. 236.

To ENNO'BLE. v. a. [ennoblir, Fr.]

1. To raise from commonalty to nobility.

Many fair promotions
Are given daily to ennoble those,
That scarce some two days since were worth a noble. Shakspeare.

2. To dignify; to aggrandize; to exalt; to raise.

God raised up the spirit of this great person, and ennobled his courage and conduct with the entire overthrow of this mighty host. South.

What can ennoble sots, or slaves, or cowards?
Alas! not all the blood of all the Howards. Pope.

3. To elevate; to magnify.

None so lovely, sweet and fair,
Or do more ennoble love. Waller.

4. To make famous or illustrious.

The Spaniards could not as invaders land in Ireland, but only ennobled some of the coasts thereof with shipwrecks. Bacon.

ENNO'BLEMENT. n. s. [from ennoble.]

1. The act of raising to the rank of nobility.

He added during parliament, to his former creations, the ennoblement or advancement in nobility of a few others. Bacon.

2. Exaltation; elevation; dignity.

The eternal wisdom enriched us with all ennoblements, suitable to the measures of an unstraitned goodness. Glanville.

*ENNU'I. n. s. [French. In the old French it is the same as annoy, or disgust. "Ennuy, annoy, vexation, wearisomeness, tediousness, &c." Cotgrave. "Enneu, ennuy, blessure, douleur, offense, incommodité, &c." Roquefort. Some pretend to derive this word from nuit, because night brings on weariness or heaviness. It is more probably from the Lat. noxia, for the ancient French is also enoy; and the Spanish use enojo in a somewhat similar way. In short, ennui may be etymologically rendered into English, a nuisance; no improper explanation of the thing!] Weariness; fastidiousness; disgust.

The only fault of it is insipidity; which is apt now and then to give a sort of ennui, which makes one form certain little wishes, that signify nothing. Gray, Lett.

ENODA'TION.† n. s. [enodatio, Lat.]

1. The act of untying a knot.
2. Solution of a difficulty.

Scarcely any thing that way proved too hard for him for his enodation or decision.

Dr. Sclater, Serm. at Fun. of A. Wheelock, 1654.

To ENO'DE.* v. a. [Lat. enodo.] To declare. This verb, as well as the substantive enodation, which Dr. Johnson notices, is in Cockeram's vocabulary.

ENO'RM.* adj. [old Fr. enorme; Lat. enormis. A proper word, as we have the adjectives deform, conform, uniform.]

1. Irregular; deviating from rule.

Full lightly it ascends into the clear
And subtile air, devoid of cloudy storm,
Where it doth steady stand, all-uniform,
Pure, pervious, immix'd, — nothing enorm.
More, Song of the Soul, i. ii. 22.

2. Deviating from right; wicked.

That they may suffer such punishment as so enorm and unlawful actions have justly deserved.
Sir C. Cornwallis to K. Jam. I. Suppl. Cabb. p. 99.

ENO'RMITY.† n. s. [old Fr. enormité.]

1. Deviation from rule; irregularity. Cockeram.
2. Deviation from right; depravity; corruption.

We shall speak of the particular abuses and enormities of the government. Spenser on Ireland.

That this law will be always sufficient to bridle or restrain enormity, no man can warrant. Hooker.

There are many little enormities in the world, which our preachers would be very glad to see removed; but at the same time dare not meddle with them, for fear of betraying the dignity of the pulpit. Addison, Guardian.

3. Atrocious crime; flagitious villany; crimes exceeding the common measure. In this sense it has a plural.

It is not a bare speculation that kings may run into enormities; the practice may be proved by example. Swift.

ENO'RMOUS.† adj. [enormis, Latin. Our word was formerly written enormious, as well as enormous. It is so in Cockeram's vocabulary; and thus used by Jeremy Taylor, "the enormious additions of their artificial heights." Artif. Hands. p. 60.]

1. Irregular; out of rule; not regulated by any stated measures.

Wallowing, unwieldy, enormous in their gait.
Milton, P. L.

Nature here
Wanton'd, as in her prime; and play'd at will
Her virgin fancies, pouring forth more sweets,
Wild above rule, or art, enormous bliss!
Milton, P. L.

2. Excursive beyond the limits of a regular figure.

The enormous part of the light in the circumference of every lucid point, ought to be less discernible in shorter telescopes than in longer, because the shorter transmit less light to the eye.
Newton, Opticks.

3. Disordered; confused.

I shall find time
From this enormous state, and seek to give Losses their remedies. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. Wicked beyond the common measure. Bullokar.
5. Exceeding in bulk the common measures: always used with some degree of dislike, or horrour, or wonder.

A giant-shepherd here his flock maintains,
Far from the rest, and solitary reigns,
A form enormous! far unlike the race
Of human birth, in stature or in face.
Pope, Odyssey.

ENO'RMOUSLY. adv. [from enormous.] Beyond measure.

One who could ever espouse a notion so enormously absurd and senseless, as that the world was framed by chance. Woodward.

ENO'RMOUSNESS. n. s. [from enormous.] Immeasurable excess.

When those who have no opportunity to examine our faith, see the enormousness of our works, what should hinder them from measuring the master by the disciples? Decay of Piety.

ENO'UGH.† adj. [ȝenoh, Saxon; ganah, Gothick; genoeg, Dutch; perhaps from the Icel. nög, nogd, plenty. The Greek ἱκανὸς, sufficient, must also not be overlooked. Mr. Horne Tooke makes the Saxon word the past participle of the verb ȝenoȝan, to multiply; but we see that genoh evidently belongs, without such deduction, to the elder northern languages. It is not easy to determine whether this word be an adjective or adverb; perhaps, when it is joined with a substantive, it is an adjective, of which enow is the plural. In other situations it seems an adverb; except that after the verb To have, or To be, either expressed or understood, it may be accounted a substantive. It is pronounced as if it were written enuf.] In a sufficient measure; so as may satisfy; so as may suffice.

Why wou'dst thou go, with one consent they cry,
When thou hadst gold enough, and Emily? Dryd.

When there was not room enough for their herds, they by consent separated, and enlarged their pasture. Locke.

ENO'UGH. n. s.

1. Something sufficient in greatness or excellence.

'Tis enough for me to have endeavoured the union of my country, whilst I continued in publick employments. Temple.

The indolency and enjoyment we have, sufficing for our present happiness, we desire not to venture the change, being content, and that is enough.
Locke.

Enough for me that to the list'ning swains,
First in those fields I sung the sylvan strains. Pope.

I will not quarrel with the present age: it has done enough for me, in making and keeping you two my friends. Pope.

2. Something equal to a man's powers or faculties.

Some great defects and main errours in his nature, customs, and proceedings, he had enough to do to save and help, with a thousand little industries and watches. Bacon.

ENO'UGH. adv.

1. In a sufficient degree; in a degree that gives satisfaction.
2. It notes a slight augmentation of the positive degree: as, I am ready enough to quarrel; that is, I am rather quarrelsome than peaceable.

I am apt enough to think, that this same binarium of a stronger and a weaker, like unto masculine and feminine, doth hold in all living bodies. Bacon.

It is sometimes pleasant enough to consider the different notions which different persons have of the same thing. Addison.

They are now in prison at Florence; and, as it is said, treated hardly enough. Addison on Italy.

3. Sometimes it notes diminution; as, the song is well enough; that is, not quite well, though not much amiss.
4. An exclamation noting fulness or satiety.

Macbeth, beware Macduff!
Beware the thane of Fife! Dismiss me. — Enough.
Shakspeare.

Henceforth I'll bear
Affliction, till it do cry out itself,
Enough, enough, and die. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To ENO'UNCE.* v. a. [Lat. enuncio.] To declare. This word is modern.

Listen to your Maker's voice
Mellifluous, which aloud the mild award
Enounces through your regions.
Bally, Day of Judgement.

He does not fear to enounce himself with shouts of exultation. A. Smith.

ENO'W.† The plural of enough. In a sufficient number. In Yorkshire it is pronounced enew.

The earth hath since born enow bleeding witnesses, that it was no want of true courage. Sidney.

The walls of the church there are enow contented to build: the marbles are polished, the roofs shine with gold, the altar hath precious stones to adorn it, and of Christ's ministers no choice at all.
Hooker.

Man hath selfish foes enow besides,
That, day and night, for his destruction wait.
Milton, P. L.

My conquering brother will have slaves enow,
To pay his cruel vows for victory. Dryden.

There are at Rome enow modern works of architecture to employ any reasonable man.
Addison on Medals.

EN PASSANT. adv. [French.] By the way.

To ENPIE'RCE.* v. a. See To EMPIERCE.

I am too sore enpierced with his shaft.
Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

To ENQUI'CKEN.* v. a. [from quicken.] To make alive.

He hath not yet enquickened men generally with this deiform life; but it hath lyen dead to them, or they to it; that influx being rather suspended than absolutely destroyed, but as the soul to its body, or any part of her body that is numb and dead.
More, Notes on Psychozoia.

To ENQUI'RE.* [Fr. enquirer.] This word, with all its dependants, is more usually written with in. But perhaps it ought to be written with en. See To INQUIRE.

To ENRA'CE.* v. a. [Fr. enraciner.] To implant; to enroot. Obsolete.

Who can aread what creature mote she be,
Whether a creature, or a goddess graced
With heavenly gifts from heaven first enraced.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. x. 25.

To ENRA'GE. v. a. [enrager, French.] To irritate; to provoke; to make furious; to exasperate.

The justice of their quarrel should not so much encourage as enrage them, being to revenge the dishonour done to their king, and to chastise deceitful enemies. Hayward.

Enrag'd at this, upon the bawd I flew;
And that which most enrag'd me was, 'twas true.
Walsh.

To ENRA'NGE.† v. a. [from range.]

1. To place regularly; to put into order.

In their jaw
Three ranks of iron teeth enranged were.
Spenser, F. Q.

As fair Diana, in fresh Summer's day,
Beholds her nymphs enrang'd in shady wood.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. To rove over.

As this day I was enraunging it, [the forest,]
I chaunst to meet this knight.
Spenser, F. Q. vi. ii. 9.

To ENRA'NK. v. a. [from rank.] To place in orderly ranks.

No leisure had he to enrank his men. Shaks.

To ENRA'PT. v. a. [from rapt: the participle preterite seems to be enrapt,]

1. To throw into an ecstasy; to transport with enthusiasm.

I myself
Am, like a prophet, suddenly enrapt
To tell thee, that this day is ominous. Shakspeare.

2. In the following quotation it seems erroneously written for enwrapt, involved; wrapt up.

Nor hath he been so enrapt in those studies as to neglect the polite arts of painting and poetry.
Arbuthnot and Pope.

To ENRA'PTURE.† v. a. [from rapture.] To transport with pleasure; to delight highly.

Oft gazing on her shade, the enraptur'd fair
Decreed the substance well deserv'd her care.
Shenstone.

To ENRA'VISH.† v. a. [from ravish.] To throw into ecstasy; to transport with delight.

What wonder,
Frail men, whose eyes seek heavenly things to see,
At sight thereof so much enravish'd be? Spenser.

They cannot put their blood and spirits into the enravishing emotions of sensitive love and joy.
Scott's Works, ii. 124.

Which cannot but enravish every ingenuous breast. Hallywell, Sav. of Souls, p. 88.

ENRA'VISHMENT. n. s. [from enravish.] Ecstasy of delight.

They contract a kind of splendour from the seemingly obscuring vail, which adds to the enravishments of her transported admirers.
Glanville, Scepsis.

To ENRE'GISTER.* v. a. [Fr. enregistrer.] To enrol; to register.

Him to behold, is on His works to look,
Which He hath made in beauty excellent;
And in the same, as in a brazen book,
To read enregistered in every nook
His goodness, which His beauty doth declare.
Spenser, Hymn of Heav. Beauty.

He hath himself written and inregistered his own proper faults. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 217.

All he could do was to enregister at length all those privy seals for the vindication of himself to his successors for ever.
Wharton, Specimen of Burnet's Errors, p. 101.

To ENRHE'UM. v. a. [enrhumer, French.] To have rheum through cold.

The physician is to enquire where the party hath taken cold or enrheumed. Harvey.

To ENRI'CH. v. a. [enricher, French.]

1. To make wealthy; to make opulent.

The king will enrich him with great riches, and will give him his daughter. 1 Sam. xvii. 25.

Henry is able to enrich his queen,
And not to seek a queen to make him rich. Shaks.

Great and glorious Rome, queen of the earth,
So far renown'd, and with the spoils enrich'd
Of nations. Milton, P. R.

Those are so unhappy as to rob others without enriching themselves. Denham.

2. To fertilize; to make fruitful.

See the sweet brooks in silver mazes creep,
Enrich the meadows, and supply the deep.
Blackmore.

3. To store; to supply with augmentation of any thing desirable.

There is not any one among them that could ever enrich his own understanding with any certain truth, or ever edify others therein.
Ralegh, Hist.

ENRI'CHMENT. n. s. [from enrich.]

1. Augmentation of wealth.

2. Amplification; improvement by addition.

I have procured a translation of that book into the general language, not without great and ample additions, and enrichment thereof.
Bacon, Holy War.

It is a vast hinderance to the enrichment of our understandings, if we spend too much of our time and pains among infinites and unsearchables.
Watts, Logick.

To ENRI'DGE. v. a. [from ridge.] To form with longitudinal protuberances or ridges.

He had a thousand noses,
Horns whelk'd and wav'd like the enridged sea:
It was some fiend. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

To ENRI'NG. v. a. [from ring.] To bind round; to encircle.

Ivy so
Enrings the barky fingers of the elm. Shakspeare.

To ENRI'PEN. v. a. [from ripe.] To ripen; to mature; to bring to perfection.

The summer, how it enripen'd the year;
And autumn, what our golden harvests were.
Donne.

To ENRI'VE.* v. a. part. enriven. [from rive.] To cleave.

The wicked shaft ——
Stay'd not, till through his curat it did glide,
And made a griesly wound in his enriven side.
Spenser, F. Q. v. viii. 34.

To ENRO'BE. v. a. [from robe.] To dress; to clothe; to habit; to invest.

Her mother hath intended,
That, quaint in green, she shall be loose enrob'd,
With ribands pendant, flaring 'bout her head.
Shakspeare.

To ENROL. v. a. [enroller, French.]

1. To insert in a roll, list or register.

There be enrolled amongst the king's forces about thirty thousand men of the Jews. 1 Mac. x. 36.

We find ourselves enrolled in this heavenly family as servants, and as sons. Sprat.

The champions, all of high degree,
Who knighthood lov'd, and deeds of chivalry,
Throng'd to the lists, and envy'd to behold
The names of others, not their own enroll'd. Dryd.

Mentes, an ever-honour'd name of old,
High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd. Pope, Odyss.

Heroes and heroines of old,
By honour only were enroll'd
Among their brethren of the skies;
To which, though late, shall Stella rise. Swift.

2. To record; to leave in writing.

He swore consent to your succession;
His oath enrolled in the parliament.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Laws, which none shall find
Left them enroll'd; or what the spirit within Shall on the heart engrave. Milton, P. L.

3. To involve; to inwrap.

From his infernal furnace forth he threw
Huge flames, that dimmed all the heaven's light,
Enroll'd in duskish smoke and brimstone blue.
Spenser, F. Q.

ENRO'LLER. n. s. [from enrol.] One that enrols; one that registers.

ENRO'LMENT. n. s. [from enrol.] Register; writing in which any thing is recorded; record.

The king himself caused to be enrolled, and testified by a notary publick; and delivered the enrolments, with his own hands, to the bishop of Salisbury. Davies on Ireland.

To ENRO'OT. v. a. [from root.] To fix by the root; to implant deep.

He cannot so precisely weed this land,
As his misdoubts present occasion:
His foes are so enrooted with his friends,
That, plucking to unfix an enemy,
He doth unfasten so and shake a friend. Shaks.

To ENRO'UND. v. a. [from round.] To environ; to surround; to encircle; to enclose.

Upon his royal face there is no note
How dread an army hath enrounded him.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

ENS. n. s. [Latin.]

1. Any being or existence.

2. [In chymistry.] Some things that are pretended to contain all the qualities or virtues of the ingredients they are drawn from in a little room.

To ENSA'FE.* v. a. [from safe.] To render safe.

Ireland is not yet delivered; England is not altogether settled and ensafed.
Serm. by W. Bell, M. A. 1650, p. 11.

This is the way how kingly names may be Insaf'd, and from distractive terrors free.
Feltham, Res. i. 16.

ENSA'MPLE.† n. s. [essempio, Italian, Dr. Johnson says. But it is the old French word ensample, the usage of which Lacombe has traced to the tenth century.] Example; pattern; subject of imitation. This orthography is now justly disused.

Such life should be the honour of your light;
Such death, the sad ensample of your might.
Spenser, Sonn.

Ye have us for an ensample. ' Phil. iii. 17.

Such as would be willing to make use of our ensamples to do the same thing, where there is not the same necessity, may not be able to touch our practice for their excuse. Sanderson.

To ENSA'MPLE. v. a. [from the noun.] To exemplify; to shew by example; to give as a copy.

I have followed all the ancient poets historical: first, Homer, who, in the person of Agamemnon, ensampled a good governour and a virtuous man.
Spenser on Ireland.

To ENSA'NGUINE.† v. a. [sanguis, Latin; ensanglanter, French.] To smear with gore; to suffuse with blood.

With cruel tournament the squadrons join;
Where cattle pastur'd late, now scatter'd lies
With carcasses and arms the ensanguin'd field,
Deserted. Milton, P. L.

Ensanguin'd man
Is now become the lion of the plain,
And worse. Thomson, Spring.

As the paths of fate we tread,
Wading through the ensanguin'd field. Gray, Ode.

To ENSCHE'DULE. v. a. [from schedule.] To insert in a schedule or writing.

You must buy that peace
With full accord to all our just demands,

To ENSCO'NCE.† v. a. [from sconce, a kind of fortification.] To cover as with a fort; to secure. Hanmer.

I myself sometimes, hiding mine honour in my necessity, am fain to shuffle, to hedge, and to lurch; and yet your rogue will ensconce your rags, your cat-a-mountain looks under the shelter of your honour. Shakspeare.

She shall not see me: I will ensconce me behind the arras. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

We make trifles of terrours, ensconcing ourselves in seeming knowledge. Shakspeare.

Convey him to the sanctuary of rebels,
Nestorius' house, where our proud brother has Ensconc'd himself. Beaum. and Fl. The Coronation.

A sort of errour to ensconce
Absurdity and ignorance. Hudibras.

This he courageously invaded,
And having enter'd, barricado'd,
Ensconc'd himself as formidable
As could be, underneath a table. Hudibras.

To ENSEA'L.* v. a. [from seal.] To impress; to mark as with a seal.

Climb'd mountains, where the wanton kidling dallies,
Then with soft steps enseal'd the meeken'd vallies. Browne, Brit. Past. ii. 1.

To ENSEA'M.† v. a. [from seam.]

1. To sow up; to enclose by a seam or juncture of needlework.

A name engraved in the revestiary of the temple, one stole away, and enseamed it in his thigh. Camden.

2. To fructify; to fatten. [Fr. ensemencer.]

And bounteous Trent, that in himself enseams
Both thirty sorts of fish, and thirty sundry streams. Spenser, F. Q. iv. xi. 35.

ENSEA'MED.* adj. [from seam.] Greasy. See SEAM.

The rank sweat of an enseamed bed. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

To ENSEA'R. v. a. [from sear.] To cauterise; to stanch or stop with fire.

Ensear thy fertile and conceptious womb;
Let it no more bring out t' ingrateful man. Shakspeare.

To ENSEA'RCH.* v. n. [from search.] To try to find.

The property whereof, [the understanding,] is to espye, seek for, ensearch, and find out. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 201. b.

*ENSE'MBLE. n. s. [French; Latin, in and simul.] One with another; a relative proportion of parts to the whole; and sometimes work or composition, considered together, and not in parts. It has been adopted by us, of late years, more particularly in respect to statuary, painting, and architecture; as, "all those pieces of building make a fine ensemble; the picture is good, taking the parts separately, but the tout ensemble is bad."

We may see in successive steps the groups of those figures and facts only which are immediately local and temporary; but the ensemble of the piece will be hid from us and unintelligible. Pownall on Antiq. (1782,) p. 81.

To ENSHI'ELD.† v. a. [from shield.] To shield; to cover; to protect. In the following instance enshield is a contraction of the participle enshielded.

These black masks
Proclaim an enshield beauty, ten times louder
Than beauty could display. Shakspeare.

To ENSHRI'NE. v. a. [from shrine.] To enclose in a chest or cabinet; to preserve and secure as a thing sacred.

He seems
A phœnix, gaz'd by all as that sole bird,
When, to enshrine his reliques in the sun's Bright temple, to Egyptian Thebes he flies. Milton, P. L.

The sots combine
With pious care a monkey to enshrine. Tate's Juvenal.

Fair fortune next, with looks serene and kind,
Receives 'em, in her ancient fane enshrin'd. Addison.

E'NSIFORM. adj. [ensiformis, Lat.] Having the shape of a sword, as the xiphoeides or ensiform cartilage.

E'NSIGN. n. s. [enseigne, Fr.]

1. The flag or standard of a regiment.

Hang up your ensigns, let your drums be still. Shakspeare.

The Turks still pressing on, got up to the top of the walls with eight ensigns, from whence they had repulsed the defendants. Knolles, Hist.

Men taking occasion from the qualities, wherein they observe often several individuals to agree, range them into sorts, in order to their naming under which individuals, according to their conformity to this or that abstract idea, come to be ranked as under ensigns. Locke.

2. Any signal to assemble.

He will lift up an ensign to the nations from far. Isa. v. 26.

3. Badge; or mark of distinction, rank or office.

Princes that fly, their sceptres left behind,
Contempt or pity, where they travel, find;
The ensigns of our pow'r about we bear,
And ev'ry land pays tribute to the fair. Waller.

The marks or ensigns of virtues contribute, by their nobleness, to the ornament of the figures; as the decorations belonging to the liberal arts, to war or sacrifices. Dryden.

4. The officer of foot who carries the flag. [Formerly written ancient.]

To ENSI'GN.* v. a. [old Fr. ensigner, to shew; Lat. insignire.] To mark with some sign; to distinguish by an ornament, as in heraldry; which expression is still in use.

Henry but join'd the roses, that ensign'd
Particular families; but this hath join'd
The rose and thistle. B. Jonson, Masques.

E'NSIGNBEARER. n. s. [ensign and bear.] He that carries the flag; the ensign.

If it be true that the giants ever made war against heaven; he had been a fit ensignbearer for that company. Sidney.

E'NSIGNCY.* n. s. [from ensign.] The place and quality of the officer of foot who carries the flag.

ENSKI'ED.* part. adj. [from sky.] Placed in heaven; made immortal.

I hold you as a thing enskied, and sainted;
By your renouncement, an immortal spirit;
And to be talk'd with in sincerity
As with a saint. Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

To ENSLA'VE. v. a. [from slave.]

1. To reduce to servitude; to deprive of liberty.

The conquer'd also, and enslav'd by war,
Shall, with their freedom lost, all virtue lose. Milton, P. L.

I to do this! I, whom you once thought brave,
To sell my country, and my king enslave! Dryden.

Long draughts of sleep his monstrous limbs enslave;
He reels, and falling fills the spacious cave. Dryden, Æn.

He is certainly the most subjected, the most enslaved, who is so in his understanding. Locke.

While the balance of power is equally held, the ambition of private men gives neither danger nor fear, nor can possibly enslave their country. Swift.

2. To make over to another as his slave or bondman.

No man can make another man to be his slave, unless he hath first enslaved himself to life and death, to pleasure or pain, to hope or fear: command those passions, and you are freer than the Parthian king. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

The more virtuously any man lives, and the less he is enslaved to any lust, the more ready he is to entertain the principles of religion. Tillotson.

A man, not having the power of his own life, cannot by compact, or his own consent, enslave himself to any one, nor put himself under the absolute arbitrary power of another, to take away life when he pleases. Locke.

ENSLA'VEMENT. n. s. [from enslave.] The state of servitude; slavery; abject subjection.

The children of Israel, according to their method of sinning, after mercies, and thereupon returning to a fresh enslavement to their enemies, had now passed seven years in cruel subjection. South.

ENSLA'VER. n. s. [from enslave.] One that reduces others to a state of servitude.

What indignation in her mind,
Against enslavers of mankind! Swift.

To ENSNA'RE.* v. a. [from snare.] To entrap. Dr. Johnson admits ensnare to be more frequent than insnare, in his notice of the latter. See To INSNARE.

That the hypocrite reign not, lest the people be ensnared. Job, xxxiv. 30.

ENSNA'RER.* n. s. [from ensnare.] One who ensnares.

These ensnarers and catchers of men. Serm. by E. Hickeringhill, M. A. (1681,) p. 37.

To ENSNA'RL.* v. a.

1. To entangle. [from the verb snarl, in the same sense, which Spenser uses; though Dr. Johnson, citing only the Decay of Piety under that word, unjustly doubts the authority of it. See To SNARL.]

They in awayt would closely him ensnarle,
Ere to his den he backward could recoyle. Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 9.

To ENSNA'RL.† v. n. To snarl; to gnash the teeth. Cockeram.

To ENSO'BER.* v. a. [from sober.] To make sober; to compose.

God sent him sharpnesses and sad accidents to ensober his spirits. Bp. Taylor, Serm. (1651,) p. 170.

To ENSPHE'RE.* v. a. [from sphere.]

1. To place in a sphere.

In thy little chaos all's enspher'd,
And though abridg'd, yet in full greatness rear'd. J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 54.

2. To form into roundness.

One shall ensphere thine eyes, another shall
Impearl thy teeth, &c. Carew's Poems, p. 95.

To ENSTA'MP.* v. a. [from stamp.] To fix a mark by impressing it.

Nature hath enstamped upon the soul of man the certainty of a Deity. Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 194.
Money enstamped upon with the figure of a lamb. Gregory, Notes on Passages in Script. p. 51.

To ENSTE'EP.* See To INSTEEP.

To ENSTY'LE.* v. a. [from style.] To name; to call.

Herself to enstile
The Stonendge's best-belov'd, first wonder of the isle. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 3.
That renowned ile,
Which all men beauty's garden-plot enstyle.
Browne, Brit. Past.

To ENSU'E.† v. a. [ensuivre, French, Dr. Johnson says; but it is the Norman French ensuer, to pursue.] To follow; to pursue.

Eschew evil, and do good; seek peace, and ensue it. Psalm xxxiv. 14.
But now these Epicures begin to smile,
And say, my doctrine is more safe than true;
And that I fondly do myself beguile,
While these receiv'd opinions I ensue. Davies.

To ENSU'E. v. n.

1. To follow as a consequence to premises.

Let this be granted, and it shall hereupon plainly ensue, that the light of Scripture once shining in the world, all other light of nature is therewith in such sort drowned, that now we need it not. Hooker.

2. To succeed in a train of events, or course of time.

The man was noble;
But with his last attempt he wip'd it out,
Destroy'd his country, and his name remains
To the ensuing age abhorr'd. Shakspeare, Coriol.
Bishops are placed by collation of the king, without any precedent election or confirmation ensuing. Hayward.
Of worse deeds worse sufferings must ensue.
Milton, P. L.
With mortal heat each other shall pursue;
What wars, what wounds, what slaughter shall ensue! Dryden.
Impute not then those ills which may ensue
To me, but those who with incessant hate
Pursue my life. Rowe, Ambit. Stepmother.
Then grave Clarissa graceful wav'd her fan;
Silence ensu'd, and thus the nymph began. Pope.

ENSU'RABLE.* See INSURABLE.

ENSU'RANCE.† n. s. [from ensure. It is now more usually written insurance.]

1. Exemption from hazard, obtained by the payment of a certain sum.

There will be no ensurance here to make you amends, as there is in the case of fire.
Marq. of Halifax.

2. The sum paid for security.

ENSU'RANCER. n. s. [from ensurance.] One who undertakes to exempt from hazard.

The vain ensurancers of life,
And they who most perform'd, and promis'd less,
Even Short and Hobbes, forsook th' unequal strife.
Dryden.

To ENSU'RE.† v. a. [from sure, assurer, French. Now generally written insure.]

1. To ascertain; to make certain; to secure.

It is easy to entail debts on succeeding ages, but how to ensure peace for any term of years is difficult enough. Swift.

2. To exempt any thing from hazard by paying a certain sum, on condition of being reimbursed for miscarriage.

3. To promise reimbursement of any miscarriage for a certain reward stipulated.

A mendicant contracted with a country fellow for a quantity of corn, to ensure his sheep for that year. L'Estrange.

4. To bind by promise of marriage. Not now in use.

There grew such a secret love between them, that at the length they were insured together, intending to marry. Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.
I marvel not a little of thy folly, that wouldst thus entangle and ensure thyself with a foolish girl yonder in the court, Anne Bulleine.
Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

ENSU'RER.† n. s. [from ensure.]

1. One who makes contracts of ensurance; one who for a certain sum exempts any thing from hazard.

Let it be tried, and I will once set up the ensurer's office, that whatever goes out on that voyage, shall never miss to come home with gain.
Hammond, Works, iv. 481.

2. That which secures, or makes sure.

O temperance! — thou prolonger of life, thou insurer of pleasure, thou promoter of business, thou guardian of the person, thou preserver of the understanding, thou parent of every intellectual improvement and every moral virtue!
Hay, Ess. on Deformity, p. 25.

To ENSWEE'P.* v. a. [from sweep.] To pass over with swiftness.

Oft, in this season, silent from the north
A blaze of meteors shoots; ensweeping first
The lower skies. Thomson, Autumn.

ENTA'BLATURE.† } n. s. [old Fr. entablature, and entablement;
ENTA'BLEMENT. } Cotgrave.] The architrave, frise, and cornice of a pillar; being in effect the extremity of the flooring, which is either supported by pillars, or by a wall, if there be no columns. Harris.

Must not the whole entablature, with its projections, be so proportioned, as to seem great, but not heavy, light, but not little?
Dr. Warton, Ess. on Pope.

To ENTA'CKLE.* v. a. [from tackle.] To supply with instruments of sailing.

Your storm-driven shyp I repaired new,
So well entackled, what wind soever blow,
No stormy tempest your barge shall o'erthrow.
Skelton's Poems, p. 26.

ENTA'IL.† n. s. [feudum talliatum, from the French entaillé, cut, from tailler, to cut.]

1. The estate entailed or settled, with regard to the rule of its descent; that is, cut off from being an absolute fee.

2. The rule of descent settled for any estate.

Which declares a fine duly levied by tenant in tail to be a complete bar to him and his heirs, and all other persons claiming under such entail.
Blackstone.

3. Engraver's work; inlay. [intaglio, Ital. from intagliare.] Obsolete.

Well [it] appeared to have been of old
A work of rich entail, and curious mold,
Woven with anticks and wild imagery.
Spenser, F. Q.

To ENTA'IL.† v. a. [tailler, entailler, Fr. to cut.]

1. To settle the descent of any estate so that it cannot be by any subsequent possessor bequeathed at pleasure.

I here entail
The crown to thee and to thine heirs for ever.
Shakspeare.
Had Richard unconstrain'd resign'd the throne,
A king can give no more than is his own:
The title stood entail'd, had Richard had a son.
Dryden.

2. To fix unalienably upon any person or thing.

None ever had a privilege of infallibility entailed to all he said. Digby on Bodies.
The intemperate and unjust transmit their bodily infirmities and diseases to their children, and entail a secret curse upon their estates. Tillotson.

3. To carve. [Ital. intagliare.] Not now in use.

The chapitre house ———
Corven, and covered, and queyntelyche entayled
With semliche selure. P. Ploughman's Crede.
Golden bends, which were entail'd
With curious antickes. Spenser, F. Q.

To ENTA'IL. v. n. To cut. Obsolete.

The mortal steel dispiteously entail'd,
Deep in their flesh, quite through the iron walls,
That a large purple stream adown their giambeaux falls. Spenser, F. Q.

To ENTA'ME.† v. a. [from tame.] To tame; to subjugate; to subdue.

My sonne, if thou thy conscience
Entamed hast in such a wise. Gower, Conf. Am. b. 1.
'Tis not your inky brows, your black silk hair,
Your bugle eyeballs, and your cheek of cream,
That can entame my spirits to your worship.
Shakspeare.

To ENTA'NGLE.† v. a. [A word of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. It is probably from the Gothick tagl, hair.]

1. To inwrap or ensnare with something not easily extricable, as a net; or something adhesive, as briars.

2. To lose in multiplied involutions; as in a labyrinth.

3. To twist, or confuse in such a manner as that a separation cannot easily be made; to make an entangled knot.

4. To involve in difficulties; to embarrass; to perplex.

Now all labour,
Mars what it does, yea very force entangles
Itself with strength. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.
He knew not how to wrestle with desperate contingencies, and so abhorred to be entangled in such. Clarendon.

5. To puzzle; to bewilder.

The duke, being questioned, neither held silence as he might, nor constantly denied it, but entangled himself in his doubtful tale. Hayward.
I suppose a great part of the difficulties that perplex men's thoughts, and entangle their understandings, would be easily resolved. Locke.

6. To ensnare by captious questions or artful talk.

The Pharisees took counsel how they might entangle him in his talk. St. Matt. xxii. 15.

7. To distract with variety of cares.

No man that warreth entangleth himself with the affairs of this life. 2 Tim. ii. 4.

8. To multiply the intricacies or difficulties of a work.

ENTA'NGLEMENT.† n. s. [from entangle.]

1. Involution of any thing intricate or adhesive.

The sad, dangerous, and almost fatal entanglements of this corporeal world.
More, Preexist. of the Soul, (1647,) Pref.
It is a truth both clear from scripture, and ratified by the experience of all believers, that there was never any one, were his entanglements in sin never so great, his corruptions never so raging, but, if he was enabled to wait upon mercy in an earnest constant use of prayer for the removal of his sin, became in the end a conqueror.
South, Serm. vi. 459.
The force of temptation, the entanglements of the flesh. South, Serm. vii. 230.

2. Perplexity; puzzle.

The most improved spirits are frequently caught in the entanglements of a tenacious imagination. Glanville, Scepsis.

There will be no greater entanglements, touching the notion of God and his providence. More, Divine Dialogues.

It is to fence against the entanglements of equivocal words, and the art of sophistry, that distinctions have been multiplied. Locke.

ENTA'NGLER. n. s. [from entangle.] One that entangles.

To ENTE'NDER.* v. a. [from tender.] To intenerate; to mollify.

Virtue alone entenders us for life;
I wrong her much; entenders us for ever.
Young, Night Th. 9.

To E'NTER.† v. a. [entrer, French.]

1. To go or come into any place.

I, with the multitude of my redeem'd,
Shall enter heaven, long absent. Milton, P. L.

A king of repute and learning entered the lists against him. Atterbury.

2. To initiate in a business, method, or society.

He is an excellent fish — and he is also excellent to enter a young angler, for he is a greedy biter. Walton, Angler.

The eldest being thus entered, and then made the fashion, it would be impossible to hinder them. Locke.

3. To introduce or admit into any counsel.

They of Rome are enter'd in our counsels,
And know how we proceed. Shakspeare, Coriol.

4. To set down in a writing.

Mr. Phang, have you enter'd the action?
— It is entcr'd. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

Agues and fevers are entered promiscuously, yet in the few bills they have been distinguished. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

To E'NTER. v. n.

1. To come in; to go in.

Be not slothful to go and to enter to possess the land. Judges, xviii. 9.

Other creature here,
Beast, bird, insect, or worm, durst enter none. Milton, P. L.

2. To penetrate mentally; to make intellectual entrance.

He is particularly pleased with Livy for his manner of telling a story, and with Sallust for his entering into internal principles of action. Addison, Spect.

They were not capable of entering into the numerous concurring springs of action. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

3. To engage in.

The French king hath often entered on several expensive projects, on purpose to dissipate wealth. Addison on the War.

Gentlemen did not care to enter upon business till after their morning draught. Tatler.

4. To be initiated in.

O pity and shame, that those who to live well
Enter'd so fair, should turn aside! Milton, P. L.

As soon as they once entered into a taste of pleasure, politeness, and magnificence, they fell into a thousand violences, conspiracies, and divisions. Addison on Italy.

E'NTERDEAL. n. s. [entre and deal.] Reciprocal transactions. Obsolete.

For he is practis'd well in policy,
And thereto doth his cunning most apply;
To learn the enterdeal of princes strange,
To mark th' intent of counsels, and the change
Of states. Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

E'NTERER.* n. s. [from enter.] One who is making a beginning or first entrance.

Who dreams of nature free from nature's strife?
Who dreams of perfect happiness below? —
The hope-flush'd enterer on the stage of life,
The youth to knowledge unchastis'd by woe.
Seward's Letters, (1786,) i. 185.

E'NTERING. n. s. [from enter.] Entrance; passage into a place.

It is laid waste, so that there is no house, no entering in. Isaiah, xxiii. 1.

To ENTERLA'CE.† v. a. [entrelasser, Fr.] To intermix; to interweave.

Also in those daunces were enterlaced ditties of wanton love or ribaudrye, with frequent remembrance of the most vile idols. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 63.

This lady walked outright, till she might see her enter into a fine close arbour: it was of trees, whose branches so lovingly enterlaced one another, that it could resist the strongest violence of the sight. Sidney.

ENTERO'CELE. n. s. [enterocele, Lat.] A rupture from the bowels pressing through or dilating the peritonæum, so as to fall down into the groin. The remedy in such cases is chiefly by trusses and bolsters. Quincy.

If the intestine only is fallen, it becomes an enterocele; if the omentum or epiploon, epiplocele; and if both, entero-epiplocele. Sharp, Surgery.

ENTERO'LOGY. n. s. [ἔντερον and λόγος.] The anatomical account of the bowels and internal parts.

ENTERO'MPHALOS. n. s. [ἔντερον and ὄμφαλος.] An umbilical or naval rupture.

ENTERPA'RLANCE. n. s. [entre and parler, French.] Parley; mutual talk; conference.

During the enterparlance the Scots discharged against the English, not without breach of the laws of the field. Hayward.

ENTERPLEA'DER. n. s. [entre and plead.] The discussing of a point incidentally falling out, before the principal cause can take end. For example: two several persons, being found heirs to land by two several officers in one county, the king is brought in doubt whether livery ought to be made; and therefore, before livery be made to either, they must enterplead; that is, try between themselves who is the right heir. Cowel.

E'NTERPRISE. n. s. [entreprise, French.] An undertaking of hazard; an arduous attempt.

Now is the time to execute mine enterprises to the destruction of the enemies. Judith, ii. 5.

Whet on Warwick to this enterprise.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The day approach'd, when fortune should decide
Th' important enterprise, and give the bride.
Dryden.

To E'NTERPRISE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To undertake; to attempt; to essay.

Nor shall I to the work thou enterprisest
Be wanting, but afford thee equal aid.
Milton, P. L.

Princes were only chiefs of those assemblies, by whose consultations and authority the great actions were resolved and enterprised. Temple.

An epick poem, or the heroick action of some great commander, enterprised for the common good and honour of the Christian cause, and executed happily, may be as well written now as it was of old by the heathens. Dryden.

Haste then, and lose no time:
The business must be enterpris'd this night;
We must surprise the court in its delight. Dryden.

2. To receive; to entertain. Obsolete.

In goodly garments, that her well became,
Fair marching forth in honourable wise,
Him at the threshold met, and well did enterprise.
Spenser, F. Q.

E'NTERPRISER.† n. s. [from enterprise.] A man of enterprise; one who undertakes great things; one who engages himself in important and dangerous designs.

They commonly proved great enterprisers with happy success. Hayward on Edw. VI.

Wit makes an enterpriser; sense a man.
Young, Night Th. 8.

To ENTERTA'IN. v. a. [entretenir, Fr.]

1. To converse with; to talk with.

His head was so well stored a magazine, that nothing could be proposed which he was not readily furnished to entertain any one in. Locke.

2. To treat at the table.

You shall find an apartment fitted up for you, and shall be every day entertained with beef or mutton of my own feeding. Addison, Spect.

3. To receive hospitably.

Be not forgetful to entertain strangers; for thereby some have entertained angels unawares. Heb. xiii. 2.

Heav'n, set ope thy everlasting gates,
To entertain my vows of thanks and praise.
Shakspeare.

4. To keep in one's service.

How many men would you require to the furnishing of this which you take in hand? And how long space would you have them entertained? Spenser on Ireland.

You, sir, I entertain for one of my hundred; only I do not like the fashion of your garments. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

I'll weep and sigh,
And, leaving so his service, follow you,
So please you entertain me, Shakspeare, Cymb.

5. To reserve in the mind.

This purpose God can entertain towards us. Decay of Piety.

6. To please; to amuse; to divert.

David entertained himself with the meditations of God's law, not his hidden decrees or councils. Decay of Piety.

They were capable of entertaining themselves on a thousand subjects, without running into the common topicks. Addison.

The history of the Royal Society shows how well philosophy becometh a narration: the progress of knowledge is as entertaining as that of arms. Felton on the Classics.

In gardens, art can only reduce the beauties of nature to a figure which the common eye may better take in, and is therefore more entertained with. Pope, Pref. to the Iliads.

7. To admit with satisfaction.

Reason can never permit the mind to entertain probability, in opposition to knowledge and certainty. Locke.

ENTERTA'IN.* n. s. [Fr. entretien. Often used by Spenser; now obsolete.] Entertainment.

But need, that answers not to all requests,
Bade them not look for better entertayne.
Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 27.

After all her princely entertayne.
Spenser, F. Q. v. ix. 37.

Your entertain shall be,
As doth befit our honour and your worth.
Shakspeare, Pericles.

ENTERTA'INER.† n. s. [from entertain.]

1. One that keeps others in his service.

He was, in his nature and constitution of mind, not very apprehensive or forecasting of future events afar off, but an entertainer of fortune by the day. Bacon, Hen. VII.

Righteousness is immortal, and will immortalize the entertainers of it. Cudworth, Serm. p. 89.

2. One that treats others at his table.

[They] proved ingrateful and treacherous guests to their best friends and entertainers.
Milton, Observ. on the Art of Peace.
He shews both to the guests and to the entertainer their great mistake. Smalridge.
It is little the sign of a wise or good man to suffer temperance to be transgressed, in order to purchase the repute of a generous entertainer.
Atterbury.

3. One that receives sincerely and reverentially.
We draw nigh to God, when, upon our conversion to him, we become the receptacles and entertainers of his good Spirit. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 89.

4. One that pleases, diverts, or amuses.
Then did the third pageant present themselves unto him,—but he thought he saw all the forenamed entertainers at once,—leap, plunge, and drown themselves in puddles.
Nash, Terrors of the Night, (1594.)

ENTERTA'ININGLY.* adv. [from the part. entertaining.] In an amusing or diverting manner.
My conversation, says Dryden very entertainingly of himself, is dull and slow, my humour saturnine and reserved: In short, I am none of those who endeavour to break jests in company, or make repartees! Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

ENTERTA'INMENT.† n. s. [from entertain, old Fr. entretenement.]

1. Conversation.
The queen desires you to use some gentle entertainments to Laertes, before you fall to play.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Treatment at the table; convivial provision.
Arrived there, the little house they fill,
Ne look for entertainment where none was;
Rest is their feast, and all things at their will;
The noblest mind the best contentment has.
Spenser, F. Q.
With British bounty in his ship he feasts
Th' Hesperian princes, his amazed guests,
To find that watry wilderness exceed
The entertainment of their great Madrid. Waller.

3. Hospitable reception.
His office was to give entertainment,
And lodging unto all that came and went.
Spenser, F. Q. i. x. 37.

4. Reception; admission.
I am next to consider that simplicity of manners, which should always accompany the sincere entertainment and practice of the precepts of the Gospel.
Sprat, Serm. (1676.)
It is not easy to imagine how it should at first gain entertainment, but much more difficult to conceive how it should be universally propagated.
Tillotson.

5. The state of being in pay as soldiers or servants.
Have you an army ready, say you?
——A most royal one. The centurions and their charges distinctly billeted, already in the entertainment, and to be on foot at an hour's warning.
Shakspeare, Coriol.

6. Payment of soldiers or servants. Now obsolete.
The entertainment of the general, upon his first arrival, was but six shillings and eight pence.
Davies on Ireland.
The captains did covenant with the king to serve him with certain numbers of men, for certain wages and entertainments. Davies on Ireland.
Drawing out the war in Gallia,
For which thou late triumph'st; dissembling long
That Sacrovir to be an enemy,
Only to make thy entertainment more.
B. Jonson, Sejanus.

7. Amusement; diversion.
Because he that knoweth least is fittest to ask questions, it is more reason, for the entertainment of the time, that he ask me questions than that I ask you. Bacon, New Atlantis.
Passions ought to be our servants, and not our masters; to give us some agitation for entertainment, but never to throw reason out of its seat.
Temple.

8. Dramatick performance; the lower comedy.
A great number of dramatick entertainments are not comedies, but five-act farces. Gay.

ENTERTI'SSUED. adj. [entre and tissue.] Interwoven or intermixed with various colours or substances.
The sword, the mace, the crown imperial,
The entertissued robe of gold and pearl.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

E'NTHEAT.* adj. [Greek ἔνθεος.] Our old word for enthusiastick. Ash has entheal, "divinely inspired."
His genius justly, in an entheat rage,
Oft lash'd the dull-sworn factors for the stage.
Verses by W. Hodgson, Pref. to B. Jonson's Works.

To ENTHRA'L.* See To INTHRAL. Milton, however, writes it with en.

To ENTHRI'L.* v. a. [from thrill.] To pierce; to penetrate.
A dart we saw how it did light
Right on her breast, and therewithal pale Death
Enthrilling it to reave her of her breath.
Sackville, Induc. Mir. for Mag.

To ENTHRO'NE.† v. a. [Fr. enthroner.]

1. To place on a regal seat.
Mercy is above this scepter'd sway;
It is enthroned in the hearts of kings;
It is an attribute to God himself.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Ven.
On a tribunal silver'd,
Cleopatra and himself, in chairs of gold,
Were publickly enthron'd. Shakspeare.
Beneath a sculptur'd arch he sits enthron'd,
The peers, encircling, form an awful round.
Pope, Odyss.

2. To invest with sovereign authority.
Henry III.—in disinheriting and seizing on his subjects' possessions, without judicial course, beginning with those two great potentates Richard earl of Cornwall, his brother, and William le Marshal earl of Pembroke, bred most intestine trouble twixt him and his barons, although sometime discontinued, yet not extinguished even till his declining days of enthroned felicity.
Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 17.
This pope was no sooner elected and enthroned, but that he began to exercise his new rapines.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

To ENTHRO'NIZE.* v. a. To enthrone.
Right princely virtue, fit to reign,
Enthroniz'd in her spirit remain.
Davies, Hymns of Astræa, (1622,) H. xxii.
With what grace
Doth mercy sit enthroniz'd on thy face!
J. Hall, Poems, (1646,) p. 78.

To ENTHU'NDER.* v. n. [from thunder.] To make a noise like thunder.
Against them all she proudly did enthunder,
Until her masts were beaten over-board.
Mir. for Mag. p. 850.

ENTHU'SIASM.† n. s. [ἐνθουσιασμὸς, Gr. enthusiasme, old Fr. Cotgrave. The earliest example of our word, given by Dr. Johnson, is that from Dryden. About half a century before Dryden's work, the word was written, like its Greek original, "enthusiasmos," and defined "poetical fury." V. Cockeram's Vocabulary. Fleckno, upon whom Dryden exercised his satire, uses our word in the plural; which is not very common. "With thy enthusiasms come." Invocation of Silence.]

1. A vain belief of private revelation; a vain confidence of divine favour or communication.
Enthusiasm is founded neither on reason nor divine revelation, but rises from the conceits of a warmed or overweening brain. Locke.

2. Heat of imagination; violence of passion; confidence of opinion.
It [enthusiasm] makes us give a stronger assent to the conclusion than the evidence of the premises will warrant; then, reason begins to be betrayed; and then enthusiasm properly commences. Warburton to Hurd, Lett. 40.

3. Elevation of fancy; exaltation of ideas.
Imaging is, in itself, the very height and life of poetry, which, by a kind of enthusiasm, or extraordinary emotion of soul, makes it seem to us that we behold those things which the poet paints.
Dryden, Juv. Pref.

ENTHU'SIAST.† n. s. [ἐνθουσιαω, Gr. enthusiasta, Lat.]

1. One who vainly imagines a private revelation; one who has a vain confidence of his intercourse with God.
Enthusiasts pretend that they have the gift of prophecy by dreams.
Pagitt's Heresiography, (1654,) p. 29.
Let an enthusiast be principled that he or his teacher is inspired, and acted by an immediate communication of the Divine Spirit, and you in vain bring the evidence of clear reasons against his doctrine. Locke.

2. One of a hot imagination, or violent passions.
Chapman seems to have been of an arrogant turn, and an enthusiast in poetry.
Pope, Pref. to the Iliads.

3. One of elevated fancy, or exalted ideas.
Her little soul is ravish'd, and so pour'd
Into loose extasies, that she is plac'd
Above herself, Musick's enthusiast.
Crashaw, Musick's Duel.
At last divine Cecilia came,
Inventress of the vocal frame;
The sweet enthusiast, from her sacred store,
Enlarg'd the former narrow bounds,
And added length to solemn sounds,
With nature's mother wit, and arts unknown before.
Dryden.

ENTHUSIA'STICAL.† } adj. [ἐνθουσιαστικὸς,
ENTHUSIA'STICK. } Greek.]

1. Persuaded of some communication with the Deity.
He pretended not to any seraphick enthusiastical raptures, or inimitable unaccountable transports of devotion. Calamy.
Did ever you, or any body else, ever see such a place as Heaven? For God's sake, therefore, leave these enthusiastical whimsies, and talk like men. Goodman, Winter's Ev. Conf. p. 133.

2. Vehemently hot in any cause.

3. Elevated in fancy; exalted in ideas.
An enthusiastick or prophetick style, by reason of the eagerness of the fancy, doth not always follow the even thread of discourse. Burnet.
At last, sublim'd
To rapture and enthusiastic heat,
We feel the present Deity. Thomson.

ENTHUSIA'STICK.* n. s. An enthusiast; one who vainly pretends an intercourse with God.
The dervis and other santoons, or enthusiasticks, being in the croud, express their zeal by turning round. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 326.

E'NTHYMEM. n. s. [ἐνθύμημα, Gr.] An argument consisting only of an antecedent and consequential proposition; a syllogism where the major proposition is suppressed, and only the minor and consequence produced in words.

Playing much upon the simple or lustrative argumentation, to induce their enthymems unto the people, they take up popular conceits.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

What is an enthymem? quoth Cornelius. Why, an enthymem, replied Crambe, is when the major is indeed married to the minor, but the marriage kept secret. Arbuthnot and Pope.

ENTHYMEMA'TICAL.* adj. [from enthymem.] In the form of an enthymem.

Encountered as they may be with handy stroke of syllogism, or enthymematical conclusion.
Tooker, Fabr. of the Church, (1604), p.63.

To ENTI'CE.† v. a. [of uncertain etymology, Dr. Johnson says. The old Fr. enticer, "exciter, provoquer," is the parent of our word. V. Roquef. Gloss. Lang. Rom.] To allure; to attract; to draw by blandishments or hopes to something sinful or destructive.

The readiest way to entangle the mind with false doctrine, is first to entice the will to wanton living. Ascham, Schoolmaster.

If a man entice a maid that is not betrothed, he shall surely endow her to be his wife.
Ex. xxii. 16.

So sang the syrens, with enchanting sound,
Enticing all to listen, and be drown'd. Granville.

ENTI'CEMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. enticement, "impulsion, instigation." Roq.]

1. The act or practice of alluring to ill.

Suppose we that the sacred word of God can at their hands receive due honour, by whose enticement the holy ordinances of the church endure every where open contempt? Hooker.

And here to every thirsty wanderer,
By sly enticement gives his baneful cup,
With many murmurs mixt. Milton, Comus.

2. The means by which one is allured to ill; blandishment; allurement.

Beware of them, Diana; their promises, enticements, oaths, tokens, and all these engines of lust, are not the things they go under: many a maid hath been seduced by them.
Shakspeare, All's Well.

In all these instances we must separate intreaty and enticements from deceit or violence.
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

ENTI'CER.† n. s. [from entice.] One that allures to ill.

Rose-coloured cheeks are of themselves potent enticers. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 475.

A mincing gait, a decent and an affected pace, are most powerful enticers.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 477.

These writers — traduce her as the enticer of her husband into the basest idolatries.
Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

ENTI'CING.* n. s. [from entice.] The act of alluring to evil.

The third and last sign that I shall mention, of a temptation's attaining its full hour or maturity, is a more than usual restlessness and importunity in its enticings or instigations. South, Serm. vi. 269.

ENTI'CINGLY. adv. [from entice.] Charmingly; in a winning manner.

She strikes a lute well,
Sings most enticingly.
Beaum. and Fl. Hum. Lieutenant.

E'NTIERTY.† n. s. [old Fr. entiertie; Lat. integritas.] The whole; not barely a part.

Sometime the attorney thrusteth into the writ the uttermost quantity; or else setteth down an entierty, where but a moiety was to be passed.
Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

ENTI'RE.† adj. [entier, Fr. intiero, Ital. integer, Lat. Our word was formerly written enteer, as by Lydgate; and, in our old lexicography, "Entier or whole: Entierly: Entierness." Huloet.]

1. Whole; undivided.

It is not safe to divide, but to extol the entire; still in general. Bacon, Collect. of Good and Evil.

2. Unbroken; complete in its parts.

An antique model of the famous Laocoon is entire in those parts where the statue is maimed.
Addison on Italy.

Water and earth, composed of old worn particles and fragments of particles, would not be of the same nature and texture now with water and earth composed of entire particles in the beginning.
Newton, Opticks.

3. Full; complete; comprising all requisites in itself.

The church of Rome hath rightly considered that publick prayer is a duty entire in itself, a duty requisite to be performed much oftener than sermons can be made. Hooker.

An action is entire when it is complete in all its parts; or, as Aristotle describes it, when it consists of a beginning, a middle, and an end.
Spectator, No. 267.

4. Sincere; hearty.

Love is not love,
When it is mingled with respects that stand
Aloof from the entire point. Shaksp. K. Lear.

He run a course more entire with the king of Arragon, but more laboured and officious with the king of Castile. Bacon.

5. Firm; sure; solid; fixed.

Entire and sure the monarch's rule must prove,
Who founds her greatness on her subject's love.
Prior.

6. Unmingled; unallayed.

Wrath shall be no more
Thenceforth, but in thy presence joy entire.
Milton, P. L.

7. Honest; firmly adherent; faithful.

No man had ever a heart more entire to the king, the church, or his country; but he never studied the easiest ways to those ends. Clarendon.

They had many persons, of whose entire affections they were well assured. Clarendon.

8. In full strength; with vigour unabated; with power unbroken.

Then back to fight again, new breathed and entire. Spenser, F. Q.

9. Impartial.

They were therefore trusted with arbitrary power, because it was foreseen that juries were not like to be entire. Clarendon, Life, ii. 240.

10. Inward.

Casting flakes of lustfull fire,
From his false eyes, into their hearts and parts entire. Spenser, F. Q. iv. viii. 48.

ENTI'RELY. adv. [from entire.]

1. In the whole; without division.

Euphrates, running, sinketh partly into the lakes of Chaldea, and falls not entirely into the Persian sea. Ralegh.

2. Completely; fully.

Here finish'd he, and all that he had made
View'd and beheld! all was entirely good.
Milton, P. L.

Chyle may be said to be a vegetable juice in the stomach and intestines; as it passeth into the lacteals it grows still more animal, and when it has circulated often with the blood, it is entirely so. Arbuthnot.

General consent entirely altered the whole frame of their government. Swift.

3. With firm adherence; faithfully.

Which when his pensive lady saw from far,
Great woe and sorrow did her soul assay,
As weening that the sad end of the war,
And gan to highest God entirely pray.
Spenser, F. Q.

ENTI'RENESS.† n. s. [from entire.]

1. Totality; completeness; fulness.

But I
Should injure nature, virtue, and destiny,
Should I divide and discontinue so
Virtue, which did in one entireness grow.
Donne, Poems, p. 246.

Doting antiquaries — more admire the rust or fragments of coins, than their splendour or entireness. Whitlock, Mann. of the Eng. p. 216.

In an arch, each single stone, which, if severed from the rest, would be perhaps defenceless, is sufficiently secured by the solidity and entireness of the whole fabrick, of which it is a part. Boyle.

2. Honesty; integrity.

3. Intimacy; familiarity; friendship.

True Christian love may be separated from acquaintance, and acquaintance from entireness.
Bp. Hall, Holy Observ.

A little friendship with such is enough; the less communion with any of God's enemies, the more safety; and sure I am, that those who affect a familiar entireness with such, bewray either too much boldness, or too little conscience.
Junius, Sin Stigm. p. 777.

ENTI'RETY.* n. s. [from entire.] Completeness. See ENTIERTY.

This is the natural and regular consequence of the union and entirety of their interest. Blackstone.

E'NTITATIVE.* adj. [from entity.] Considered by itself; abstracted from all circumstances.

Metaphysicians have here a noble field for their abstracted flights, whether, according to Durandus, there be any divine concourse in sin? Whether, with others, moral evil has any real essence, or real efficient cause, or only deficient? Whether there be any pure evil? Whether it be a privation of being, or a real positive being? Whether it has not some natural good for its subject, and so the entitative material act of sin be physically or morally good? &c.
Ellis, Knowledge of Div. Things, p. 340.

E'NTITATIVELY.* adv. [from entitative.] A thing is said to be taken or considered entitatively, or "secundum entitatem," when considered nakedly, and precisely, according to what it is in itself, without any thing intrinsick; as, Peter, entitatively taken, is Peter as a thing, a substance, a man, &c. without any regard to his being a lord, a husband, learned, &c.
Chambers.

To ENTI'TLE. v. a. [entituler, Fr.]

1. To grace or dignify with a title or honourable appellation.

2. To give a title or discriminative appellation; as, to entitle a book.

Besides the Scripture, the books which they call ecclesiastical were thought not unworthy to be brought into public audience, and with that name they entitled the books which we term Apocryphal.
Hooker.

Next favourable thou,
Who highly thus to entitle me vouchsaf'st,
Far other name deserving. Milton, P. L.

3. To superscribe; or prefix as a title.

How ready zeal for party is to entitle christianity to their designs, and to charge atheism on those who will not submit. Locke.

We have been entitled, and have had our names prefixed at length to whole volumes of mean productions. Swift.

4. To give a claim to any thing.

But we, descended from your sacred line,
Entitled to your heav'n and rites divine,
Are banish'd earth. Dryden, Virg.

God discovers the martyr and confessor without the trial of flames and tortures, and will hereafter entitle many to the reward of actions which they had never the opportunity of performing.
Addison, Spect.

He entitled himself to the continuance of the divine protection and goodness, by humiliation and prayer. Atterbury.

Hardly even is the penitent sinner saved; thus difficult is that duty, by which alone he can be reconciled to his Creator, and entitled to the mercies of the gospel. Rogers.

5. To grant any thing as claimed by a title.

This is to entitle God's care how and to what we please. Locke.

E'NTITY.† n. s. [entitas, low Lat.]

1. Something which really is; a real being.

Where we were when the foundations of the earth were laid, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy, he must answer who asked it; who understands entities of preordination, and beings yet unbeing; who hath in his intellect the ideal existencies of things, and entities before their extances.
Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 25.

Dear hope! earth's dowry and heaven's debt,
The entity of things that are not yet:
Subt'lest, but surest being. Crashaw.

Fortune is no real entity, nor physical essence, but a mere relative signification. Bentley.

Where entity and quiddity,
The souls of defunct bodies, fly. Hudibras.

2. A particular species of being.

All eruptions of air, though small and slight, give an entity of sound, which we call crackling, puffing, and spitting; as in bay salt and bay leaves cast into the fire. Bacon.

God's decrees of salvation and damnation, both Romish and reformed, affix to men's particular entity, absolutely considered, without any respect to demeanours. Hammond on Fundamentals.

To ENTO'IL. v. a. [from toil.] To ensnare; to entangle; to bring into toils or nets.

He cut off their land forces from their ships, and entoiled both their navy and their camp with a greater power than theirs, both by sea and land.
Bacon, New Atlantis.

To ENTO'MB.† v. a. [old Fr. entomber.] To put into a tomb; to bury.

Processions were first begun for the interring of holy martyrs, and the visiting of those places where they were entombed. Hooker.

The cry went once for thee, and yet it may again,
If thou would'st not entomb thyself alive,
And case thy reputation in a tent. Shakspeare.

I think I could, with far less pain and reluctancy, suffer my body to be buried alive in the cold earth, than so stark and stupid a conceit to entomb my soul. More, Notes on Psychathanasia.

They, within the beast's vast womb,
The choice and flower of all their troops entomb.
Denham.

ENTO'MBMENT.* n. s. [from entomb.] Burial; the state of being shut up in a tomb.

The strictest imprisonment is far more tolerable than being shut up by a lazy humour from profitable employment; this enchaineth a man hand and foot; this is beyond any imprisonment; it is the very entombment of a man, quite sequestering him from the world, and debarring him from any valuable concerns therein.
Barrow, Serm. vol. iii. S. 19.

Many thousands have had their entombment in the waters.
More, Myst. of Godliness, (1660,) p. 16.

ENTOMO'LOGY.* n. s. [Fr. entomologie; from the Gr. ἔντομον, an insect, and λόγος, discourse.] That part of natural history, which treats of insects. The French word, as well as our own, is of recent adoption.

Nothing would recommend entomology more than some neat plates, that should well express the generic distinctions of insects, according to Linnæus. White, Hist. of Selborne, p. 91.

ENTORTILA'TION.* n. s. [Fr. entortillement, from the Lat. tortilis.] A turning into a circle or round figure.

Willing that those which should work in the borders [of the table,] raisings, flowries, and wrappings, entortilations, and such like, should amuse themselves only for beautifying and decoration; and what was to be plain should answer to the measure and dimension; and that in all these things they should be exquisitely careful.
Donne, Hist. of the Sept. (1633,) p. 47.

To ENTRA'IL. v. a. [intralciare, Italian.] To mingle; to interweave; to diversify.

Over him, art striving to compare
With nature, did an arbor green dispred,
Framed of wanton ivy, flow'ring fair,
Through which the fragrant eglantine did spread,
His pricking arms entrail'd with roses red.
Spenser, F. Q.

A little wicker basket,
Made of fine twigs entrailed curiously,
In which they gather'd flowers. Spenser, Prothal.

E'NTRAILS. n. s. without a singular. [entrailles, Fr. ἔντερα, Gr.]

1. The intestines; the inward parts; the guts.

What, hath thy fiery heart so parch'd thine entrails,
That not a tear can fall? Shaksp. Hen. VI.

The entrails are all without bones; save that a bone is sometimes found in the heart of a stag.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

I tear that harden'd heart from out her breast,
Which with her entrails makes my hungry hounds a feast. Dryden.

2. The internal parts.

A precious ring that lightens all the hole,
And shews the ragged entrails of this pit. Shaksp.

He had brought to light but little of that treasure, that lay so long hid in the dark entrails of America. Locke.

The earth hath lost
Most of her ribs, as entrails; being now
Wounded no less for marble than for gold.
B. Jonson.

To ENTRA'MMEL.* v. a. [from trammel; which see. "Entrammelled, curled, frizzled, as, outdrawn locks of hair." Sherwood, and Cotgrave, in V. Passefilé.] To catch; to entangle; to trammel.

They were meant for accusations, but are most pitiful failings, entrammelled with fictions and ignorance.
Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, (1693,) p. 104.

E'NTRANCE. n. s. [entrant, Fr.]

1. The power of entering into a place.

Whence are you, sir? Has the porter his eyes in his head, that he gives entrance to such companions? Pray, get you out. Shaksp. Coriol.

Where diligence opens the door of the understanding, and impartially keeps it, truth is sure to find both an entrance and a welcome too. South.

2. The act of entering.

The reason that I gather he is mad,
Is a mad tale he told to-day at dinner,
Of his own door being shut against his entrance.
Shakspeare.

Better far, I guess,
That we do make our entrance several ways.
Shakspeare.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players;
They have their exits and their entrances. Shaksp.

3. The passage by which a place is entered; avenue.

He charged them to keep the passages of the hilly country; for by them there was an entrance into Judea. Judith, iv. 7.

Palladio did conclude, that the principal entrance was never to be regulated by any certain dimensions, but by the dignity of the master.
Wotton, Architecture.

Many are the ways that lead
To his grim cave all dismal! yet to sense
More terrible at the entrance than within.
Milton, P. L.

Let this, and every other anxious thought,
At the entrance of my threshold be forgot.
Dryden, Juv.

4. Initiation; commencement.

This is that which, at first entrance, balks and cools them: they want their liberty. Locke.

5. Intellectual ingress; knowledge.

He that travelleth a country before he hath some entrance into the language, goeth to school, and not to travel. Bacon, Essays.

6. The act of taking possession of an office or dignity.

From the first entrance of this king to his reign, never was king either more loving, or better beloved. Hayward, Edw. VI.

7. The beginning of any thing.

St. Augustine, in the entrance of one of his sermons, makes a kind of apology. Hakewill on Prov.

The earl of Holland we have had occasion to mention before in the first entrance upon this discourse. Clarendon.

To ENTRA'NCE. v. a. [from trance; transe, French, from transeo, Latin, to pass over, to pass for a time from one region to another.]

1. To put into a trance; to withdraw the soul wholly to other regions, while the body appears to lie in dead sleep.

2. To put into an ecstasy; to make insensible of present objects.

With delight I was entranced, and carried so far from myself, as that I am sorry that you ended so soon. Spenser.

Adam, now enforc'd to close his eyes,
Sunk down, and all his spirits became entranc'd.
Milton, P. L.

And I so ravish'd with her heav'nly note,
I stood entranc'd, and had no room for thought;
But, all o'erpower'd with ecstasy of bliss,
Was in a pleasing dream of paradise. Dryden.

To ENTRA'P.† v. a. [old Fr. entraper.]

1. To ensnare; to catch in a trap or snare.

Take heed, mine eyes, how ye do stare
Henceforth too rashly on that guileful net;
In which, if ever eyes entrapped are,
Out of her bands ye by no means shall get.
Spenser, F. Q.

The fraud of England, not the force of France,
Hath now entrapt the noble-minded Talbot.
Shakspeare.

2. To involve unexpectedly in difficulties or distresses; to entangle.

Misfortune waits advantage to entrap
The man most wary, in her whelming lap.
Spenser, F. Q.

He sought to entrap me by intelligence. Shaks.

3. To take advantage of.

An injurious person lies in wait to entrap thee in thy word. Ecclus. viii. 11.

To ENTREA'SURE.* See To INTREASURE.

To ENTRE'AT. v. a. [traeter, French.]

1. To petition; to solicit; to importune.

Isaac entreated the Lord for his wife.
Gen. xxv. 21.

2. To prevail upon by solicitation.
I have a wife, whom, I protest, I love;
I would she were in heaven, so she could
Entreat some pow'r to change this currish Jew.
Shakspeare.
The Lord was entreated of him, and Rebecca his wife conceived. Gen. xxv. 21.
It were a fruitless attempt to appease a power, whom no prayers could entreat, no repentance reconcile. Rogers.
3. To treat or use well or ill.
Whereas thy servant worketh truly, entreat him not evil. Ecclus. vii. 20.
Must you, sir John, protect my lady here?
Entreat her not the worse in that I pray
You use her well. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
Well I entreated her, who well deserv'd:
I call'd her often; for she always serv'd:
Use made her person easy to my sight,
And ease insensibly produc'd delight. Prior.
4. To entertain; to amuse. Not used.
My lord, I must entreat the time alone.
— God shield I should disturb devotion. Shaks.
5. To entertain; to receive. Not in use.
The garden of Proserpino this hight,
And in the midst thereof a silver seat,
With a thick arbour goodly overdight,
In which she often us'd, from open heat,
Herself to shroud, and pleasures to entreat.
Spenser, F. Q.

To ENTRE'AT. v. n.
1. To offer a treaty or compact. Not used.
Alexander was the first that entreated of true peace with them. 1 Mac. x. 47.
2. To treat; to discourse. Not used.
The most admirable mystery of nature is the turning of iron, touched with the loadstone, toward the north pole, of which I shall have farther occasion to entreat. Hakewill.
3. To make a petition.
They charged me, on pain of perpetual displeasure, neither to speak of him, entreat for him, or any way sustain him. Shakspeare.
The Janizaries entreated for them, as valiant men. Knolles.

ENTRE'AT.* n. s. [from the verb.] Entreaty. Not now in use.
This is he,
For whom I thwarted Soliman's entreats,
And for whose exile I lamented thus.
Trag. of Solim. and Perseda, (1599.)

ENTRE'ATABLE.* adj. [from entreat.] That may be entreated, or is soon entreated. Huloet.

ENTRE'ATANCE. n. s. [from entreat.] Petition; entreaty; solicitation. Not used.
These two entreatance made they might be heard,
Nor was their just petition long deny'd. Fairfax.

ENTRE'ATER.* n. s. [from entreat.] One who makes a petition.
Yet are they no advocates of ours, but petitioners and intreaters for us.
Fulke on the Rhemish Test. (1617), p. 825.

ENTRE'ATIVE.* adj. [from entreat.] Treating; pleading.
Oft have I season'd savoury periods
With sugar'd words;—
And oft embellish'd my entreative phrase
With smelling flowers of vernant rhetorick.
Brewer, Com. of Lingua, (1657,) i. 1.

ENTRE'ATY.† n. s. [from entreat.]
1. Petition; prayer; solicitation; supplication; request.
If my weak orator
Can from his mother win the duke of York,
Anon expect him here; but if she be
Obdurate to entreaties, God forbid
We should infringe the holy privilege
Of sanctuary. Shakspeare, Rich. III.
2. Reception; entertainment. Obsolete.
If those cunning palates hither come,
They shall find guests' entreaty and good room.
B. Jonson, Epicœne.

ENTREME'TS.† n. s. [French, Dr. Johnson says. He should have added that the French word was anciently used for delicacies or choice dishes served in between the courses of a feast. In this sense, the father of English poetry uses it. "With wine at feasts — and tables full of entremees." Chaucer, Rom. R. 6831.] Small plates set between the main dishes.
Chards of beet are plants of white beet transplanted, producing great tops, which, in the midst, have a large white main shoot, which is the true chard used in pottages and entremets.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

*ENTREPO'T. n. s. [French.] A magazine; a warehouse. Common in military language.
[They] employèd a multitude of shipping, and settled many rich and flourishing colonies, as well as many entrepots and out distant factories.
Pownall on Antiq. (1782,) p. 68.

To ENTRI'CK.* v. a. [old Fr. intriquer. This is a forgotten but proper word, and a good substitute for the verb intricate, against which Dr. Johnson objects. See To INTRICATE.] To deceive; to perplex; to entangle.
That mirrour hath me now entricked.
Chaucer, Rom. R. ver. 1642.
You that love most entrickith.
Chaucer, Assemb. of Fowls, 403.

E'NTRY.† n. s. [from enter; entry, French of the eleventh century; entrée, later French; from the Latin intrare. Our word has also passed through the forms of entree and entresse; the former being used by Chaucer, the latter noticed by Coles.]
1. The passage by which any one enters a house.
Some there are that know the resorts and falls of business, that cannot sink into the main of it; like a house that hath convenient stairs and entries, but never a fair room. Bacon.
A strait long entry to the temple led,
Blind with high walls, and horror over head.
Dryden.
Is all this hurry made
On this account, because thou art afraid
A dirty hall or entry should offend
The curious eyes of thy invited friend?
Dryden, Juv.
We proceeded through the entry, and were necessarily kept in order by the situation. Tatler.
2. The act of entrance; ingress.
Bathing and anointing give a relaxation or emollition; and the mixture of oil and water is better than either of them alone, because water entereth better into the pores, and oil after entry softeneth better. Bacon, Nat. Hist.
The lake of Constance is formed by the entry of the Rhine. Addison on Italy.
By the entry of the chyle and air into the blood, by the lacteals, the animal may again revive.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.
3. The act of taking possession of any estate.
4. The act of registering or setting down in writing.
A notary made an entry of this act.
Bacon, New Atlantis.
5. The act of entering publickly into any city.
The day being come, he made his entry: he was a man of middle stature and age, and comely. Bacon.

To ENTU'NE.* v. a. [old Fr. entonner, "to tune, to sing, to chant, &c." Cotgrave. This is also a forgotten but useful word.] To tune; to chant.
Ful wel she sange the service divine
Entuned in hir nose ful swetely.
Chaucer, Prol. C. T.
They sung hymns and sonnets — entuned in a solemn and mournful note.
Hakewill on Providence, p. 429.

To ENTWI'NE.* See To INTWINE. Milton, however, writes it entwine.

ENTWI'NEMENT.* n. s. [from entwine.] Union; conjunction.
Like a mixture of roses and woodbines in a sweet entwinement.
Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, (1693,) p. 81.

To ENTWI'ST.* v. a. [from twist.] To wreath round or together.
So doth the woodbine the sweet honeysuckle
Gently entwist. Shakspeare, Mids. N. Dr.

To ENU'BILATE. v. a. [e and nubile, Latin.] To clear from clouds. Dict.

To ENU'CLEATE.† v. a. [enucleo, Lat.] To solve; to clear; to disentangle. Dict.
Elucidating what was obscure, enucleating what was hard.
Dr. Sclater, Serm. at the Fun. of A. Wheelock, 1654.

To ENVA'SSAL.* v. a. [from vassal.] To make over to another as his slave. A serviceable but hitherto unnoticed word.
[They] subject and envassal themselves unto a base and new upstart servant of theirs.
Transl. of Boccalini, (1626,) p. 93.
But well I wote thou'lt not envassal me.
More, Song of the Soul, ii. i. i. 23.
[He] doth not fondly hug this and that particular created good thing, and envassal himself unto it. Cudworth, Serm. p. 65.

ENUCLEA'TION.* n. s. [Fr. enucleation.] Explanation; plain manifestation.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To ENVE'IGLE.* See To INVEIGLE.

To ENVE'LOPE.† v. a. [enveloper, Fr. Our word was at first envolupe, and is so used by Chaucer in the first definition of the meanings, that is, to wrap up.]
1. To inwrap; to cover; to invest with some integument.
He is most envoluped in sin.
Chaucer, Pardoner's Tale.
2. To cover; to hide; to surround.
The best and wholesom'st spirits of the night envelope you, good provost.
Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.
A cloud of smoke envelopes either host,
And all at once the combatants are lost:
Darkling they join adverse, and shock unseen,
Coursers with coursers justing, men with men.
Dryden.
It is but to approach nearer, and that mist that enveloped them will remove. Locke.
Nocturnal shades
This world envelope, and th' inclement air
Persuades men to repel benumming frosts. Philips.
3. To line; to cover on the inside.
His iron coat, all overgrown with rust,
Was underneath enveloped with gold,
Darkned with filthy dust. Spenser, F. Q.

ENVELO'PE.† n. s. [French.] A wrapper; an outward case; an integument; a cover.

A letter from the king of Spain was given to his daughter by the Spanish ambassador, and she tore the envelope, and let it fall.
Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1671.

Send these to paper-sparing Pope;
And, when he sits to write,
No letter with an envelope
Could give him more delight. Swift.

ENVE'LOPEMENT.* n. s. [old Fr. envelopement.] Perplexity; entanglement.

They have found so many contrary senses in the same text, that it is become difficult to see any sense at all, through their envelopements.
Search's Freewill, &c. (1763,) Pref.

To ENVE'NOM.† v. a. [from venom, old Fr. envenimer, to poison. And so Chaucer: "Age that all will envenime."]

1. To taint with poison; to poison; to impregnate with venom. It is never used of the person to whom poison is given, but of the draught, meat, or instrument by which it is conveyed.

The treacherous instrument is in thy hand,
Unbated and envenom'd. Shakspeare.

Alcides, from Oechalia crown'd
With conquest, felt the envenom'd robe, and tore,
Through pain, up by the roots Thessalian pines.
Milton, P. L.

One of that order, which envenoms even poison itself, and makes the Roman religion much more malignant and turbulent than otherwise it would be. Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. Dedic.

He would very frequently let fly an envenomed arrow. Tatler, No. 260.

Nor with envenomed tongue to blast the fame
Of harmless men. Philips.

2. To make odious.

Oh, what a world is this, when what is comely
Envenoms him that bears it! Shaks. As you like it.

3. To enrage; to exasperate.

With her full force she threw the pois'nous dart,
And fix'd it deep within Amata's heart;
That thus envenom'd she might kindle rage,
And sacrifice to strife her house and husband's age.
Dryden.

To ENVE'RMEIL.* v. a. [Fr. vermeil. Chaucer uses envermailed.] To dye red.

That lovely dye
That did thy cheek envermeil.
Milton, Ode on the Death of a Fair Infant.

E'NVIABLE. adj. [from envy.] Deserving envy; such as may excite envy.

They, in an enviable mediocrity of fortune, do happily possess themselves.
Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

E'NVIER. n. s. [from envy.] One that envies another; a maligner; one that desires the downfall of another.

Men had need beware how they be too perfect in compliments; for that enviers will give them that attribute, to the disadvantage of their virtues.
Bacon, Essays.

They ween'd
To win the mount of God, and on his throne
To set the envier of his state, the proud
Aspirer; but their thoughts prov'd fond and vain.
Milton, P. L.

All preferments in church and state were given by him, all his kindred and friends promoted, and all his enemies and enviers discountenanced.
Clarendon.

E'NVIOUS.† adj. [old Fr. envieux.]

1. Infected with envy; pained by the excellence or happiness of another.

A man of the most envious disposition that ever infected the air with his breath, whose eyes could not look right upon any happy man, nor ears bear the burden of any man's praise. Sidney.

Still in thy right hand carry gentle peace,
To silence envious tongues. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

2. Sometimes with against.

Be not thou envious against evil men.
Prov. xxiv. 19.

3. Sometimes with at.

Neither be thou envious at the wicked.
Prov. xxiv. 19.

4. Commonly with of.

Sure you mistake the precept, or the tree;
Heav'n cannot envious of his blessings be. Dryden.

E'NVIOUSLY. adv. [from envious.] With envy; with malignity; with ill-will, excited by another's good.

Damned spirits, being fallen from heaven, endeavour enviously to obstruct the ways that may lead us thither. Duppa.

How enviously the ladies look,
When they surprise me at my book!
And sure as they're alive at night,
As soon as gone, will shew their spight. Swift.

To ENVI'RON.† v. a. [environner, Fr. Dr. Johnson says. It should be added that the original is Greek, ἐν, in, and γῦρος, a circle, whence the Latin gyrus; and thus the French used the adverb environ for about; in which way Chaucer also employs it. "About the king ystondin environ Attendance, Diligence, &c." Court of Love, ver. 1031. He uses also the verb environ to surround. Barret calls environ "a French word made of the Latin, quasi in gyro." Alv. 1580. And Cotgrave gives us the old French verb engyronner, the same, he says, as environner.]

1. To surround; to encompass; to encircle.

The Canaanites and all the inhabitants of the land shall hear of it, and shall environ us round.
Joshua, vii. 9.

I stand as one upon a rock,
Environ'd with a wilderness of sea. Tit. Andron.

The country near unto the city of Sultania is on every side environed with huge mountains.
Knolles, Hist.

The manifold streams of goodly navigable rivers, as so many chains, environed the same site and temple. Bacon.

Within the environing rocks stood the city.
Sandys.

Thought following thought, and step by step led on,
He enter'd now the bordering desart wild,
And with dark shades and rocks environ'd round,
His holy meditation thus pursu'd. Milton, P. R.

God hath scattered several degrees of pleasure and pain in all the things that environ and affect us, and blended them together in almost all our thoughts. Locke.

2. To involve; to envelope.

May never glorious sun reflect his beams
Upon the country where you make abode!
But darkness and the gloomy shade of death
Environ you, till mischief and despair
Drive you to break your necks. Shaksp. Hen. VI.

Since she must go, and I must mourn, come, night,
Environ me with darkness whilst I write. Donne.

3. To surround in a hostile manner; to besiege, to hem in.

Methought a legion of foul fiends
Environed me, and howled in mine ears. Shaksp.

In thy danger,
If ever danger do environ thee,
Commend thy grievance to my holy prayer.
Shakspeare.

I did but prompt the age to quit their clogs,
By the known rules of ancient liberty,
When straight a barbarous noise environs me.
Milton, Sonnet.

4. To enclose; to invest.

The soldier, that man of iron,
Whom ribs of horrour all environ. Cleaveland.

ENVI'RONS.† n. s. pl. [environs, French. Dr. Johnson places the accent on the second syllable; some choose, in modern times, affectedly to adopt the French pronunciation. This word is somewhere used by Evelyn.] The neighbourhood or neighbouring places round about the country.

When you go to Genoa, pray observe carefully all the environs of it. Ld. Chesterfield.

Hitherto Mr. Shenstone had no conception of an whole, or of disposing his environs on any consistent plan, and giving it its present beautiful and picturesque appearance.
Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 51.

To ENU'MERATE. v. a. [enumero, Lat.] To reckon up singly; to count over distinctly; to number.

You must not only acknowledge to God that you are a sinner, but must particularly enumerate the kinds of sin whereof you know yourself guilty.
Wake, Prep. for Death.

Besides enumerating the gross defect of duty to the queen, I shew how all things were managed wrong. Swift.

ENUMERA'TION. n. s. [enumeratio, Latin.] The act of numbering or counting over; number told out.

Whosoever reads St. Paul's enumeration of duties, must conclude, that well nigh the business of Christianity is laid on charity. Sprat, Serm.

The chymists make spirit, salt, sulphur, water, and earth their five elements, though they are not all agreed in this enumeration of elements.
Watts, Logick.

ENU'MERATIVE.* adj. [from enumerate.] Reckoning up singly; counting over.

Being particular and enumerative of the variety of evils which have disordered his life.
Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, iii. § 5.

To ENU'NCIATE.† v. a. [enuncio, Lat.] To declare; to proclaim; to relate; to express. This word is given by Dr. Johnson without authority or example; but it is in the Old Vocabulary of Cockeram, and I have also found it in a very valuable writer of the seventeenth century. I have noticed this, because some have thought the word quite modern.

I know that there is such a man as Plato, though in the mean time I cannot tell what he is, nor what are all the truths that may be enuncinted concerning him. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 553.

ENUNCIA'TION.† n. s. [enunciatio, Latin.]

1. Declaration; publick attestation; open proclamation.

Preaching is to strangers and infants in Christ, to produce faith; but this sacramental enunciation is the declaration and confession of it by men in Christ, declaring it to be done, and owned, and accepted, and prevailing. Bp. Taylor.

2. Intelligence; information.

It remembers and retains such things as were never at all in the sense; as the conceptions, enunciations, and actions of the intellect and will.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

3. Expression, in writing.

A few changes have been made in the enunciations of this book, chiefly in those of the subsidiary propositions which Euclid introduced for the sake of the rest; they are expressed here in the manner that seemed best adapted to the new notation.
Playfair, Elements of Geometry, Pref.

4. Manner of utterance.

Without a graceful and pleasing enunciation all your elegancy of style in speaking is not worth one farthing. Ld. Chesterfield.

ENU'NCIATIVE.† adj. [from enunciate.] Declarative; expressive.

Esdras, Nehemias, Ezechial, and Daniel, although they were prophets; yet be their works compact in form of narrations, which by orators be called enunciative, and only perteineth to histories; wherein is expressed a thing done, and persons named. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 205.

This presumption only proceeds in respect of the dispositive words, and not in regard of the enunciative terms thereof. Ayliffe.

ENU'NCIATIVELY. adv. [from enunciative.] Declaratively.

E'NVOY.† n. s. [envoye, French.]

1. A publick minister sent from one power to another.

Now the Lycian lots conspire
With Phœbus; now Jove's envoy through the air
Brings dismal tidings. Denham.

Perseus sent envoys to Carthage, to kindle their hatred against the Romans. Arbuthnot on Coins.

2. A publick messenger, in dignity below an ambassador.

A gentleman, who was envoy from some German prince, whose dead father had been a companion to the knights of the most noble order of the Garter, made an address to his majesty, with a letter and return of the George and Garter. Sir T. Herbert, Mem. p. 29.

3. A messenger.

The watchful sentinels at ev'ry gate,
At ev'ry passage to the senses wait;
Still travel to and fro' the nervous way,
And their impressions to the brain convey;
Where their report the vital envoys make,
And with new orders are commanded back.
Blackmore.

4. Formerly, a kind of postscript, sent with poetical compositions, Mr. Tyrwhitt says, noticing the concluding stanzas of Chaucer's poems, to which the title of l'envoy is prefixed. But the term was not confined to poetical compositions. It was employed to enforce or recommend what had been previously written, whether in prose or rhyme. Not now in use.

Tragical tales, [in prose,] translated by Turbenville in time of his troubles out of sundrie Italians, with the argument and l'envoy to each tale. Lond. 1587.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 475.

E'NVOYSHIP.* n. s. [from envoy.] The office of an envoy.

Cain paid all due reverence to this lunar envoyship. Coventry, Phil. to Hyd. Conv. 3.

To ENU'RE.* See To INURE. Our old writers, however, usually write this word enure; but Dr. Johnson is well supported by authorities for inure.

To E'NVY.† v. a. [envier, French; invidere, Latin, from nimis video, to look too much upon what belongs to others. The old French envier (au jeu) is to vie; in which sense Chaucer and Spenser employ our word. But it is no longer so used. The word was also formerly accented on the last syllable, as might be shewn from the poetry of Spenser and B. Jonson. But no one will now imitate it.]

1. To hate another for excellence, happiness, or success.

Envy thou not the oppressor, and chuse none of his ways. Prov. iii. 31.

A woman does not envy a man for fighting courage, nor a man a woman for her beauty. Collier of Envy.

2. To grieve at any qualities of excellence in another.

I have seen the fight,
When I have envied thy behaviour. Shakspeare.

You cannot envy your neighbour's wisdom, if he gives you good counsel; nor his riches, if he supplies you in your wants; nor his greatness, if he employs it to your protection. Swift.

3. To grudge; to impart unwillingly; to withhold maliciously.

Jonson, who, by studying Horace, had been acquainted with the rules, seemed to envy others that knowledge. Dryden.

To E'NVY.† v. n. To feel envy; to feel pain at the sight of excellence or felicity: with at, Dr. Johnson says; but not exclusively so, as the examples which he gives might seem to argue; since they all have at. I therefore give the following without it.

And Moses said, enviest thou for my sake?
Numbers, xi. 29.

In seeking tales and informations
Against this man, whose honesty the devil
And his disciples only envy at,
Ye blew the fire that burns ye. Shaksp. Hen. VIII.

He that loves God is not displeased at accidents which God chuses, nor envies at those gifts he bestows. Bp. Taylor.

Who would envy at the prosperity of the wicked, and the success of persecutors?
Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

E'NVY. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Pain felt and malignity conceived at the sight of excellence or happiness.

Envy is a repining at the prosperity or good of another, or anger and displeasure at any good of another which we want, or any advantage another hath above us. Ray on the Creation.

Envy, to which th' ignoble mind's a slave,
Is emulation in the learn'd or brave. Pope.

2. It is used sometimes with of.

All the conspirators, save only he,
Did that they did in envy of great Cæsar. Shaksp.

3. Sometimes with to.

Many suffered death merely in envy to their virtues and superiour genius. Swift.

4. Rivalry; competition.

You may see the parliament of women, the little envies of them to one another.
Dryden on Dram. Poesy.

5. Malice; malignity.

Madam, this is a meer distraction;
You turn the good we offer into envy. Shakspeare.

6. Publick odium; ill repute; invidiousness.

Edward Plantagenet should be shewed unto the people; to discharge the king of the envy of that opinion and bruit, how he had been put to death privily. Bacon.

E'NVYING.* n. s. [from envy.] Ill will; malice.

Envyings, murders, drunkenness, revellings, and such like. Galat. v. 21.

ENWA'LLOWED.* part. adj. [en and wallow.] Wallowing.

Enwallow'd in his owne black bloudy gore.
Spenser, F. Q. v. xi. 14.

To ENWHE'EL. v. a. [from wheel.] To encompass; to encircle. A word probably peculiar to Shakspeare.

Hail to thee, lady! and the grace of heav'n,
Before, behind thee, and on every hand
Enwheel thee round. Shakspeare, Othello.

To ENWI'DEN.* v. a. [en and widen.] To make larger. Cockeram.

To ENWO'MB. v. a. [from womb.]

1. To make pregnant.

Me then he left enwombed of this child,
This luckless child, whom thus ye see with blood.
Spenser, F. Q.

I'm your mother;
And put you in the catalogue of those
That were enwombed mine. Shaksp. All's Well.

2. To bury; to hide as in a womb.

Or as the Africk Niger stream enwombs
Itself into the earth, and after comes,
Having first made a natural bridge to pass
For many leagues, far greater than it was;
May't not be said, that her grave shall restore
Her greater, purer, finer than before?
Donne, Poems, p. 218.

To ENWRA'P.* v. a. See To INWRAP. Dr. Johnson there admits the spelling of enwrap by Shakspeare and Milton; and other good writers are in favour also of the same. To involve.

For another man to yield such unlawful aid, is no better than a foul affront of publick justice, and enwraps the agent in a partnership of crime. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

Neither can it [the sun] ever see more than half the world at once; darkness the while enwraps the other. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 38.

In thy fear, my God, is hope, and love, and confidence, and peace, and every limb and ingredient of happiness enwrapped.
Donne, Devot. p. 135.

ENWRA'PMENT.* n. s. [from enwrap.] A covering; a wrapper.

The whole paragraph should be thus translated: they wreathed together a foliature of the fig-tree, and made themselves enwrapments, i. e. they wrapped themselves up in them.
Shuckford on the Creation, p. 203.

EO'LIAN.* } adj. [from Æolia.] Denot-
EO'LICK. } ing one of the five dialects of the Greek tongue. It denotes also a particular kind of verse; and in musick, one of the modes of the ancients, which is said to have possessed particular sweetness mixed with gravity.

Various-measur'd verse,
Eolian charms, and Dorian lyrick odes.
Milton, P. R.

Mark in this strain the power of the Ionian; in that you see the effect of the Eolian.
Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

EO'LIAN *Harp. An instrument so called from Æolus, the heathen deity of winds; as it produces its wild and often exquisite strains merely by the action of the wind. Thomson has admirably described the effect of the instrument, and the manner by which it is acted upon.

A certain musick, never known before,
Here lull'd the pensive melancholy mind;
Full easily obtain'd: behoves no more
But sidelong to the gently-waving wind
To lay the well-tun'd instrument reclin'd,
From which with airy-flying fingers light,
Beyond each mortal touch the most refin'd,
The god of winds drew sounds of deep delight,
Whence with just cause the harp of Æolus it hight.
Thomson, Castle of Indolence, i. 40.

EO'LIPILE.† n. s. [eolipyle, old Fr. from Æolus and pila.] A hollow ball of metal with a long pipe; which ball, filled with water, and exposed to the fire, sends out, as the water heats, at intervals, blasts of cold wind through the pipe.

Considering the structure of that globe, the exterior crust, and the waters lying round under it, both exposed to the sun, we may fitly compare it to an eolipile, or an hollow sphere with water in it, which the heat of the fire rarifies, and turns into vapours and wind. Burnet, Theory on the Earth.

E'PACT.† n. s. [epacte, old Fr. from the Gr. ἐπακτὸς, of ἐπάγω, to bring on.] A number, whereby we note the excess of the common solar year above the lunar, and thereby may find out the age of the moon every year. For the solar year consisting of 365 days, the lunar but of 354, the lunations every year get eleven days before the solar year; and thereby, in 19 years, the moon completes 20 times 12 lunations, or gets up one whole solar year; and having finished that circuit, begins again with the sun, and so from 19 to 19 years. For the first year afterwards the moon will go before the sun but 11 days; the second year 22 days; the third 33 days; but 30 being an entire lunation, cast that away, and the remainder 3 shall be that year's epact, and so on, adding yearly 11 days. To find the epact, having the prime or golden number given, you have this rule:

Divide by three; for each one left add ten;
Thirty reject: the prime makes epact then. Harris.

As the cycle of the moon serves to shew the epacts, and that of the sun the dominical letter, throughout all their variations; so this Dionysian period serves to shew these two cycles both together, and how they proceed or vary all along, till at last they accomplish their period, and both together take their beginning again, after every 532d year. Holder on Time.

EPÆNE'TICK.* adj. [Gr. ἐπαινητικὸς.] Laudatory; panegyrical.

In whatever kind of poetry, whether the epick, the dramatick, — the epænetick, the bucolick, or the epigram. Phillips, Theatr. Poet. Pref.

EPA'ULMENT. n. s. [French, from epaule, a shoulder.] In fortification, a side-work made either of earth thrown up, of bags of earth, gabions, or of fascines and earth. It sometimes denotes a semibastion and a square orillion, or mass of earth faced and lined with a wall, designed to cover the cannon of a casemate. Harris.

EPAULE'T.* n. s. [Fr. epaulette; which formerly signified "the wing of a gown, doublet, &c." Cotgrave in V. ESPAULETTE.] An ornament for the shoulder; a shoulder-knot: chiefly now a military word.

Their old vanity was dazzled and seduced by military liveries, cockades, and epaulets. Burke.

EPE'NTHESIS. n. s. [ἐπενθεσις.] [In grammar.] The addition of a vowel or consonant in the middle of a word. Harris.

E'PHA. n. s. [Hebrew.] A measure among the Jews, containing fifteen solid inches.

The epha and the bath shall be of one measure; that the bath may contain the tenth part of an homer, and the epha the tenth part of an homer. Ezekiel, xlv. 11.

EPHE'MERA. n. s. [ἐφήμερη.]

1. A fever that terminates in one day.
2. An insect that lives only one day.

EPHE'MERAL.† } n. s. [ἐφημέριος.] Diur-
EPHE'MERICK. } nal; beginning and ending in a day.

This was no more than a meer bubble or blast; and like an ephemeral fit of applause. Wotton, Life of D. of Buck.

He was far from the conceit of a deambulatory, hebdomatical, or peradventure ephemeral, office. Bp. Morton, Episc. Assert. p. 142.

EPHEME'RIDES.* n. s. [from ephemeris, being in fact the plural of it; though formerly ephemerides was used as a noun of the singular number.] Astronomical tables, shewing the present state of the heavens for every day at noon. Our old lexicography defines ephemerides "a book of astronomy."

Let him make an ephemerides, read Suisset the calculator's works, Scaliger de emendatione temporum, and Petavius his adversary, till he understand them. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 281.

EPHE'MERIS. n. s. [ἐφήμερις.]

1. A journal; an account of daily transactions.
2. An account of the daily motions and situations of the planets.

When casting up his eyes against the light,
Both month, and day, and hour he measur'd right;
And told more truly than the ephemeris;
For art may err, but nature cannot miss.
Dryden, Nun's Tale.

EPHE'MERIST. n. s. [from ephemeris.] One who consults the planets; one who studies or practises astrology.

The night before, he was discoursing of and slighting the art of foolish astrologers, and genethiacal ephemerists, that pry into the horoscope of nativities. Howell.

EPHE'MERON-WORM. n. s. [from ἐφήμερον and worm.] A sort of worm that lives but a day.

Swammerdam observes of the ephemeron-worms, that their food is clay, and that they make their cells of the same. Derham.

EPHE'MEROUS.* adj. [ἐφημέριος.] Beginning and ending in a day. An old word revived by Burke. "An ephemerous monster" occurs in Annotations on Glanville, &c. in 1682, p. 12.

The ephemerous tale that does its business, and dies in a day. Burke, on the Fr. Revol.

EPHE'SIAN.* n. s. [from Ephesus.] In the time of Shakspeare, a vulgar appellation, or familiar phrase, for which the commentators have not been able to assign any reason. It may probably have been derived, in old time, like Corinthian, from the dissolute manners of the people of Ephesus, especially from their gross language; and so have passed into modern tongues. See CORINTHIAN.

Art thou there? it is thine host, thine Ephesian calls. Shaksp. Merr. W. of Windsor.

EPHIA'LTES.* n. s. [old Fr. ephialte; Gr. ἐφίαλτης, from ἐπὶ, upon, and ἅλλομαι, to leap.] The disease usually called the night-mare. The word is in our old lexicography. See NIGHT-MARE.

The ephialtes, or night mare, is called by the common people witch-riding. Brand, Popular Antiq.

E'PHOD. n. s. [אפוד] A sort of ornament worn by the Hebrew priests. That worn by the high priest was richly composed of gold, blue, purple, crimson, and twisted cotton; and upon the part which came over his two shoulders, were two large precious stones, upon which were graven the names of the twelve tribes of Israel, upon each stone six names. Where the ephod crossed the high priest's breast, was a square ornament, called the breast-plate; in which twelve precious stones were set, with the names of the twelve tribes of Israel engraved on them, one on each stone. The ephods worn by the other priests were of plain linen. Calmet.

He made the ephod of gold, blue, and purple, and scarlet, and fine twined linen. Exod. xxxix. 2.

Array'd in ephods; nor so few
As are those pearls of morning dew,
Which hang on herbs and flowers. Sandys.

*EPICE'DE. n. s. [Gr. ἐπικήδιος, ἐπὶ, upon, and κῆδος, funeral solemnity; Fr. epicede. Dr. Johnson notices the Latin form of epicedium, but has overpassed epicede, which was in use, in our language, long before epicedium. Our old lexicography also has epicede.] A funeral discourse or song.

We are yet in hope of somewhat to come forwarde, to the inistymable glory of the land, namely his worthy works de Antiquitate Britannica, et de illustribus viris, with hys epigrams and epicedes. Bale, Dedic. of Leland's Itin. (1549.)

Epicedes and obsequies upon the deaths of sundry personages. Donne, Poems, p. 240.

EPICE'DIAN.* adj. [from epicede.] Elegiack; mournful.

[The] epicedian song [is] a song sung ere the corps be buried. Cockeram.

EPICE'DIUM. n. s. [επικήδιος.] An elegy; a poem upon a funeral.

You from above shall hear each day
One dirge dispatch'd unto your clay;
These, your own anthems, shall become
Your lasting epicedium.
Sandys, Paraphrase of Psalms.

E'PICENE. adj. [epicene, Fr. epicœnus, Lat. from the Gr. κοινὸς, common.] Common; of both kinds: the term, in grammar of one of the Latin genders.

Of the epicene gender, hees, and shees,
Amphibion Archy is the chief
B. Jonson, Masques.

All pretty fellows are also excluded to a man, as well as all inamoratoes, or persons of the epicene gender, who gaze at one another in the presence of ladies. Tatler, No. 27.

E'PICK. adj. [epicus, Latin; ἐπος.] Narrative; comprising narrations, not acted, but rehearsed. It is usually supposed to be heroick, or to contain one great action atchieved by a hero.

Holmes, whose name shall live in epick song,
While musick numbers, or while verse has feet.
Dryden.

The epick poem is more for the manners, and the tragedy for the passions. Dryden.

From morality they formed that kind of poem and fable which we call epick.
Broome, View of Epick Poesy.

E'PICK.* n. s. An epick poem.

He [Mr. M'Pherson] brought forward his counterfeit epicks, [the alleged poems of Ossian,] whose manifold defects and deformities were not so much pardoned for the beauties, thinly scattered, which they contained, as from the persuasion that they were the works of an ancient artist.

Campbell, on the Ecc. and Lit. Hist. of Irel. p. 170.

E'PICURE. n. s. [epicureus, Lat.] A follower of Epicurus; a man given wholly to luxury.

Then fly false thanes,
And mingle with the English epicures.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The epicure buckles to study, when shame, or the desire to recommend himself to his mistress, shall make him uneasy in the want of any sort of knowledge. Locke.

EPICURE'AN.* n. s. [from Epicurus.] One of the sect of Epicurus.

Certain philosophers of the Epicureans and of the stoicks encountered him. Acts, xvii. 18.

EPICURE'AN.† adj.

1. Pertaining to the sect of Epicurus.

Academicks old and new, with those
Surnamed Peripateticks, and the sect
Epicurean. Milton, P. R.

2. Luxurious; contributing to luxury.

Tie up the libertine in a field of feasts,
Keep his brain fuming; epicurean cooks,
Sharpen with cloyless sauce his appetite.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

What a damn'd epicurean rascal is this!
Shaks. M. Wives of Windsor.

How would our Democritus have been affected, — to see a withered face, a diseased, deformed, cankered complexion, a rotten carcass, a viperous mind, and epicurean soul set out with orient pearles, jewels, diadems, perfumes, curious elaborate works, as proud of his clothes, as a child of his new coat!
Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader, p. 34.

E'PICURISM.† n. s. [from epicure.]

1. Luxury; sensual enjoyment; gross pleasure.

The darts of devoutlessness, epicurism, and unmercifulness.
Bp. of Chichester, Two Serm. (1576,) sign. B. viii.

Here you do keep a hundred knights and squires;
Men so disorder'd, so debauch'd and bold,
That this our court, infected with their manners,
Shews like a riotous inn; epicurism and lust,
Make it a tavern or a brothel. Shaksp. K. Lear.

There is not half so much epicurism in any of their most studied luxuries, as a bleeding fame at their mercy. Gov. of the Tongue.

Some good men have ventured to call munificence, the greatest sensuality, a piece of epicurism.
Calamy, Serm.

2. The doctrine of Epicurus. The learned Waterland, to distinguish this more pointedly, writes the word epicureism; and the accent on epicurism, in this sense, should be on the third syllable. This usage of the word is modern. Dr. Johnson takes no notice whatever of it.

Infidelity, or modern Deism, is little else but revived Epicureism, Sadducism, and Zendicism.
Waterland, Charge, (1732,) p. 75.

The first book of the Enquiry ends with a sentence far remote from irreligion and Epicurism.
Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

To E'PICURIZE.† v. n. [from Epicurus.]

1. To devour like an epicure; to play the epicure; to feast; to riot. A word not used, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the feeble authority of Flatman. But better writers use it; and a forcible word it is.

He thriftily improves the objects of his cruelty, spending them by degrees, and epicurizing on their pain. Fuller, Holy State, (1648,) p. 446.

These evil demons did, as it were, deliciate and epicurize in them. Hallywell, Melampr. p. 101.

While I could see thee full of eager pain,
My greedy eyes epicuriz'd on thine. Flatman.

2. To profess the doctrine of Epicurus.

The tree of knowledge mistaken for the tree of life. — Epicurizing philosophy, Antinomian liberty, under the pretence of free grace and a gospel spirit.
Cudworth, Serm. p. 87.

EPICY'CLE. n. s. [ἐπὶ and κύκλος.] A little circle whose centre is in the circumference of a greater; or a small orb, which, being fixed in the deferent of a planet, is carried along with its motion; and yet, with its own peculiar motion, carries the body of the planet fastened to it round about its proper centre.
Harris.

In regard of the epicycle, or lesser orb, wherein it moveth, the motion of the moon is various and unequal. Brown.

Gird the sphere
With centric and eccentric, scribbl'd o'er;
Cycle and epicycle, orb in orb. Milton, P. L.

EPICY'CLOID. n. s. [ἐπικυκλοειδης.] A curve generated by the revolution of the periphery of a circle along the convex or concave part of another circle. Harris.

EPIDE'MICAL.† } adj. [ἐπὶ and δήμος, Gr.
EPIDE'MICK. } epidemique, Fr.]

1. That falls at once upon great numbers of people, as a plague.

It was conceived not to be an epidemick disease, but to proceed from a malignity in the constitution of the air, gathered by the predispositions of sea sons. Bacon, Hen. VII.

As the proportion of acute and epidemical diseases shews the aptness of the air to sudden and vehement impressions, the chronical diseases shew the ordinary temper of the place.
Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

2. Generally prevailing; affecting great numbers.

The more epidemical and prevailing this evil is, the more honourable are those who shine as exceptions. South.

He ought to have been busied in losing his money, or in other amusements equally laudable and epidemick among persons of honour. Swift.

3. General; universal. Not used, nor proper, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Cleaveland. It is however used by a better writer.

That great epidemical council, wherein every one from the peer to the plebeian hath an inclusive vote.
Howell, Instruct. for Trav. (1642,) p. 219.

They're citizens o' th' world, they're all in all;
Scotland's a nation epidemical. Cleaveland.

EPIDE'RMIS. n. s. [ἐπιδέρμις.] The scarf-skin of a man's body.

EPIGA'STRICK.* adj. [Fr. epigastrique, from the Gr. ἐπὶ and γαστὴρ, the belly.] The epigastrick region is a name given to the upper part of the abdomen: — there are also two epigastrick veins, and as many arteries. Chambers.

*EPIGE'UM. n. s. [Gr. ἐπὶ, upon, and γῆ, the earth.] That part of the orbit in which any planet comes nearest to the earth. See APOGEUM.

*EPIGLO'TTIS. n. s. [Gr. ἐπιγλωττὶς, from ἐπὶ upon, and γλωττὶς, the tongue.] The thin movable cartilage, in form of a little tongue, which covers the aperture of the windpipe. Ash.

E'PIGRAM.† n. s. [epigramma, Latin.] The word originally means inscription, from ἐπὶ, upon, and γράφω, to write. So, in our old lexicography, "epigram or superscription," Huloet. Cotgrave, nearly a century afterwards, retained, in his translation of the French epigramme, this classical meaning; calling it, "a short poem, wittily taxing a particular person or fault; also a title, inscription, or superscription."] A short poem terminating in a point.

A college of witcrackers cannot flout me out of my humour: dost thou think I care for a satire or an epigram? Shakspeare.

What can be more witty than the epigram of Moore upon the name of Nicolaus, an ignorant physician, that had been the death of thousands?
Peacham of Poetry.

I writ
An epigram that boasts more truth than wit. Gay.

EPIGRAMMA'TICAL. } adj. [epigrammaticus, Lat.]
EPIGRAMMA'TICK. }

1. Dealing in epigrams; writing epigrams.

Our good epigrammatical poet, old Godfrey of Winchester, thinketh no ominous forespeaking to lie in names. Camden.

2. Suitable to epigrams; belonging to epigrams.

He is every where above conceits of epigrammatick wit and gross hyperboles: he maintains majesty in the midst of plainness; he shines, but glares not; and is stately, without ambition.
Addison.

He has none of those little points and puerilities that are so often to be met with in Ovid; none of the epigrammatick turns of Lucan; none of those swelling sentiments which are so frequent in Statius and Claudian; none of those mixt embellishments of Tasso. Addison.

EPIGRA'MMATIST.† n. s. [Fr. epigrammatiste, Cotgrave.] One who writes or deals in epigrams.

Such a customer the epigrammatist Martial meets withal, one who, after he had walked through the fairest streets twice or thrice, cheapening jewels, plate, rich hangings, came away with a wooden dish. Peacham.

The epigrammatist [Martial] speaks the sense of their drunken principles.
Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ii. § 1.

A jest upon a poor wit, at first might have had an epigrammatist for its father, and been afterwards gravely understood by some painful collector.
Pope.

E'PIGRAPH.* n. s. [Gr. ἐπιγραφὴ, Fr. epigraphe. Dr. Johnson gives the Greek anglicised in epigraphe, a word of four syllables, as he places the accent on the second. But I take epigraph to be an old English word, merely with the superfluous final e, as was formerly common, and intended, like paragraph or autograph, to be pronounced in three syllables.] A title; an inscription. Bullokar.

EPI'GRAPHE. n. s. [ἐπιγραφὴ.] An inscription on a statue. Dict.

E'PILEPSY. n. s. [ἐπίληψις.] A convulsion, or convulsive motion of the whole body, or of some of its parts, with a loss of sense. A convulsive motion happens when the blood, or nervous fluid, runs into any part with so great violence, that the mind cannot restrain them. Quincy.

My lord is fell into an epilepsy:
This is the second fit. Shakspeare, Othello.

Melancholy distempers are deduced from spirits drawn from that cacochymia; the phrenitis from cholerick spirits, and the epilepsy from fumes.
Floyer on the Humours.

EPILE'PTICAL.* adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; disordered as by an epilepsy.

In the previous use of some extatical solemnities, he became frantick and epileptical.
Spencer on Vulg. Proph. (1665,) p. 36.

EPILE'PTICK. adj. [from epilepsy.] Convulsed; diseased with an epilepsy.

A plague upon your epileptick visage!
Smile you my speeches, as I were a fool?
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Epilepticks ought to breathe a pure air, unaffected with any steams, even such as are very fragrant. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EPI'LOGISM.* n. s. [Gr. ἐπιλογισμὸς.] Computation; enumeration.

Some reckon the epilogism from Cyrus; some from the seventh, others from the twentieth of Artaxerxes Longimanus; accordingly ending the weeks, some at the profanation of the temple by Antiochus, &c.
Gregory's Posthuma, (1650,) p. 156.

The Greek and Hebrew making a difference of two thousand years — this epilogism must be detracted from the Hebrew, or superadded to the Greek. Ibid. p. 171.

EPILOGI'STICK.* adj. [from epilogue.] Having the nature of an epilogue.

These lines are an epilogistic palinode to the last elegy. Warton on Milton's Smaller Poems.

To EPI'LOGISE.* See To EPILOGUIZE.

E'PILOGUE.† n. s. [epilogus, Latin; epilogue, French; ἐπίλογος, Gr. The word in our language, originally signified the conclusion of a discourse. "The conclusion or epyloge." Bale's Yet a Course at the Romish Foxe, 1543, fol. 95. b.] The poem or speech at the end of a play.

If it be true that good wine needs no bush, 'tis true that a good play needs no epilogue; yet to good wine they do use good bushes, and good plays prove the better by the help of good epilogues.
Shakspeare, As you like it.

Are you mad, you dog?
I am to rise and speak the epilogue.
Dryden, Tyran. Love.

To EPI'LOGUIZE.* v. n. [old Fr. epiloguier; Lat. epilogo. Some have pretended that Milton coined this word; but it is in our old lexicography.]

1. To make conclusion or end. [See the etym. of epilogue.] Cockeram.
2. To speak an epilogue.

The dances ended, the spirit epiloguizes.
Stage-Direction in Milton's Comus.

To EPI'LOGUIZE.* v. a. To add to, in the manner of an epilogue.

I was rude enough to interrupt the laugh of applause, with which the charming companion of my new acquaintance was epiloguizing his witty raillery.
Student, (1750,) i. 143.

EPINI'CION.* n. s. [Greek, ἐπινίκιον, from ἐπὶ, upon, and νίκη, victory.] A song of triumph.

They distinguish between the trisagion and epinicion, or triumphal hymn. Christian Antiq. ii. 118.

I certainly did not mean, that the Saxon minstrels had ever sung a triumphal epinicion on Hengist's massacre. T. Warton, Rowley Enq. p. 69.

EPINY'CTIS. n. s. [ἐπινυκτὶς.] A sore at the corner of the eye.

The epinyctis is of the bigness of a lupin, of a dusky red, and sometimes of a livid and pale colour, with great inflammation and pain. Wiseman, Surg.

EPI'PHANY.† n. s. [ἐπιφανεία, Gr. manifestation.] A church festival, celebrated on the twelfth day after Christmas, in commemoration of our Saviour's being manifested to the world, by the appearance of a miraculous blazing star, which conducted the magi to the place where he was. Dict.

And through thy poor birth, where first thou
Glorified'st poverty,
And yet soon after riches didst allow,
By accepting kings' gifts in the Epiphanie,
Deliver, and make us to both ways free.
Donne, Poems, p. 343.

From Christmas to Epiphany, the church's design, in all her proper services, is to set forth the humanity of our Saviour, and to manifest him in the flesh; but from the Epiphany to Septuagesima Sunday, especially in the four following Sundays, she endeavours to manifest his divinity, by recounting to us in the Gospels some of his first miracles and manifestations of his deity.
Wheatley on the Comm. Prayer.

EPIPHONE'MA. n. s. [ἐπιφώνημα.] An exclamation; a conclusive sentence not closely connected with the words foregoing.

I know a gentleman, who made it a rule in reading to skip over all sentences where he spied a note of admiration at the end. If those preachers who abound in epiphonemas would but look about them, they would find one part of their congregation out of countenance and the other asleep, except perhaps an old female beggar or two in the aisles; who, if they be sincere, may probably groan at the sound. Swift.

EPI'PHORA. n. s. [ἐπίφορα.] An inflammation of any part, but more especially a defluxion of humours on the eyes. Harris.

EPIPHYLLOSPE'RMOUS. adj. [from ἐπὶ, φύλλον and σπέρμα.] Is applied to plants that bear their seed on the back part of their leaves. Harris.

EPI'PHYSIS. n. s. [ἐπιφυσις.] Accretion; the part added by accretion; one bone growing to another by simple contiguity, without any proper articulation. Quincy.

The epiphysis of the os femoris is a distinct bone from it in a child, whereas in a man they do entirely unite. Wiseman.

EPI'PLOCE. n. s. [ἐπιπλοκὴ.] A figure of rhetorick, by which one aggravation, or striking circumstance, is added in due gradation to another; as, he not only spared his enemies, but continued them in employment; not only continued, but advanced them.

EPI'SCOPACY. n. s. [episcopatus, Lat.] The government of bishops, the government of the church established by the apostles.

The bishops durst not contest with the assembly in jurisdiction; so that there was little more than the name of episopacy preserved. Clarendon.

Prelacy itself cannot be proved by prescription, since episcopacy is not prescribed by any time whatsoever. Ayliffe.

EPI'SCOPAL. adj. [from episcopus, Lat.]

1. Belonging to a bishop.

The plot of discipline sought to erect a popular authority of elders, and to take away episcopal jurisdiction. Hooker.

2. Vested in a bishop.

The apostle commands Titus not only to be a pattern of good works himself, but to use his episcopal authority in exhorting every rank and order of men. Rogers.

EPISCOPA'LIANS.* n. s. plur. [Lat. episcopalis.]

1. In England, those who adhere to the established church of England.
2. In Scotland, persons who dissent from the established church of Scotland.

EPI'SCOPALLY.* adv. [from episcopal.] In an episcopal manner; by episcopal authority.

The necessity of the sacrament, and the invalidity of ecclesiastical functions when performed by persons who were not episcopally ordained, were entertained by many with great applause.
Burnet, Hist. of his Own Times.

EPI'SCOPATE.† n. s. [episcopatus, Lat.] A bishoprick; the office and dignity of a bishop.

These great qualities at length conducted you so deservedly to the episcopate.
Arnald to Abp. Herring, (1744,) Dedic. of Wisdom.

E'PISCOPY.* n. s. [Lat. episcopius, Greek, ἐπισκόπιος, exploring, looking about.] Survey; search.

If the censor, in his moral episcopacy, being to judge most in matters not answerable by writ or action, could not use an instrument so gross and bodily as jurisdiction is, how can the minister of the gospel manage the corpulent and secular trial of bill and process in things merely spiritual?
Milton, Reason of Ch. Govern.

E'PISODE.† n. s. [episode, Fr. from the Gr. ἐπεισόδιον.] An incidental narrative, or digression in a poem, separable from the main subject, yet rising naturally from it.

The poem hath no other episodes than such as naturally arise from the subject. Addison, Spect.

EPISO'DICAL. } adj. [from episode.] Con-
EPISO'DICK. } tained in an episode; pertaining to an episode.

Episodical ornaments, such as descriptions and narrations, were delivered to us from the observations of Aristotle. Dryden.

I discover the difference between the episodick and principal action, as well as the nature of episodes. Notes on the Odyssey.

EPISPA'STICK. n. s. [ἐπὶ and σπάω.]

1. Drawing.
2. Blistering. This is now the more frequent, though less proper sense.

The matter ought to be solicited to the lower parts, by fomentations, bathing, epispasticks, and blistering. Arbuthnot.

EPI'STLE.† n. s. [Sax. epistol; old Fr. epistle; Gr. ἐπιστολὴ.] A letter. This word is seldom used but in poetry, or on occasions of dignity and solemnity.

When loose epistles violate chaste eyes,
She half consents, who silently denies. Dryden.

EPI'STOLARY.† adj. [from epistle. This adjective was at first epistolar. "This epistolar way will have a considerable efficacy upon them." More on the Seven Churches, 1669, p. 7. Again, "this epistolar way is still retained," p. 8. But epistolary was in use in 1681.]

1. Relating to letters; suitable to letters.

Scarce allowing the author one epistolary compliment. Mannyngham's Disc. (1681,) p. 63.

The first of our countrymen, however, who published a set of his own letters, though not in English, was Roger Ascham, who flourished about the time of the Reformation; and, when that mode of writing had been cultivated by the best scholars in various parts of Europe, was celebrated for the terseness of his epistolary style.
Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 54.

2. Transacted by letters.

I shall carry on an epistolary correspondence between the two heads. Addison.

EPISTO'LICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἐπιστολικὸς; Lat. epistolicus.] Having the form and manner of an epistle.

I have an epistolical dissertation on John Malelas (for so he should be called, not Malela) in Dr. Mill's hands. Bentley's Letters, p. 154.

EPI'STLER.† n. s. [from epistle; old Fr. epistolier, in both senses which follow; of which, however, Dr. Johnson has noticed only the first, and that in a contemptuous manner, without a single example.]

1. A writer of letters.

But what needs the man to be so furiously angry with the good old epistler, for saying, that the Apostle's charge (Let every one have his own wife) is general to all?

Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 272.

The young epistler is yours to the antipodes, or at least to the centre of the earth!

Echard, Grounds of the Cont. of the Clergy, p. 37.

2. He who regularly assisted at the communion table in the service of our church, and read the epistle, obtained this name.

The principal minister using a decent cope, and being assisted with the gospeller and epistler.

Const. and Can. Eccl. 24.

To EPI'STOLIZE.* v. n. [from epistle.] To write letters.

There are some, who in lieu of letters, write homilies; they preach when they should epistolize.

Howell, Lett. i. i. 1.

Whence this proceeds I know not, unless it be from a charming kind of virtue that your letters carry with them to work upon my spirits, which are so full of facete and familiar friendly strains, and so punctual in answering every part of mine, that you may give the law of epistolizing to all mankind. Howell, Lett. iv. 27.

EPI'STROPHE.* n. s. [Gr. ἐπιστροφὴ.] In rhetorick, a figure which concludes each member of a sentence with the same affirmation.

Since concord was lost, friendship was lost, fidelity was lost, liberty was lost, all was lost. Chambers.

E'PISTYLE.* n. s. [Fr. epistyle, Gr. ἐπιστύλιον.] An architrave; a term of architecture.

EPI'TASIS.* n. s. [From the Gr. ἐπιτεινω, to heighten.] In the ancient drama, the progress of the plot.

Let us mind what you come for, the play, which will draw on the epitasis now.

B. Jonson, Magnetick Lady.

I am sick of the sentiments, of the diction, of the protasis, of the epitasis, and the catastrophe!

Pope, Narrative of Dennis's Frenzy.

E'PITAPH.† n. s. [old Fr. epitaphe, Gr. ἐπιταφιον, from ἐπὶ, upon, and τάφος, a tomb, q. d. discourse engraven on the tomb.] An inscription upon a tomb.

Live still, and write mine epitaph. Shaks.

Some thy lov'd dust in Parian stones enshrine,
Others immortal epitaphs design;
With wit and strength, that only yields to thine.

Smith.

EPITA'PHIAN.* adj. [Gr. ἐπιτάφιος.] Pertaining to an epitaph.

Like that doughty centurion Afranius in Lucian; who to imitate the noble Pericles in his epitaphian speech, stepping up after the battle to bewail the slain Severianus, falls into a pitiful condolement to think of those costly suppers and drinking banquets, which he must now taste of no more.

Milton, Animad. Rem. Def.

EPITHALA'MIUM.† n. s. [Gr. ἐπιθαλάμιον, from θάλαμος, a bed; Fr. epithalame; and Ben Jonson writes our word epithalamion, as well as epithalamium, which he defines "a poem used to be sung when the bride was led into her chamber." Masques at Court.] A nuptial song; a compliment upon marriage.

I presume to invite you to these sacred nuptials: the epithalamium sung by a crowned muse.

Sandys, Paraphrase of the Psalms.

The forty-fifth psalm is an epithalamium to Christ and the church, or to the lamb and his spouse. Burnet.

EPITHA'LAMY.* n. s. [We have the word thus anglicised nearly two centuries since. It is written epithalmy in Cockeram's old vocabulary.] A nuptial song.

He shew'd us how for sins we ought to sigh,
And how to sing Christ's epithalamys.

Chud. on Donne's Death, Donne's Poems, ed. 1650.

E'PITHEM. n. s. [ἐπίθημα.] A liquid medicament externally applied.

Cordials and epithems are also necessary, to resist the putrefaction and strengthen the vitals.

Wiseman, Surgery.

E'PITHET.† n. s. [Gr. ἐπίθετον, Fr. epithete. In the old tragedy of Soliman and Perseda, (1599,) our word is epitheton, "a feminine epitheton;" which Shakspeare also uses, perhaps by way of ridicule, in Love's Lab. Lost, "a congruent epitheton."]

1. An adjective denoting any quality good or bad: as, the verdant grove, the craggy mountain's lofty head.

It is the just epithete of the world, which Julius Scaliger gives unjustly to London, "torva peregrinis." Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 203.

I affirm with phlegm, leaving the epithets of false, scandalous, and villainous to the author.

Swift.

2. It is used by some writers improperly for title, name.

The epithet of shades belonged more properly to the darkness than the refreshment.

Decay of Piety.

3. It is used improperly for phrase, expression.

For which of my good parts did you first suffer love for me? — Suffer love! a good epithet: I do suffer love indeed; for I love thee against my will.

Shakspeare.

To E'PITHET.* v. a. [from the noun.] To entitle; to describe the quality of.

Never was a town better epitheted.

Wotton, Rem. p. 566.

EPI'TOME.† n. s. [Gr. ἐπιτομὴ; old Fr. epitomé.] Abridgement; abbreviature; compendious abstract; compendium.

This is a poor epitome of yours,
Which, by th' interpretation of full time,
May shew like all yourself. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Epitomes are helpful to the memory, and of good private use; but set forth for public monuments, accuse the industrious writers of delivering much impertinency. Wotton.

To be honest in a right line, and virtuous by epitome, be firm unto such principles of goodness as carry in them volumes of instruction, and may abridge thy labour. Brown, Chr. Morals, p. 81.

It would be well, if there were a short and plain epitome made, containing the most material heads. Locke.

Such abstracts and epitomes may be reviewed in their proper places. Watts, Improv. of the Mind.

To EPI'TOMISE. v. a. [from epitome.]

1. To abstract; to contract into a narrow space.

Who did the whole world's soul contract, and drove
Into the glasses of your eyes;
So made such mirrours and such spies,
That they did all to you epitomise.

Donne, Poems, p. 10.

If the ladies take a liking to such a diminutive race, we should see mankind epitomised, and the whole species in miniature. Addison.

2. Less properly, to diminish by amputation; to curtail.

We have epitomised many particular words, to the detriment of our tongue. Addison, Spect.

EPI'TOMISER.† } n. s. [from epitomise.]
EPI'TOMIST. } An abridger; an abstracter; a writer of epitomes.

When that epitomizer of Trogus had to the full described and set out king Ptolomy's riot, as a chief engine and instrument of his overthrow, he adds fiddling and dancing.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 496.

Both this Brennus, and another famous captain Britomarus, whom the epitomist Florus and others mention. Milton, Hist. of Eng.

Dion Cassius, or his epitomizer Xiphiline, will help you out. Hales, Rem. p. 272.

E'POCH.† } n. s. [ἐποχὴ, Gr. from ἐπέχειν, to E'POCHA. } stop, according to Scaliger. Dryden writes our word epoché, according to its Greek original; though Dr. Johnson, in the example, has given it epocha.] The time at which a new computation is begun; the time from which dates are numbered.

Moses distinctly computes by certain intervals, memorable æras and epochas, or terms of time.

Brown.

These are the practices of the world, since the year sixty; the grand epoch of falsehood, as well as debauchery. South.

Some lazy ages, lost in sleep and ease,
No action leave to busy chronicles:
Such, whose supine felicity but makes
In story chasms, in epockes mistakes.

Dryden, Astræa Redux.

Their several epochs or beginnings, as from the creation of the world, from the flood, from the first Olympiad, from the building of Rome, or from any remarkable passage or accident, give us a pleasant prospect into the histories of antiquity and of former ages. Holder on Time.

Time is always reckoned from some known parts of this sensible world, and from some certain epochs marked out to us by the motions observable in it. Locke.

Time, by necessity compell'd shall go
Through scenes of war, and epochas of woe. Prior.

E'PODE.† n. s. [ἔπωδὸς, Gr. epode, Fr.] The stanza following the strophe and antistrophe.

Strophe, antistrophe, or epode, — were a kind of stanzas framed only for the musick.

Milton, Pref. to Samson Agonistes.

EPOPE'E.† n. s. [ἐποποιία, Gr. from ἔπος, discourse, and ποιέω, to make; epopée, Fr.] An epick or heroic poem.

Tragedy borrows from the epopee, and that which borrows is of less dignity, because it has not of its own. Dryden, Virgil.

That kind of satire, which is conveyed in the form of the epopee; a pleasing vehicle of satire, seldom, if ever, used by the ancients; for we know so little of the Margites of Homer, that it cannot be produced as an example.

Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

E'PULARY.* adj. [Lat. epularis.] Belonging to feasts or banquets. Scott.

EPULA'TION. n. s. [epulatio, Lat.] Banquet; feast.

Contented with bread and water, when he would dine with Jove, and pretended to epulation, he desired no other addition than a piece of cheese. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EPULO'TICK. n. s. [ἐπουλώτικος.] A cicatrising medicament.

The ulcer, incarned with common sarcoticks, and the ulcerations about it were cured by ointment of tuty, and such like epuloticks. Wiseman on Inflammation.

EQUABI'LITY.† n. s. [from equable.]

1. Equality to itself; evenness; uniformity.

For the celestial bodies, the equability and constancy of their motions argue them ordained by Wisdom. Ray.

The equability of the temperature of the air rendered the Asiaticks lazy. Arbuthnot on Air.

2. Evenness of temper.

There is also moderation in toleration of fortune in every sorte, which of Tully is called equabilitie. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 188.

E'QUABLE. adj. [æquabilis, Latin.] Equal to itself; even; uniform in respect to form, motion, or temperature.

He would have the vast body of a planet to be as elegant and round as a factitious globe represents it; to be every where smooth and equable, and as plain as elysian fields. Bentley.

Nothing abates acrimony of the blood more than an equable motion of it, neither too swift nor too slow; for too quick a motion produceth an alkaline, and too slow an acid acrimony. Arbuthnot on Diet.

E'QUABLY. adv. [from equable.] Uniformly; in the same tenour; evenly; equally to itself.

If bodies move equably in concentrick circles, and the squares of their periodical times be as the cubes of their distances from the common centre, their centripetal forces will be reciprocally as the squares of the distances. Cheyne.

E'QUAL.† adj. [æqualis, Lat. Formerly egal was our word for equal; which is used by Chaucer, and was not obsolete when Shakspeare wrote.]

1. Like another in bulk, excellence, or any other quality that admits comparison; neither greater nor less; neither worse nor better.

If thou be among great men, make not thyself equal with them. Ecclus. xxxii. 9.

Equal lot
May join us; equal joy, as equal love. Milton, P. L.

Although there were no man to take notice of it, every triangle would contain three angles equal to two right angles. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Adequate to any purpose.

The Scots trusted not their own numbers, as equal to fight with the English. Clarendon.

3. Even; uniform.

He laughs at all the vulgar cares and fears,
At their vain triumphs, and their vainer tears;
An equal temper in his mind he found,
When fortune flatter'd him, and when she frown'd. Dryden.

Think not of me: perhaps my equal mind
May learn to bear the fate the gods allot me. Smith.

4. In just proportion.

It is not permitted me to make my commendations equal to your merit. Dryden, Fab. Ded.

5. Impartial; neutral; just.

Is not my way equal? are not your ways unequal? Ezek. xviii. 25.

Some few,
Whom equal Jove hath lov'd. B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

It—overturned the equallest and best framed government in the world. South, Serm. vi. 42.

Each to his proper fortune stand or fall;
Equal and unconcern'd I look on all:
Rutilians, Trojans, are the same to me,
And both shall draw the lots their fates decree. Dryden, Æn.

6. Indifferent.

Can you think
That she, that almost is at war with heaven
For being barren, will with equal eyes
Behold a son of mine? Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

They who are not disposed to receive them, may let them alone, or reject them; it is equal to me. Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

7. Equitable; advantageous alike to both parties.

He submitted himself, and sware to all equal conditions. 2 Mac. xiii. 23.

8. Being upon the same terms.

They made the married, orphans, widows, yea and the aged also, equal in spoils with themselves. 2 Mac. viii. 30.

E'QUAL.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. One not inferiour or superiour to another.

He is enamoured on Hero: I pray you, dissuade him from her: she is no equal for his birth. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

He would make them all equals to the citizens of Rome. 2 Mac. ix. 15.

Those who were once his equals, envy and defame him, because they now see him their superiour; and those who were once his superiours, because they look upon him as their equal. Addison, Spect.

To my dear equal in my native land,
My plighted vow I gave: I his receiv'd:
Each swore with truth; with pleasure each believ'd:
The mutual contract was to heav'n convey'd. Prior.

2. One of the same age.

I profited in the Jews' religion above many my equals in mine own nation. Gal. i. 14.

3. Equality.

Thou that presum'st to weigh the world anew,
And all things to an equall to restore,
Instead of right, me seems, great wrong dost shew,
And far above thy force's pitch to soar. Spenser, F. Q. iv. ii. 34.

To E'QUAL.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make one thing or person equal to another.

What shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? Lament. ii. 13.

2. To rise to the same state with another person.

I know nobody so like to equal him, even at the age he wrote most of them, as yourself. Trumbull to Pope.

3. To be equal to.

One whose all not equals Edward's moiety. Shakspeare.

4. To recompense fully; to answer in full proportion.

She sought Sicheus through the shady grove,
Who answer'd all her cares, and equall'd all her love. Dryden.

Nor you, great queen, these offices repent,
Which he will equal, and perhaps augment. Dryden, Virg.

To E'QUALISE.† v. a. [old Fr. equalizer.]

1. To make even.

To equalise accounts, we will allow thee hundred years, and so long a time as we can manifest from the Scripture. Brown.

2. To be equal to: a sense not used, Dr. Johnson says. It is, however, frequent in our old writers.

A prince, who had he not been hindered with domestical discords, would have equalized Cæsar himself. Fuller, Holy War, p. 204.

That would make the moved body, remaining what it is, in regard of its bigness, to equalise and fit a thing bigger than it is. Digby on Bodies.

Ye lofty beeches, tell this matchless dame,
That if together ye fed all one flame,
It could not equalise the hundredth part
Of what her eyes have kindled in my heart. Waller.

3. To make equal. A sense not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

The Virgin they do at least equalize to Christ. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 5.

The finest poem that we can boast, and which we equalize and perhaps would willingly prefer to the Iliad, is void of those fetters. Orrery on Swift, p. 280.

EQUALISA'TION.* n. s. [from equalise.] State of equality.

I have never conceived, or can conceive, that the connexion is strengthened by making the major part of the inhabitants of your country believe, that their ease, and their satisfaction, and their equalization with the rest of their fellow-subjects of Ireland, are things adverse to the principles of that connexion. Burke, Lett. on the Affairs of Ireland.

EQUA'LITY. n. s. [from equal.]

1. Likeness with regard to any quantities compared.

Equality of two domestick powers,
Breeds scrupulous faction. Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

2. The same degree of dignity.

One shall rise,
Of proud ambition; who, not content
With fair equality, fraternal state,
Will arrogate dominion undeserv'd,
Over his brethren. Milton, P. L.

According to this equality wherein God hath placed all mankind, with relation to himself, in all the relations between man and man there is a mutual dependance. Swift.

3. Evenness; uniformity; constant tenour; equability.

Measure out the lives of men, and periodically define the alterations of their tempers, conceive a regularity in mutations, with an equality in constitutions, and forget that variety which physicians therein discover. Brown, Vulg. Err.

E'QUALLY.† adv. [from equal.]

1. In the same degree with another person or thing; alike.

To reconcile men's vices to their fears is the aim of all the various schemes and projects of sin, and is equally intended by atheism and immorality. Rogers.

The covetous are equally impatient of their condition, equally tempted with the wages of unrighteousness, as if they were indeed poor. Rogers.

2. Evenly; equably; uniformly.

If the motion of the sun were as unequal as of a ship, sometimes slow, and at others swift; or, if being constantly equally swift, it yet was not circular, and produced not the same appearances, it would not help us to measure time more than the motion of a comet does. Locke.

3. Impartially.

We shall use them,
As we shall find their merits and our safety
May equally determine. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

4. In just proportion.

What I give, let equally be rendered
For my soul's health. Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

E'QUALNESS. n. s. [from equal.] Equality.

Let me lament
That our stars unreconcileable should have divided
Our equalness to this. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

EQUA'NGULAR. adj. [from æquus and angulus, Latin.] Consisting of equal angles.

EQUANI'MITY.† n. s. [æquanimitas, Latin.] Evenness of mind, neither elated nor depressed. This word is in our old lexicography, though Dr. Johnson gives it neither with authority nor example; and Steele, in the Tatler, introduces it with diffidence, as if he had never seen the word in use. But it was in use long before; for the vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar give it.

This watch over a man's self, and the command of his temper, I take to be the greatest of human perfections, &c. I do not know how to express this habit of mind, except you will let me call it equanimity. It is a virtue which is necessary at every hour, in every place, and in all conversations; and is the effect of a regular and exact prudence. Tatler, No. 176.

EQUA'NIMOUS.† adj. [æquanimis, Latin.] Even; not dejected; not elated.

Out of an equanimous civility to his many worthy friends.
Bp. Gauden, Life of Bp. Brownrigg, (1660,) p. 219.

EQUA'TION. n. s. [æquare, Latin.] The investigation of a mean proportion collected from the extremities of excess and defect, to be applied to the whole.

We are to find out the extremities on both sides, and from and between them the middle daily motions of the sun along the Ecliptick; and to frame tables of equation of natural days, to be applied to the mean motion by addition or substraction, as the case shall require. Holder on Time.

By an argument taken from the equations of the times of the eclipses of Jupiter's satellites, it seems that light is propagated in time, spending in its passage from the sun to us about seven minutes of time. Newton, Opticks.

EQUA'TION. [In algebra.] Is an expression of the same quantity in two dissimilar terms, but of equal value; as $3s. = 36d.$ Dict.

EQUA'TION. [In astronomy.] The difference between the time marked out by the sun's apparent motion, and the time that is measured by its real or middle motion; according to which clocks and watches ought to be adjusted. Dict.

EQUA'TOR. n. s. [æquator, Latin.] The equator on the earth, or equinoctial in the heavens, is a great circle, whose poles are the poles of the world. It divides the globe into two equal parts, the northern and southern hemispheres. It passes through the east and west points of the horizon; and at the meridian is raised as much above the horizon as is the complement of the latitude of the place. Whenever the sun comes to this circle, it makes equal days and nights all round the globe, because he then rises due east, and sets due west, which he doth at no other time of the year. Harris.

By reason of the convexity of the earth, the eye of man, under the equator, cannot discover both the poles; neither would the eye, under the poles, discover the sun in the equator. Brown, Vulg. Err.

On the other side the equator, there is much land still remaining undiscovered.
Ray on the Creation.

Rocks rich in gems, and mountains big with mines,
That on the high equator ridgy rise,
Whence many a bursting stream auriferous plays.
Thomson.

EQUATO'RIAL. adj. [from equator.] Pertaining to the equator; taken at the equator.

The planets have spheroidical figures, and obliquities of their equatorial to their ecliptick planes. Cheyne.

E'QUERY, or EQUE'RRY.† n. s. [Fr. escurie; low Lat. scuria, or scura, a stable for horses. V. Du Cange.]

1. A grand lodge or stable for horses.
2. An officer who has the care of horses.

Quick and active as an equerry, smooth and eloquent as a master of the ceremonies.
Tatler, No. 19.

EQUE'STRIAN.† adj. [equestris, Latin.]

1. Being on horseback.

An equestrian lady appeared upon the plains.
Spectator.

2. Skilled in horsemanship.
3. Belonging to the second rank in Rome.

It had always been his favourite system, to strengthen the power of the senate by a close union with the equestrian order. Ld. Lyttelton.

A sort of equestrian order, who by the spirit of that middle situation, are the fittest for preventing things from running to excess. Burke.

EQUIA'NGULAR.* adj. Equangular: equiangular is now the word. See EQUANGULAR.

EQUICRU'RAL. } adj. [æquus, and crus, La-
EQUICRU'RE. } tin.]

1. Having legs of an equal length.
2. Having the legs of an equal length, and longer than the base; isosceles.

An equicrure triangle goes upon a certain proportion of length and breadth. Digby on the Soul.

We successively draw lines from angle to angle, until seven equicrural triangles be described.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

EQUIDI'STANCE.* n. s. [equidistance, Fr. Cotgrave; æquus and distantia, Lat.] Equal distance or remoteness.

The collateral equidistance of cousin-german from the stock whence both descend, hath in it no such appearance of inequality.
Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience, p. 334.

The Antœci are also opposite, but vary neither in meridian nor equidistance from the horizon respecting either hemisphere.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 5.

From the equidistance of the letters and vowel, they gather the distinction of the persons.
Lightfoot, Miscell. p. 11.

EQUIDI'STANT.† adj. [equidistant, Fr. Cotgrave; æquus and distans, Latin.] At the same distance.

Into our reason flow, and there doe end
All, that this natural world doth comprehend;
Quotidian things, and equidistant hence,
Shut in, for man, in one circumference.
Donne, Poems, p. 240.

The fixt stars are not all placed in the same concave superficies, and equidistant from us, as they seem to be. Ray.

EQUIDI'STANTLY.† adv. [from equidistant.] At the same distance.

The liver, seated on the right side, by the subclavian division equidistantly communicates unto either arm. Brown.

A circle drawn equidistantly from these describeth the equator.
Gregory, Posthuma, (1650,) p. 282.

EQUIFO'RMITY. n. s. [æquus and forma, Lat.] Uniform equality.

No diversity or difference, but a simplicity of parts and equiformity of motion.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

EQUILA'TERAL. adj. [æquus and latus, Lat.] Having all sides equal.

Circles or squares, or triangles equilateral, which are all figures of equal lines, can differ but in greater or lesser. Bacon.

Trifling futility appears in their twelve signs of the zodiack and their aspects: why no more aspects than diametrically opposite, and such as make equilateral figures? Bentley.

EQUILA'TERAL.* n. s. A side exactly corresponding to others.

Opposite to this castle is erected the sepulcher of Bahaman's beloved queen, in the high-way as we passed: 'tis of four equilaterals raised above eight yards high, the material stone well squared, and very apparent and comely.
Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 200.

To EQUILI'BRATE. v. a. [from equilibrium.] To balance equally; to keep even with equal weight on each side.

If the point of the knife, drawn over the loadstone, have in this affriction been drawn from the equator of the loadstone towards the pole, it will attract one of the extremes of an equilibrated magnetick needle. Boyle, Experiments.

The bodies of fishes are equilibrated with the water in which they swim. Arbuthnot on Air.

EQUILIBRA'TION. n. s. [from equilibrate.] Equipoise; the act of keeping the balance even.

The accession of bodies upon, or secession thereof from the earth's surface, perturb not the equilibration of either hemisphere. Brown, Vulg. Err.

In so great a variety of motions, as running, leaping, and dancing, nature's laws of equilibration are observed. Derham.

EQUILI'BRIOUS.* adj. [Lat. æquilibris.] Equally poised.

'Tis a great instance of the Divine Wisdom, that our faculties are made in so regular and equilibrious an order. Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 110.

Our rational and sensitive propensions are made in such a regular and equilibrious order, that proportionably as the one does increase in activity, the other always decays. Scott, Christian Life, i. 3.

EQUILI'BRIOUSLY.* adv. [from equilibrious.] In equipoise.

Some truths seem almost falsehoods, and some falsehoods almost truths; wherein falsehood and truth seem almost equilibriously stated, and but a few grains of distinction to bear down the balance.
Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 3.

EQUI'LIBRIST.* n. s. [Lat. æquilibris.] One that balances a thing equally.

A monkey has lately performed there [at the Haymarket in 1768], both as a rope-dancer, and an equilibrist, such tricks as no man was thought equal to, before the Turk appeared in England.
Granger, Biog. Hist. iv. cl. 12.

EQUILI'BRITY.* n. s. [Lat. æquilibris.] Equality of weight. Cockeram.

EQUILI'BRIUM. n. s. [Lat.]

1. Equipoise; equality of weight.
2. Equality of evidence, motives, or powers of any kind.

Things are not left to an equilibrium, to hover under an indifference whether they shall come to pass, or not come to pass. South.

It is in equilibrio
If deities descend or no;
Then let th' affirmative prevail,
As requisite to form my tale. Prior.

Health consists in the equilibrium between those two powers, when the fluids move so equally that they don't press upon the solids with a greater force than they can bear. Arbuthnot.

EQUI'NAL.* adj. [Lat. equinus.] Relating to a horse.

Bearing an equinal shape.
Heywood, Hierarch. of Angels, (1635,) p. 175.

EQUINE'CESSARY. adj. [æquus and necessarius, Lat.] Needful in the same degree.

For both to give blows and to carry,
In fights, are equinecessary. Hudibras.

EQUINO'CTIAL. n. s. [æquus and nox, Lat.] The line that encompasses the world at an equal distance from either pole, to which circle when the sun comes, he makes equal days and nights all over the globe; the same with equator.

EQUINO'CTIAL. adj. [from equinox.]

1. Pertaining to the equinox.

Thrice the equinoctial line
He circled; four times cross'd the car of night
From pole to pole, traversing each colure.
Milton, P. L.

Some say the sun
Was bid turn reins from the equinoctial road,
Like distant breadth. Milton, P. L.

2. Happening about the time of the equinoxes.

3. Being near the equinoctial line; having the properties of things near the equator.

In vain they covet shades and Thracia's gales,
Pining with equinoctial heat. Philips.

EQUINO'CTIALLY. adv. [from equinoctial.] In the direction of the equinoctial.

They may be refrigerated inclanately, or somewhat equinoctially; that is, towards the eastern and western points. Brown.

E'QUINOX. n. s. [æquus and nox, Lat.]

1. Equinoxes are the precise times in which the sun enters into the first point of Aries and Libra; for then, moving exactly under the equinoctial, he makes our days and nights equal. This he doth twice a year, about the 21st of March and 23rd of September, which therefore are called the vernal and autumnal equinoxes. Harris.

It ariseth not heliacally about the autumnal equinox. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The time when this kid was taken out of the womb was about the vernal equinox.
Ray on the Creation.

'Twas now the month in which the world began,
If March beheld the first created man;
And since the vernal equinox, the sun
In Aries twelve degrees or more had run. Dryden.

2. Equality; even measure. Improper.

Do but see his vice;
'Tis to his virtues a just equinox,
The one as long as th' other. Shaksp. Othello.

3. Equinoctial wind: a poetical use.

The passage yet was good; the wind, 'tis true,
Was somewhat high, but that was nothing new,
No more than usual equinoxes blew. Dryden.

EQUINU'MERANT. adj. [æquus and numerus, Lat.] Having the same number; consisting of the same number.

This talent of gold, though not equinumerant, nor yet equiponderant, as to any other; yet was equivalent to some correspondent talent in brass.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

To EQUIP.† v. a. [equipper, Fr. This is all the notice which Dr. Johnson takes concerning the origin of equip. But the word is too curious to be so dismissed. It is properly a naval term; equippe being the old French for a sailor, and so used in the thirteenth century; derived perhaps from the barbarous Latin eschipare, to furnish or adorn vessels; whence echipper or equipper, as Junius has observed, was easily formed. See also Du Cange in V. ESCHIPARE. And thus our own word was also at first written esquippe, and used in the naval sense, as by Barret in 1580: "to esquippe, or furnish ships with all ablements." Of this primary sense of the word Dr. Johnson has taken no notice. Verstegan, many years after Barret's Dictionary was published, tells a ridiculous story of equip being then not generally intelligible: "A principal courtier, writing from London to a personage of authority in the north parts touching the training of men, and providing furniture for war, willed him among other things to equippe his horses: the receiver of the letter, with some labour, came at last to the understanding of it all except equippe, whereof in no sort he could conceive the meaning: in the end he consulted about it with divers gentlemen in the country thereabouts; but none could resolve him. It was among them remembered, that we used in our language the word quipping, and the word whipping; the first not proper for horses, but sometimes used to men; the latter not fit for gentlemen's horses, but for carters' jades. In fine, none of them all being able to find, in all the English they had, what equippe might mean; a messenger was sent on purpose to the Court at London, to learn the meaning thereof of the writer of the letter!" Restit. of Decayed Intelligence, chap. 7.]

1. To fit a ship for sea. The present as well as the old sense.

People who equipped ships for the war against Troy. Bp. Patrick on Judges, v. 14.

2. To furnish for a horseman or cavalier.

3. To furnish; to accoutre; to dress out.

The country are led astray in following the town; and equipped in a ridiculous habit, when they fancy themselves in the height of the mode.
Addison, Spectator.

E'QUIPAGE.† n. s. [equipage, Fr. Our word was pronounced, generally, as savouring of witless affectation by Davies, the contemporary of Shakspeare, in his Paper's Complaint; who, doubtless, was ignorant of the particular usage of it by Spenser.]

1. Furniture for a horseman.

Equipage [is] furniture or provision for horsemanship, especially in triumphs or tournaments.
Bullokar.

2. Carriage of state; vehicle.

Winged spirits, and chariots wing'd
From th' armory of God; where stand of old
Myriads, between two brazen mountains lodg'd
Against a solemn day harness'd at hand,
Celestial equipage! Milton, P. L.

3. Attendance; retinue.

How could I rear the Muse on stately stage,
And teach her tread aloft in buskin fine,
With queint Bellona in her equipage.
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Dec.

Soon as thy dreadful trump begins to sound,
The god of war, with his fierce equipage,
Thou dost awake, sleep never he so sound.
Spenser, F. Q.

When the spirit of wandering takes him, he is attended by his female and their equipage of children. Swift on giving Badges to the Poor.

Think what an equipage thou hast in air,
And view with scorn two pages and a chair. Pope.

4. Accoutrements; furniture.

A huge neat's tongue he in his right hand held,
His left was with a good black pudding fill'd:
With a grave look, in this odd equipage
The clownish mimic traverses the stage. Prior.

E'QUIPAGED.† adj. [from equipage.] Accoutred; attended; having fine habits; having splendid retinue.

She forth issued with a goodly train
Of squires and ladies, equipaged well,
And entertained them right fairly, as befell.
Spenser, F. Q.

We shall all be mounted, equipaged, and in better order to-morrow.
Wodroephe, Fr. and Eng. Gr. (1623,) p. 214.

EQUIPE'NDENCY. n. s. [æquus and pendeo, Lat.] The act of hanging in equipoise; not determined either way.

The will of man, in the state of innocence, had an entire freedom, a perfect equipendency and indifference to either part of the contradiction, to stand or not to stand. South, Serm. i. 57.

EQUI'PMENT. n. s. [from equip.]

1. The act of equipping or accoutring.

2. Accoutrement; equipage.

E'QUIPOISE. n. s. [æquus, Lat. and poids, Fr.] Equality of weight; equilibration; equality of force.

In the temperate zone of our life there are few bodies at such an equipoise of humours, but that the prevalency of some one indisposeth the spirits.
Glanville, Scepsis.

EQUIPO'LLENCE.† n. s. [equipolence, old Fr. from æquus and pollentia, Lat. Chaucer uses our word, in the plural, for equivalents. Rom. R. 7126.] Equality of force or power.

He maketh so proud pretence,
That in his equipollence
He judgeth him equivalent
With God Omnipotent:
But yet beware the rod,
And the stroke of God. Skelton, Poems, p. 173.

EQUIPO'LLENCY.* n. s. The modern word for equipollence.

There is no equipollency between these.
Paley, Nat. Theology, ch. 11.

EQUIPO'LLENT.† adj. [equipolent, old Fr. æquipollens, Lat.] Having equal power or force; equivalent.

Votary resolution is made equipollent to custom, even in matter of blood. Bacon, Essays.

It may be doubtful yet, whether here be not excepted not only fornication itself, but other causes equipollent, and proportional to fornication.
Milton, Tetrachordon.

EQUIPO'LLENTLY.* adv. [from equipollent.] Equivalently; of the same force.

Both the spirit of God and the power of God St. Paul doth equipollently express by the power of the Holy Ghost. Barrow, Serm. vol. i. S. 34.

EQUIPO'NDERANCE. } n. s. [æquus and pon-
EQUIPO'NDERANCY. } dus, Lat.] Equality of weight; equipoise. Dict.

EQUIPO'NDERANT. adj. [æquus and ponderans, Lat.] Being of the same weight.

Their lungs may serve to render their bodies equiponderant to the water. Ray on the Creation.

A column of air, of any given diameter, is equiponderant to a column of quicksilver of between twenty-nine and thirty inches height. Locke.

To EQUIPO'NDERATE. v. n. [æquus and pondero, Lat.] To weigh equal to any thing.

The heaviness of any weight doth increase proportionably to its distance from the centre: thus one pound A at D, will equiponderate unto two pounds at B, if the distance A D is double unto A B. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

EQUIPO'NDIOUS. adj. [æquus and pondus, Lat.] Equilibrated; equal on either part. Not in use.

The Scepticks affected an indifferent equiponderious neutrality, as the only means to their ataraxia. Glanville, Scepsis.

E'QUITABLE. adj. [equitable, Fr.]

1. Just; due to justice.

It seems but equitable to give the artists leave to name them as they please. Boyle, Scept. Chymist.

2. Loving justice; candid; impartial: as, an equitable judge.

E'QUITABLENESS.* n. s. [from equitable.] Justness.

Demonstrating both the equitableness and practicableness of the thing. Locke.

E'QUITABLY. adv. [from equitable.] Justly; impartially.

EQUITA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. equitation, "a riding on horseback." Cotgrave. Mr. Boswell's remark, as to the making this word, whether by Lord Pembroke or himself, is not correct. The word was in use long before their time.] Riding on horseback; management of a horse.

I have lately made a few rural equitations to visit some seats, gardens, &c.

Letter, dated in 1728, Nichols's Ill. of Lit. His. iv. 497.

This day we were to begin our equitation, as I said; for I would needs make a word too. It is remarkable, that my noble, and to me most constant friend, the earl of Pembroke, has since hit upon the very same word. The title of the first edition of his lordship's very useful book was, in simple terms, "A method of breaking horses, and teaching soldiers to ride." The title of the second edition is, "Military equitation."

Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

E'QUITY.† n. s. [equité, Fr. æquitas, Lat.]

1. Justice; right; honesty.

Foul subordination is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Christianity secures both the private interests of men and the publick peace, enforcing all justice and equity. Tillotson.

2. Impartiality.

Liking their own somewhat better than other men's, even because they are their own, they must in equity allow us to be like unto them in this affection. Hooker.

3. [In law.] The rules of decision observed by the court of Chancery, as distinct from the literal maxims of law.

In the court of Chancery there are two distinct tribunals; the one ordinary, being a court of common law; the other extraordinary, being a court of equity. Blackstone.

EQUI'VALENCE. } n. s. [æquus and
EQUI'VALENCY. } valeo, Lat.] Equality of power or worth.

Must the servant of God be assured that which he nightly prays for shall be granted? Yes, either formally or by way of equivalence, either that or something better. Hammond.

That there is any equivalence or parity of worth betwixt the good we do to our brother, and the good we hope for from God, all good Protestants do deny. Smalridge.

Civil causes are equivalent unto criminal causes, but this equivalency only respects the careful and diligent admission of proofs. Ayliffe, Parergon.

To EQUI'VALENCE. v. a. [from the noun.] To equiponderate; to be equal to.

Whether the transgression of Eve seducing did not exceed Adam seduced, or whether the resistibility of his reason did not equivalence the facility of her seduction, we shall refer to schoolmen. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EQUI'VALENT.† adj. [equivalent, old Fr.; æquus and valens, Latin.]

1. Equal in value.

Things
Well nigh equivalent, and neighb'ring value,
By lot are parted; but the value, high heav'n, thy share,
In equal balance laid with earth and hell,
Flings up the adverse scale, and shuns proportion.
Prior.

2. Equal in any excellence.

No fair to thine
Equivalent, or second! which compell'd
Me thus, though importune perhaps, to come
And gaze, and worship thee. Milton, P. L.

3. Equal in force or power.

The dread of Israel's foes, who, with a strength Equivalent to angels, walk'd their streets,
None offering fight. Milton, S. A.

4. Of the same cogency or weight.

The consideration of publick utility is, by very good advice, judged at the least equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hooker.

5. Of the same import or meaning.

The use of the word minister is brought down to the literal signification of it, a servant; for now to serve and to minister, servile and ministerial, are terms equivalent. South.

EQUI'VALENT. n. s. A thing of the same weight, dignity, or value.

The slave without a ransom shall be sent;
It rests for you to make th' equivalent.
Dryden, Homer.

Fancy a regular obedience to one law will be a full equivalent for their breach of another. Rogers.

EQUI'VALENTLY.* adv. [from equivalent.] In an equal manner; equipollently.

Insufficient am I
His grace to magnify,
And laude equivalently. Skelton, Poems, p. 88.

We seldom in kind, or equivalently, are ourselves clear of that which we charge upon others. Barrow, Serm. on St. Matt. vii. 1.

EQUI'VOCAL. adj. [æquivocus, Latin.]

1. Of doubtful signification; meaning different things; standing for different notions.

These sentences to sugar, or to gall,
Being strong on both sides, are equivocal.
Shakspeare, Othello.

Words of different significations, taken in general, are of an equivocal sense; but being considered with all their particular circumstances, they have their sense restrained. Stilling fleet.

The greater number of those who held this were misguided by equivocal terms. Swift.

2. Uncertain; doubtful; happening different ways.

Equivocal generation is the production of plants without seed, or of insects or animals without parents in the natural way of coition between male and female; which is now believed never to happen, but that all bodies are univocally produced. Harris.

There is no such thing as equivocal or spontaneous generation; but all animals are generated by animal parents of the same species with themselves. Ray.

Those half-learn'd witlings, num'rous in our isle
As half-form'd insects on the banks of Nile;
Unfinish'd things, one knows not what to call,
Their generation's so equivocal.
Pope, Essay on Criticism.

EQUI'VOCAL. n. s. Ambiguity; word of doubtful meaning.

Shall two or three wretched equivocals have the force to corrupt us? Dennis.

EQUI'VOCALLY. adv. [from equivocal.]

1. Ambiguously; in a doubtful or double sense.

Words abstracted from their proper sense and signification, lose the nature of words, and are only equivocally so called. South.

2. By uncertain or irregular birth; by equivocal generation; by generation out of the stated order.

No insect or animal did ever proceed equivocally from putrefaction, unless in miraculous cases; as in Egypt by the Divine judgements. Bentley.

EQUI'VOCALNESS.† n. s. [from equivocal.] Ambiguity; double meaning.

A language of a philosophical institution, or a real character, would be by much the most easy; as being free from all anomaly, equivocalness, redundancy, and unnecessary grammatications.

Dalgarno, Didasc. (Oxf. 1680,) p. 52.

Distinguish the equivocalness or lassitude of the word, and then point out that determinate part which is the ground of my demonstration. Norris.

The equivocalness of the title gave a handle to those that came after to understand it of a form of faith composed by Athanasius.

Waterland, Hist. of the Ath. Creed.

To EQUI'VOCATE.† v. n. [æquivocatio, Latin.] To use words of double meaning; to use ambiguous expressions; to mean one thing and express another.

They were allowed, and taught, by the Jesuits, to equivocate upon oath.

Proceedings against Garnet, (1606,) sign. V. 3.

Not only Jesuits can equivocate.
Dryden, Hind and Panther.

My soul disdain'd a promise; —
— But yet your false equivocating tongue,
Your looks, your eyes, your ev'ry motion promis'd:
But you are ripe in frauds, and learn'd in falsehoods. Smith.

To EQUI'VOCATE.* v. a. To render capable of a double interpretation.

He equivocated his vow by a mental reservation.

Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. (1646,) p. 142.

EQUIVOCA'TION. n. s. [æquivocatio, Lat.] Ambiguity of speech; double meaning.

Reproof is easily misapplied, and, through equivocation, wrested. Hooker.

I pull in resolution, and begin
To doubt the equivocation of the fiend,
That lies like truth. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

EQUI'VOCATOR.† n. s. [from equivocate.] One who uses ambiguous language; one who uses mental reservation.

Here's an equivocator that could swear in both the scales against either scale; yet could not equivocate to Heaven. Shakspeare.

The second rank is of liars, and equivocators, as Apollo Pythius, and the like.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 43.

A secret liar or equivocator is such a one as by mental reservations, and other tricks, deceives him to whom he speaks, being lawfully called to deliver all the truth. Fuller, Holy State, p. 390.

E'QUIVOKE.* n. s. [old Fr. equivoque. Many now write our own word, like the French; but equivoke is in our old lexicography, (as in the vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar,) and so written by our old authors. Equivoque should, therefore, be neglected.]

1. Equivocation; double meaning.

I know your equivokes;
You're grown the better fathers of 'em o' late.
B. Jonson, Dev. is an Ass.

2. An expression where a word has at once different meanings; a quibble.

I have by me the following unprinted lines on Miss M.'s dancing, 1743; which, making allowance for the equivoque in the last stanza, are not bad:

Accomplish'd maid, my trivial rhyme
Must do thy graces wrong,
Who dost not only dance in time,
But steal, like time, along.
Graves, Recollect. of Shenstone, p. 42.

E'QUIVOQUE.* See EQUIVOKE.

ER. A syllable in the middle of names or places, comes by contraction from the Saxon papa, dwellers.
Gibson's Camden.

ER.* A syllable at the end of the word, signifying the inhabitants of a place, may be deduced from papa also, or from the Goth. wair, a man; as, Lundenwer, by contraction, Lundener, Londoner, i. e. a man of London; though the Saxons certainly called the Londoners Lunben-pape. See Lye's Anglo-Saxon Dictionary and Greenwood's Grammar.]

E'RA.† n. s. [æra, Latin. Dr. Johnson takes no further notice of the etymology. Era, in old Latin, signified the same as number; and hera, in the Spanish tongue, is used for time. Thus the Saxon ȝeap, and thence our year. See Gregory's Posthuma, 1650, p. 146, where several mistaken and improbable conjectures concerning the origin of this word are noticed.] The account of time from any particular date or epoch.

From the blessings they bestow
Our times are dated, and our eras move:
They govern, and enlighten all below,
As thou dost all above. Prior.

To ERA'DIATE.* v. n. [Latin e, from, and radius, a ray.] To shoot like a ray.

A kind of life eradiating and resulting both from intellect and Psyche.
More, Notes on Psychozoia.

ERADIA'TION.†. n. s. [from eradiate.] Emission of radiance.

God gives me a heart humbly to converse with him, from whom alone are all the eradiations of true majesty. K. Charles.

He first supposeth some eradiation and emanation of spirit, or secret quality, or whatsoever, to be directed from our bodies to the blood dropped from it. Hales, Rem. p. 288.

To ERA'DICATE.† v. a. [eradico, Latin. This word is pronounced by Heylin, in 1656, uncouth and unusual.]

1. To pull up by the root.

He suffereth the poison of Nubia to be gathered, and Aconite to be eradicated, yet this not to be moved. Brown.

2. To completely destroy; to end; to cut off.

If a gouty person can bring himself entirely to a milk diet, he may so change the whole juices of his body as to eradicate the distemper.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

If vice cannot wholly be eradicated, it ought at least to be confined to particular objects.
Swift, Examiner.

ERADICA'TION.† n. s. [from eradicate.]

1. The act of tearing up by the root; destruction; excision.

Persecuted both by force and fraud, and that to their utter extinguishment and eradication from the face of the earth.
Dean King, Serm. 5. Nov. 1608, p. 14.

Be true and sincere to thy best hopes, and interest, by a perfect eradication of all thy exorbitant lusts and corruptions.
Hallywell, Melampr. p. 105.

2. The state of being torn up by the roots.

They affirm the roots of mandrakes give a shriek upon eradication, which is false below confutation.
Brown.

ERA'DICATIVE. adj. [from eradicate.] Curing radically; driving quite away.

ERA'DICATIVE.* n. s. A medicine which cures radically.

Thus sometimes eradicatives are omitted, in the beginning requisite; as in violent motions of the matter, especially to the more noble parts: then, how absurd to rest in lenitives!
Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 88.

To ERA'SE. v. a. [raser, Fr.]

1. To destroy; to exscind.

The heads of birds, for the most part, are given erased; that is, plucked off. Peacham on Blazoning.

2. To expunge; to rub out.

ERA'SEMENT. n. s. [from erase.]

1. Destruction; devastation.
2. Expunction; abolition.

ERA'SURE.* n. s. Rasure; which see.

ERE.† adv. [æp, Saxon; air, Gothick; eer, Dutch. This word is sometimes vitiously written e'er, as if from ever. It is likewise written or before ever, op and æp in Saxon being indiscriminately written. To this remark of Lye, adduced by Dr. Johnson, it may be added that the old English or and ere were also indiscriminately used. Thus, "No man will put his son to a botcher to learne or he binde him prentise to a taylor," i. e. ere, before. Sir T. Elyot's Governour. Again, "They were long time full busie about me, or I consented to them to be a priest." Fox's Acts and Mon. Thus also in the Version of the Bible of 1578. "He knew all things or ever they were made," Ecclesiasticus, xxiii. 20., which, in the present version, is, "ere ever they were created." Ere was at first er: "Long er the bright sunne uprisen was," Chaucer, Flower and Leaf.] Before; sooner than.

Ere he would have hang'd a man for the getting a hundred bastards, he would have paid for the nursing a thousand. Shakspeare.

The lions brake all their bones in pieces or ever they came to the bottom of the den. Dan. vi. 24.

Just trial, ere I merit
My exaltation without change or end. Milton, P. L.

The mountain trees in distant prospect please,
Ere yet the pine descended to the seas;
Ere sails were spread new oceans to explore.
Dryden, Ovid.

The birds shall cease to tune their ev'ning song,
The winds to breathe, the waving woods to move,
And streams to murmur, ere I cease to love. Pope.

ERE. prep. Before.

Our fruitful Nile
Flow'd ere the wonted season.
Dryden, All for Love.

ERELO'NG, adv. [from ere and long.] Before a long time had elapsed. Nec longum tempus.

The anger already began to paint revenge in many colours, erelong he had not only gotten pity but pardon. Sidney.

The wild horse having enmity with the stag, came to a man to desire aid, who mounted upon his back, and following the stag, erelong slew him.
Spenser on Ireland.

Nothing is lasting that is feigned: it will have another face than it had erelong.
B. Jonson, Discoveries.

They swim in joy,
Erelong to swim at large, and laugh, for which
The world erelong a world of tears must weep.
Milton, P. L.

I saw two stock-doves billing, and erelong
Will take the nest. Dryden, Virgil.

It pleases me to think, that I who know so small a portion of the works of the Creator, and with slow and painful steps creep up and down on the surface of this globe, shall erelong shoot away with the swiftness of imagination, and trace the springs of nature's operations. Spectator.

ERENO'W. adv. [from ere and now.] Before this time.

Ah, gentle soldiers, some short time allow;
My father has repented him erenow.
Dryden, Conq. of Granada.

Had the world eternally been, science had been brought to perfection long erenow.
Cheyne, Phil. Prin.

EREWHI'LE. } adv. [from ere and while.]
EREWHI'LES. } Some time ago; before a little while.

I am as fair now as I was erewhile:
Since night you lov'd me, yet since night you left me. Shakspeare.

We sit down to our meals, suspect not the intrusion of armed uninvited guests, who erewhiles, we know, were wont to surprise us.
Decay of Piety.

To ERE'CT.† v. a. [erectus, Latin.]

1. To raise in a straight line; to place perpendicularly to the horizon.
2. To ERECT a Perpendicular. To cross one line by another at right angles.
3. To raise; to build.

He erected there an altar. Gen. xxxiii. 20.

Happier walls expect,
Which, wand'ring long, at last thou shalt erect.
Dryden, Virg.

There are many monuments erected to benefactors to the republick. Addison, on Italy.

4. To establish anew; to settle.

Great difference there is between their proceedings who erect a new commonwealth, which is to have neither regimen nor religion the same that was, and theirs who only reform a decayed estate.
Hooker.

He suffers seventy-two distinct nations to be erected out of the first monarchy, under distinct governours. Ralegh.

5. To elevate; to exalt.

I, who am a party, am not to erect myself into a judge. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

I am far from pretending infallibility: that would be to erect myself into an apostle.
Locke on St. Paul's Epistles.

All the little scramblers after fame fall upon him, and have recourse to their own invention, rather than suffer him to erect himself into an author with impunity. Addison.

6. To lift up; without the relative pronoun, as in the three preceding examples given by Dr. Johnson, which denote personal exaltation or honour.

Woe unto me, should sin my soul infect,
Who dare not now, though innocent, erect
My downcast looks. Sandys, Job, p. 17.

7. To raise consequences from premises.

From fallacious foundations and misapprehended mediums, men erect conclusions no way inferrible from the premises. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Men being too hasty to erect to themselves general notions and ill-grounded theories, find themselves deceived in their stock of knowledge. Locke.

Malebranche erects this proposition, of seeing all things in God, upon their ruin. Locke.

8. To animate; not to depress; to encourage.

Why should not hope
As much erect our thoughts as fear deject them?
Denham.

To ERE'CT. v. n. To rise upright.

The trefoil against rain swelleth in the stalk, and so standeth more upright; for by wet, stalks do erect, and leaves bow down. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

ERE'CT. adj. [erectus, Latin.]

1. Upright; not leaning; not prone.

Birds, far from proneness, are almost erect; advancing the head and breast in progression, only prone in volitation. Brown.

Basil tells us that the serpent went erect like man. Brown.

2. Directed upwards.

Vain were vows,
And plaints, and suppliant hands, to heav'n erect.
Philips.

3. Bold; confident; unshaken.

Let no vain fear thy generous ardour tame;
But stand erect, and sound as loud as fame.
Glanville.

4. Vigorous; not depressed.

That vigilant and erect attention of mind, which in prayer is very necessary, is wasted or dulled. Hooker.

ERE'CTED.* adj. [Lat. erectus.] Aspiring; generous; noble; sublime.

Having found in him a mind of most excellent composition, a piercing wit, quite void of ostentation, high erected thoughts seated in a heart of courtesy. Sidney, Arcad. b. i.

Mammon, the least erected spirit that fell
From heaven. Milton, P. L.

Glory, the reward
That sole excites to high attempts, the flame
Of most erected spirits, most temper'd pure
Ethereal, who all pleasures else despise.
Milton, P. R.

ERE'CTION. n. s. [from erect.]

1. The act of raising, or state of being raised upward.

We are to consider only the erection of the hills above the ordinary land. Brerewood on Languages.

2. The act of building or raising edifices.

The first thing which moveth them thus to cast up their poison, are certain solemnities usual at the first erection of churches. Hooker.

Pillars were set up above one thousand four hundred and twenty-six years before the flood, counting Seth to be an hundred years old at the erection of them. Ralegh, Hist.

3. Establishment; settlement.

It must needs have a peculiar influence upon the erection, continuance, and dissolution of every society. South.

4. Elevation; exaltation of sentiments.

Her peerless height my mind to high erection draws up. Sidney.

5. Act of rousing; excitement to attention.

Starting is an apprehension of the thing feared, and in that is a shrinking, and likewise an inquisition what the matter should be; and in that it is a motion of erection: so that when a man would listen suddenly he starteth; for the starting is an erection of the spirits to attend. Bacon.

ERE'CTIVE.* adj. [Fr. erectif.] Raising; advancing; lifting up. Cotgrave.

ERE'CTNESS.† n. s. [from erect.] Uprightness of posture or form.

We take erectness strictly as Galen defined it: they only, sayeth he, have an erect figure, whose spine and thigh-bone are carried on right lines. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Nor do any persons certainly better deserve the name of men, than such as allow their reason a full employment, and think not the erectness of man's stature a sufficient distinction of him from brutes. Stillingfleet, Orig. Sac. i. 1.

ERE'CTOR.* n. s. [Lat. erector.] One who raises or constructs, or causes to be raised or made. Cotgrave uses this word under dresseur, and defines it "a raiser, framer, fashioner, &c."

Rehoboam's young counsellors were, in some relation, the erectors of Jeroboam's calves. W. Mountagu, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 94.

A teacher of learning, and erector of schools. Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653,) p. 21.

To ERE'MIGATE.* v. n. [Lat. eremigo.] To sail over. Cockeram.

E'REMIT.† n. s. [old French, ermite; Lat. eremita; from the Gr. ἐρημος, a wilderness. Eremite is our old word, in use long before Ralegh wrote, and continued till towards the close of the seventeenth century.] One who lives in a wilderness; one who lives in solitude; a hermit; a solitary: we now say hermit.

Antonius the eremite findeth a fifth commodity not inferiour to any of these four. Ralegh, Hist.

Embryos and idiots, eremites and friars,
White, black, and gray, with all their trumpery.
Milton, P. L.

E'REMITAGE.* n. s. [from eremit; old Fr. ermitage.] The residence of a hermit.

But of his end he could find nothing, nor ever should have known aught, if good fortune had not offered to his view an old physician, who had in his custody a leaden box, which, as he affirmed, was found in the ruins of an old eremitage, as it was a-repairing. Shelton, Don Quixote, p. 136.

EREMI'TICAL.† adj. [from eremit.] Religiously solitary; leading the life of a hermit.

The austere and eremetical harbinger of Christ, it seems, preached there oft, and was heard gladly. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

They have multitudes of religious orders, eremetical and cenobetical. Stillingfleet.

When we descried him [Dr. Johnson] from above, he had a most eremetical appearance. Boswell, Tour to the Hebrides.

EREPTA'TION. n. s. [erepto, Lat.] A creeping forth. Bailey.

ERE'PTION.† n. s. [ereptio, Lat.] A snatching or taking away by force. Cockeram.

To E'RGAT.* v. n. [from the Latin ergo, therefore.] To draw conclusions according to the forms of logick. See ERGO.

Little doth it concern us what the schoolmen ergat in their schools. Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 178.

*E'RGO. adv. [Latin.] Therefore. A term in logick, denoting consequently. It is often used in jocular argumentation.

Cornelius told him that he was a lying rascal; that an universale was not the object of imagination, and that there was no such thing in reality, or à parte rei. But I can prove, quoth Crambe, that there are clysters à parte rei, but clysters are universales; ergo, &c.
Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

If black and white horses are devised, pyed horses shall pass by such devise: but black and white horses are devised; ergo, the plaintiff shall have the pyed horses.
Fortescue, Specimen of Scriblerus's Reports.

E'RGOT. n. s. A sort of stub, like a piece of soft horn, about the bigness of a chestnut, which is placed behind and below the pastern joint, and is commonly hid under the tuft of the fetlock. Farrier's Dict.

E'RGOTISM.* n. s. [from ergo.] A conclusion logically deduced.

States are not governed by ergotisms.
Brown, Chr. Mor. ii. 4.

E'RIACH.* n. s. [Irish.] A pecuniary fine. Hume writes this word eric; but Spenser eriach.

The brehon, that is, their judge, will compound between the murderer and the friends of the party murdered, which prosecute the action, that the malefactor shall give unto them, or to the child or wife of him that is slain, a recompence, which they call an eriach. Spenser on Ireland.

By the brehon law or custom no crime, however enormous, was punished with death, but by a fine or pecuniary mulct, which was levied upon the criminal. Murder itself was atoned for in this manner; and each man, according to his rank, had a different rate or value affixed to him, which was called his eric. Hume, Hist. Gr. Br. i. 43.

E'RIN.* n. s. [Irish; whence the old French also, Erin.] Ireland.

The most ancient Irish called their country Erin, or Eire, or Iere; which word imports a western country; and by this name it was called by the old Greek geographers.
Campbell on the Ecc. and Lit. Hist. of Irel. p. 14.

ERI'NGO.† n. s. Sea-holly. A plant. More correctly eryngo, from the Gr. ἠρύγγιον, and Fr. erynge. But Dryden writes, "hot eringoes."

ERI'STICAL.† adj. [ἔρις.] Controversial; relating to dispute; containing controversies.

To what purpose should he or any man write eristical books? Bp. Parker, Reproof of the Rehearsal, &c. (1673,) p. 125.

ERI'STICK.* adj. Eristical; controversial.

So many eristick writings.
Life of Firman, (1698,) p. 20.

ERKE.† adj. [Sax. earg, slow, slothful; Gr. ἀεργὸς, the same. In Scottish, ergh is hesitating.] Idle; lazy; slothful. An old word; whence we now say irksome.

For men therein should hem delite;
And of that dede be not erke,
But oft sithes haunt that werke.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 4867.

E'RMELIN. n. s. [diminutive of ermin; armelin, Fr.] An ermine. See ERMINE.

Silver skins,
Passing the hate spot ermelins. Sidney.

E'RMINE. n. s. [hermine, French, from armenius, Latin.] An animal in cold countries, which very nearly resembles a weasel in shape; having a white pile; and the tip of the tail black, and furnishing a valuable fur. The fell-mongers and furriers put upon it little bits of Lombardy lambskin, which is noted for its shining black colour, the better to set off the whiteness of the ermine.
Dict. Trevoux.

Ermine is the fur of a little beast, about the bigness of a weasel, called Mus Armenius; for they are found in Armenia. Peacham on Blazoning.

A lady's honour must be touch'd,
Which, nice as ermines, will not bear a soil.
Dryden.

E'RMINED. adj. [from ermine.] Clothed with ermine.

Arcadia's countess, here in ermin'd pride,
Is there Pastora by a fountain's side. Pope.

E'RNE. } Do immediately flow from the E'RON. } Saxon epn, eapn, a cottage, or place of retirement. Gibson's Camden.

To ERO'DE. v. a. [erodo, Latin.] To canker, or eat away; to corrode.

It hath been anciently received, that the sea-air hath antipathy with the lungs, if it cometh near the body, and erodeth them. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The blood, being too sharp or thin, erodes the vessel. Wiseman.

To E'ROGATE.* v. a. [Lat. erogo.] To bestow upon; to give.

To the acquiring of science belongeth understanding and memory, which as a treasury hath power to retain, and also to erogate and distribute when opportunity happeneth.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 198.

No man can supererogate, till he have first erogated. In plainer terms, no man can have any thing to spare to bestow upon others, (for this they mean by supererogating,) till he hath done all that he is bound to do for himself.
Bp. Patrick, Answ. to the Touchstone, p. 119.

EROGA'TION.† n. s. [erogatio, Latin.] The act of giving or bestowing; distribution.

Some think such manner of erogation not to be worthy the name of liberality.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 108. b.

Touching the wealth of England, it never also appeared so much by publick erogations and taxes, which the Long Parliament raised.
Howell, Lett. iv. 47.

ERO'SION.† n. s. [erosion, old Fr. erosio, Lat.]

1. The act of eating away.
2. The state of being eaten away; canker; corrosion.

As sea-salt is a sharp solid body, in a constant diet of salt meat, it breaks the vessels, produceth erosions of the solid parts, and all the symptoms of the sea-scurvy. Arbuthnot.

ERO'TICAL.* } adj. ἐρωτικὸς, Gr. from ἔρως,
ERO'TICK. } love; erotique, French.] Relating to the passion of love.

Jason Pratensis, who writes copiously of this erotical love, doth place and reckon it among the affections of the brain.
Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 452.

If he be born when Mars and Venus are in conjunction, he will undoubtedly be inclined to love and erotick melancholy.
Ferrand on Love Melancholy, (1640,) p. 150.

To ERR. v. n. [erro, Latin.]

1. To wander; to ramble.

A storm of strokes, well meant, with fury flies,
And errs about their temples, ears, and eyes.
Dryden, Virg.

The rains arise, and fires their warmth dispense;
And fix'd and erring stars dispose their influence.
Dryden, Virg.

2. To miss the right way; to stray.

We have erred and strayed like lost sheep.
Common Prayer.

I will not lag behind, nor err
The way, thou leading. Milton, P. L.

3. To deviate from any purpose.

But errs not nature from this gracious end,
From burning suns, when livid deaths descend.
Pope.

4. To commit errours; to mistake.

It is a judgement maim'd and most imperfect,
That will confess perfection so could err,
Against all rules of nature. Shakspeare, Othello.

Do they not err that devise evil? Prov. xiv. 22.

Possibly the man may err in his judgement of circumstances, and therefore let him fear; but because it is not certain he is mistaken, let him not despair. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

Nor has it only been the heat of erring persons that has been thus mischievous, but sometimes men of right judgements have too much contributed to the breach. Decay of Piety.

The muses' friend, unto himself severe,
With silent pity looks on all that err. Waller.

He who from the reflected image of the sun in water would conclude of light and heat, could not err more grossly. Cheyne.

To ERR.* v. a. To mislead; to cause to err.

Sometimes he [the devil] tempts by covetousness, drunkenness, pleasure, pride, &c. errs, dejects, saves, kills, protects, and rides some men as they do their horses. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 50.

E'RRABLE. adj. [from err.] Liable to err; liable to mistake.

E'RRABLENESS. n. s. [from errable.] Liableness to errour; liableness to mistake.

We may infer, from the errableness of our nature, the reasonableness of compassion to the seduced. Decay of Piety.

E'RRAND.† n. s. [ærenð, Saxon; arend, Danish; erende, Icelandick, which Lye pronounces to be from the Gothick airus, a messenger. Chaucer uses erande for a message.] A message; something to be told or done by a messenger; a mandate; a commission. It is generally used now only in familiar language.

Servants being commanded to go, shall stand still, till they have their errand warranted unto them. Hooker.

But hast thou done thy errand to Baptista?
— I told him that your father was in Venice.
Shakspeare.

A queen! have I not forbid her my house? She comes of errands, does she? Shakspeare.

When he came, behold the captains of the host were sitting, and he said, I have an errand to thee, O captain. 2 Kings, ix. 5.

From them I go
This uncouth errand sole. Milton, P. L.

His eyes,
That run through all the heavens, or down to th' earth,
Bear his swift errands, over moist and dry,
O'er sea and land. Milton, P. L.

Well thou dost to hide from common sight
Thy close intrigues, too bad to bear the light;
Nor doubt I, but the silver-footed dame,
Tripping from sea, on such an errand came.
Dryden, Homer.

E'RRANT.† adj. [errans, Latin; errant, French.]

1. Wandering; roving; rambling. Particularly applied to an order of knights much celebrated in romances, who roved about the world in search of adventures.

It was thought that there are just seven planets, or errant stars, in the lower orbs of heaven; but it is now demonstrable unto sense, that there are many more. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Chief of domestick knights, and errant,
Either for chartel or for warrant. Hudibras.

2. Vile; abandoned; completely bad. From the first application of the word to a vagabond or stroller, as by Chaucer: "An outlaw, or else a thief erraunt," Manciple's Tale. The word has also been written errand, and in this sense is now usually arrant. See ARRANT.

Good impertinence:
Thy company, if I slept not very well
Anights, would make me an errant fool with questions. B. Jonson, Catiline.

3. Deviating from a certain course.

Knots, by the conflux of meeting sap,
Infect the sound pine, and divert his grain,
Tortive and errant from his course of growth.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cres.

4. In law, itinerant: applied to judges who go the circuit, and to bailiffs at large.

Our judges of assize are called justices errant, because they go no direct course, but this way and that way from one town to another, where their sittings be appointed; and so is a bailiff at large called a bailiff errant.
Butler, Eng. Gram. 1633.

E'RRANTRY. n. s. [from errant.]

1. An errant state; the condition of a wanderer.

After a short space of errantry upon the seas, he got safe back to Dunkirk. Addison, Freeholder.

2. The employment of a knight errant.

ERRA'TA.† n. s. [Latin. The singular erratum, is sometimes used.] The faults of the printer inserted in the beginning or end of the book.

If he meet with faults besides those that the errata take notice of, he will consider the weakness of the author's eyes. Boyle.

ERRA'TICAL.* adj. [erraticus, Latin.] Uncertain; keeping no regular order; wandering.

This man's wit wanders with his erratical synod.
Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Married Clergy, p. 200.

Fifteen days he remained quietly at home, without giving any argument, or seconding his former vanities; in which time past many pleasant encounters between him and his two gossips, the curate and barber, upon that point which he defended, to wit, that the world needed nothing so much as knights errant, and that the erratical knighthood ought to be again renewed therein.
Shelton, Don Quixote, p. 11. b.

ERRA'TICALLY. adv. [from erratical or erratick.] Without rule; without any established method or order.

They come not forth in generations erratically, or different from each other, but in specifical and regular shapes. Brown.

ERRA'TICK.† adj. [erraticus, Latin; erratique, Fr.]

1. Wandering; uncertain; keeping no certain order; holding no established course. It is applied by Chaucer to the planets.

The earth, and each erratick world,
Around the sun their proper centre whirl'd,
Compos'd but one extended vast machine.
Blackmore.

Through the vast waves the dreadful wonders move,
Hence nam'd erratick. Pope, Odyssey.

2. Irregular; changeable.

They are incommoded with a slimy mattery cough, stink of breath, and an erratick fever.
Harvey on Consumptions.

ERRA'TICK.* n. s. A rogue. See the second sense of ERRANT. Cockeram.

ERRA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. erratio.] A wandering to and fro. Cockeram.

ERRA'TUM.* See ERRATA.

ERRHI'NE.† n. s. [ἐῤῥινα, Gr. errhine, old Fr.] What is snuffed up the nose, to occasion sneezing.

We see sage or betony bruised, sneezing powder, and other powders or liquors, which the physicians call errhines, put into the nose to draw phlegm from the head. Bacon.

E'RRING.* adj. [from err.] Erratick; uncertain; perplexed with errour.

Tongues I'll hang on every tree,
That shall civil sayings shew;
Some, how brief the life of man
Runs his erring pilgrimage. Shaks. As you like it.

He all those erring parts describ'd so well,
That Theseus conquer'd, and the monster fell.
Dryden, Æn.

ERRO'NEOUS.† adj. [erroign, Norm. French; erroné, Cotgrave; erro, Lat.]

1. Wandering; unsettled.

They roam
Erroneous and disconsolate, themselves
Accusing, and their chiefs improvident
Of military chance. Philips.

This circle, by being placed here, stopped much of the erroneous light, which otherwise would have disturbed the vision. Newton, Opticks.

Unblam'd abundance crown'd the royal board,
What time this done rever'd her prudent lord;
Who now, so heaven decrees, is doom'd to mourn,
Bitter constraint! erroneous and forlorn.
Pope, Odyssey.

2. Irregular; wandering from the right road.

If the vessels, instead of breaking, yield, it subjects the person to all the inconveniencies of erroneous circulation; that is, when the blood strays into the vessels destined to carry serum or lymph. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

3. Mistaken; misled by errour.

Thou art far from destroying the innocent with the guilty, and the erroneous with the malicious. King Charles.

There is the erroneous as well as the rightly informed conscience. South.

4. Mistaken; not conformable to truth; physically false.

Their whole counsel is condemned, as having either proceeded from the blindness of those times, or from negligence, or from desire of honour and glory, or from an erroneous opinion that such things might be for a while. Hooker.

A wonderful erroneous observation that walketh about, is commonly received, contrary to all the true account of time and experience. Bacon.

The phænomena of light have been hitherto explained by supposing that they arise from new modifications of the rays, which is an erroneous supposition. Newton, Opticks.

ERRO'NEOUSLY. adv. [from erroneous.] By mistake; not rightly.

The minds of men are erroneously persuaded, that it is the will of God to have those things done which they fancy. Hooker.

I could not discover the lenity of this sentence; but conceived it, perhaps, erroneously, rather to be rigorous than gentle. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

ERRO'NEOUSNESS. n. s. [from erroneous.] Physical falsehood; inconformity to truth.

The phænomena may be explained by his hypothesis, whereof he demonstrates the truth, together with the erroneousness of ours. Boyle, Spring of the Air.

E'RROUR.† n. s. [old French errour; modern, erreur; Lat. error.]

1. Mistake; involuntary deviation from truth.

Errour is a mistake of our judgement, giving assent to that which is not true. Locke.

Oh, hateful errour, melancholy's child!
Why dost thou shew to the apt thoughts of men
The things that are not? Shakspeare.

2. A blunder; an act or assertion in which a mistake is committed.

In religion,
What damned errour, but some sober brow
Will bless it? Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

He look'd like nature's errour, as the mind
And body were not of a piece design'd,
But made for two, and by mistake in one were join'd. Dryden.

3. Roving excursion; irregular course.

The rest of his journey, his errour by sea, the sack of Troy, are not put as the argument of the work. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

What brought you living to the Stygian state?
Driv'n by the winds and errours of the sea;
Or did you Heaven's superiour doom obey?
Dryden, Æn.

4. [In theology.] Sin.

Blood he offered for himself, and for the errours of the people. Heb. ix. 7.

5. [In law, more especially in our common law.] An errour in pleading, or in the process; and the writ, which is brought for remedy of this oversight, is called a writ of errour, which lies to redress false judgement given in any court of record. Cowel.

ERS, or Bitter Vech. n. s. [vicia valdè amara.] A plant.

ERSE, or EARSE.* n. s. The language of the Highlands of Scotland. The word is also used adjectively.

After all that has been done for the instruction of the Highlanders, the antipathy between their language and literature still continues; and no man that has learned only Erse is, at this time, able to read. The Erse has many dialects, and the words used in some islands are not always known in others.
Johnson, Journey to the Western Islands.

There are, I believe, no Erse manuscripts. None of the old families had a single letter in Erse that we heard of. Johnson, Lett. to Boswell.

It is very well known, that the Earse dialect of the Gaelic was never written nor printed, until Mr. Macfarlane, late minister of Killinoir, Argyleshire, published, in 1754, a translation of Baxter's Call to the Unconverted.
Shaw on the Authenticity of Ossian, p. 8.

ERSH, or EARSH.* n. s. The same as eddish; the stubble after corn is cut; grass of the second crop. [Sax. eðiꝛc.] See EDDISH. Ersh is the word in Sussex; errish, in Devonshire.

ERST.† adv. [erst, German; æꝛꝛca, Sax. The superlative of the Saxon æꝛ, old English, er, before; now ere. See ERE.]

1. First.

Sir knight, if knight thou be,
Abandon this forestalled place at erst,
For fear of further harm, I counsel thee.
Spenser, F. Q.

2. At first; in the beginning.

Fame that her high worth to raise,
Seem'd erst so lavish and profuse,
We may justly now accuse
Of detraction from her praise.
Milton, Arcades.

3. Once; when time was.

He taught us erst the heifer's tail to view. Gay.

4. Formerly; long ago.

The future few or more, howe'er they be,
Were destin'd erst, nor can by fate's decree
Be now cut off. Prior.

5. Before; till then; till now.

As signal now in low dejected state,
As erst in highest, behold him. Milton, S. A.
Opener mine eyes,
Dim erst; dilated spirits, ampler heart. Milton.

The Rhodians, who erst thought themselves at great quiet, were now overtaken with a sudden mischief. Knolles.

E'RSTWHILE.* adv. [erst and while.] Till then; till now; aforetime.

Those thick and clammy vapours which erstwhile ascended in such vast measures, and had filled the vault of heaven with smoke and darkness, must at length obey the laws of their nature and gravity, and so descend again in abundant showers. Glanville, Pre-exist. of Souls, p. 142.

ERUBE'SCENCE.† } n. s. [old Fr. eru-
ERUBE'SCENCY. } bescence, "blushing," Cotgrave, from erubescentia, Lat.] The act of growing red; redness.

ERUBE'SCENT. adj. [erubescens, Latin.] Reddish; somewhat red; inclining to redness.

To ERU'CT. v. a. [eructo, Latin.] To belch; to break wind from the stomach.

To ERU'CTATE.* v. a. [Latin eructo.] To belch; to vomit forth.

They would make us believe in Syracusa, now Messina, that Ætna in times past hath eructated such huge gobbets of fire, that the sparks of them have burnt houses in Malta, above fifty miles off, transported hither by a direct strong wind. Howell, Lett. i. i. 27.

ERUCTA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. eructation.]

1. The act of belching.

He was to receive immediate benefit either by eructation, or expiration, or evomition. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 4.

2. Belch; the matter vented from the stomach.

The signs of the functions of the stomach being depraved, are eructations, either with the taste of the aliment, acid, inodorous, or fetid. Arbuthnot.

3. Any sudden burst of wind or matter.

Thermæ, are hot springs, or fiery eructations; such as burst forth of the earth during earthquakes. Woodward.

E'RUDITE.* adj. [Lat. eruditus.] Learned. This word has been thought to be of modern introduction into our language; but I find it otherwise. In a mean collection of histories, published in 1668, Erycius Puteanus is styled that "witty and erudite noble Italian."

With the fore-mentioned treasures of erudite pamphlet-tracts, there appeared a far more considerable collection of valuable little treatises.
Critical Hist. of Pamphlets, (1715,) p. 6.

ERUDI'TION. n. s. [eruditio, Latin.] Learning; knowledge obtained by study and instruction.

Fam'd be thy tutor, and thy parts of nature;
Thrice fam'd beyond all erudition. Shakspeare.

The earl was of good erudition, having been placed at study in Cambridge very young. Wotton.

To your experience in state affairs you have also joined no vulgar erudition, which all your modesty is not able to conceal; for to understand critically the delicacies of Horace, is a height to which few of our noblemen have arrived. Dryden.

Some gentlemen, abounding in their university erudition, fill their sermons with philosophical terms. Swift.

ERU'GINOUS.† adj. [erugineux, old Fr. æruginosus, Latin.] Partaking of the substance and nature of copper.

Copperas is a rough and acrimonious kind of salt, drawn out of ferreous and eruginous earths, partaking chiefly of iron and copper; the blue of copper, the green of iron. Browne.

Agues depend upon a corrupt incinerated melancholy, or upon an adust stibial or eruginous sulphur. Harvey.

ERU'PTION. n. s. [eruptio, Latin.]

1. The act of breaking or bursting forth from any confinement.

Finding themselves pent in by the exterior earth, they pressed with violence against that arch, to make it yield and give way to their dilatation and eruption. Burnet, Theory.

2. Burst; emission; something forcing itself out suddenly.

In part of Media there are eruptions of flames out of plains. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Upon a signal given, the eruption began; fire and smoke, mixed with several unusual prodigies and figures, made their appearance. Addison, Guardian.

3. Sudden excursion of an hostile kind.

Thither, if but to pry, shall be perhaps
Our first eruption, thither or elsewhere;
For this infernal pit shall never hold
Celestial spirits in bondage. Milton, P. L.

Such command we had,
To see that none thence issu'd forth a spy,
Or enemy, while God was in his work;
Lest he, incens'd at such eruption bold,
Destruction with creation might have mix'd.
Milton, P. L.

4. Violent exclamation.

To his secretary, whom he laid in a pallet near him for natural ventilation of his thoughts, he would, in the absence of all other ears and eyes, break out into bitter and passionate eruptions. Wotton, Life of Buckingham.

It did not run out in voice or indecent eruptions, but filled the soul, as God the universe, silently and without noise. South.

5. Efflorescence; pustules.

Diseased nature oftentimes breaks forth
In strange eruptions. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

An eruption of humours, in any part, is not cured merely by outward applications, but by alterative medicines. Gov. of the Tongue.

Unripe fruits are apt to occasion foul eruptions on the skin. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

ERU'PTIVE.† adj. [eruptus, Latin.]

1. Bursting forth.

'Tis listening fear, and dumb amazement all,
When to the startled eye the sudden glance
Appears far south eruptive through the cloud.
Thomson, Sum.

2. Exhibiting diseased eruption.

I mentioned to you the striking effects produced by the spirit of sea-salt in all our putrid diseases of the worst kind; I mean the eruptive fevers, the petechial fever, the jail-distemper, and the malignant sore throat. Sir W. Fordyce on the Mur. Acid. p. 1.

ERY'NGO. n. s. [eryngion.] A plant. See ERINGO.

ERYSI'PELAS. n. s. [ἐρυσίπελας, Gr.] An erysipelas is generated by a hot serum in the blood, and affects the superficies of the skin with a shining pale red, or citron colour, without pulsation or circumscribed tumour, spreading from one place to another. Wiseman, Surgery.

ERYSI'PELATOUS.* adj. [from erysipelas; Fr. érysipélateux.] Having the nature of an erysipelas.

When a person, who for some years had been subject to erysipelatous fevers, perceived the usual forerunning symptoms to come on, I advised her to drink tar-water. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 6.

ESCALA'DE. n. s. [French.] The act of scaling the walls of a fortification.

In Geneva one meets with the ladders, petard, and other utensils, which were made use of in their famous escalade. Addison.

ESCA'LOP. n. s. See SCOLLOP.

1. A shellfish, whose shell is regularly indented.

The shells of those cockles, escalops, and periwinkles, which have greater gravity, were enclosed in stone. Woodward.

2. An inequality of margin; indenture.

The figure of the leaves is divided into jags and escalops, curiously indented round the edges. Ray.

ESCAPA'DE. n. s. [French.] Irregular motion of a horse.

He with a graceful pride,
While his rider every hand survey'd,
Sprung loose, and flew into an escapade;
Not moving forward, yet with every bound
Pressing, and seeming still to quit his ground.
Dryden.

To ESCA'PE. v. a. [echaper, French.]

1. To obtain exemption from; to obtain security from; to fly; to avoid.

Since we cannot escape the pursuit of passions, and perplexity of thoughts, there is no way left but to endeavour all we can either to subdue or divert them. Temple.

Had David died sooner, how much trouble had he escaped, which by living he endured in the rebellion of his son! Wake.

2. To pass unobserved by one.

Men are blind with ignorance and errour: many things may escape them, in many they may be deceived. Hooker.

'Tis still the same, although their airy shape
All but a quick poetick sight escape. Denham.

The reader finds out those beauties of propriety in thought and writing, which escaped him in the tumult and hurry of representing. Dryden, Don. Sebast. Pref.

To ESCA'PE. v. n. To fly; to get out of danger; to avoid punishment or harm.

Benhadad, the king of Syria, escaped on a horse. 1 Kings, xx. 20.

They escaped all safe to land. Acts, xxvii. 44.

Escape for thy life; look not behind thee, neither stay thou in all the plain: escape to the mountain, lest thou be consumed. Gen. xxi. 17.

Whoso pleaseth God shall escape from her, but the sinner shall be taken by her. Eccl. vii. 26.

He might put on a hat, a muffler, and a kerchief, and so escape. Shaksp. M. W. of Windsor.

To convince us that there was no way to escape by climbing up to the mountains, he assures us that the highest were all covered. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

Laws are not executed, men of virtue are disgraced, and murderers escape. Watts, Logick.

ESCA'PE.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Flight; the act of getting out of danger.

I would hasten my escape from the windy storm and tempest. Psalm lv. 7.

He enjoyed neither his escape nor his honour long; for he was hewn in pieces. Hayward.

Men of virtue have had extraordinary escapes out of such dangers as have enclosed them, and which have seemed inevitable. Addison, Guardian.

2. Excursion; sally.

We made an escape, not so much to seek our own,
As to be instruments of your safety.
Denham, Sophy.

3. [In law.] Violent or privy evasion out of some lawful restraint. For example, if the sheriff, upon a capias directed unto him, takes a person, and endeavours to carry him to gaol, and he in the way, either by violence or by flight, breaks from him, this is called an escape. Cowel.

4. Excuse; subterfuge; evasion.

St. Paul himself did not despise to remember whatsoever he found agreeable to the word of God among the heathen, that he might take from them all escape by way of ignorance. Ralegh.

5. Sally; flight; irregularity. The example which Dr. Johnson brings from Shakspeare is in point; but that from Milton belongs to scape in a vicious sense, which is common in our elder language. See SCAPE.

Thousand 'scapes of wit,
Make thee the father of their idle dreams,
And rack thee in their fancies.
Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

Loose scapes of love. Milton, P. R.

6. Oversight; mistake.

In transcribing there would be less care taken, as the language was less understood, and so the escapes less subject to observation. Brerewood on Languages.

ESCA'PER.* n. s. [from escape.] One who gets out of danger.

Let none go forth nor escape out of the city, [in the margin, let no escaper go.] 2 Kings, ix. 15.

ESCA'PING.* n. s. [from escape.] Avoidance of danger.

None escaped, [in the margin, there was not an escaping.] 2 Chron. xx. 24.

That there should be no remnant nor escaping. Ezra, ix. 14.

ESCARGATOIRE. n. s. [French.] A nursery of snails.

At the Capuchins I saw escargatoires, which I took the more notice of, because I do not remember to have met with any thing of the same kind in other countries. It is a square place boarded in, and filled with a vast quantity of large snails that are esteemed excellent food, when they are well dressed. Addison.

To ESCA'RP.* v. a. [Fr. escarper, from escarpe, the outward slope of the rampart.] To slope down. A military word.

The glacis was all escarped upon the live rock. Carleton's Mem. p. 132.

ESCHALO'T.† n. s. [Fr. The eschalot is affirmed by some to have been originally brought from Ascalon.] Pronounced shallot.

Eschalots are now from France become an English plant, managed after the same manner as garlick; only they are to be set earlier, and taken up as soon as the leaves begin to wither, lest the winter kills them. Mortimer, Husbandry.

E'SCHAR.† n. s. [old Fr. escar; Gr. ἔσχαρα, scab; which some derive from καίω, to burn; others, from the Latin scarificare, or excidere.] A hard crust or scar made by hot applications.

When issues are made, or bones exposed, the eschar should be cut out immediately. Sharp, Surgery.

ESCHARO'TICK.† adj. [from eschar.] Caustick; having the power to sear or burn the flesh.

Now in respect to the virtues of cedar, besides that it heats and dries powerfully, it has likewise this particular and remarkable quality, that, after the nature of septick and escharotick medicines, it corrodes and consumes the flesh in a very short time, if applied to a living body. Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 272.

ESCHARO'TICK. n. s. A caustic application.

An eschar was made by the catharetick, which we thrust off, and continued the use of escharoticks. Wiseman, Surgery.

Escharoticks applied of ash-ashes, or blistering plaster. Floyer.

ESCHE'AT.† n. s. [old French escheat, from escheoir, and that perhaps from the Latin cadere, to fall.] Any lands, or other profits, that fall to a lord within his manor by forfeiture, or the death of his tenant, dying without heir general or especial. Escheat is also used sometimes for the place in which the king, or other lord, has escheats of his tenants. Thirdly, escheat is used for a writ, which lies where the tenant, having estate of fee-simple in any lands or tenements holden of a superiour lord, dies seised, without heir general or especial. Cowel.

If the king's ordinary courts of justice do not protect the people, if he have no certain revenue or escheats, I cannot say that such a country is conquered. Davies on Ireland.

To ESCHE'AT.† v. n. [from the noun.] To fall to the lord of the manor by forfeiture, or for want of heirs.

In the last general wars there, I knew many good freeholders executed by martial law, whose lands were thereby saved to their heirs, which should have otherwise escheated to her majesty. Spenser on Ireland.

As the bishops cannot devise by will, all they die possessed of escheats to the king. Swinburn, Trav. through Spain, p. 322.

To ESCHE'AT.* v. a. To forfeit.

Infidelity cannot forfeit their inheritance to others; no more than enmity professed by Jews to Christian religion can escheat their goods to the crowns under which they live. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

He would forbear to alienate any of the forfeited escheated lands in Ireland, which should accrue to the crown by reason of this rebellion. Clarendon.

ESCHE'ATABLE.* adj. [Fr. esceable.] Liable to escheat. Cotgrave.

ESCHE'ATAGE.* n. s. [from escheat.] The right of succession to an escheat. Sherwood.

ESCHE'ATOR. n. s. [from escheat.] An officer that observes the escheats of the king in the county whereof he is escheator, and certifies them into the Exchequer. Cowel.

At a Bartholomew fair at London an escheator of the city arrested a clothier, and seized his goods. Camden, Rem.

To ESCHE'W.† v. a. [escheoir, old French, Dr. Johnson says, which word has not the meaning of eschew; it is from the ancient Fr. word eschiver, to avoid; which was afterwards written eschever, and then eschuir. V. Roquef. Gloss. So Chaucer writes our word eschue. See also schouwen, Teut. vitare, fugere; scheuen, Germ.; the same.] To fly; to avoid; to shun; to decline. A word almost obsolete.

She was like a young fawn, who, coming in the wind of the hunters, doth not know whether it be a thing or no to be eschewed. Sidney.

So let us, which this change of weather view,
Change eke our minds, and former lives amend;
The old year's sins forepast let us eschew,
And fly the faults with which we did offend.
Spenser.

He who obeys, destruction shall eschew;
A wise man knows both when and what to do.
Sandys.

Of virtue and vice, men are universally to practise the one, and eschew the other. Atterbury.

*ESCO'CHEON. n. s. [Fr.] The shield of the family. See ESCUTCHEON.

The addition of the escocheon of Edward the Confessor to his own, although used by the family of Norfolk for many years, and justified by the authority of the heralds, was a sufficient foundation for an impeachment of high treason. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. iii. 9.

E'SCORT. n. s. [escort, Fr.] Convoy; guard from place to place.

To ESCO'RT.† v. a. [escorter, Fr.] To convoy; to guard from place to place.

They were both escorted to the city of Canterbury. Warton, Hist. E. Poet. i. Diss. 2.

ESCO'T. n. s. [Fr.] A tax paid in boroughs and corporations towards the support of the community, which is called scot and lot.

To ESCO'T. v. a. [from the noun.] To pay a man's reckoning; to support.

What, are they children? Who maintains them? How are they escoted? Shakspeare, Hamlet.

ESCO'UT. n. s. [escouter, Fr.] Listeners or spies; persons sent for intelligence. Now scout.

They were well entrenched, having good escout abroad, and sure watch within. Hayward.

ESCRI'PT.* n. s. [Fr. escript.] A writing; a schedule. Cockeram, and Bullokar.

ESCRITO'IRE. n. s. [Fr.] A box with all the implements necessary for writing. Pronounced scritore.

ESCU'AGE. n. s. [from escu, Fr. a shield.] Escuage, that is, service of the shield, is either uncertain or certain. Escuage uncertain is likewise two-fold: first, where the tenant by his tenure is bound to follow his lord, going in person to the king's wars so many days. The days of such service seem to have been rated by the quantity of the land so holden: as, if it extend to a whole knight's fee, then the tenant was bound thus to follow his lord forty days. A knight's fee was so much land as, in those days, was accounted a sufficient living for a knight; and that was six hundred and eighty acres, as some think, or eight hundred as others, or 15*l. per annum*. Sir Thomas Smith saith, that census equestris is 40*l.* revenue in free lands. If the land extend but to half a knight's fee, then the tenant is bound to follow his lord but twenty days. The other kind of this escuage uncertain is called Castleward, where the tenant is bound to defend a castle. Escuage certain is where the tenant is set at a certain sum of money, to be paid in lieu of such uncertain services. Cowel.

ESCULA'PIAN.* adj. [from Æsculapius, the ancient physician.] Medical.

For what calls thy disease, Lorenzo? Not
For Esculapian but for moral aid.
Young, Night Th. 2.

E'SCULENT. adj. [esculentus, Lat.] Good for food; eatable.

I knew a man that would fast five days; but the same man used to have continually a great wisp of herbs that he smelled on, and some esculent herbs of strong scent, as garlick. Bacon.

E'SCULENT. n. s. Something fit for food.

This cutting off the leaves in plants, where the root is the esculent, as radish and parsnips, it will make the root the greater, and so it will do to the heads of onions; and where the fruit is the esculent, by strengthening the root, it will make the fruit also the greater. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

ESCU'TCHEON. n. s. The shield of the family; the picture of the ensigns armorial.

Escutcheon is a French word, from the Latin scutum, leather; and hence cometh our English word buckler, lepe in the old Saxon signifying leather, and buck or bock a buck or stag; of whose skins, quilted close together with horn or hard wood, the ancient Britons made their shields. Peacham.

There be now, for martial encouragement, some degrees and orders of chivalry, and some remembrance perhaps upon the escutcheon. Bacon, Essays.

We will pass over the escutcheons of the tribes of Israel, as they are usually described in the maps of Canaan. Brown.

ESCU'TCHEONED.* adj. [from escutcheon.] Having an escutcheon or ensign.

For what, gay friend! is this escutcheon'd world,
Which hangs out Death in one eternal night?
Young, Night Th. 2.

ESH.* n. s. [Teut. esche.] Ash. The northern word. Craven Dialect, and Brockett.

E'SHLAR.* n. s. [Fr. écheler.] Ashlar; stones walled in course or by scale. Craven Dialect.

To ESLO'IN.* v. a. [old Fr. esloigner.] To remove; to banish; to withdraw.

I'll tell thee now (dear love) what thou shalt do
To anger Destiny, as she doth us:
How I shall stay, though she esloigne me thus,
And how posterity shall know it too.
Donne, Poems, p. 23.

Your pontificians, though esloigned from us in the way of God's worship, yet their persons are our neighbours. Hacket's Life of Abp. Williams, p. 215.

ESO'PIAN.* adj. [from Æsop.] Applied generally to fables and compilations like those which are attributed to Æsop.

He [Alex. Neckham] wrote a tract on the mythology of the ancient poets, Esopian fables, and a system of grammar and rhetorick. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poet. i. Diss. 2.

ESOTE'RICK.* adj. [Lat. esotericus, inward.] Secret; mysterious. A term applied to the double doctrine of the ancient philosophers; the publick, or exoterick; the secret, or esoterick. The first was that which they openly professed and taught to the world; the latter was confined to a small number of chosen disciples. Chambers.

E'SOTERY.* n. s. [Lat. esotericus.] Mystery; secrecy.

The ancients, delivering their lectures by word of mouth, could adapt their subjects to their audience, reserving their esoteries for adepts, and dealing out exoteries only to the vulgar. Note in Search's Freewill, p. 172.

ESPA'LIER.† n. s. [Fr. espallier.] A tree planted and cut so as to join others.

Plant your fairest tulips in places of shelter, and under espaliers. Evelyn, Kalendar.

Behold Villario's ten years' toil complete,
His arbours darken, his espaliers meet. Pope.

To ESPA'LIER.* v. a. To plant and cut trees so as to form espaliers. A term of modern gardening.

ESPA'RCET. n. s. [medica, or trifolium, Lat.] A kind of saint-foin. A plant. Mortimer.

ESPE'CIAL.† adj. [especiaul, old French; specialis, Latin.] Principal; chief.

They had th' especial engines been, to rear
His fortunes up. Daniel, Civil War.

ESPE'CIALLY. adv. [from especial.] Principally; chiefly; particularly; in an uncommon degree above any other.

I somewhat marvel, that they especially should think it absurd to oppose church government, a plain matter of action, unto matter of faith, who know that themselves divide the gospel into doctrine and discipline. Hooker.

Would you proceed especially against Caius Marcius? Shakspeare.

This delight children take in doing of mischief, but more especially the pleasure they take to put any thing to pain that is capable of it, I cannot persuade myself to be any other than a foreign and introduced disposition. Locke.

Providence hath planted in all men a natural desire and curiosity of knowing things to come; and such things especially as concern our particular happiness, or the general fate of mankind. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

ESPE'CIALNESS.* n. s. [from especial.] State or quality of being especial.

Your precious diamond in especialness. Loe, Serm. (1614,) p. 25.

E'SPERANCE.† n. s. [Fr.] Hope. Not used, Dr. Johnson says; citing only Shakspeare. It deserves to be noticed, however, that this word was probably common. It is in the vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar; and has been adopted by the Scottish writer, Bellenden.

To be worst,
The lowest, most dejected things of fortune,
Stands still in esperance, lives not in fear.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Yet there is a credence in my heart,
An esperance so obstinately strong,
That doth invert th' attest of eyes and ears.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

ESPI'AL.† n. s. [Fr. from espier.]

1. A spy; a scout; one sent to bring intelligence. Not now used, Dr. Johnson says. He means in the present sense; taking no notice of the second. In this meaning the word commenced with Chaucer, who writes it espiaille. Bacon very often uses it; and Ralegh has employed it. Dr. Johnson has mistakenly introduced Spenser as using it for a spy; but he uses it for discovery, observation, or detection. See the second definition.

And in a night when Saul and his army were at rest, and that David, by an espyal, knew they were all fast on sleepe; [he] took with him a certaine of the most assured and valyant personages of his hoste. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 157.

As he march'd along,
By your espials were discovered
Two mightier troops. Shakspeare.

'Spials have informed me,
The English in the suburbs close entrench'd,
Went through a secret grate. Shaksp. Hen. VI.

She had some secret espials to look abroad for graceful youths, to make Plantagenets. Bacon, Hen. VII.

There is a kind of followers likewise, which is dangerous, being indeed espials; which enquire the secrets of the house, and bear tales of them to others. Bacon, Ess. 48.

The intelligences that princes study to attain, are procured by divers means; some are brought by report, some vented by conversation and sounding, some by means of espials. Ralegh, Arts of Empire, ch. 25.

2. Observation; detection; discovery.

A man may, as it were, on a mountain or a place of espyal, behold on every side far off. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 74. b.

Those four garrisons, issuing forth at such convenient times, as they shall have intelligence or espial upon the enemy, will drive him from one side to another. Spenser on Ireland.

After the espial of this boy [who had stolen several things, and confessed,] my lord revealed the same unto the council. Cavendish, Life of Wolsey.

ESPI'ER.* n. s. [old Fr. espieur.] One who watches like a spy.

Ye covetous misers — ye crafty espiers of the necessity of your poor brethren to make your gain of their pain, your commodity of their calamity! Harmar, Transl. of Beza's Serm. (1587,) p. 175.

E'SPINEL.* n. s. [Fr. espinelle.] A kind of ruby. Cotgrave.

Here [at Pegu] is store of gold, silver, lead, and iron; smaragds, topazes, rubies, saphyres, garnets, emeralds, espinels, and cats-eyes. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 359.

ESPIONA'GE. n. s. [French.] In military language, the act of procuring and giving intelligence. It has, of late, been affectedly used by writers on other subjects.

ESPLANA'DE.† n. s. [Fr.]

1. In fortification, the same with the glacis of the counterscarp originally; but now it is taken for the empty space between the glacis of a citadel and the first houses of the town. Harris.

2. In modern gardening, a grass-plot.

ESPO'USAL.* n. s. [from To espouse.] Adoption; protection.

If political reasons forbid the open espousal of his cause, pity commands the assistance which private fortunes can lend him. Ld. Orford.

ESPOU'SAL. adj. Used in the act of espousing or betrothing.

The ambassador put his leg, stript naked to the knee, between the espousal sheets; that the ceremony might amount to a consummation. Bacon, Hen. VII.

ESPO'USALS.† n. s. pl. without a singular, Dr. Johnson says: but Stackhouse uses the singular number. See the last of the examples. [sponsalia, Lat. espousailles, Fr.] The act of contracting or affiancing a man and woman to each other; the act or ceremony of betrothing.

I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals. Jerem. ii. 2.

Whether it is necessary or requisite there should be a witnessed contract, or espousals of the parties to be married before the solemnization of the marriage? Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

When we came nearer this appearance, who should it be but Monsieur Guardeloop, mine and Ramble's French taylor, attended by others, leading one of Madam Depingle's maids to the church, in order to their espousals. Tatler, No. 7.

We find that Samson's wife remained with her parents a considerable time after her espousal. Hist. of the Bible, B. 8. ch. 1.

To ESPO'USE. v. a. [espouser, Fr.]

1. To contract or betroth to another: with to.

Deliver me my wife Michal, which I espoused to me. 2 Sam. iii. 14.

2. Or with.

He had received him as a suppliant, protected him as a person fled for refuge, and espoused him with his kinswoman. Bacon.

3. To marry; to wed.

Lavinia will I make my emperess,
And in the sacred Pantheon her espouse.
Tit. Andronicus.

With flowers, garlands, and sweet smelling herbs,
Espoused Eve deck'd first her nuptial bed.
Milton, P. L.

They soon espous'd; for they with ease were join'd,
Who were before contracted in the mind. Dryden.

If her sire approves,
Let him espouse her to the peer she loves.
Pope, Odyss.

4. To adopt; to take to himself.

In gratitude unto the duke of Bretagne for his former favours, he espoused that quarrel, and declared himself in aid of the duke. Bacon, Hen. VII.

5. To maintain; to defend.

Their gods did not only interest themselves in the event of wars, but also espoused the several parties in a visible corporeal descent. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

The city, army, court, espouse my cause. Dryden, Span. Friar.

Men espouse the well-endowed opinions in fashion, and then seek arguments either to make good their beauty, or varnish over their deformity. Locke.

The righteousness of the best cause may be overbalanced by the iniquities of those that espouse it. Smalridge.

The cause of religion and goodness, which is the cause of God, is ours by descent, and we are doubly bound to espouse it. Atterbury.

ESPO'USER.* n. s. [from espouse.] One who maintains or defends a point.

As wooers and espousers, having commission or letters of credence to treat of a marriage. Bp. Gauden, Hierasp. (1653,) p. 156.

The espousers of that unauthorised and detestable scheme have been weak enough to assert, that there is a knowledge in the elect, peculiar to those chosen vessels. Allen, Serm. before Univ. of Ox. 19 Jul. 1761, p. 11.

To ESPY'. v. a. [espier, Fr.]

1. To see things at a distance.

Few there are of so weak capacity but publick evils they easily espy; fewer so patient as not to complain, when the grievous inconveniences thereof work sensible smart. Hooker.

2. To discover a thing intended to be hid.

He who before he was espied was afraid, after being perceived was ashamed, now being hardly rubbed upon, left both fear and shame, and was moved to anger. Sidney.

3. To see unexpectedly.

As one of them opened his sack, he espied his money. Gen. xlii. 27.

4. To discover as a spy.

Moses sent me to espy out the land, and I brought him word again. Jos. xiv. 7.

To ESPY'. v. n. To watch; to look about.

Stand by the way and espy; ask him that fleeth what is done? Jer. xlvii. 19.

ESPY'.* n. s. [old Fr. espie.] A scout; a spy. Used by Gawen Douglas; and found in our old dictionaries by Huloet and Sherwood. Not now in use.

ESQUI'RE.† n. s. [old Fr. escuier, from escu, a shield; Lat. scutum; Gr. σκῦλος. See SQUIRE.]

1. The armour-bearer or attendant on a knight.

The hero in this distress was generally in armour, and in a readiness to fight any man he met with. — A lover of this kind had always about him a person of a second value, and subordinate to him. — This trusty companion was styled his esquire. Tatler, No. 19.

It is somewhat difficult to account for the origin of the word esquire; which formerly signified a person bearing the arms of a nobleman or knight; and they were therefore called armigeri. Guthrie, England.

2. A title of dignity, and next in degree below a knight. Those to whom this title is now of right due, are all the younger sons of noblemen, and their heirs male for ever; the four esquires of the king's body; the eldest sons of all baronets; so also of all knights of the Bath, and knights bachelors, and their heirs male in the right line; those that serve the king in any worshipful calling, as the serjeant chirurgeon, serjeant of the ewry, master cook, &c. such as are created esquires by the king with a collar of S. S. of silver, as the heralds and serjeants at arms. The chief of some ancient families are likewise esquires by prescription; those that bear any superiour office in the commonwealth, as high sheriff of any county, who retains the title of esquire during his life, in respect of the great trust he has had of the posse comitatus. He who is a justice of the peace has it during the time he is in commission, and no longer. Utter barristers, in the acts of parliament for poll-money, were ranked among esquires. Blount.

What, are our English dead?
Sir Richard Ketley, Davy Gam esquire.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

The appellation of esquire is the most notoriously abused of any class amongst men. — I will undertake, that if you read the superscriptions to all the offices in the kingdom, you will not find three letters directed to any but esquires. I have myself a couple of clerks, and the rogues make nothing of leaving messages upon each other's desk: one directs to Degory Goosequill, esquire; to which the other replies by a note, to Nehemiah Dashwell, esquire, with respect! In a word, it is now "populus armigerorum," a people of esquires. Tatler, No. 19.

To ESQUI'RE.* v. a. [from the noun.] To attend as an esquire; a colloquial expression, in the last century, denoting a gentleman attending a lady in publick; and of much the same value as the ridiculous chaperon of the present day.

To ESSA'Y. v. a. [essayer, French.]

1. To attempt; to try; to endeavour.

While I this unexampled task essay,
Pass awful gulfs, and beat my painful way,
Celestial dove, divine assistance bring. Blackmore.
No conquest she, but o'er herself desir'd;
No arts essay'd, but not to be admir'd. Pope.

2. To make experiment of.

3. To try the value and purity of metals.

The standard in our mint being now settled, the rules and methods of essaying suited to it should remain unvariable. Locke.

E'SSAY.† n. s. [old Fr. essay, or essai; probably from the Latin examen. The accent was formerly on either syllable; and some of our best poets placed it on the last. But it is now placed constantly on the first.]

1. Attempt; endeavour.

Fruitless our hopes, though pious our essays;
Yours to preserve a friend, and mine to praise.
Smith.

2. A loose sally of the mind; an irregular indigested piece; not a regular and orderly composition.

My essays, of all my other works, have been most current. Bacon.

Yet modestly he does his work survey,
And calls his finish'd poem an essay.
Poem to Roscommon.

3. A trial; an experiment.

This treatise prides itself in no higher a title than that of an essay, or imperfect attempt at a subject. Glanville.

He wrote this but as an essay, or taste of my virtue. Shakspeare.

Repetitions wear us into a liking of what, possibly, in the first essay, displeased us. Locke.

4. First taste of any thing; first experiment.

Translating the first of Homer's Iliads, I intended as an essay to the whole work.
Dryden, Fab. Pref.

5. In metallurgy, the proof of the purity and value of metals. See SAY.

E'SSAYER.* n. s. [Fr. essayeur.] One who writes essays.

A thought in which he hath been followed by all the essayers upon friendship, that have written since his time. Addison, Spect. No. 68.

E'SSAYIST.* n. s. [from essay.] A writer of essays.

I make, says a gentleman essayist of our author's age, as great difference between Tacitus and Seneca's style and his [Cicero's], as musicians between Trenchmore and Lachrymæ.
B. Jonson, Masques.

Such are all the essayists, even their master Montaigne. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

In 1752 he [Johnson] was almost entirely occupied with his Dictionary. The last paper of his Rambler was published March 2, this year; after which, there was a cessation for some time of his talents as an essayist. Boswell, Life of Johnson.

E'SSENCE.† n. s. [old Fr. essence; Lat. essentia.]

1. Essence is but the very nature of any being, whether it be actually existing or no: a rose in winter has an essence; in summer it has existence also.
Watts, Logick.

One thinks the soul is air; another, fire;
Another, blood diffus'd about the heart;
Another saith, the elements conspire,
And to her essence each doth give a part. Davies.

I could wish the nature of a spirit were more unknown to me than it is, that I might believe its existence, without meddling at all with its essence.
More, Divine Dialogues.

He wrote the nature of things upon their names: he could view essences in themselves, and read forms without the comment of their respective properties. South.

2. Formal existence; that which makes any thing to be what it is.

The visible church of Jesus is one in outward profession of those things, which supernaturally appertain to the very essence of Christianity, and are necessarily required in every particular Christian man. Hooker.

3. Existence; the quality of being.

In such cogitations have I stood, with such a darkness and heaviness of mind, that I might have been persuaded to have resigned my very essence.
Sidney.

I would resign my essence, that he were
As happy as my love could fashion him.
Beaum. and Fl. Spanish Curate.

4. Being; existent person.

As far as gods, and heav'nly essences
Can perish. Milton, P. L.

5. Species of existent being.

Here be four of you, as differing as the four elements; and yet you are friends: as for Eupolis, because he is temperate, and without passion, he may be the fifth essence. Bacon.

6. Constituent substance.

For spirits, when they please,
Can either sex assume, or both; so soft
And uncompounded is their essence pure;
Nor tied or manacled with joint or limb.
Milton, P. L.

7. The cause of existence. This sense is not proper.

She is my essence; and I leave to be,
If I be not by her fair influence
Foster'd, illumin'd, cherish'd, kept alive. Shaks.

8. [In medicine.] The chief properties or virtues of any simple, or composition collected in a narrow compass.

9. Perfume; odour; scent.

Our humble province is to 'tend the fair;
To save the powder from too rude a gale,
Nor let th' imprison'd essences exhale.
Pope, Rape of the Lock.

To E'SSENCE.† v. a. [Fr. essencier.] To perfume; to scent.

Socrates himself, when he went to a feast, was content to be smugged up and essenced in his pantouffles. Feltham, Res. ii. 52.

The husband rails, from morning to night, at essenced fops and tawdry courtiers.
Addison, Spect.

There of the farded fop and essenc'd beau,
Ferocious, with a Stoic's frown disclose
Thy manly scorn, averse to tinsel pomp.
Shenstone, Economy.

ESSE'NTIAL. adj. [essentialis, Latin.]

1. Necessary to the constitution or existence of any thing.

The discipline of our church, although it be not an essential part of our religion, should not be rashly altered, as the very substance of our religion will be interested in it. Bacon.

From that original of doing good, that is essential to the infinite being of our Creator, we have an excellent copy transcribed. Sprat.

This power cannot be innate and essential to matter; and if it be not essential, it is consequently most manifest it could never supervene to it, unless impressed and infused into it by an immaterial and divine power. Bentley.

A great minister puts you a case, and asks your opinion; but conceals an essential circumstance, upon which the whole weight of the matter turns.
Swift.

And if each system in gradation roll,
Alike essential to th' amazing whole,
The least confusion but in one, not all
That system only, but the whole must fall. Pope.

2. Important in the highest degree; principal.

Judgement's more essential to a general
Than courage. Denham, Sophy.

3. Pure; highly rectified; subtilely elaborated; extracted so as to contain all the virtues of its elemental parts contracted into a narrow compass.

The juice of the seed is an essential oil or balm, designed by nature to preserve the seed from corruption. Arbuthnot.

ESSE'NTIAL.† n. s.

1. Existence; being.

His utmost ire to the height enrag'd,
Will either quite consume us, or reduce
To nothing this essential. Milton, P. L.

2. Nature; first or constituent principles.

The plague of sin has even altered his nature, and eaten into his very essentials. South.

3. The chief point; that which is in any respect of great importance.

In essentials and fundamentals they agree, holding one faith. Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 113.

ESSENTIA'LITY.* n. s. [from essential.] Nature; first or constituent principles.

The French [are] a people, whose genius seems wholly turned to singing and dancing, and prating, to vanity and impertinence; who lay so much weight upon modes and gestures; whose essentialities are generally so very superficial; who usually are so serious upon trifles, and so trifling upon what is serious. Swift, Examiner, No. 32.

ESSE'NTIALLY. adv. [essentialiter, Latin.] By the constitution of nature; really; according to the true state of things.

He that loves himself,
Hath not essentially, but by circumstance,
The name of valour. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Body and spirit are essentially divided, though not locally distant. Glanville.

All sin essentially is, and must be, mortal. South.

Knowledge is that which, next to virtue, truly and essentially raises one man above another. Addison, Guardian.

ESSE'NTIALNESS.* n. s. [from essential.] The state or quality of being essential.

The essentialness of frequent parliaments to the happiness of this kingdom might be inferred to you. Ld. Digby, Speeches in Parliament, (1641,) p. 12.

To ESSE'NTIATE.* v. n. [from essence.] To become of the same essence.

'Tis an axiom in natural philosophy, What comes nearest the nature of that it feeds, converts quicker to nourishment, and doth sooner essentiate. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

ESSO'IN. n. s. [of the French essonié, or exonnié.]

1. He that has his presence forborn or excused upon any just cause; as sickness.
2. Allegement of an excuse for him that is summoned, or sought for, to appear and answer to an action real, or to perform suit to a court-baron, upon just cause of absence. Cowel.
3. Excuse; exemption.

From every work he challenged essoin,
For contemplation sake; yet otherwise
His life he led in lawless riotise. Spenser, F. Q.

To ESSO'IN.* v. a. [old Fr. essoiner, from the Lat. exonero.] To excuse; to release.

Away, with wings of time; I'll not essoin thee;
Denounce these fiery judgements I enjoin thee.
Quarles, Hist. of Jonah, (1620,) sign. G. 3.

ESSO'INER.* n. s. [Fr. exoineur.] An attorney who sufficiently excuses the absence of another. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

To ESTA'BLISH. v. a. [etablir, French.]

1. To settle firmly; to fix unalterably.

He may establish thee to-day for a people unto himself. Deut. xxix. 13.

I will establish my covenant with him for an everlasting covenant. Gen. xvii. 19.

The Normans never obtained this kingdom by such a right of conquest, as did or might alter the established laws of the kingdom. Hale, Common Law.

2. To settle in any privilege or possession; to confirm.

Soon after the rebellion broke out, the Presbyterian sect was established in all its forms by an ordinance of the lords and commons. Swift.

3. To make firm; to ratify.

Every vow, and every binding oath to afflict the soul, her husband may establish it, or her husband may make it void. Numbers, xxx. 13.

4. To fix or settle in an opinion.

So were the churches established in the faith. Acts, xvi. 5.

5. To form or model.

He appointed in what manner his family should be established. Clarendon.

6. To found; to build firmly; to fix immovably. A sense not in use.

For he hath founded it upon the seas, and established it upon the floods. Ps. xxiv. 12.

7. To make a settlement of any inheritance. A sense not in use.

We will establish our estate upon
Our eldest Malcolm, whom we name hereafter
The prince of Cumberland. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

ESTA'BLISHER.† n. s. [from establish; old Fr. establisseur.] One who establishes.

Some allow them as the first founders and establishers of them. Hooker, Disc. of Justification, § 12.

The from-ever and for-ever Establisher of all estates. Stafford's Niobe, P. ii. p. 51.

I reverence the holy fathers as divine establishers of faith. Lord Digby.

ESTA'BLISHMENT. n. s. [from establish; etablissement, French.]

1. Settlement; fixed state.

All happy peace, and goodly government,
Is settled there in sure establishment. Spenser, F. Q.

2. Confirmation of something already done; ratification.

He had not the act penned by way of recognition of right; as, on the other side, he avoided to have it by new law; but chose rather a kind of middle way, by way of establishment. Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. Settled regulation; form; model of a government or family.

Now come into that general reformation, and bring in that establishment by which all men should be contained in duty. Spenser on Ireland.

4. Foundation; fundamental principle; settled law.

The sacred order to which you belong, and even the establishment on which it subsists, have often been struck at; but in vain. Atterbury.

5. Allowance; income; salary.

His excellency, who had the sole disposal of the emperour's revenue, might gradually lessen your establishment. Swift.

6. Settled or final rest.

Whilst we set up our hopes and establishment here, we do not seriously consider that God has provided another and better place for us. Wake.

*ESTAFE'T. n. s. [Spanish, estafetâ; French, estafier, which is now converted into estafette.] A military courier. Lye observes that our word, in his time, was quite new. So is the French. It is now usually written, in our military accounts, estafette; and means originally "a running footman."

An estafette was dispatched on the part of our ministers at the Hague, requiring Marshal Bender to suspend his march. Boothby on Burke, p. 84.

ESTA'TE. n. s. [estat, French.]

1. The general interest; the business of the government; the publick. In this sense it is now commonly written state.

Many times the things adduced to judgement may be meum et tuum, when the reason and consequence thereof may reach to point of estate: I call matters of estate not only the parts of sovereignty, but whatsoever introduceth any great alteration, or dangerous precedent, or concerneth manifestly any great portion of people. Bacon, Essays.

2. Condition of life, with regard to prosperity or adversity.

Thanks to giddy chance,
She casts us headlong from our high estate. Dryd.

3. Condition; circumstances in general.

Truth and certainty are not at all secured by innate principles; but men are in the same uncertain, floating estate with as without them. Locke.

4. Fortune; possession: generally meant of possessions in land, or realities.

She accused us to the king, as though we went about to overthrow him in his own estate. Sidney.

Go, miser! go; for lucre sell thy soul;
Truck wares for wares, and trudge from pole to pole,
That men may say, when thou art dead and gone,
See what a vast estate he left his son! Dryden, Pers.

5. Rank; quality.

Who hath not heard of the greatness of your estate? Who seeth not that your estate is much excelled with that sweet uniting of all beauties? Sidney.

6. A person of high rank. This sense is disused.

She is a dutchess, a great estate. Latimer.

Herod, on his birth-day, made a supper to his lords, high captains, and chief estates of Galilee. St. Mark, vi. 21.

To ESTA'TE.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To settle as a fortune.

Why hath thy queen
Summon'd me hither?
— A contract of true love to celebrate,
And some donation freely to estate
On the blest lovers. Shakspeare, Tempest.

Sir, I demand no more than your own offer,
And I will estate your daughter, in what I
Have promised. Beaum. and Fl. Two Noble Kinsm.

2. To establish; to fix.

Some of them thought that Christ descended to that place of Hades, where the souls of all the faithful from the death of the righteous Abel to the death of Christ were detained, and there, dissolving all the power by which they were detained below, translated them into a far more glorious place, and estated them in a condition far more happy in the heavens above. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

To ESTE'EM. v. a. [estimer, French; æstimo, Lat.]

1. To set a value whether high or low upon any thing.

The worth of all men by their end esteem,
And then due praise, or due reproach them yield. Spenser.

A knowledge in the works of nature they honour, and esteem highly profound wisdom; howbeit this wisdom saveth not. Hooker.

I preferred her before sceptres and thrones, and esteemed riches nothing in comparison of her. Wisd. vii. 8.

2. To compare; to estimate by proportion.

Besides, those single forms she doth esteem,
And in her balance doth their values try. Davies.

3. To prize; to rate high; to regard with reverence.

Who would not be loved more, though he were esteemed less? Dryden.

4. To hold in opinion; to think; to imagine.

One man esteemeth one day above another; another esteemeth every day alike. Rom. xiv. 6.

To ESTE'EM. v. n. To consider as to value: with of.

Many would little esteem of their own lives, yet for remorse of their wives and children, would be withheld from that heinous crime. Spenser.

ESTE'EM.† n. s. [from the verb.]

1. High value; reverential regard.

Who can see,
Without esteem for virtuous poverty,
Severe Fabritius, or can cease t' admire
The ploughman consul in his coarse attire?
Dryden, Æn.

Both those poets lived in much esteem with good and holy men in orders. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

I am not uneasy that many, whom I never had any esteem for, are likely to enjoy this world after me. Pope.

2. Reckoning; estimate; account.

We lost a jewel of her; and our esteem
Was made much poorer by it. Shaksp. All's well.

ESTE'EMABLE.* adj. [Fr. estimable.] That may be esteemed. Sherwood.

Homer allows their characters esteemable qualities. Pope, Iliad 6. Note on v. 390.

ESTE'EMER.† n. s. [from esteem.] One that highly values; one that sets an high rate upon any thing. Sherwood.

Rabbi Aaron Ben-Netas, a person not unlearned in their law, and one who wanted nothing but Christianity to render him acceptable to equal esteemers; to whose free communication I owe many of these remarks.

L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 14.

This might instruct the proudest esteemer of his own parts, how useful it is to talk and consult with others. Locke.

E'STIMABLE. adj. [French.]

1. Valuable; worth a large price.

A pound of man's flesh, taken from a man,
Is not so estimable or profitable
As flesh of muttons, beefs, or goats. Shakspeare.

2. Worthy of esteem; worthy of some degree of honour and respect.

A lady said of her two companions, that one was more amiable, the other more estimable.

You lost one who gave hopes of being, in time, every thing that was estimable and good. Temple.

E'STIMABLE.* n. s. That which is worthy of particular notice and regard.

The queen of Sheba, among presents unto Solomon, brought some plants of the balsam tree, as one of the peculiar estimables of her country.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 50.

E'STIMABLENESS. n. s. [from estimable.] The quality of deserving regard.

To E'STIMATE. v. a. [æstimo, Lat.]

1. To rate; to adjust the value of; to judge of any thing by its proportion to something else.

When a man shall sanctify his house to the Lord, then the priest shall estimate it whether it be good or bad: as the priest shall estimate it, so shall it stand. Lev. xxvii. 14.

It is by the weight of silver, and not the name of the piece, that men estimate commodities and exchange them. Locke.

2. To calculate; to compute.

E'STIMATE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. Computation; calculation.

Upon a moderate estimate and calculation of the quantity of water now actually contained in the abyss, I found that this alone was full enough to cover the whole globe to the height assigned by Moses. Woodward.

2. Value.

I'd love
My country's good, with a respect more tender,
More holy and profound, than mine own life,
My dear wife's estimate, her womb's increase,
The treasure of my loins. Shakspeare, Coriol.

3. Valuation; assignment of proportional value; comparative judgement.

The only way to come to a true estimate upon the odds betwixt a publick and a private life, is to try both. L'Estrange.

Outward actions can never give a just estimate of us, since there are many perfections of a man which are not capable of appearing in actions.

Addison, Spect.

ESTIMA'TION.† n. s. [Fr. estimation.]

1. The act of adjusting proportional value.

If a man should sanctify unto the Lord some part of a field, the estimation shall be according to the seed. Levit.

2. Calculation; computation.

3. Opinion; judgement.

In our own estimation we account such particulars more worthy than those that are already tried and known. Bacon.

I speak not this in estimation,
As what I think might be, but what I know
Is ruminated, plotted, and set down.

Shakspeare, K. Hen. IV. P. I.

4. Esteem; regard; honour.

Crimes there were laid to his charge many, the least whereof being just, had bereaved him of estimation and credit with men. Hooker.

Of your brace of unprizable estimations, the one is but frail, and the other casual. Shaksp. Cymb.

I know the gentleman
To be of worth and worthy estimation,
And not without desert so well reputed. Shaksp.

I shall have estimation among the multitude, and honour with the elders. Wisd. viii. 10.

A plain reason of the publick honours due to the magistrate is, that he may be in due estimation and reverence. Atterbury.

E'STIMATIVE.† adj. [from estimate.]

1. Having the power of comparing and adjusting the preference.

We find in animals an estimative or judicial faculty, an appetition or aversation, and locomotive faculty answering the will.

Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The errour is not in the eye, but in the estimative faculty, which mistakingly concludes that colour to belong to the wall, which indeed belongs to the object. Boyle.

2. Imaginative.

The honour I bear to this excellency in a wife moves me to rank her disposition, in the first place, as a jewel of that unvaluable richness, not estimative but intrinsical, that no other foil either of art or nature need be sought out to set this forth.

Sir C. Wandesforde, Instruct. to his Son, (about 1640,) § 83.

E'STIMATOR.† n. s. [Fr. estimateur.]

1. A valuer; an esteemer of things.

Cotgrave.

2. A settler of rates; a computist.

E'STIVAL.† adj. [estival, Fr. æstivus, Lat.]

1. Pertaining to the summer.

The trees were so placed, that their arms shot into one another, and were so closely interwoven, that the vernant and estival sunbeams could not pierce their rare embroidery.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. p. 211.

2. Continuing for the summer.

Beside vernal, estival, and autumnal, made of flowers, the ancients had also hyemal garlands.

Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 92.

To E'STIVATE.* v. n. [estiver, French, æstivo, Lat. Our word, with its derivatives, is also sometimes written æstivate.] To pass the summer in a place.

Cockeram.

ESTIVA'TION.† n. s. [æstivatio, Latin.] A place in which to pass the time of summer.

Let it be turned to a grotta, or place of shade, or estivation. Bacon, Ess. 45.

ESTO'PEL. n. s. [law term.] Such an act as bars any legal process.

ESTO'PPED.* adj. [law term.] Under an estopel.

If the party be indicted by a wrong name, and plead to that indictment by that name, he shall not be received after to plead misnomer, for he is concluded and estopped by his plea by that name.

Hale, H. P. C. P. ii. ch. 25.

ESTO'VERS.† n. s. pl. [law term.] Necessaries allowed by law.

The Saxon word bote is of the same signification with the French estovers; and therefore house bote is a sufficient allowance of wood, to repair, or burn in, the house. Blackstone.

ESTRA'DE. n. s. [French; stratum, Latin.] An even or level space. Dict.

To ESTRA'NGE.† v. a. [estranger, Fr.]

1. To keep at a distance; to withdraw.

Had we not only cut off their corruptions, but also estranged ourselves from them in things indifferent, who seeth not how greatly prejudicial this might have been to so good a cause? Hooker.

They know it is our custom of simple reading, not for conversion of infidels estranged from the house of God, but for instruction of men baptized, bred, and brought up in the bosom of the church. Hooker.

See, she weeps;
Thinks me unkind, or false, and knows not why
I thus estrange my person from her bed. Dryden.

2. To alienate; to divert from its original use or possessor.

They have estranged this place, and have burnt incense in it to other gods. Jer. xix. 4.

3. To alienate from affection; to turn from kindness to malevolence or indifference.

They are all estranged from me through their idols. Ezek. xiv. 5.

How comes it now, my husband, oh, how comes it,
That thou art thus estranged from thyself?
Thyself I call it, being strange to me. Shaksp.

Adam, estrang'd in look, and alter'd style,
Speech intermitted, thus to Eve renew'd.

Milton, P. L.

I came to grieve a father's heart estrang'd;
But little thought to find a mistress chang'd.

Dryden.

I do not know, to this hour, what it is that has estranged him from me. Pope.

4. To withdraw or withhold.

They were not estranged from their lust. Psalm lxxviii. 30.

We must estrange our belief from every thing which is not clearly and distinctly evidenced.

Glanville, Scepsis.

ESTRA'NGEDNESS.* n. s. [from estrange.] The state of being estranged.

Disdaining to eat with one, being the greatest token of estrangedness or want of familiarity one with another.

Prynne, Vindic. of Four Quest. (1645,) p. 2.

ESTRA'NGEMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. estrangement.] Alienation; distance; removal; voluntary abstraction.

Desires, — by a long estrangement from better things, come at length perfectly to loath, and fly off from them. South.

One would be apt to suspect, the prevailing contempt of God's word, and estrangement from his house, to a degree that was never known in any Christian country, must take its rise from the irreligion and bad example of those who are styled the better sort.

Bp. Berkeley, Disc. addr. to Magistrates.

ESTRAPA'DE. n. s. [French.] The defence of a horse that will not obey, who, to get rid of his rider, rises mightily before; and while his forehand is yet in the air, yerks furiously with his hind legs.

Farrier's Dict.

To ESTRA'Y.* v. n. [old Fr. estraier.] To stray; to wander.

This nymph one day, surcharg'd with love and grief,
Which commonly (the more the pity) dwell

As inmates both together, walking forth
With other maids to fish upon the shore;
Estrays apart, and leaves her company,
To entertain herself with her own thoughts.
Daniel, Hymen's Triumph.

ESTRA'Y.* n. s. [from the verb.] A creature wandered beyond its limits; a stray.

Estray signifies any beast, not wild, found within any lordship, and not owned by any man; for in this case, it being cried, according to law, in the market towns adjoining, if it be not claimed by the owner in a year and a day, it is the lord's of the soil. Cowel.

ESTRE'AT. n. s. [extractum, Lat.] The true copy of an original writing: for example, of amerciaments or penalties, set down in the rolls of a court, to be levied by the bailiff, or other officer, of every man for his offence. A law term. Cowel.

To ESTRE'AT.* v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To extract; to take from, by way of fine.

If, as divines tell us, the poor be God's receivers, then they seem to have a title, as well by justice as by charity, to the amerciaments that are estreated upon trespasses against their Lord.
Boyle against Swearing, p. 112.

2. In law, to extract a copy of a writing.

ESTRE'PEMENT. n. s. [of the French word estrepier.] Spoil made by the tenant for term of life upon any lands or woods, to the prejudice of him in the reversion. Cowel.

E'STRICH.† n. s. [commonly written ostrich; Lat. struthiocamelus. Dr. Johnson very justly writes this word estrich, though he cites an example from Shakspeare, in which it is estridge; where indeed no estrich or ostrich is intended, but a goshawk. Our estrich is the old French austruche, rendered "an austridge or ostridge," by Cotgrave; and thus the corrupt spelling of estridge. The estridge or goshawk, according to Mr. Douce, is the barbarous Latin estricium; and he notices estrich-falcons in the Romance of Guy Earl of Warwick. The context, in the passage of Shakspeare, evidently disclaims the meaning of ostrich, and clearly alludes to the practice of flying falcons at pigeons.] The largest of birds.

To be furious,
Is to be frighted out of fear; and, in that mood,
The dove will peck the estridge. Shakspeare.

The peacock, not at thy command, assumes
His glorious train; nor estrich her rare plumes.
Sandys.

E'STRIDGE.* See ESTRICH.

E'STUANCE. n. s. Heat; warmth. A word rarely found.

Averroes restrained his hilarity, and made no more thereof than Seneca commendeth and was allowable in Cato; that is, a sober incalescence, and regulated estuance from wine. Brown.

E'STUARY.† n. s. [æstuarium, Lat.] An arm of the sea; the mouth of a lake or river in which the tide reciprocates; a frith.

Among the solitary birds, which frequent the estuaries of rivers, the hern and the cormorant are of too much consequence to be overlooked. Gilpin.

Soon after which the river swells into a great estuary, and in sight forms the Bristol channel.
Skrine, Tour of S. Wales.

To E'STUATE.† v. a. [æstuo, Lat.] To swell and fall reciprocally; to boil; to be in a state of violent commotion. Cockeram.

And thus he often doth with the worst and vilest of men, whose lusts, though they estuate and boil within, and are like the raging sea, raging and rolling in their hearts, yet God sets bounds to their proud waves.
Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 150.

ESTUA'TION. n. s. [from æstuo, Lat.] The state of boiling; reciprocation of rise and fall; agitation; commotion.

Rivers and lakes, that want fermenting parts at the bottom, are not excited unto estuations; therefore some seas flow higher than others.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

The motion of the will is accompanied with a sensible commotion of the spirits, and an estuation of the blood. Norris.

E'STURE. n. s. [æstus, Lat.] Violence; commotion.

The seas retain
Not only their outrageous esture there,
But supernatural mischief they expire.
Chapman, Odyssey.

ESU'RIENT.† adj. [esuriens, Lat.] Hungry; voracious. Dict.

To the end that he might advance his esurient genie in antiquities.
Life of A. Wood, (an. 1660,) p. 147.

E'SURINE. adj. [esurio, Lat.] Corroding; eating.

Over much piercing is the air of Hampstead, in which sort of air there is always something esurine and acid. Wiseman.

*ET CÆTERA. [Latin.] A common expression in our language, denoting others of the like kind, or the rest, or so on.

Then a pretty Thomasine,
And then another Catharine,
And then a long et cætera. Cowley, Ballad.

[It] is indeed the self-same case
With those that swore et cæteras. Hudibras, i. ii.

I have by me an elaborate treatise on the aposiopesis called an et cætera, it being a figure much used by some learned authors, particularly by the great Littelton, who, as my lord chief justice Coke observes, had a most admirable talent at an &c.
Addison, Tatler, No. 133.

ETC. A contraction of the two Latin words et cætera, which signifies and so on; and the rest; and others of the like kind.

To ETCH. v. a. [etzen, German.]

1. A way used in making of prints, by drawing with a proper needle upon a copper-plate, covered over with a ground of wax, &c. and well blacked with the smoke of a link, in order to take off the figure of the drawing or print; which, having its backside tinctured with white lead, will, by running over the strucken out lines with a stift, impress the exact figure on the black or red ground; which figure is afterwards with needles drawn deeper quite through the ground, and all the shadows and hatchings put in; and then a wax border being made all round the plate, there is poured on a sufficient quantity of well tempered aqua fortis, which, insinuating into the strokes made by the needles, usually eats, in about half an hour, into the figure of the print or drawing on the copper-plate. Harris.

2. To sketch; to draw; to delineate; unless this word be mistaken by Locke for eke.

There are many empty terms to be found in some learned writers, to which they had recourse to etch out their systems. Locke.

3. To move forwards towards one side. [This word is evidently mistaken by Ray for edge.]

When we lie long awake in the night, we are not able to rest one quarter of an hour without shifting of sides, or at least etching this way and that way, more or less. Ray.

To ETCH.* v. n. To practise etching.

Swanevelt painted landscape at Rome;—he etched in the manner of Waterloo, but with less freedom. Gilpin, Ess. on Prints, p. 109.

ETCH.† n. s. A country word of which I know not the meaning, Dr. Johnson says. It is the same as eddish, which see; ground from which a crop has been taken.

When they sow their etch crops, they sprinkle a pound or two of clover on an acre.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

Where you find dunging of land makes it rank, lay dung upon the etch, and sow it with barley.
Mortimer, Husbandry.

E'TCHING.* n. s. [from the verb.] An impression of a copper-plate, taken after the manner described in the verb to etch.

ETEO'STICK.* n. s. [Gr. ἐτεός and στίχος.] A chronogrammatical composition.

Those hard trifles, anagrams,
Or eteosticks, or your finer flams
Of eggs and halberds. B. Jonson, Underwoods.

ETE'RNAL. adj. [æternus, Lat.]

1. Without beginning or end.

The eternal God is thy refuge.
Deuter. xxxiii. 27.

2. Without beginning.

It is a question quite different from our having an idea of eternity, to know whether there were any real being, whose duration has been eternal.
Locke.

3. Without end; endless; immortal.

Thou know'st that Banquo, and his Fleance, lives.
— But in them nature's copy's not eternal. Shaks.

4. Perpetual; constant; unintermitting.

Burnt off rings morn and ev'ning shall be thine,
And fires eternal in thy temple shine. Dryden.

5. Unchangeable.

Hobbes believed the eternal truths which he opposed. Dryden.

ETE'RNAL.† n. s. [eternel, Fr.]

1. One of the appellations of the Godhead.

That law whereby the Eternal himself doth work.
Hooker.

By penitence the Eternal's wrath's appeas'd.
Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

The Eternal, to prevent such horrid fray,
Hung forth in heaven his golden scales.
Milton, P. L.

2. That which is endless and immortal.

All godlike passion for eternals quench'd.
Young.

ETE'RNALIST. n. s. [æternus, Lat.] One that holds the past existence of the world infinite.

I would ask the eternalists what mark is there that they could expect to desire of the novelty of a world, that is not found in this? Or what mark is there of eternity that is found in this?
Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

To ETE'RNALIZE. v. a. [from eternal.] To make eternal. Dict.

ETE'RNALLY. adv. [from eternal.]

1. Without beginning or end.
2. Unchangeably; invariably.

That which is morally good, or evil, at any time, or in any case, must be also eternally and unchangeably so, with relation to that time and to that case. South.

3. Perpetually; without intermission.

Bear me, some god, to Baja's gentle seats,
Or cover me in Umbria's green retreats,
Where western gales eternally reside,
And all the seasons lavish all their pride. Addison.

ETE'RNE.† adj. [old Fr. eterne.] Eternal; perpetual; endless.

The high Almighty purveiance,
In whose eterne rememberance
From first was every thing present.
Gower, Conf. Am. Prol.

The dore was all of adamant eterne.
Chaucer, Kn. Tale.

We ought in all our haps rejoice,
Because the eye eterne all things foreseeth.
Mir. for Mag. p. 384.

The Cyclops' hammers fall
On Mars his armour, forg'd for proof eterne.
Shakspeare.

To ETE'RNIFY.* v. a. [æternus and fio, Lat.] To make famous; to immortalize.

True Fame, the trumpeter of heaven, that doth desire inflame
To glorious deeds, and by her power eternifies the name. Mir. for Mag. p. 558.

ETE'RNITY.† n. s. [eternité, old Fr. æternitas, Lat.]

1. Duration without beginning or end.

In this ground his precious root
Still lives, which, when weak time shall be pour'd out
Into eternity, and circular joys
Dancing an endless round, again shall rise.
Crashaw.

Thy immortal rhyme
Makes this one short point of time,
To fill up half the orb of round eternity. Cowley.

By repeating the idea of any length of duration which we have in our minds, with all the endless addition of number, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. Duration without end.

Beyond is all abyss,
Eternity, whose end no eye can reach!
Milton, P. L.

Eternity, thou pleasing dreadful thought!
Through what variety of untried being,
Through what new scenes and changes must we pass! Addison, Cato.

To ETE'RNIZE.† v. a. [old Fr. eternizer.]

1. To make endless; to perpetuate.

I with two fair gifts
Created him endow'd; with happiness,
And immortality; that fondly lost,
This other serv'd but to eternize woe. Milton, P. L.

2. To make for ever famous; to immortalize.

Mankind by all means seeking to eternize himself, so much the more as he is near his end, doth it by speeches and writings. Sidney.

And well beseems all knights of noble name,
That covet in th' immortal book of fame
To be eternized, that same to haunt. Spenser, F. Q.

I might relate of thousands, and their names
Eternize here on earth; but those elect
Angels, contented with their fame in heav'n,
Seek not the praise of men. Milton, P. L.

The four great monarchies have been celebrated by the writings of many famous men, who have eternized their fame, and thereby their own. Temple.

Both of them are set on fire by the great actions of heroes, and both endeavour to eternize them. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

3. Creech seems to have accented the first syllable, Dr. Johnson says. In this respect he followed the authority of elder times; for so Niccols has accented the word in the Mirror for Magistrates, (1610,) p. 869. And Young has followed him. Yet Mr. Nares has asserted, in his Elements of Orthoepy, that the accent is regular on the second syllable of this word, and presumes that there is no exception.

Hence came its name, in that the grateful Jove
Hath eterniz'd the glory of his love.
Creech, Manilius.

'Tis thine to raise and éternize the song.
Young, Night Th. 4.

ETE'SIAN.* adj. [Fr. etesien, Gr. ἐτήσιος, annual.] Applied to such winds as blow at stated times of the year, from what part soever of the compass they come; such as our seamen call monsoons and trade-winds. Cotgrave denominates them "the easterly winds which commonly blow in the dog-days."

ETHE.* adj. [Sax. eaŏ.] Easy. See EATH.

A fool is ethe to beguile.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 3955.

E'THEL.* adj. [Sax. eŏel.] Noble; whence Ethelbert, Ethelward, &c. See ATHEL.

E'THER. n. s. [æther, Lat.; αἰθηρ.]

1. An element more fine and subtile than air; air refined or sublimed.

If any one should suppose that ether, like our air, may contain particles which endeavour to recede from one another; for I do not know what this ether is; and that its particles are exceedingly smaller than those of air, or even than those of light, the exceeding smallness of its particles may contribute to the greatness of the force, by which those particles may recede from one another. Newton, Opticks.

The parts of other bodies are held together by the eternal pressure of the ether, and can have no other conceivable cause of their cohesion and union. Locke.

2. The matter of the highest regions above.

There fields of light and liquid ether flow,
Purg'd from the pond'rous dregs of earth below. Dryden.

ETHE'REAL. adj. [from ether.]

1. Formed of ether.

Man feels me, when I press th' ethereal plains. Dryden.

2. Celestial; heavenly.

Go, heav'nly guest, ethereal messenger,
Sent from whose sov'reign goodness I adore.
Milton, P. L.

Thrones and imperial pow'rs, offspring of heav'n,
Ethereal virtues! Milton, P. L.

Such as these, being in good part freed from the entanglements of sense and body, are employed, like the spirits above, in contemplating the Divine Wisdom in the works of nature; a kind of anticipation of the ethereal happiness and employment. Glanville.

Vast chain of being, which from God began,
Natures ethereal, human; angel, man. Pope.

ETHE'REOUS. adj. [from ether.] Formed of ether; heavenly.

Behold the bright surface
Of this ethereous mould, whereon we stand.
Milton, P. L.

E'THICAL.† adj. [ἠθικός.] Moral; treating on morality.

It is no narrow and niggardly encomium to say he [Pope] is the great poet of reason, the first of of ethical authors in verse.
Dr. Warton, Essay on Pope.

E'THICALLY. adv. [from ethical.] According to the doctrines of morality.

My subject leads me not to discourse ethically, but Christianly of the faults of the tongue.
Gov. of the Tongue.

E'THICK. adj. [ἠθικός.] Moral; delivering precepts of morality. Whence Pope entitled part of his works Ethick Epistles.

E'THICKS. n. s. without the singular. [ἠθικὴ.] The doctrine of morality; a system of morality.

I will never set politicks against ethics; for true ethics are but as a handmaid to divinity and religion. Bacon.

For of all moral virtues, she was all
That ethics speak of virtues cardinal. Donne.

Persius professes the stoick philosophy; the most generous amongst all the sects who have given rules of ethicks. Dryden.

If the atheists would live up to the ethicks of Epicurus himself, they would make few or no proselytes from the Christian religion. Bentley.

E'THIOP.* n. s. Properly a native of Ethiopia; but long since adopted by us in the general sense of a blackamore. So in Latin æthiops. It is so given in Cockeram's old vocabulary. In the plural Ethiops.

Sylvia, (witness heav'n, that made her fair!)
Shews Julia but a swarthy Ethiop.
Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Verona.

Since her time are colliers counted bright;
And Ethiops of their sweet complexion crack.
Shakspeare, Love's Lab. Lost.

Shall praise ———
Earn dirty bread by washing Ethiops fair?
Young, Night Th. 4.

E'THIOPS-MINERAL.* See ÆTHIOPS-MINERAL.

ETHMO'IDAL.* adj. [from ethmoides.] The denomination given to one of the sutures of the human cranium. Chambers.

*ETHMO'IDES. n. s. [Greek, from ἠθμὸς, a sieve, and εἶδος, form.] The name of the bone situate in the middle of the basis of the forehead or os frontis, and at the top of the root of the nose; filling almost the whole cavity of the nostrils. Chambers.

E'THNICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἐθνικός.] Heathen; Pagan.

Lest I might seem to have no measure in raking up this ethnical dunghill, I will now leave the theology of the original of demons.
Mede, Apostasy of the Lat. Times, (1641,) p. 19.

E'THNICISM.* n. s. [from ethnick.] Heathenism; paganism.

A hallowed temple, free from taint
Of ethnicism, makes his muse a saint.
B. Jonson, Epigrams.

E'THNICK. adj. [ἐθνικός.] Heathen; Pagan; not Jewish; not Christian.

Such contumely as the ethnick world durst not offer him, is the peculiar insolence of degenerated Christians. Gov. of the Tongue.

I shall begin with the agreement of profane, whether Jewish or ethnick, with the Sacred Writings. Grew.

E'THNICKS.† n. s. pl. Heathens; not Jews; not Christians.

This first Jupiter of the ethnicks was then the same Cain, the son of Adam. Ralegh, Hist.

First, it is to be observed, that although the Jews and Ethnicks derided both the Apostles and the rest of the Christians, for preaching and believing in him who was crucified upon the cross; yet all, both Apostles and Christians, were so far from being discouraged from their profession by the ignominy of the cross, as they rather rejoiced and triumphed in it.

Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical.

ETHOLO'GICAL. adj. [ἦθος and λόγος.] Treating of morality.

ETIO'LOGY.† n. s. [αἰτιολογία.] An account of the causes of any thing, generally of a distemper, Dr. Johnson says; citing only the authority of Arbuthnot. But it was in use before Arbuthnot wrote, in a more general sense.

The fourth way of amplification is by frequent etiologies, or giving reasons for what we say.

Instructions for Oratory, (Oxf. 1682,) p. 80.

I have not particulars enough to enable me to enter into the etiology of this distemper.

Arbuthnot on Air.

ETIQUE'TTE. n. s.* [French. Originally meaning a ticket or title affixed to papers; "to a lawyer's book-bag," says Cotgrave, "containing the titles of the books, and the names of them to whom they belong." Then it next signified an account of ceremonies in the courts of princes; and now the etiquette observed at a public dinner or ball is, with us, of like importance. A word thus adjusting rank, and place, and dignity, might be supposed to be of great date among the ancient nonpareils of politeness, the French; but it is modern. Richelet takes no notice of it, in this sense, in his Dictionary of 1685. Some derive the word from the Greek σίχος, order.] Ceremony.

The Infanta Maria Josepha has reason to envy every country wench she sees roaming at liberty; for confinement, etiquette, and celibacy, are likely to be her lot during life.

Swinburn, Trav. through Spain, p. 358.

Without hesitation kiss the slipper, or whatever else the etiquette of that court requires.

Ld. Chesterfield.

ETUI. n. s.* [French.] A case for tweezers and such instruments.

The gold etui
With all its bright inhabitants. Shenstone.

To E'TTLE.* v. n. [of uncertain etymology.] To intend; to attempt. North of England. Ray and Grose. Mr. Boucher has observed, that ettle is the Cumberland form of addle, to earn by working; eðlean, Sax. Mr. Brockett adds the Su.-Goth. ætla, from Ihre.

E'TTIN.* n. s. [of uncertain etymology; though in Dr. Jamieson's Scottish Dictionary to eat has been offered, by Dr. Leyden, as the etymon. The word is adopted from the old romances. Dr. Jamieson seems not to have been aware that the word is used by English authors.] A giant.

They say the king of Portugal cannot sit at his meat, but the giants and the ettins will come and snatch it from him.

Beaum. and Fl. Knight of the Burn. Pestle.

ETYMO'LOGER.* n. s. [from etymology.] An etymologist; one who points out the derivation of words from their original.

Laws there must be; and "lex à ligando," saith the etymologer: it is called a law from binding.

Dr. Griffith, Fear of God and the King, (1660,) p. 82.

ETYMOLO'GICAL.† adj. [from etymology.] Relating to etymology; relating to the derivation of words.

Excuse this conceit, this etymological observation. Locke.

It is sufficient, in etymological inquiries, if the senses of kindred words be found such as may easily pass into each other, or such as may both be referred to one general idea. Johnson.

ETYMOLO'GICALLY.* adv. [from etymological.] According to etymology.

ETYMO'LOGIST.† n. s. [from etymology.] One who searches out the original of words; one who shows the derivation of words from their original.

It may be, curious etymologists (let them lose their wages who work in difficult trifles) seek to reap what was never sown, whilst they study to make those words speak reason, which are only voces ad placitum, imposed at pleasure.

Fuller, Holy War, p. 168.

I close this section with an apology for Chaucer, Gower, and Occleve; who are supposed by the severer etymologists to have corrupted the purity of the English language.

Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 50.

To ETYMO'LOGIZE.* v. a. [old French etymologizer; and our own word also is one of the oldest, though Dr. Johnson has taken no notice of it.] To give the etymology of a word.

The first parte of this name we have yfounde,
Let us ethimologise the secounde.

Chaucer, Rem. of Love, ver. 301.

Pha. Breeches, quasi bear-riches; when a gallant bears all his riches in his breeches.

Amo. Most fortunately etymologized!

B. Jonson, Cynthia's Revels.

A house is thus etymologized by Sextus Pompeius, "Ædes est domicilium in edito loco positum, &c." Austin's Hæc Homo, p. 57.

ETYMO'LOGY. n. s. [etymologia, Lat. ἔτυμος and λόγος.]

1. The descent or derivation of a word from its original; the deduction of formations from the radical word; the analysis of compound words into primitives.

Consumption is generally taken for any universal diminution and colliquation of the body, which acceptation its etymology implies.

Harvey on Consumptions.

When words are restrained, by common usage, to a particular sense, to run up to etymology, and construe them by dictionary, is wretchedly ridiculous. Collier, View of the Stage.

Pelvis is used by comick writers for a looking-glass, by which means the etymology of the word is visible, and pelvidera will signify a lady who looks in her glass. Addison, Spect.

If the meaning of a word could be learned by its derivation or etymology, yet the original derivation of words is oftentimes very dark. Watts, Log.

2. The part of grammar which delivers the inflections of nouns and verbs.

E'TYMON.† n. s. [ἔτυμον, Gr. etymon, Fr.] Origin; primitive word.

Blue hath its etymon from the High Dutch blaw; from whence they call himmel-blue, that which we call sky-colour or heaven's blue.

Peacham on Drawing.

The etymologist, therefore, whoever he were, hath deceived himself in assigning the etymon of this word Assyria, while he forgeth this distinction between it and Syria.

Gregory, Posthuma, (1650,) p. 179.

To EVA'CATE. v. a. [vaco, Latin.] To empty out; to throw out.

Dry air opens the surface of the earth to disincarcerate venene bodies, or to evacate them.

Harvey on the Plague.

To EVA'CUATE.† v. a. [evacuo, Latin. Our word was not considered as generally known in 1617; for Fulke then places it, among difficult words, in his explanation of terms in the Rhemish Testament.]

1. To make empty; to clear.

There is no good way of prevention but by evacuating clean, and emptying the church. Hooker.

We tried how far the air would manifest its gravity in so thin a medium, as we could make in our receiver, by evacuating it.

Boyle, Spring of the Air.

2. To throw out as noxious, or offensive.

Fasting and humiliation is a sovereign remedy to evacuate all spiritual distempers.

South, Serm. ix. 341.

3. To void by any of the excretory passages.

Boerhaave gives an instance of a patient, who by a long use of whey and water, and garden fruits, evacuated a great quantity of black matter, and recovered his senses. Arbuthnot.

4. To make void; to evacate; to nullify; to annul.

The defect, though it would not evacuate a marriage, after cohabitation and actual consummation; yet it was enough to make void a contract. Bacon, Hen. VII.

They rise again indeed to life, and so the first death is evacuated. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 6.

The Holy Ghost then is described as a person distinct from the person of the Father, whose power he is, and distinct from the person of the Apostle, in whom he worketh, and consequently neither of the Scinian figures can evacuate or enervate the doctrine of his proper and peculiar personality. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 8.

If the prophecies recorded of the Messiah are not fulfilled in Jesus of Nazareth, it is impossible to know when a prophecy is fulfilled, and when not, in any thing or person whatsoever, which would utterly evacuate the use of them. South.

5. To quit; to withdraw from out of a place.

As this neutrality was never observed by the emperour, so he never effectually evacuated Catalonia. Swift.

To EVA'CUATE.* v. n. To let blood; to take away blood.

If the malady continue, it is not amiss to evacuate in a part in the forehead.

Burton, Anat. of Mel., p. 403.

EVA'CUANT. n. s. [evacuans, Latin.] Medicine that procures evacuation by any passage.

EVACUA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. evacuation.]

1. Such emissions as leave a vacancy; discharge.

Consider the vast evacuations of men that England hath had by assistances lent to foreign kingdoms. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Lest their treasury should be exhausted by so frequent evacuations, several means were contrived to supply and replenish them.

Potter, Antiq. of Greece, ii. ch. 19.

2. Abolition; nullification.

Popery hath not been able to re-establish itself in any place, after provision made against it by utter evacuation of all Romish ceremonies. Hooker.

3. The practice of emptying the body by physick.

The usual practice of physick among us, turns in a manner wholly upon evacuation, either by bleeding, vomit, or some purgation. Temple.

4. Discharges of the body by any vent natural or artificial.

5. A withdrawing from out of a place, sometimes by treaty, sometimes by necessity. A military expression.

EVA'CUATIVE.* adj. [Fr. evacuatif.] Purgative. Cotgrave.

EVA'CUATOR.* n. s. [from evacuate.] One who makes void or annuls.

Take heed, be not too busy in imitating any father in a dangerous expression, or in excusing the great evacuators of the law.
Hammond, Works, i. 175.

To EVA'DE. v. a. [evado, Latin.]

1. To elude; to escape by artifice or stratagem.

In this point charge him home, that he affects
Tyrannick power: if he evade us there,
Inforce him with his envy to the people. Shaks.
If thou covet death, as utmost end
Of misery, so thinking to evade
The penalty pronounc'd, doubt not but God
Hath wiselier arm'd his vengeful ire, than so
To be forestall'd. Milton, P. L.
He might evade the accomplishment of these afflictions he now gradually endureth.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

2. To avoid; to decline by subterfuge.

Our question thou evad'st; how didst thou dare
To break hell bounds? Dryden, State of Innocence.

3. To escape or elude by sophistry.

My argument evidently overthrows all that he brings to evade the testimonies of the fathers.
Stilling fleet.

4. To escape as imperceptible or unconquerable, as too great or too subtle to be seized or subdued.

We have seen how a contingent event baffles man's knowledge, and evades his power. South.

To EVA'DE. v. n.

1. To escape; to slip away. It is not now used with from.

His wisdom, by often evading from perils, was turned rather into a dexterity to deliver himself from dangers, than into a providence to prevent.
Bacon, Hen. VII.
Unarm'd they might
Have easily, as spirits, evaded swift
By quick contraction, or remove. Milton, P. L.

2. To practise sophistry or evasions.

The ministers of God are not to evade or take refuge in any of these two forementioned ways.
South.

EVAGA'TION.† n. s. [evagation, old Fr.; from evagor, Latin.] The act of wandering; excursion; ramble; deviation.

I shall make a circle hither again; taking perchance both universities in my line homewards. You married men are deprived of these evagations. Sir H. Wotton, Lett. (1638,) Rem. p. 579.
These long chains of lofty mountains, which run through whole continents east and west, serve to stop the evagation of the vapours to the north and south in hot countries. Ray.

E'VAL.* adj. [Lat. ævum.] Respecting the duration of time.

Every one at all skilled in the Greek language knows, that αἰων, age, and αἰωνιος, eval, improperly everlasting, do not convey the ideas of a proper eternity.
Letter to the Abp. of Canterb. (1791,) 4to. p. 67.

EVANE'SCENCE.* n. s. [Lat. evanescens.] Disappearance; end of appearance. Dr. Johnson is fond of this word, though he has taken no notice of it in his Dictionary.

Like light transmitted from room to room, they lose their strength and splendour, and fade at last in total evanescence. Rambler, No. 156.
The image of misery was perhaps originally suggested to some poet by the conduct of his patron, by the daily contemplation of splendour which he never must partake, by fruitless attempts to catch at interdicted happiness, and by the sudden evanescence of his reward when he thought his labours almost at an end. Rambler, No. 163.

EVANE'SCENT. adj. [evanescens, Lat.] Vanishing; imperceptible; lessening beyond the perception of the senses.

The canal grows still smaller and slenderer, so as that the evanescent solid and fluid will scarce differ. Arbuthnot.
The difference between right and wrong, on some petty cases, is almost evanescent. Wollaston.
The downy orchard, and the melting pulp
Of mellow fruit, the nameless nations feed
Of evanescent insects. Thomson, Summer.

EVA'NGEL.* n. s. [old Fr. evangile, Gr. εὐαγγέλιον. This is one of our oldest words.] The gospel; good tidings. See EVANGELY.

A Breton book, written with evangiles,
Was fet, and on this book he swore.
Chaucer, Man of Law's Tale.
He charged her, as she would answer it before God's tribunal, to take care of Christ his evangil, and of suppressing the popish prelates who withstood the same. Hamp. Court Conf. (1603,) p. 81.
Surely much rather might the heavenly ministry of the evangil bind herself about with far more piercing beams of majesty and awe, by wanting the beggarly help of halings and amercements in the use of her powerful keys.
Milton, Reason of Ch. Govern.

EVANGE'LICAL. adj. [evangelique, French; evangelicus, Latin.]

1. Agreeable to gospel; consonant to the Christian law revealed in the holy gospel.

This distinction between moral goodness and evangelical perfection, ought to have been observed.
Atterbury.
God will indeed judge the world in righteousness; but 'tis by an evangelical, not a legal righteousness, and by the intervention of the man Christ Jesus, who is the Saviour as well as the judge of the world. Atterbury.

2. Contained in the gospel.

Those evangelical hymns they allow not to stand in our liturgy. Hooker.

EVANGE'LICALLY.* adv. [from evangelical.] According to the revelation of the gospel.

It appears that acts of saving grace are evangelically good, and well-pleasing to God.
Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 432.

EVANGE'LICK.* adj. [French, evangelique.] Consonant to the doctrine of the gospel.

Sworn to the laws of God and evangelick truth.
Milton, Eiconoclastes.

EVA'NGELISM. n. s. [from evangely.] The promulgation of the blessed gospel.

Thus was this land saved from infidelity, through the apostolical and miraculous evangelism.
Bacon, New Atlantis.

EVA'NGELIST.† n. s. [evangeliste, old Fr. εὐάγγελος, Gr.]

1. A writer of the history of our Lord Jesus.

Each of these early writers ascribe to the four evangelists by name their respective histories.
Addison.

2. A promulgator of the Christian laws.

Those to whom he first entrusted the promulgating of the gospel, had instructions; and it were fit our new evangelists should show their authority.
Decay of Piety.

EVA'NGELISTARY.* n. s. [old Fr. evangelistaire; low Latin, evangelistarium.] A selection from the gospels, to be read, as a lesson, in divine service.

The Saxons had — kept the day, as it seemeth by their evangelistary, where the rubrick to the gospel is, This the Gospel for Childmas or Childermas day. Gregory, Posthuma, (1650,) p. 119.
The criticks complain that the evangelistaries and lectionaries have often transfused their readings into the other manuscripts.
Person to Travis, p. 230.

To EVA'NGELIZE.† v. a. [evangeliser, Fr. evangelizo, Lat. εὐαγγελίζω, Gr. It is placed by Fulke, in 1617, among words not then generally understood. Pref. to Rhem. Test. But it was in use before that time.] To instruct in the gospel, or law of Jesus.

Angels' renowne, and men's evangeliz'd.
Davies, Wittes Pilgrimage, L. 2.
None can be a better evangelist than the beloved physician, and none so complete a physician, as he who is frequently conversant in the Word of God, and able to evangelize.
Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 256.
The spirit
Pour'd first on his apostles, whom he sends
To evangelize the nations; then, on all
Baptiz'd, shall them with wonderous gifts endue.
Milton, P. L.

EVA'NGELY.† n. s. [εὐαγγέλιον, that is, good tidings. See EVANGEL. Evangely is coeval with evangel, being used by Wicliffe.] Good tidings; the message of pardon and salvation; the holy Gospel; the Gospel of Jesus.

The whole evangelye of Christe.
Confutation of N. Shaxton, (1546,) sign. H. iiii.
Good Lucius,
That first receiv'd Christianity,
The sacred pledge of Christ's evangely.
Spenser, F. Q.

EVA'NID. adj. [evanidus, Lat.] Faint; weak; evanescent.

Where there is heat and strength enough in the plant to make the leaves odorate, there the smell of the flower is rather evanid and weaker than that of the leaves. Bacon.
The decoctions of simples, which bear the visible colours of bodies decocted, are dead and evanid, without the commixtion of alum, argol, and the like. Brown.
I put as great difference between our new lights and ancient truths, as between the sun and an evanid meteor. Glanville.

To EVA'NISH.† v. n. [evanesco, Lat. Not a verb active, as Dr. Johnson gives it, (without any proof,) but neuter.] To vanish; to escape from notice or perception.

Riches being momentary and evanishing.
Drummond, Works, p. 222.
[They] wonder at the tale
Of horrid apparition, tall and ghastly,
That walks at dead of night, or takes his stand
O'er some new open'd grave; and, strange to tell!
Evanishes at crowing of the cock. Blair's Grave.

EVA'PORABLE. adj. [from evaporate.] Easily dissipated in fumes or vapours.

Such cordial powders as are aromatick, their virtue lies in parts that are of themselves volatile, and easily evaporable. Grew.

To EVA'PORATE. v. n. [evaporo, Lat.] To fly away in vapours or fumes; to waste insensibly as a volatile spirit.

Poesy is of so subtile a spirit, that in the pouring out of one language into another it will all evaporate. Denham.
Our works unhappily evaporated into words; we should have talked less, and done more.
Decay of Piety.

Being weary with attending the slow consumption of the liquor, we set it in a digesting furnace to evaporate more nimbly. Boyle on Saltpetre.

This vapour falling upon joints which have not heat enough to dispel it, cannot be cured otherwise than by burning, by which it evaporates. Temple.

The enemy takes a surer way to consume us, by letting our courage evaporate against stones and rubbish. Swift.

To EVA'PORATE.† v. a.

1. To drive away in fumes; to disperse in vapours.

Hast thou afforded us no means to evaporate these smokes, to withdraw these vapours?
Donne, Devot. (1624,) p. 304.

If we compute that prodigious mass of water daily thrown into the sea from all the rivers, we should then know how much is perpetually evaporated, and cast again upon the continents to supply those innumerable streams. Bentley.

Convents abroad are so many retreats for the speculative, the melancholy, the proud, the silent, the politick, and the morose, to spend themselves, and evaporate the noxious particles. Swift.

We perceive clearly that fire will warm or burn us, and will evaporate water. Watts, Logick.

2. To give vent to; to let out in ebullition or sallies.

My lord of Essex evaporated his thoughts in a sonnet to be sung before the queen. Wotton.

EVA'PORATE.* adj. Dispersed in vapour.

How still the breeze! save what the filmy threads
Of dew evaporate brushes from the plain.
Thomson, Autumn.

EVAPORA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. evaporation.]

1. The act of flying away in fumes or vapours; vent; discharge.

They are but the fruits of adusted choler, and the evaporations of a vindictive spirit.
Howell, Voc. Forest.

Evaporations are at some times greater, according to the greater heat of the sun; so wherever they alight again in rain, 'tis superiour in quantity to the rain of colder seasons. Woodward.

2. The act of attenuating matter, so as to make it fume away.

Those waters, by rarefaction and evaporation, ascended. Ralegh.

3. [In pharmacy.] An operation by which liquids are spent or driven away in steams, so as to leave some part stronger, or of a higher consistence than before. Quincy.

EVA'SION. n. s. [evasum, Lat.] Excuse; subterfuge; sophistry; artifice; artful means of eluding or escaping.

We are too well acquainted with those answers;
But his evasion, wing'd thus swift with scorn,
Cannot outfly our apprehensions. Shakspeare.

Him, after all disputes,
Forc'd I absolve: all my evasions vain,
And reasonings, though through mazes, lead me still
But to my own conviction. Milton, P.L.

In vain thou striv'st to cover shame with shame;
Thou by evasions thy crime uncover'st more.
Milton, S. A.

EVA'SIVE.† adj. [from evade.]

1. Practising evasion; elusive.

Thus he, though conscious of th' etherial guest,
Answer'd evasive of the sly request. Pope, Odyssey.

2. Containing an evasion; sophistical; dishonestly artful.

Evasive arts will, it is feared, prevail, so long as distilled spirits of any kind are allowed.
Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 107.

EVA'SIVELY.† adv. [from evasive.] By evasion; elusively; sophistically.

I answered evasively, or at least indeterminately.
Bryant.

EU'CHARIST. n. s. [εὐχαριστία, Gr.] The act of giving thanks; the sacramental act in which the death of our Redeemer is commemorated with a thankful remembrance; the sacrament of the Lord's supper.

Himself did better like of common bread to be used in the eucharist. Hooker.

Some receive the sacrament as a means to procure great graces and blessings, others as an eucharist and an office of thanksgiving for what they have received. Taylor.

EUCHARI'STICAL.† adj. [from eucharist. Fr. eucharistique. See EUCHARISTICK.]

1. Containing acts of thanksgiving.

The latter part was eucharistical, which began at the breaking and blessing of the bread.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

It would not be amiss to put it into the eucharistical part of our daily devotions: we praise thee, O God, for our limbs and senses.
Ray on the Creation.

2. Relating to the sacrament of the supper of the Lord.

The act of this eucharistical supper.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 294.

EUCHARI'STICK.* adj. [Fr. eucharistique.] Relating to the sacrament of the supper of the Lord.

The eucharistick bread being neither hypostatically united with the Divinity, nor being the medium through which any such supernatural tendency of the Divine Presence appears to us, adoration directed toward it cannot fail of being palpable idolatry.
More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

EUCHO'LOGY.† n. s. [euchologe, old Fr. εὐχολόγιον, Gr. from εὐχὴ, prayer, and λόγος, discourse.] A formulary of prayers.

He did not frame an entirely new prayer, in words of his own conception, but took out of the ancient euchologies, or prayer-books of the Jews, what was good and laudable in them.
Bp. Bull's Works, ii. 556.

EU'CTICAL.* adj. [from εὐχὴ, Gr.] Containing acts of thanksgiving.

The euctical or eucharistical offering must consist of three degrees, or parts; the offering of the heart, of the mouth, of the hand.
Mede, Disc. upon Offerings, B. i. Dis. 49.

EU'CHYMY.* n. s. [εὐχύμια, Gr. of εὖ, good, and χύμος, juice.] In medicine, a good temper of the blood, and other juices in the body.

EU'CRASY.† n. s. [εὐκρασία, Gr. from εὖ, good, and κρᾶσις, temperature.] An agreeable well proportioned mixture of qualities, whereby a body is said to be in a good state of health. Quincy.

The eucraise or good temperature of the body.
Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 34.

EUDIO'METER.* n. s. [Fr. eudiometre; modern in that as well as our own language; from the Gr. εὔδιος, serene, and μέτρον, a measure.] An instrument of modern invention to determine the salubrity of the air. The experiments of Dr. Priestley are said to have suggested the invention, and the Abbé Fontana has been called the inventor.

EVE'CTION.* n. s. [old Fr. evection. Our word is metaphorically used in the sense of the Lat. eveho, to lift up.] Exaltation.

His [Joseph's] being taken out of the dungeon represented Christ's resurrection, as his evection to the power of Egypt next to Pharoah, signified the session of Christ at the right hand of the Father.
Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

EVE.† } n. s. [æfen, Sax. avend, or avond,
E'VEN. } Dutch; ibn, Goth. all meaning equal; and thus denoting what Dr. Johnson terms "the interval," or equal division, "between bright light and darkness." The word even, although Dr. Johnson deduces all his illustrations of this sense from the poets, is not exclusively a poetical term.]

1. The close of the day; the latter part of the day; the interval between bright light and darkness.

At even the quails came up, and covered the camp; and in the morning the dew lay round about the host. Exod. xvi. 13.

They, like so many Alexanders,
Have in these parts from morn till even fought,
And sheath'd their swords for lack of argument.
Shakspeare.

When the sun's orb both even and morn is bright,
Then let no fear of storms thy mind affright.
May, Virgil.

Such sights as youthful poets dream
On summer eves by haunted stream.
Milton, L'Allegro.

O, nightingale, that on yon bloomy spray
Warblest at eve, when all the woods are still.
Milton, Sonnet.

Th' unerring sun by certain signs declares,
What the late ev'n, or early morn prepares.
Dryden, Virgil.

Winter, oft at eve, resumes the breeze,
Chills the pale morn. Thomson, Spring.

2. The vigil or fast to be observed before an holiday. In this sense only eve is used, not even, Dr. Johnson says; which, however, is a mistake. He cites Bishop Duppa, in proof of eve; and he might have found repeated usage of even in our Common Prayer Book, where the collect for the great vigil of our Saviour's resurrection bears the title of Easter Even.

A table of the vigils, &c. The evens or vigils before the Nativity of our Lord, the Purification, &c.
Tables, Pref. to the Book of Common Prayer.

Let the immediate preceding day be kept as the eve to this great feast. Duppa, Rule to Devotion.

E'VEN.† adj. [eƿen, euen, Saxon, even, Dutch; ibn, Goth. iafn, Icel. equal; æquus, Lat. Our word was originally used to denote the same rank or situation; as by Wicliffe: "his even servant fell down, and prayed him," i. e. fellow servant. St. Matt. xviii. So Chaucer calls a fellow Christian "an even Christian." The same expression is common in our old books, and was not wholly disused in Shakspeare's time: One of his clowns, in Hamlet, employs it. It is not now, in this sense, used.]

1. Level; not rugged; not unequal; smooth as opposed to rough.

To see a beggar's brat in riches flow,
Adds not a wrinkle to my even brow.
Dryden, Pers.

The present face of Rome is much more even and level than it was formerly. Addison on Italy.

The superficies of such plates are not even, but have many cavities and swellings, which, how shallow soever, do a little vary the thickness of the plate. Newton, Opticks.

2. Uniform; equal to itself.

Constancy is natural to persons of even tempers and uniform dispositions. Tatler, No. 192.

Lay the rough paths of peevish nature ev'n,
And open in each heart a little heav'n. Prior.

3. Level with; parallel to.

That the net may be even to the midst of the altar. Exod.

And shall lay thee even with the ground. St. Luke, xix. 44.

4. Not having inclination any way; not leaning to any side.

He was
A noble servant to them; but he could not Carry his honours even. Shakspeare, Coriol.

5. Not having any part higher or lower than the other.

When Alexander demanded of one what was the fittest seat of his empire, he laid a dry hide before him, and desired him to set his foot on one side thereof; which being done, all the other parts of the hide did rise up; but when he did set his foot in the middle, all the other parts lay flat and even. Davies.

6. Equal on both sides; fair; not favouring either.

Upheld by me, yet once more he shall stand
On even ground against his mortal foe. Milton.

7. Without any thing owed, either good or ill; out of debt.

We reckon with your several loves,
And make us even with you;
Henceforth be earls. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

I will be even with thee, doubt it not. Shaks.

I do confess
The blind lad's pow'r, whilst he inhabits there;
But I'll be ev'n with him nevertheless. Suckling.

In taking revenge, a man is but even with his enemy, but in passing it over, he is superiour. Bacon, Essays.

Even reckoning makes lasting friends; and the way to make reckonings even is to make them often. South.

The publick is always even with an author who has not a just deference for them: the contempt is reciprocal. Addison.

The true reason of this strange doctrine was to be even with the magistrate, who was against them; and they resolved, at any rate, to be against him. Atterbury.

8. Calm; not subject to elevation or depression; not uncertain.

Do not stain
The even virtue of our enterprise. Shaks. Jul. Cæs.

Desires compos'd, affections ever ev'n,
Tears that delight, and sighs that waft to heav'n. Pope.

9. Capable to be divided into equal parts; not odd.

Let him tell me whether the number of the stars be even or odd. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

What verity there is in that numeral conceit, in the lateral division of man by even and odd, ascribing the odd unto the right side, and even unto the left. Brown, Vulg. Err.

To E'VEN.† v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To make even.

With the ships, the number is even'd.
Stanyhurst, Virg. Æn. b. i. (1582.)

Remove prejudice, even the balance, and hold it even. Chillingworth, Rel. of Prot. iii. § 86.

2. To make out of debt; to put in a state in which either good or ill is fully repaid.

Nothing can, or shall content my soul,
Till I am even'd with him, wife for wife.
Shakspeare, Othello.

3. To level; to make level.

This temple Xerxes evened with the soil, which Alexander is said to have repaired. Ralegh, Hist.

Beat, roll, and mow carpet-walks and cammomile; for now the ground is supple, and it will even all inequalities. Evelyn.

To E'VEN. v. n. To be equal to. Now disused.

A like strange observation taketh place here as at Stonehenge, that a redoubled numbering never eveneth with the first. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

E'VEN. adv. [often contracted to ev'n.]

1. A word of strong assertion; verily.

Even so did those Gauls possess the coasts. Spenser on Ireland.

Thou wast a soldier
Even to Cato's wish; not fierce, and terrible
Only in strokes. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

Dang'rous rocks,
Which, touching but my gentle vessel's side,
Would scatter all the spices on the stream,
And, in a word, yea even now worth this,
And now worth nothing. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

It is not much that the good man ventures: after this life, if there be no God, he is as well as the bad; but if there be a God, is infinitely better, even as much as unspeakable and eternal happiness is better than extreme and endless misery. Tillotson.

He might even as well have employed his time, as some princes have done, in catching moles. Atterbury.

2. Notwithstanding; though it was so that.

All I can say for those passages is, that I knew they were bad enough to please even when I wrote them. Dryden.

3. Likewise; not only so, but also.

The motions of all the lights of heaven might afford measures of time, if we could number them; but most of those motions are not evident, and the great lights are sufficient, and serve also to measure even the motions of those others. Holder.

Here all their rage, and ev'n their murmurs cease,
And sacred silence reigns, and universal peace. Pope.

4. So much as.

Books give the same turn to our thoughts that company does to our conversation, without loading our memories, or making us even sensible of the change. Swift.

5. A word of exaggeration in which a secret comparison is implied: as, even the great, that is, the great like the mean.

Nor death itself can wholly wash your stains,
But long contracted filth ev'n in the soul remains. Dryden.

I have made several discoveries, which appear new, even to those who are versed in critical learning. Addison, Spectator.

6. A term of concession.

Since you refined the notion, and corrected the malignity, I shall e'en let it pass. Collier of Friendship.

To EVE'NE.* v. n. [Lat. evenio.] To happen; to come to pass.

How often and frequently doth it evene, that after the love of God hath gained the dominion and upper-hand in the soul of man, that he is resolved to live well and religiously; in a small time after, do his lusts and evil concupiscence rally up themselves, and make a fresh assault more violent than the former! Hewyt, Serm. (1658,) p. 83.

E'VENER.* n. s. [from even.] One that reconciles or makes even. An ancient and certainly useful word.

Hail, evener of old aw and new,
Hail, buildor bold of Christës bour!
Hymn to the Virg. MS. cited by Warton, H. E. P. i. 315.

E'VENHAND.* n. s. [even and hand.] Parity of rank or degree.

Whoso is out of hope to attain to another's virtue, will seek to come at even-hand by depressing another's fortune. Bacon.

E'VENHANDED. adj. [even and hand.] Impartial; equitable.

Evenhanded justice
Returns th' ingredients of our poison'd chalice
To our own lips. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

E'VENING.† n. s. [æfen, Saxon; avend, Dutch.]

1. The close of the day; the beginning of night.

I shall fall
Like a bright exhalation in the evening,
And no man see me more. Shaks. Hen. VIII.

The devil is now more laborious than ever, the long day of mankind drawing towards an evening, and the world's tragedy and time near at an end. Ralegh, Hist.

It was a sacred rule among the Pythagoreans, that they should every evening thrice run over the actions and affairs of the day. Watts on the Mind.

2. The latter end of life.

He was a person of great courage, honour, and fidelity, and not well known till this evening. Ld. Clarendon, of the E. of Northampton.

E'VENING.* adj. Being toward the close of the day.

Let my prayer be as the evening sacrifice. Psalm cxli. 2.

It shall come to pass that at evening time it shall be light. Zech. xiv. 7.

E'VENING-STAR.* n. s. The Vesper, or Hesperus, of the ancients.

The amorous bird of night
Sung spousal, and bid haste the evening-star
On his hill top to light the bridal lamp. Milton, P. L.

Mean time the sun descended from the skies,
And the bright evening-star began to rise. Dryden, Æn.

E'VENLY. adv. [from even.]

1. Equally; uniformly; in an equipoise.

In an infinite chaos nothing could be formed; no particles could convene by mutual attraction; for every one there must have infinite matter around it, and therefore must rest for ever, being evenly balanced between infinite attractions. Bentley.

2. Levelly; without asperities.

A palish clearness, evenly and smoothly spread; not overthin and washy, but of a pretty solid consistence. Wotton.

3. Without inclination to either side; in a posture parallel to the horizon; horizontally.

The upper face of the sea is known to be level by nature, and evenly distant from the centre, and waxes deeper and deeper the farther one saileth from the shore. Brerewood.

4. Impartially; without favour or enmity.

You serve a great and gracious master, and there is a most hopeful young prince: it behoves you to carry yourself wisely and evenly between them both. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

E'VENNESS.† n. s. [from even.]

1. State of being even.

Her feet were placed upon a cube, to shew stability, and in her lap she held a perpendicular or level, as the ensign of evenness and rest. B. Jonson, Part of the King's Entertain.

2. Uniformity; regularity.

The ether most readily yieldeth to the revolutions of the celestial bodies, and the making them with that evenness and celerity is requisite in them all. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

3. Equality of surface; levelness.

4. Freedom from inclination to either side.

A crooked stick is not straitned, unless it be bent as far on the clear contrary side, that so it may settle itself at the length in a middle estate of evenness between both. Hooker.

5. Impartiality; equal respect.

6. Calmness; freedom from perturbation; equanimity.

More imperious and impatient of contradiction than becomes the calmness and unpassionate evenness of the true philosophical spirit. Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 33.

Though he appeared to relish these blessings as much as any man, yet he bore the loss of them, when it happened, with great composure and evenness of mind. Atterbury.

E'VENSONG. n. s. [even and song.]

1. The form of worship used in the evening.

Thee, chauntress, oft the woods among,
I woo, to hear thy evensong. Milton, Il Pens.

If a man were but of a day's life, it is well if he lasts till evensong, and then says his compline an hour before the time. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

2. The evening; the close of the day.

He tun'd his notes both evensong and morn. Dryden.

E'VENTIDE. n. s. [even and tide.] The time of evening.

A swarm of gnats at eventide,
Out of the fens of Allan do arise,
Their murmuring small trumpets sounding wide. Spenser, F. Q.

Isaac went out to meditate at eventide. Gen. xxiv. 63.

EVE'NT. n. s. [eventus, Latin.]

1. An incident; any thing that happens, good or bad.

There is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked. Eccl. ix. 2.

Oh heavy times, begetting such events. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

2. The consequence of an action; the conclusion; the upshot.

Two spears from Meleager's hand were sent,
With equal force, but various in th' event;
The first was fixt in earth, the second stood
On the boar's bristled back, and deeply drank his blood. Dryden.

To EVE'NT.* v. n. [old French eventer, to burst forth. This word is perhaps peculiar to Ben Jonson. It is now obsolete.] To break forth.

O that thou saw'st my heart, or didst behold
The place from whence that scalding sigh evented. B. Jonson, Case is altered.

To EVE'NTERATE.† v. a. [eventrer, old French; eventero, Latin.] To rip up; to open by ripping the belly.

In a bear, which the hunters eventerated, or opened, I beheld the young ones, with all their parts distinct. Brown.

EVE'NTFUL. adj. [event and full.] Full of incidents; full of changes of fortune.

Last scene of all,
That ends this strange eventful history,
Is second childishness. Shaks. As you like it.

1. To winnow; to sift out. Cockeram.

2. To examine; to discuss. Dict.

EVENTILA'TION.* n. s. [from eventilate.] The act of ventilating.

Now for the nature of this heat, it is not a destructive violent heat, as that of fire, but a generative gentle heat joined with moisture, nor needs it air for eventilation. Howell, Lett. i. 35. p. 273.

It [vital flame] requires constant eventilation, through the trachea and pores of the body, for the discharge of a fuliginous and excrementitious vapour. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 205.

EVE'NTUAL.† adj. [from event.] Happening in consequence of any thing; consequential.

Creating a new paper currency, founded on an eventual sale of the church lands. Burke.

EVE'NTUALLY. adv. [from eventual.] In the event; in the last result; in the consequence.

Hermione has but intentionally, not eventually, disobliged you, and hath made your flame a better return, by restoring you your own heart. Boyle, Seraph. Love.

E'VER.† adv. [æɼeꝑ, Sax. æve, Goth. perpetual; ævum, Lat.]

1. At any time.

Men know by this time, if ever they will know, whether it be good or evil which hath been so long retained. Hooker.

If thou hast that, which I have greater reason to believe now than ever, I mean valour, this might shew it. Shakspeare.

You serve a master who is as free from the envy of friends as ever any king was. Bacon, Advice to Villiers.

So few translations deserve praise, that I scarce ever saw any which deserved pardon. Denham.

The most sensual man that ever was in the world, never felt so delicious a pleasure as a clear conscience. Tillotson.

By repeating any idea of any length of time, as of a minute, a year, or an age, as often as we will in our own thoughts, and adding them to one another, without ever coming to the end of such addition, we come by the idea of eternity. Locke.

2. At all times; always; without end.

God hath had ever, and ever shall have, some church visible upon the earth. Hooker.

I see things may serve long, but not serve ever. Shakspeare.

Riches endless is as poor as winter,
To him that ever fears he shall be poor. Shakspeare, Othello.

Blinded greatness, ever in turmoil,
Still seeking happy life, makes life a toil. Daniel.

There under ebon shades, and low-brow'd rocks,
In dark Cimmerian desart ever dwell. Milton, L'All.

The inclinations of the people must ever have a great influence. Temple.

He shall ever love, and always be
The subject of my scorn and cruelty. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

Mankind is ever the same, and nothing lost out of nature, though every thing is altered. Dryden, Fab. Pref.

Ever since that time Lisander has been at the house. Tatler.

Immortal Vida! on whose honour'd brow
The poet's bays and critick's ivy grow,
Cremona now shall ever boast thy name,
As next in place to Mantua, next in fame. Pope.

3. For ever. Eternally; to perpetuity.

Men are like a company of poor insects, whereof some are bees, delighted with flowers and their sweetness; others beetles, delighted with other kinds of viands; which, having enjoyed for a season, they cease to be, and exist no more for ever. Locke.

We'll to the temple: there you'll find your son;
And there be crown'd, or give him up for ever. A. Philips.

4. It is sometimes reduplicated.

For ever, and for ever, farewel, Cassius. Shaks.

I know a lord who values no lease, though for a thousand years, nor any estate that is not for ever and ever. Temple.

The meeting points the fatal lock dissever
From the fair head, for ever and for ever. Pope.

5. For ever. For the term of life.

His master shall bore his ear through with an aul, and he shall serve him for ever. Exod. xxi. 6.

6. At one time; as, ever and anon: that is, at one time and another; now and then.

So long as Guyon with her communed,
Unto the ground she cast her modest eye;
And ever and anon, with rosy red,
The bashful blood her snowy cheeks did dye. Spenser, F. Q.

The fat ones would be ever and anon making sport with the lean, and calling them starvelings. L'Estrange.

He lay stretch'd along,
And ever and anon a silent tear
Stole down and trickled from his hoary beard. Dryden.

7. In any degree.

Let no man fear that harmful creature ever the less, because he sees the apostle safe from that poison. Hall.

For a mine undiscovered, neither the owner of the ground or any body else are ever the richer. Collier on Pride.

It suffices to the unity of any idea, that it be considered as one representation or picture, though made up of ever so many particulars. Locke.

There must be somewhere such a rank as man
And all the question, wrangle e'er so long,
Is only this, if God has plac'd him wrong? Pope, Essays.

8. A word of enforcement, or aggravation. As soon as ever he had done it; that is, immediately after he had done it. In this sense it is scarcely used but in familiar language.

That ever this fellow should have fewer words than a parrot, and yet the son of a woman. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

They brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den. Dan. iv. 24.

That purse in your hand, as a twin brother, is as like him as ever he can look. Dryden, Span. Fr.

As soon as e'er the bird is dead,
Opening again, he lays his claim
To half the profit, half the fame. Prior.

The title of duke had been sunk in the family ever since the attainder of the great duke of Suffolk. Addison on Italy.

9. Ever a. Any: [as ever y, i. e. every ich, or ever each, is each one, all. See EVERY.] This expression is still retained in the Scottish dialects.

I am old, I am old.
—I love thee better than I love e'er a scurvy young boy of them all. Shakspeare, Hen. IV.

10. It is often contracted into e'er.

11. It is much used in composition in the sense of always: as, evergreen, green throughout the year; everduring, enduring without end. It is added almost arbitrarily to neutral participles and adjectives, and will be sufficiently explained by the following instances:

E'VERBUBBLING. adj. [ever and bubbling.] Boiling up with perpetual murmurs.

Panting murmurs, still'd out of her breast,
That everbubbling spring. Crashaw.

E'VERBURNING. adj. [ever and burning.] Unextinguished.

His tail was stretched out in wond'rous length,
That to the house of heavenly gods it raught;
And with extorted power and borrow'd strength,
The everburning lamps from thence it brought. Spenser, F. Q.

Torture without end
Still urges, and a fiery deluge, fed
With everburning sulphur unconsum'd. Milton, P. L.

E'VERDURING. adj. [ever and during.] Eternal; enduring without end.

Our souls, piercing through the impurity of flesh, behold the highest heavens, and thence bring knowledge to contemplate the everduring glory and termless joy. Raleigh.

Heav'n open'd wide
Her everduring gates, harmonious sound!
On golden hinges moving. Milton, P. L.

E'VERGREEN. adj. [ever and green.] Verdant throughout the year.

There will I build him
A monument, and plant it round with shade
Of laurel evergreen, and branching palm.
Milton, S. A.

The juice, when in greater plenty than can be exhaled by the sun, renders the plant evergreen.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

E'VERGREEN. n. s. A plant that retains its verdure through all the seasons.

Some of the hardiest evergreens may be transplanted, especially if the weather be moist and temperate. Evelyn.

I find you are against filling an English garden with evergreens. Addison, Spect.

E'VERHONOURED. adj. [ever and honoured.] Always held in honour or esteem.

Mentes, an everhonour'd name, of old
High in Ulysses' social list enroll'd. Pope, Odyss.

EVERLA'STING. adj. [ever and lasting.]

1. Lasting or enduring without end; perpetual; immortal; eternal.

Whether we shall meet again, I know not;
Therefore our everlasting farewel take:
For ever, and for ever, farewel, Cassius. Shaks.

The everlasting life, both of body and soul, in that future state, whether in bliss or woe, hath been added. Hammond.

And what a trifle is a moment's breath,
Laid in the scale with everlasting death! Denham.

2. It is used of past as well as future eternity, though not so properly.

EVERLA'STING.† n. s.

1. Eternity; eternal duration, whether past or future.

From everlasting to everlasting thou art God.
Ps. xc. 2.

We are in God through the knowledge, which is had of us, and the love which is born towards us, from everlasting. Hooker.

2. The Eternal Being.

O, that this too too solid flesh would melt,
Thaw, and resolve itself into a dew!
Or that the Everlasting had not fix'd
His canon 'gainst self-slaughter. Shaks. Hamlet.

EVERLA'STING-PEA.* n. s. [lathyrus.] A flower.

Witness the everlasting-pease and scarlet bean.
Tate's Cowley.

EVERLA'STINGLY. adv. [from everlasting.] Eternally; without end.

I'll hate him everlastingly,
That bids me be of comfort any more.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

Many have made themselves everlastingly ridiculous. Swift.

EVERLA'STINGNESS.† n. s. [from everlasting.] Eternity; perpetuity; an indefinite duration.

He hath called us to everlastingness.
Stapleton, Fort. of the Faith, (1565,) fol. 39. b.

O Lord, Thou that dwellest in everlastingness.
2 Esdras, viii. 20.

Nothing could make me sooner to confess,
That this world had an everlastingness,
Than to consider that a year is run
Since both this lower world's, and the sun's sun,
Did set. Donne, Poems, p. 223.

A perpetuity (as I may so say) that is circumscribed; an everlastingness that lasts as long as the thing of which it is affirmed.
Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 191.

E'VERLIVING. adj. [ever and living.] Living without end; immortal; eternal; incessant.

Is not from hence the way, that leadeth right
To that most glorious house, that glist'reth bright
With burning stars and everliving fires?
Spenser, F. Q.

In that he is man, he received life from the Father, as from the fountain of that everliving Deity.
Hooker.

God's justice in the one, and his goodness in the other, is exercised for evermore, as the everliving subjects of his reward and punishment.
Ralegh, Hist.

The instinct of brutes and insects can be the effect of nothing else than the wisdom and skill of a powerful everliving Agent. Newton, Opticks.

EVERMO'RE. adv. [ever and more.] Always; eternally. More seems an expletive accidentally added, unless it signified originally from this time: as, evermore, always henceforward; but this sense has not been strictly preserved.

It govern'd was, and guided evermore,
Through wisdom of a matron grave and hoare.
Spenser, F. Q.

Sparks by nature evermore aspire,
Which makes them now to such a highness flee.
Davies.

Religion prefers those pleasures which flow from the presence of God for evermore, infinitely before the transitory pleasures of this world. Tillotson.

EVERO'PEN. adj. [ever and open.] Never closed; not at any time shut.

God is the great eye of the world, always watching over our actions, and has an everopen ear to all our words. Bp. Taylor.

EVERPLE'ASING. adj. [ever and pleasing.] Delighting at all times; never ceasing to give pleasure.

The everpleasing Pamela was content to urge a little farther for me. Sidney.

Forsaking Scheria's everpleasing shore,
The winds to Marathon the virgin bore.
Pope, Odyssey.

To EVE'RSE. v. a. [eversus, Latin.] To overthrow; to subvert; to destroy. Not used.

The foundation of this principle is totally eversed by the ingenious commentator upon immaterial beings. Glanville.

EVE'RSION.* n. s. [old French, eversion; Lat. eversio.] Overthrow. Cockeram.

Supposing overturnings of their old errour to be the eversion of their well-established governments.
Bp. Taylor, Cases of Con.

To EVE'RT.† v. a. [old Fr. evertir; Lat. everto. Heylin, in 1656, reckons the word as new and uncouth; but it had been used by a good author thirty years before that time, and had appeared in our lexicography of nearly the same date; as in Cockeram's vocabulary.] To destroy; to overthrow.

I shall say nothing so consonant unto reason, which (by the conceit of a strange reason) he will not seek to evert; yea, and take a pride too in it.
Fotherby, Atheom. (1626,) p. 5.

A process is valid, if the jurisdiction of the judge is not yet everted and overthrown. Ayliffe, Parergon.

EVERWA'TCHFUL. adj. [ever and watchful.] Always vigilant.

Plac'd at the helm he sat, and mark'd the skies,
Nor clos'd in sleep his everwatchful eyes.
Pope, Odyssey.

E'VERY.† adj. [in old language everich, that is, ever each; æpep ealc, Saxon. Everyche one, for every one, is in the old vocabulary of Huloet; and is common in the elder language of Gower and Chaucer. Wicliffe uses ever either, for both, Acts, viii.]

1. Each one of all. Every has therefore no plural signification.

He proposeth unto God their necessities, and they their own requests for relief in every of them.
Hooker.

All the congregation are holy, every one of them.
Numbers, xvi.

The king made this ordonance, that every twelve years there should be set forth two ships.
Bacon, New Atlantis.

The virtue and force of every of these three is shrewdly allayed. Hammond on Fundam.

Aristotle has long since observed how unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof for every thing, which we have for some things. Tillotson.

Every one, that has any idea of a foot, finds that he can repeat that idea, and joining it to the former, make the idea of two feet. Locke.

From pole to pole the thunder roars aloud,
And broken lightnings flash from ev'ry cloud.
Pope, Statius.

2. Every where. In all places; in each place.

The substance of the body of Christ was not every-where seen, nor did it every-where suffer death; every-where it could not be entombed: it is not every-where now, being exalted into heaven.
Hooker.

If I send my son abroad, how is it possible to keep him from vice, which is every-where so in fashion? Locke.

'Tis no-where to be found, or every-where. Pope.

E'VERYDAY.* adj. Common; occurring on any day.

This was no everyday writer.
Pope, of Akenside, in Johnson's Life of Akenside.

Men of genius forget things of common concern, which make no slight impression on everyday minds. Shenstone.

EVERYO'UNG. adj. [ever and young.] Not subject to old age, or decay; undecaying.

Joys everyoung, unmix'd with pain or fear,
Fill the wide circle of th' eternal year.
Pope, Odyssey.

To E'VESDROP.* v. n. To listen. See EAVES.

'Tis not to listen at the doors of parliament, or to evesdrop the council-chamber.
Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 155.

E'VESDROPPER. n. s. [eves and dropper.] Some mean fellow that skulks about a house in the night, to listen.

What makes you listening there? Get farther off; I preach not to thee, thou wicked evesdropper.
Dryden, Span. Friar.

Do but think how becoming your function it is to be disguised like a slave, and an evesdropper, under the women's windows. Dryden, Don Sebast.

To EVE'STIGATE. v. a. [evestigo, Lat.] To search out. Dict.

E'VET.* See EFT.

EU'GE. * n. s. [Latin.] Commendation; applause; gratulation.

The musick that Pythagoras talks of in the orbs, was that of the minstrels which our Saviour mentions at the return of that prodigal, to solemnize the euges, the passionate welcomes of heaven poured out on penitents. Hammond, Works, iv. 500.

His actions being such as his best and purest reason approves, have the cheerful euges and applauses of his conscience continually echoing and resounding after them. Scott, Works, ii. 28.

EUGH. n. s. [This word is so written by most writers; but since the original ıp, Saxon, or Welsh ywen, more favours the easier orthography of yew, I have referred it thither.] A tree.

At the first stretch of both his hands he drew,
And almost join'd the horns of the tough eugh.
Dryden, Æn.

To EVI'BRATE.* v. a. [Lat. evibro.] To shake; to brandish. Cockeram.

To EVI'CT.† v. a. [evinco, Latin.]

1. To dispossess of by a judicial course.
   The law of England would speedily evict them out of their possession, and therefore they held it the best policy to cast off the yoke of English law. Davies on Ireland.
2. To take away by a sentence of law.
   His lands were evicted from him. K. James's Declaration.
   I suffered myself to be over-intreated to abate somewhat of that evicted composition. Bp. Hall, Specialties of his Life.
3. To prove; to evince. Little used.
   I do not desire to be equal to those that went before; but to have my reason examined with theirs, and so much faith to be given them, or me, as those shall evict. B. Jonson, Discoveries.
   This nervous fluid has never been discovered in live animals by the senses, however assisted; nor its necessity evicted by any cogent experiment. Cheyne, Phil. Princ.

EVI'CTION.† n. s. [old Fr. eviction.]

1. Dispossession or deprivation by a definitive sentence of a court of judicature.
   If any of the parties be laid asleep, under pretence of arbitrement, and the other party doth cautiously get the start at common law, yet the pretorian court will set back all things, and no respect had to eviction or dispossession. Bacon.
   To him it is properly an eviction by the just sentence of God, who thus puts him out of a trust that he abused to the hurt of them, for whose sakes it was given him. Bp. Lloyd on God's Disp. of Kingdoms, P. i. (1691,) p. 67.
2. Proof; evidence; certain testimony.
   These, these are excellent and irrefragable proofs and evictions of your calling and election. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 285.
   A plurality of voices carries the question in all our debates, but rather as an expedient for peace than an eviction of the right. L'Estrange.

E'VIDENCE. n. s. [French.]

1. The state of being evident; clearness; indubitable certainty; notoriety.
2. Testimony; proof.
   I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch. Jeremiah, xxxii. 16.
   Unreasonable it is to expect the same kind of proof and evidence for every thing which we have for some things. Tillotson.
   Cato Major, who had borne all the great offices, has left us an evidence, under his own hand, how much he was versed in country affairs. Locke.
   They bear evidence to a history in defence of Christianity, the truth of which history was their motive to embrace Christianity. Addison on the Christian Religion.
3. Witness; one that gives evidence. In this sense it is sometimes plural; as, the evidence were sworn: but sometimes regularly augmented, as, evidences.
   To swear he saw three inches through a door,
   As Asiatick evidences swore. Dryden, Juv.
   There are books extant, which they must needs allow of as proper evidence; even the mighty volumes of visible nature, and the everlasting tables of right reason. Bentley.

To E'VIDENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To prove; to evince.
   The horses must be evidenced by good testimonies to have been bred in Ireland. Temple.
   If they be principles evident of themselves, they need nothing to evidence them. Tillotson.
   These things the Christian religion require, as might be evidenced from texts. Tillotson.
2. To shew; to make discovery of.
   Thou on earth hadst prosper'd, which thy looks
   Now also evidence. Milton, P. L.
   Although the same truths be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

E'VIDENT. adj. [French.] Plain; apparent; notorious.
   It is evident, in the general frame of nature, that things most manifest unto sense have proved obscure unto the understanding. Brown, Vulg. Err.
   They are incapable of making conquests upon their neighbours, which is evident to all that know their constitutions. Temple.
   Children minded not what was said, when it was evident to them that no attention was sufficient. Locke.

EVIDE'NTIAL.* adj. [from evident.] Affording evidence or proof.
   If it might be allowed me, I would fain distinguish all miracles into providential and evidential ones: Those should be evidential ones, which God enables men to work in order to gain belief, and which they know beforehand they shall work: These are such miracles as Moses and our Saviour wrought, and other prophets, and such as we have all along been speaking of. Bp. Fleetwood, Essay on Miracles, p. 229.

E'VIDENTLY. adv. [from evident.] Apparently; certainly; undeniably.
   Laying their eggs, they evidently prove
   The genial pow'r and full effects of love. Prior.
   The printing private letters is the worst sort of betraying conversation, as it has evidently the most extensive ill consequences. Pope.

EVIGILA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. evigilatio.] A waking.
   The evigilation of the animal powers, when Adam awoke. Biblioth. Biblica, (Oxf. 1720,) i. 157.

E'VIL.† adj. [ỳfel, Saxon; euvel, Dutch; ubils, Goth. So the etymologists in general. But "from the Hebrew gn-v-l comes the English word evil," says Harris, in his Pref. to Remarks on the 53rd chapter of Isaiah, (1739,) p. 34.]

1. Having bad qualities of any kind; not good.
   He hath brought up an evil name upon a virgin. Deut. xxii. 14.
   An evil disease cleaveth fast unto him; and now that he lieth, he shall rise up no more. Psalm xli. 8.

4. Injuriously; not kindly.
   The Egyptians evil entreated us, and afflicted us. Deut. xxvi. 6.
5. It is often used in composition, to give a bad meaning to a word; but in this, as in all other cases, it is in the modern dialect generally contracted to ill.

EVILAFFE'CTED. adj. [evil and affected.] Not kind; not disposed to kindness.
   The unbelieving Jews stirred up the Gentiles, and made their minds evilaffected against the brethren. Acts, xiv. 2.

EVILDO'ER. n. s. [evil and doer.] Malefactor; one that commits crimes.
   Whereas they speak evil against you as evildoers, they may by your good works glorify God. 1 Peter, ii. 12.

E'VILEYED.* adj. [evil and eye.] Having a malignant look; and figuratively, intention.
   Thou shalt not find me, daughter,
   After the slander of most step mothers,
   Eviley'd unto you. Shakspeare, Cymb.
   Nor can you rationally hope to keep your peace any longer, than whilst the evil-eyed factions want power to break it. Dean Pierce, Serm. (29th May, 1661,) p. 35.

EVILFA'VOURED. adj. [evil and favour.] Ill countenanced; having no good aspect.
   Machiavel well noteth, though in an evilfavoured instance, there is no trusting to the force of nature, except it be corroborate by custom. Bacon, Ess.

EVILFA'VOUREDNESS. n. s. [from evilfavoured.] Deformity.
   Thou shalt not sacrifice unto the Lord any bullock, or sheep, wherein is blemish, or any evilfavouredness. Deut. xvii. 1.

E'VILLY.† adv. [from evil.] Not well.
   This act, so evilly born, shall cool the hearts
   Of all his people, and freeze up their zeal. Shaksp.
   It will be an unhandsome injustice — evilly to requite their care by thy too curious and impatient spirit. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, iv. § 1.

E'VILMINDED. adj. [evil and mind.] Malicious; mischievous; malignant; wicked; insidious.
   But most she fear'd, that travelling so late,
   Some evilminded beasts might lie in wait,
   And, without witness, wreak their hidden hate. Dryden.

E'VILNESS. n. s. [from evil.] Contrariety to goodness; badness of whatever kind.

The moral goodness and congruity, or evilness, unfitness, and unseasonableness of moral or natural actions, falls not within the verge of a brutal faculty. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Beware of dogs, beware of evilworkers. Phil. iii. 2.

To EVI'NCE.† v. a. [Fr. evincer, "to evince or convince," Cotgrave; evinco, Latin.]

1. To prove; to shew; to manifest; to make evident.

Doubt not but that sin
Will reign among them, as of thee begot;
And therefore was law given them, to evince
Their natural pravity. Milton, P. L.

That religion, teaching a future state of souls, is a probability; and that its contrary cannot, with equal probability, be proved, we have evinced. South.

The greater absurdities are, the more strongly they evince the falsity of that supposition from whence they flow. Atterbury.

2. To conquer; to subdue. In this more powerful sense of the word, it is found in old French, signifying to overcome in law.

Errour by his own arms is best evinc'd. Milton, P. R.

To EVI'NCE.* v. n. To prove.

The accuser complains, the witness evinceth, the judge sentences. Bp. Hall, Cases of Conscience.

EVI'NCIBLE. adj. [from evince.] Capable of proof; demonstrable.

Implanted instincts in brutes are in themselves highly reasonable and useful to their ends, and evincible by true reason to be such. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

EVI'NCIBLY. adv. [from evincible.] In such a manner as to force conviction.

To E'VIRATE.† v. a. [eviratus, Lat.] To deprive of manhood; to emasculate. Cockeram.

Not to speak of Origen, and some others, that have voluntarily evirated themselves. Bp. Hall, Christ. Mod. B. 1. § 4.

EVIRA'TION.* n. s. [Latin, eviratio.] Castration. Cockeram.

To EVI'SCERATE.† v. a. [eviscero, Latin.] To embowel; to draw; to deprive of the entrails; to search within the entrails. Bullokar and Cockeram.

They did, spider-like, eviscerate and spin out themselves and their time. Dr. Griffiths, Samar. Revived, (1660,) p. 36.

These take great pains, and eviscerate themselves, as it were, to weave a web, which, when it is ended, is fit for no other use but as an unprofitable thing to be swept away. Citation in Etchard's Observ. (1696,) p. 70.

E'VITABLE. adj. [evitabilis, Lat.] Avoidable; that may be escaped or shunned.

Of divers things evil, all being not evitable, we take one; which one, saving only in case of so great urgency, were not otherwise to be taken. Hooker.

To E'VITATE. v. a. [evito, Lat.] To avoid; to shun; to escape.

Therein she doth evitate and shun
A thousand irreligious cursed hours,
Which forced marriage would have brought upon her. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

EVITA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. evitation.] The act of avoiding.

In all bodies there is an appetite of union and evitation, of solution of continuity. Bacon.

To EVI'TE.* v. a. [old Fr. eviter, Lat. evito.] To avoid.

Gainst open shame no text can well be cited,
The blow once given cannot be evited. Drayton.

The terrours are no way to be evited, &c. Lord Pres. Forbes, Refl. on Incred. (1750,) p. 81.

EVITE'RNAL. adj. [æviternus, Latin.] Eternal in a limited sense; of duration not infinitely, but indefinitely long.

EVITE'RNITY. n. s. [æviternitas, low Lat.] Duration not infinitely, but indefinitely long.

EULO'GICAL.* adv. [from eulogy.] Commendatory; containing praise.

EULO'GICALLY.* adv. In a manner which conveys encomium or praise.

Give me leave eulogically to enumerate a few of those many attributes, which have deservedly been given that glorious planet. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 387.

To EU'LOGIZE.* v. a. [from eulogy.] To commend; to praise. A word of recent introduction into our language.

Those
Who eulogize their country's foes. Huddesford, Satir. Poems.

A young clergyman of the cast, self-eulogized as evangelical rose. Dean of Middleham (in 1813,) Norris's Pract. Exp.

EU'LOGY.† n. s. [old Fr. euloge, from the Gr. εὖ, well, and λόγος, discourse. Formerly used in the sense of benediction; and so eulogy is defined in some of our old vocabularies. Thus the Fr. eulogies denote consecrated things, as the consecrated bread of the Greek church. See also ΕΤΛΟΓΙΑΙ in Meursii Gloss. Græco-Barbarum.] Praise; encomium; panegyrick.

Many brave young minds have oftentimes, through hearing the praises and famous eulogies of worthy men, been stirred up to affect the like commendations. Spenser on Ireland.

If some men's appetites find more melody in discord, than in the harmony of the angelic quires; yet even these seldom miss to be affected with eulogies given themselves. Decay of Piety.

EU'NUCH. n. s. [εὐνοῦχος, Gr.] One that is castrated or emasculated.

He hath gelded the commonwealth, and made it an eunuch. Shakspeare, Henry VI.

It hath been observed by the ancients, that much of Venus doth dim the sight; and yet eunuchs, which are unable to generate, are nevertheless also dimsighted. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

So charm'd you were, you ceas'd awhile to doat
On nonsense gargl'd in an eunuch's throat. Fenton.

To EU'NUCH.* v. a. To make an eunuch.

They eunuch all their priests; from whence 'tis shewn,
That they deserve no children of their own. Creech, Lucretius.

To EU'NUCHATE. v. a. To make an eunuch.

It were an impossible act to eunuchate or castrate themselves. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EU'NUCHISM.* n. s. [from eunuch.] The state of an eunuch.

That eunuchism, not in itself, but for the kingdom of heaven, is better than it, we doubt not; but when these two are reduced to their subjects their value is according to their use. Bp. Hall, Hon. of the Mar. Clergy, p. 54.

This voluntary eunuchism is not to be understood literally, as it was by Origen. Texts of Papists concern. Celibacy exam. P. ii. 782.

To E'VOCATE.* v. a. [evoco, Lat.] To call forth.

He [Saul] had already shown sufficient credulity, in thinking there was any efficacy in magical operations to evocate the dead. Stackhouse, Hist. of the Bib. B. 5. ch. 3.

EVOCA'TION. n. s. [evocatio, Latin.] The act of calling out.

Would truth dispense, we could be content with Plato, that knowledge were but remembrance, that intellectual acquisition were but reminiscential evocation. Brown.

Instead of a descent into hell, it seems rather a conjuring up or an evocation of the dead from hell. Notes to Odyssey.

To EVO'KE.* v. a. [Lat. evoco.] To call forth. This verb is in Cockeram's old vocabulary, but I have not found it in use till a century after it.

I had no sooner evoked the name of Shakspeare from the rotten monument of his former editions, than a crew of strange devils, and more grotesque than any of those he laughs at in the old farces, came chattering, mewing, and grinning round about me. Warburton to Hurd, (1749,) Lett. 6.

The only business and use of this character, is to open the subject in a long prologue, to evoke the devil, and summon the court. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, ii. 362.

EVOLA'TION.† n. s. [evolo, Latin.] The act of flying away.

That spiritual substance, which is imprisoned within us, would fain be flying up to that heaven whence it descended; these walls of flesh forbid that evolation, (as Socrates called it of old,) and will not let it out till the God of Spirits (who placed it there) shall unlock the doors, and free the prisoner by death. Bp. Hall, Free Prisoner, § 7.

To EVO'LVE.† v. a. [evolver, old French; evolvo, Latin.] To unfold; to disentangle.

The animal soul sooner expands and evolves itself to its full orb and extent than the human soul. Hale.

This little active principle, as the body increaseth and dilateth, evolveth, diffuseth, and expandeth, if not his substantial existence, yet his energy. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

With frequent steps I visit yonder seat
Of man, thy offspring; from the tender seeds
Of justice, and of wisdom, to evolve
The latent honours of his generous name. Akenside, Pleas. of Imag. B. 2.

To EVO'LVE. v. n. To open itself; to disclose itself.

Ambrosial odour
Does round the air evolving scents diffuse;
The holy ground is wet with heav'nly dews. Prior.

EVOLU'TION. n. s. [evolutus, Latin.]

1. The act of unrolling or unfolding.

The spontaneous coagulation of the little saline bodies was preceded by almost innumerable evolutions, which were so various, that the little bodies came to obvert to each other those parts by which they might be best fastened together. Boyle.

2. The series of things unrolled or unfolded.

The whole evolution of ages, from everlasting to everlasting, is so collectedly and presentifickly represented to God at once, as if all things which ever were, are, or shall be, were at this very instant really present. More, Divine Dialogues.

3. [In geometry.] The equable evolution of the periphery of a circle, or any other curve, is such a gradual approach of the circumference to rectitude, as that all its parts do meet together, and equally evolve or unbend; so that the same line becomes successively a less arch of a reciprocally greater circle, till at last they turn into a strait line. Harris.
4. [In tacticks.] The motion made by a body of men in changing their posture, or form of drawing up. And these evolutions are doubling of ranks or files, countermarches, and wheelings. Harris.
5. EVOLUTION of Powers. [in algebra.] Extracting of roots from any given power, being the reverse of involution. Harris.

EVOMI'TION.† n. s. [evomo, Latin.] The act of vomiting out.

He was — to receive immediate benefit either by eructation, or expiration, or evomition. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 4.

EUO'NYMUS. n. s.* [Lat.] In botany, a shrub, common in our hedges, called also spindle-tree.

The euonymus, of which the best skewers are made, is called prickwood. Monck Mason, Notes on Shakspeare.

EU'PATHY.* n. s. [Gr. εὐπαθεια.] A right feeling.

In Laertius we read recorded for a Stoick sentiment, that as the vitious man had his πάθη, or perturbations; so, opposed to these, had the virtuous his εὐπαθειαι, his eupathies or well-feelings, translated by Cicero constantiæ. The three chief of these were Will, defined rational desire; Caution, defined rational aversion; and Joy, defined rational exultation. To these three principal eupathies belonged many subordinate species. Harris's Three Treatises, Note on Treat. III.

EU'PATORY. n. s. [eupatorium.] A plant.

EU'PHEMISM.* n. s. [Gr. εὐφημισμος, from εὖ, well, and φημὶ, to speak.] In rhetorick, a way of describing an offensive thing by an inoffensive expression.

EUPHO'NICAL. adj. [from euphony.] Sounding agreeably. Dict.

EU'PHONY.† n. s. [εὐφωνία.] An agreeable sound; the contrary to harshness.

Had the Grecians been as careless of euphony and polishing their words in the terminations, as they have been in the initial syllables, their language had been as much inferiour to some others in euphony, as now it is esteemed more pleasant and graceful. Dalgarno, Didascal. (Ox. 1680,) 114.

In verse there is more care of euphony in every part. Instruct. for Oratory, (Ox. 1682,) p. 138.

EUPHO'RBIUM. n. s. [Lat.]

1. A plant.

It hath flowers and fruit like the spurge, and is also full of an hot sharp milky juice. The plants are angular, and shaped somewhat like the cereus or torch-thistle. It is commonly beset with spines, and for the most part hath no leaves. Miller.

2. A gum resin, brought to us always in drops or grains of a bright yellow, between a straw and a gold colour, and a smooth glossy surface. It has no great smell, but its taste is violently acrid and nauseous. It is used medicinally in sinapisms. Hill.

EU'PHRASY. n. s. [euphrasia, Latin.] The herb eye-bright; a plant supposed to clear the sight.

Then purg'd with euphrasy, and rue,
The visual nerve; for he had much to see;
And from the well of life three drops instill'd.
Milton, P. L.

EU'RIPUS. n. s.* [Latin.] Any strait, where the water is in much agitation; from the ancient frith between Bœotia and Eubœa, called Euripus.

They have ordained, that the provision of this establishment might be as stable as the earth on which it stands, and should not fluctuate with the euripus of funds and actions. Burke.

EURO'CLYDON. n. s. [εὐροκλύδων.] A wind which blows between the East and North, and is very dangerous in the Mediterranean. It is of the nature of a whirlwind, which falls suddenly on ships, makes them tack about, and sometimes causes them to founder, as Pliny observes. Calmet.

There arose against it a tempestuous wind called euroclydon. Acts, xxvii. 14.

EUROPE'AN. adj. [europæus, Latin.] Belonging to Europe.

Mean while the Spaniards in America,
Near to the line the sun approaching saw,
And hop'd their European coast to find
Clear'd from our ships by the autumnal wind.
Waller.

What was the waste of war, what fierce alarms
Shook Asia's crown with European arms?
Dryden, Æn.

He alone defy'd
The European thrones combin'd, and still
Had set at nought their machinations vain. Philips.

EU'RUS. n. s. [Latin.] The East wind.

Eurus, as all other winds, must be drawn with blown cheeks, wings upon his shoulders, and his body the colour of the tawny moon. Peacham.

EU'RYTHMY.† n. s. [εὐρυθμία.] Harmony; regular and symmetrical measure.

From these three ideas or designs, viz. orthography, scenography, and profile, it is that eurythmy, "majestica" and "venusta species ædificii," do result. Evelyn on Architecture.

EU'STYLE.* n. s. [from εὖ, well, and στύλος, a column, Gr.] In architecture, the position of columns in an edifice at a most convenient and graceful distance one from another.

EU'TAXY.* n. s. [Gr. εὐταξία.] Established order.

This ambition made Absalom rebel; nay, it endangered a crack in the glorious eutaxy of heaven, which could not be expiated but by the dejection of Lucifer that first quickened it. Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653,) p. 134.

EUTHANA'SIA.† n. s. [εὐθανασία.]
EUTHA'NASY. An easy death.

Let me prescribe and commend to thee, my son, this true spiritual means of thine happy euthanasia, which can be no other than this faithful disposition of the labouring soul, that can truly say, I know whom I have believed. Bp. Hall, The Comforter.

I ask not to live, O Hebe! give me but gentle death; euthanasia, euthanasia, that is all I implore. Tatler, No. 44.

A recovery, in my case, and at my age, is impossible: the kindest wish of my friends is euthanasia. Arbuthnot.

Our life cannot be pronounced happy, till the last scene is closed with ease and resignation: the mind still continuing to preserve its usual dignity, and falling into the arms of death, as a wearied traveller sinks into rest. This is that euthanasia which Augustus often desired, which Antoninus Pius enjoyed, and for which every wise man will pray. Orrery on Swift, p. 165.

To EVU'LGATE.* v. a. [Lat. evulgo.] To publish; to spread abroad.

EVULGA'TION. n. s. [evulgo, Lat.] The act of divulging publication. Dict.

EVU'LSION.† n. s. [evulsion, old French; evulsio, Latin.] The act of plucking out.

From a strict enquiry we cannot maintain the evulsion, or biting off any parts. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EWE. n. s. [eope, Sax.] The she-sheep; the female to the ram.

Rams have more wreathed horns than ewes. Bacon.

Haste the sacrifice;
Sev'n bullocks yet unyok'd, for Phœbus choose;
And for Diana seven unspotted ewes.
Dryden, Æn.

E'WER.† n. s. [from eau, perhaps anciently eu, water, Dr. Johnson says. The old French ewe is certainly water; so is the Saxon epe. The Norm. Fr. eyer is our ewer.] A vessel in which water is brought for washing the hands.

I dreamt of a silver basin and ewer to-night. Shakspeare.

Let one attend him with a silver basin
Full of rosewater, and bestrew'd with flowers;
Another bear the ewer; a third a diaper;
And say, wil't please your lordship cool your hands? Shakspeare.

The golden ewer a maid obsequious brings,
Replenish'd from the cool, translucent springs;
With copious water the bright vase supplies
A silver laver, of capacious size:
They wash. Pope, Odyssey.

E'WRY. n. s. [from ewer.] An office in the king's household, where they take care of the linen for the king's table, lay the cloth, and serve up water in silver ewers after dinner. Dict.

EX.† A Latin preposition often prefixed to compounded words; sometimes meaning out, as exhaust, to draw out; sometimes only enforcing the meaning, and sometimes producing little alteration. It is also often prefixed to words, in order to imply out, i. e. no longer in office or employment; as, an ex-chancellor, an ex-general, an ex-minister.

To EXACE'RBATE. v. a. [exacerbo, Lat.] To imbitter; to exasperate; to heighten any malignant quality.

EXACERBA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. exacerbation.]

1. Encrease of malignity; augmented force or severity.
2. Height of a disease; paroxysm.

The patient may strive, by little and little, to overcome the symptom in exacerbation; and so, by time, turn suffering into nature. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Watchfulness and delirium, and exacerbation, every other day. Arbuthnot on Diet.

EXACERBA'TION. n. s. [acervus, Lat.] The act of heaping up. Dict.

EXA'CT. adj. [exactus, Lat.]

1. Nice; not failing; not deviating from rule.

All this, exact to rule, were brought about,
Were but a combat in the lists left out. Pope.

2. Methodical; not negligently performed.

What if you and I enquire how money matters stand between us? — With all my heart, I love exact dealing; and let Hocus audit. Arbuthnot, John Bull.

3. Careful; not negligent: of persons.

Many gentlemen turn out of the seats of their ancestors, to make way for such new masters as have been more exact in their accounts than themselves. Spectator.

4. Honest; strict; punctual.

In my doings I was exact. Ecclus. li. 19.

To EXA'CT.† v. a. [old Fr. exacter, from exigo, exactus, Lat.]

1. To require authoritatively.

Thou now exact'st the penalty,
Which is a pound of this poor merchant's flesh. Shakspeare.

Of a foreigner thou mayest exact it again; but that which is thine with thy brother, thine hand shall release. Deut. xv. 3.

Exact of servants to be faithful and diligent. Bp. Taylor.

From us his foes pronounc'd glory he exacts. Milton, P. R.

The hand of fate is over us, and Heaven
Exacts severity from all our thoughts. Addison, Cato.

2. To demand of right.

Years of service past,
From grateful souls exact reward at last. Dryden.

Where they design a recompence for benefits received, they are less solicitous to make it when it is exacted. Smalridge.

3. To summon, to enjoin; to enforce.

Let us descend now therefore from this top
Of speculation; for the hour precise Exacts our parting hence. Milton, P. L.

Duty,
And justice to my father's soul, exact
This cruel piety. Denham, Sophy.

To EXA'CT. v. n. To practise extortion.

The enemy shall not exact upon him. Psalm lxxx. 22.

EXA'CTER.† n. s. [from exact; old Fr. exacteur. Often written exactor. See EXACTOR.]

1. An extortioner; one who claims more than his due, or claims his due with outrage and severity.

The poller and exacter of fees justifies the common resemblance of the courts of justice to the bush, whereunto while the sheep flies for defence in weather, he is sure to lose part of the fleece. Bacon, Essays.

I will also make thy officers peace, and thine exacters righteousness. Isaiah, lx. 17.

2. He that demands by authority.

Light and lewd persons, especially that the exacter of the oath did neither use exhortation, nor examining of them for taking thereof, were easily suborned to make an affidavit for money. Bacon, Off. of Alienation.

3. One who is severe in his injunctions or his demands.

No men are prone to be greater tyrants, and more rigorous exacters upon others, than such whose pride was formerly least disposed to the obedience of lawful constitutions. King Charles.

The grateful person being still the most severe exacter of himself, not only confesses, but proclaims his debts. South.

There is no way to deal with this man of reason, this rigid exacter of strict demonstration for things which are not capable of it. Tillotson.

EXA'CTION.† n. s. [old Fr. exaction.]

1. The act of making an authoritative demand, or levying by force.

We would leave the seventh year, and the exaction of every debt. Nehem. x. 31.

If he should break his day, what should I gain
By the exaction of the forfeiture? Shakspeare.

2. Extortion; unjust demand.

They vent reproaches
Most bitterly on you, for putter-on
Of these exactions. Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

Remove violence and spoil, and execute judgement and justice; take away your exactions from my people. Ezek. xlv. 9.

As the first earl did first raise the greatness of that house, by Irish exactions and oppressions; so Girald the last earl did at last ruin it by the like extortions. Davies on Ireland.

3. A tribute severely levied.

They have not made bridges over the rivers for the convenience of their subjects as well as strangers, who pay an unreasonable exaction at every ferry upon the least using of the waters. Addison on Italy.

EXA'CTITUDE.* n. s. [from exact.] Exactness; nicety. Scott.

Every sentence, every word, every syllable, every letter and point, seem to have been weighed with the nicest exactitude. Geddes, Prosp. p. 92.

EXA'CTLY. adv. [from exact.] Accurately; nicely; thoroughly.

Both of 'em knew mankind exactly well; for both of 'em began that study in themselves. Dryden, Don Sebast.

The religion they profess is such, that the more exactly it is sifted by pure unbiassed reason, the more reasonable still it will be found. Atterbury.

EXA'CTNESS.† n. s. [from exact.]

1. Accuracy; nicety; strict conformity to rule or symmetry.

Of exactness of balance and weights. Ecclus. xlii. 4.

Exactness, even to the partition of a cummin seed. Hammond, Works, iv. 546.

The experiments were all made with the utmost exactness and circumspection. Woodward on Fossils.

In wit, as nature, what affects our hearts
Is not th' exactness of peculiar parts;
'Tis not a lip, or eye, we beauty call,
But the joint force and full result of all. Pope.

The balance must be held by a third hand, who is to deal power with the utmost exactness into the several scales. Swift.

2. Regularity of conduct; strictness of manners; care not to deviate.

I preferred not the outward peace of my kingdoms with men, before that inward exactness of conscience before God. King Charles.

They think that their exactness in one duty will atone for their neglect of another. Rogers.

EXA'CTOR.* n. s. [from exact.]

1. An extortioner; one who claims more than his due, or claims his due with outrage and severity.

Dispensers against the laws of God, but tyrannous importunators and exactors of their own. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

The service of sin is perfect slavery; and he who will pay obedience to the commands of it, shall find it an unreasonable task-master, and an unmeasurable exactor. South, Serm. ii. 27.

2. He that demands by authority.

As they reposed great religion in an oath, in respect of the actor: so did they likewise, in respect of the exactor. Fotherby, Atheom. p. 42.

After which, innumerable forms and shapes of new exactions and exactors overspread the land. Milton, Eiconoclastes.

3. One who is severe in his injunctions or demands.

Men that are in health are severe exactors of patience at the hands of them that are sick. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, ii. § 3.

He was so severe an exactor of gravity and reverence in all mention of religion, that he could never endure any light or profane word, with what sharpness of wit soever it was covered. Ld. Clarendon of K. Ch. I. b. ii.

It is doubtless a great disgrace to our religion to imagine, as too many superstitious Christians do, that it is an enemy to mirth and cheerfulness, and a severe exactor of pensive looks and solemn faces. Scott, Christ. Life, i. 4.

EXA'CTRESS.* n. s. [from exactor.] She who is severe in her injunctions.

That were a heavy and hard task, to satisfy Expectation, who is so severe an exactress of duties; ever a tyrannous mistress; and most times a pressing enemy. B. Jonson, Masques.

To EXA'CUATE.* v. a. [Latin, exacuo.] To whet; to sharpen. Cockeram.

He hath done you wrong, in a most high degree;
And sense of such an injury receiv'd
Should so exacuate and whet your choler,
As you should count yourself an host of men,
Compar'd to him. B. Jonson, Magn. Lady.

EXACUA'TION.* n. s. [from exacuate.] The act of whetting or sharpening. Cockeram.

To EXA'GGERATE. v. a. [exaggero, Latin.]

1. To heap upon; to accumulate.

In the great level near Thorny, several oaks and firs stand in firm earth below the moor, and have lain there hundreds of years, still covered by the fresh and salt waters and moorish earth exaggerated upon them. Hale.

2. To heighten by representation; to enlarge by hyperbolical expressions.

He had exaggerated, as pathetically as he could, the sense the people generally had, even despair of ever seeing an end of the calamities. Clarendon.

A friend exaggerates a man's virtues, an enemy inflames his crimes. Addison, Spect.

EXAGGERA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. exaggeration.]

1. The act of heaping together; an heap; an accumulation.

Some towns, that were anciently havens and ports, are now, by exaggeration of sand between these towns and the sea, converted into firm land. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

2. Hyperbolical amplification.

The vulgar sort of people are verie little benefitted by these prolix and long-winded discourses, or expostulations, or exaggerations, rather than prayers. Featley, Dippers dipt, p. 124.

Exaggerations of the prodigious condescensions in the prince to pass good laws, would have an odd sound at Westminster. Swift.

EXA'GGERATORY.* adj. [from exaggerate.] Enlarging by hyperbolical expressions.

Dear princess, said Rasselas, you fall into the common errours of exaggeratory declamation, by producing, in a familiar disquisition, examples of national calamities, and scenes of extensive misery, which are found in books rather than in the world. Johnson, Rasselas, ch. 28.

To EXA'GITATE.† v. a. [exagito, Lat.]

1. To shake; to put in motion.

The warm air of the bed exagitates the blood. Arbuthnot.

2. To reproach; to pursue with invectives. This sense is now disused, being purely Latin, Dr. Johnson says; but a learned prelate of his own time thought it a proper expression, after the example of Hooker, to be retained.

Hence Aristophanes in such a free manner exagitates the mysterious solemnities, the horrible secrets attending them, and impudent figures. Bp. Lavington, Enthus. of Methodists, &c. (1751,) P. iii. p. 330.

This their defect and imperfection I had rather lament in such case than exagitate. Hooker.

EXAGITA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. exagitation.] The act of shaking or agitating. Dict.

To EXA'LT. v. a. [exalter, French; altus, Latin; exalto, low Latin.]

1. To raise on high.

And thou, Capernaum, which, art exalted unto heaven, shalt be brought down to hell. St. Matt. xi. 23.

2. To elevate to power, wealth, or dignity.

Exalt him that is low, and abase him that is high. Ezek. xxi. 26.

As yet exaltest thou thyself against my people, that thou wilt not let them go? Exod. ix. 17.

How long shall mine enemy be exalted over me? Psalm xiii. 2.

3. To elevate to joy or confidence.

The covenanters, who understood their own want of strength, were very reasonably exalted with this success. Clarendon.

How much soever the king's friends were dejected upon the passing those two acts, it is certain, they who thought they got whatsoever he lost were mightily exalted, and thought themselves now superiour to any opposition. Dryden, Æn. Ded.

4. To praise; to extol; to magnify.

O magnify the Lord with me, and let us exalt his name together. Psal. xxxiv. 3.

5. To raise up in opposition: a scriptural phrase.

Against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lift up thine eyes on high? 2 Kings, xix. 22.

6. To intend; to enforce.

Now, Mars, she said, let fame exalt her voice; Nor let thy conquests only be her choice. Prior.

7. To heighten; to improve; to refine by fire, as in chymistry.

The wild animals have more exercise, have their juices more elaborated and exalted; but for the same reason the fibres are harder. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

With chymick art exalts the min'ral pow'rs, And draws the aromatick souls of flow'rs. Pope.

They meditate whether the virtues of the one will exalt or diminish the force of the other, or correct any of its nocent qualities. Watts.

8. To elevate in diction or sentiment.

But hear, oh hear, in what exalted strains, Sicilian muses, through these happy plains, Proclaim Saturnian times, our own Apollo reigns. Roscommon.

EXALTA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. exaltation.]

1. The act of raising on high.

2. Elevation to power, dignity, or excellence.

She put off the garments of widowhood, for the exaltation of those that were oppressed. Judith, xvi. 8.

The former was an humiliation of Deity, the latter an humiliation of manhood: for which cause there followed an exaltation of that which was humbled: for with power he created the world, but restored it by obedience. Hooker.

3. Elevated state; state of greatness or dignity.

I wonder'd at my flight and change To this high exaltation. Milton, P. L.

In God all perfections, in their highest degree and exaltation, meet together. Tillotson.

You are as much esteemed, and as much beloved, perhaps more dreaded, than ever you were in your highest exaltation. Swift.

4. [In pharmacy.] Raising a medicine to a higher degree of virtue, or an encrease of the most remarkable property of any body. Quincy.

5. [In physicks.] The operation of purifying or perfecting any natural body, its principles, or parts.

The second of these, viz. sanguification, is performed, when the chyle itself is ground over again, and receiving yet farther exaltations by a greater solution of the more noble and active principles. Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 107.

6. Dignity of a planet in which its powers are increased.

Astrologers tell us, that the sun receives his exaltation in the sign Aries. Dryden.

EXA'LTEDNESS.* n. s. [from exalted.]

1. State of dignity or greatness.

That the angels and saints should, upon the account of the exaltedness of their natures, see and hear from thence what is done or said from one side of the earth to the other, is extremely incredible. More, Antid. against Idolatry, ch. 2.

2. Conceited greatness.

The exaltedness of some minds, or rather as I shrewdly suspect their insipidity and want of feeling and observation, may make them insensible to these light things. Gray to West, Lett. 6.

EXA'LTER.* n. s. [from exalt.]

1. One that raises on high.

Thus her, doubtful of her way,
For game and not for hunger a sea-pie
Spied through this traitorous spectacle, from high,
The seely fish where it disputing lay,
And to end her doubts, and her, bears her away;
Exalted she's, but to the exalter's good,
(As are, by great ones, men which lowly stood,)
It's rais'd to be the raiser's instrument and food.
Donne, Poems, p. 303.

2. One that highly praises or extols.

The Jesuits are the great exalters of the pope's supremacy. Puller, Moderat. Ch. of Eng. p. 479.

EXA'MEN.† n. s. [Lat.] Examination; disquisition; enquiry.

This considered together with a strict account, and critical examen of reason, will also distract the witty determinations of astrology. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The pure and useful religion needs not fear the most severe examen.

Worthington to Hartlib, (1660,) Ep. 4.

After so fair an examen, wherein nothing has been exaggerated. Burke, Vindic. of Nat. Society.

EXA'MINABLE.* adj. [from examine.] Proper to be enquired into.

EXA'MINANT.* n. s. [Lat. examinans.] One who is to be examined.

The examiners shall examine two at a time — the examinants shall appear before them, in classes of six at a time.

Dean Prid. Ref. of Two Univ. (1715,) Life, &c. p. 234.

EXA'MINATE. n. s. [examinatus, Lat.] The person examined.

In an examination where a freed servant, who having power with Claudius, very saucily had almost all the words, asked in scorn one of the examinates, who was likewise a freed servant of Scribonianus; I pray, sir, if Scribonianus had been emperour, what would you have done? He answered, I would have stood behind his chair, and held my peace. Bacon.

EXAMINA'TION. n. s. [examinatio, Lat.] The act of examining by questions, or experiment; accurate disquisition.

I have brought him forth, that, after examination had, I might have somewhat to write. Acts, xxv. 26.

Different men leaving out or putting in several simple ideas, according to their various examination, skill, or observation of the subject, have different essences. Locke.

EXA'MINATOR.† n. s. [Lat.] An examiner; an enquirer.

An inference, not of power to persuade a serious examinator. Brown, Vulg. Err.

All other inferiour magistrates to be chosen as the literati in China, or by those exact suffrages of the Venetians, and such again be not eligible, or capable of magistracies, honours, offices, except they be sufficiently qualified for learning, manners, and that by the strict approbation of deputed examinators. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

To EXA'MINE.† v. a. [examino, Lat.]

1. To try a person accused or suspected by interrogatories.

Let them examine themselves whether they repent them truly. Church Catechism.

If we this day be examined of the good deed done to the impotent man. Acts, iv. 9.

We ought, before it be too late, to examine our souls, and provide for futurity. Wake, Prep. for Death.

2. To interrogate a witness.

Command his accusers to come unto thee, by examining of whom thyself mayest take knowledge of all these things. Acts, xxiv. 8.

3. To question; to doubt.

All her deserving
Is a reserved honesty, and that
I have not heard examin'd. Shakspeare, All's Well.

4. To try the truth or falsehood of any proposition.

5. To try by experiment, or observation; narrowly sift; scan.

To write what may securely stand the test
Of being well read over thrice at least,
Compare each phrase, examine ev'ry line,
Weigh ev'ry word, and ev'ry thought refine. Pope.

6. To make enquiry into; to search into; to scrutinise.

When I began to examine the extent and certainty of our knowledge, I found it had a near connexion with words. Locke.

EXA'MINER.† n. s. [from examine.]

1. One who interrogates a criminal or evidence.

A crafty clerk, commissioner, or examiner, will make a witness speak what he truly never meant. Hale, Law of England.

2. One who searches or tries any thing; one who scrutinizes. Huloet.

So much diligence is not altogether necessary, but it will promote the success of the experiments, and by a very scrupulous examiner of things deserves to be applied. Newton, Opticks.

Such only, as shall obtain a certificate of approbation from the two examiners that examined them, shall be qualified for the said degree. Dean Prideaux, &c. Life, p. 235.

EXA'MPLARY. adj. [from example.] Serving for example or pattern; proposed to imitation.

We are not of opinion that nature, in working, hath before her certain examplary draughts or patterns, which subsisting in the bosom of the Highest, and being thence discovered, she fixeth her eye upon them. Hooker.

EXA'MPLE. n. s. [exemple, Fr. exemplum, Lat.]

1. Copy or pattern; that which is proposed to be resembled or imitated.

The example and pattern of those his creatures he beheld in all eternity. Ralegh, Hist.

2. Precedent; former instance of the like.

So hot a speed, with such advice dispos'd,
Such temp'rate order in so fierce a course,
Doth want example. Shakspeare, K. John.

3. Precedent of good.

Let us shew an example to our brethren. Judith, viii. 24.

Taught this by his example, whom I now
Acknowledge my Redeemer ever blest! Milton, P. L.

4. A person fit to be proposed as a pattern.

Be thou an example of the believers. 1 Tim. iv. 12.

5. One punished for the admonition of others.

Sodom and Gomorrah, giving themselves over to fornication, are set forth for an example, suffering the vengeance of eternal fire. Jude, 7.

6. Influence which disposes to imitation.
When virtue is present, men take example at it; and when it is gone, they desire it. Wisd. iv. 2.
Example is a motive of a very prevailing force on the actions of men. Rogers.
7. Instance; illustration of a general position by some particular specification.
Can we, for example, give the praise of valour to a man, who, seeing his gods prophaned, should want the courage to defend them? Dryden, Virg. Æn. Ded.
8. Instance in which a rule is illustrated by an application.
My reason is sufficiently convinced both of the truth and usefulness of his precepts: it is to pretend that I have, at least in some places, made examples to his rules. Dryden.

To EXA'MPLE.† v. a. [from the noun.]
1. To exemplify; to give an instance of.
The proof whereof I saw sufficiently exampled in these late wars of Munster. Spenser on Ireland.
Men of blemished persons may contain a wise, valiant, learned, liberal, and religious soul, and be in every part most absolute; exampled to us in many famous men. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 80.
2. To set an example.
Do villany, do, since you profess to do
Like workmen: I'll example you with thievery. Shakspeare.
Lidian, you are the pattern of fair friendship
Exampled for your love. Beaum. and Fl. Lover's Progress.
The constancy there observed, by the natives of both sexes, in keeping to their old fashions, exampled to them by their predecessors, and by them still continued, is the great praise of this people. Terry, Voyage to the E. Indies, p. 218.

EXA'MPLER.* n. s. [from example. This is a very old word, but now disused, and the Lat. exemplar is adopted in its stead. Hooker thus writes examplary, according to the English form; not exemplary. And from exampler no doubt our present word sampler is formed. See SAMPLER.] A pattern; an example to be followed.
She was a myrroure and exampler of honoure. Bp. Fisher, Serm. 13.

EXA'MPLELESS.* adj. [example and less.] Having no example or pattern. A word probably coined by Ben Jonson, and awkwardly melted into three syllables.
They that durst to strike
At so exampless, and unblam'd a life,
As that of the renown'd Germanicus,
Will not sit down with that exploit alone:
"He threatens many, that hath injur'd one."
B. Jonson, Sejanus.

EXA'NGUIOUS.† adj. [exanguis, Lat. This word should properly be exsanguious, the Latin word being more frequently written with the s, as derived from sanguis, blood. But the old French also is exangue.] Having no blood; formed with animal juices, not sanguineous.
Hereby they confound the generation of perfect animals with imperfect, sanguineous with exanguious. Brown.
The insects, if we take in the exanguious both terrestrial and aquatick, may for number vie even with plants. Ray.

To EXA'NIMATE.* v. a. [Lat. exanimo.]
1. To trouble greatly; to amaze; to dishearten; to discourage. See EXANIMATION.
Huloet, Cockeram, Bullokar, Sherwood.
2. To deprive of life. Coles.

EXA'NIMATE.† adj. [exanimatus, Lat.]
1. Lifeless; dead.
And shiver'd ships which had been wrecked late,
Yet stuck with carcases exanimate
Of such, as, having all their substance spent
In wanton joys and lustes intemperate,
Did afterwards make shipwrack violent
Both of their life and fame for ever fowly blent. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 7.
2. Spiritless; depressed.
The grey morn
Lifts her pale lustre on the paler wretch,
Exanimate by love. Thomson, Spring.

EXANIMA'TION.† n. s. [from exanimate.] Deprivation of life, Dr. Johnson says, citing some dictionary. But the first usage of the word seems to have been for an amazement, a disheartening, as in the old vocabularies of Cockeram and Bullokar, where the sense of it for deprivation of life is not noticed. See To EXANIMATE.

EXA'NIMOUS. adj. [exanimis, Lat.] Lifeless; dead; killed.

EXANTHE'MATA. n. s. [ἐξανθήματα, Gr.] Efflorescencies; eruptions; breaking out; pustules.

EXANTHE'MATOUS. adj. [from exanthemata.] Pustulous; efflorescent; eruptive.

To EXANTLA'TE. v. a. [exantlo, Lat.]
1. To draw out.
2. To exhaust; to waste away.
By time those seeds are wearied or exantlated, or unable to act their parts any longer. Boyle, Scept. Chymist.

EXANTLA'TION.† n. s. [from exantlate.] The act of drawing out; exhaustion.
What libraries of new volumes after ages will behold, in what a new world of knowledge the eyes of our posterity may be happy, a few ages may joyfully declare; and is but a cold thought unto those, who cannot hope to behold this exantlation of truth, or that obscured virgin half out of the pit; which might make some content with a commutation of the time of their lives, and to commend the fancy of the Pythagorean metempsychosis. Brown, Chr. Morals, ii. 5.
The prime productions of our society, which — have darkly and deeply couched under them the most finished and refined systems of all sciences and arts — I do not doubt to lay open by untwisting or unwinding, and either to draw up by exantlation, or display by incision. Swift, Tale of a Tub, Introd.

EXARA'TION. n. s. [exaro, Latin.] The manual act of writing; the manner of manual writing. Dict.

E'XARCH.* n. s. [Gr. ἔξαρχος, Lat. exarchus, Fr. exarque; from ἐξ and ἀρχὴ, empire, command.] A viceroy; formerly the representative of the emperours, whose residence was at Ravenna.
The popes without admittance either of the emperours themselves, or of their lieutenants called exarchs, ascend not to the throne. Proceed. against Garnet, (1606,) sign. Oo. 2. b.

E'XARCHATE.* n. s. [from exarch; French, exarchat.] The dignity of an exarch; the department governed by him.
If we would suppose the pismires had but our understandings, they also would have the method of a man's greatness, and divide their little molehills into provinces and exarchats. Bp. Taylor, Holy Dying, iv. § 1.

Pepin, not unobedient to the pope's call, passing into Italy, frees him out of danger, and wins for him the whole exarchate of Ravenna. Milton, Of Ref. in England.

EXARTICULA'TION. n. s. [ex and articulus, Lat.] The dislocation of a joint. Dict.

To EXA'SPERATE.† v. a. [exaspero, Lat.]
1. To provoke; to enrage; to irritate; to anger; to make furious.
To take the widow,
Exasperates, makes mad her sister Goneril. Shakspeare.
The people of Italy, who run into politicks, have something to exasperate them against the king of France. Addison.
2. To heighten a difference; to aggravate; to embitter.
Many have studied to exasperate the ways of death, but fewer hours have been spent to soften that necessity. Brown, Christ. Morals, ii. 13.
When ambition is unable to attain its end, it is not only wearied, but exasperated at the vanity of its labours. Parnel.
3. To exacerbate; to heighten malignity.
The plaister alone would pen the humour already contained in the part, and so exasperate it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

EXA'SPERATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Provoked; embittered.
Why art thou then exasperate, thou idle immaterial skein of sleive silk? Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.
Matters grew more exasperate between the kings of England and France, for the auxiliary forces of French and English were much blooded one against another. Bacon.

EXA'SPERATER.† n. s. [from exasperate.] One that exasperates; a provoker. Sherwood.

EXASPERA'TION.† n. s. [from exasperate.]
1. Aggravation; malignant representation.
My going to demand justice upon the five members, my enemies loaded with all the obloquies and exasperations they could. King Charles.
2. Provocation; irritation; incitement to rage.
That which brings thee to that exasperation against them, as to say, that thou wouldst break thine own oath. Donne, Devot. (1625,) p. 613.
Their ill usage and exasperations of him, and his zeal for maintaining his argument, disposed him to take liberty. Atterbury.
3. Exacerbation.
Judging, as of patients in fevers, by the exasperation of the fits. Wotton, Rem. (Lett. 1633,) p. 457.

To EXAU'CTORATE.† v. a. [exauctoro, Latin.]
1. To dismiss from service.
As for the defects, I no way presume to interest your majesty in them: let them all fall on myself. Though as I have endeavoured to set down the truth impartially, I hope they will not be so great or many, as to exauctorate the rest. Ld. Herbert's Hen. VIII. Dedication.
We ought to have more regard to reason, and the true nature of things, than to pronounce him an extraordinary officer, who, for ought appears, is impowered to none but acts of ordinary and continual importance to the church; and more reverence for the blessed apostle, than to think he would issue a commission, full fraught with rules of perpetual use, to a temporary delegate, who was perhaps next day to be exauctorated, and never to have any exercise of them. Abp. Sancroft, Serm. p. 36.
2. To deprive of a benefice.
Arch hereticks, in the primitive days of Christianity, were by the church treated with no other punishment than excommunication, and by exauctorating and depriving them of their degrees therein. Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXAUCTORA'TION.† n. s. [from exauctorate.]

1. Dismission from service.

No discharge in that war; no weapon against it, no dismission from it, no vacation or exauctoration.

Bp. Richardson, on the O. Test. (1655,) p. 327.

2. Deprivation; degradation.

Deposition, degradation, or exauctoration, is nothing else but the removing of a person from some dignity or order in the church, and the depriving him of his ecclesiastical preferments.

Ayliffe, Parergon.

To EXAU'THORATE.* v. a. [old Fr. exauthorer.] To dismiss from service; "to put men of war out of wages."

Cockeram.

EXAUTHORA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. exauthoration.] Deprivation of office.

In the exauthoration of episcopal office and dignity, in the demolition of churches.

Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 308.

To EXAU'THORIZE.* v. a. [ex and authorize.] To deprive of, or put from, authority. Bullokar.

Sometimes — exauthorizing the prince, then hasting and moving forward his proneness to faithless abrogation.

Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 17.

EXCANDE'SCENCE.† } n. s. [old Fr. excan-
EXCANDE'SCENCY. } descence, from excandesco, Latin.]

1. Heat; the state of growing hot.

2. Anger; the state of growing angry.

EXCANTA'TION.† n. s. [excanto, Latin.] Disenchantment by a counter-charm.

The don — enchanted in his cage, out of which there was no possibility of getting but by the power of a higher excantation.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. p. 277.

To EXCA'RNATE.† v. a. [ex and carnes, Lat.] To clear from flesh.

The mate [of the chirurgeon] shall practise anatomy, and manual operations; make skeletons of the sundry rare animals, which he shall have the opportunity to cut up; excarnate bowels; artificially dry the muscles, &c.

Sir W. Petty, Advice to Hartlib, (1648,) p. 14.

The spleen is most curiously excarnated, and the vessels filled with wax, whereby its fibres and vessels are very well seen. Grew, Museum.

EXCARNIFICA'TION. n. s. [excarnifico, Lat.] The act of taking away the flesh.

To E'XCAVATE. v. a. [excavo, Latin.] To hollow; to cut into hollows.

The cups, gilt with a golden border about the brim, were of that wonderful smallness, that Faber put a thousand of them into an excavated pepper-corn. Ray on the Creation.

Though nitrous tempests, and clandestine death,
Fill'd the deep caves, and num'rous vaults beneath,
Which form'd with art, and wrought with endless toil,
Ran through the faithless excavated soil,
See the unweary'd Briton delves his way,
And to the caverns lets in war and day.

Blackmore.

Flat thecæ, some like hats, some like buttons, excavated in the middle.

Derham, Physico-Theology.

EXCAVA'TION. n. s. [old Fr. excavation.]

1. The act of cutting into hollows.

2. The hollow formed; the cavity.

While our eye measures the eminent and the hollowed parts of pillars, the total object appeareth the bigger; and so, as much as those excavations do substract, is supplied by a fallacy of the sight. Wotton, Architecture.

Christ was buried, after the manner of the Jews, in a vault made by the excavation of the rocky, firm part of the earth.

Pearson on the Creed, Art. 4.

E'XCAVATOR.* n. s. [from excavate.] A digger. This sonorous word made its appearance, in a publick advertisement, Jan. 2, 1815, thus offering employment to "formers of a new road!" I know not of its existence elsewhere.

To EXCA'VE.* v. a. [Lat. excavo.] To hollow. See To CAVE. Cockeram.

To EXCE'CATE.* v. a. [Lat. excæco.] To make blind; to put out the eyes. Cockeram.

EXCECA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. excæcatio.] Blindness.

Their own wicked hearts will still work and improve their own induration, excecation, and irritation to further sinning.

Bp. Richardson, on the O. Test. (1655,) p. 359.

To EXCE'ED. v. a. [excedo, Latin.]

1. To go beyond; to outgo.

Nor did any of the crusts much exceed half an inch in thickness. Woodward on Fossils.

2. To excel; to surpass.

Solomon exceeded all the kings of the earth.

1 Kings, x. 23.

To EXCE'ED.† v. n.

1. To go too far; to pass the bounds of fitness.

In your prayers, and places of religion, use reverent postures and great attention, remembering that we speak to God, in our reverence to whom we cannot possibly exceed. Bp. Taylor.

2. To go beyond any limits.

Forty stripes he may give him, and not exceed.

Deut. xxv. 3.

Fare you well, sir; these fellows may pray for you, you have made the scholars' commons exceed to-day. Beaum. and Fl. Wit at several Weapons.

3. To bear the greater proportion.

Justice must punish the rebellious deed;
Yet punish so, as pity shall exceed. Dryden.

EXCE'EDABLE.* adj. [from exceed.] That may surmount or excel. Sherwood.

EXCE'EDER.* n. s. [from exceed.] One that passes the bounds of fitness.

That abuse doth not evacuate the commission; not in the exceeders and transgressors, much less in them that exceed not.

Mountagu, App. to Cæs. p. 317.

EXCE'EDING.* n. s. [from exceed.] That which passes the usual limits.

It is found that there has been a great exceeding of late years in the second division, several brevets having been granted for the converting of subalterns into scarf-officers. Addison, Spect. No. 21.

EXCE'EDING. participial adj. [from exceed.] Great in quantity, extent, or duration.

He saith, that cities were built an exceeding space of time before the great flood.

Ralegh, Hist.

EXCE'EDING. adv. [This word is not analogical, but has been long admitted and established.] In a very great degree; eminently.

The country is supposed to be exceeding rich. Abbot.

The Genoese were exceeding powerful by sea, and contended often with the Venetians for superiority. Ralegh.

Talk no more so exceeding proudly; let not arrogance come out of your mouth. 1 Sam. ii. 3.

The action of the Iliad and that of the Æneid were in themselves exceeding short; but are beautifully extended and diversified by the invention of episodes, and the machinery of the gods.

Addison, Spect.

The serum of the blood affords, by distillation, an exceeding limpid water, neither acid or alkaline. Arbuthnot.

EXCE'EDINGLY. adv. [from exceeding.] To a great degree; greatly; very much.

They cried out the more exceedingly, Crucify him. St. Mark, xv. 14.

Isaac trembled exceedingly. Gen. xxvii. 33.

The earl of Surry, lieutenant of Ireland, was much feared of the king's enemies, and exceedingly beloved of the king's subjects. Davies on Ireland.

Precious stones look exceedingly well, when they are set in those places which we would make to come out of the picture. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

Is not this medium exceedingly more rare and subtile than the air, and exceedingly more elastick and active? Newton, Opticks.

EXCE'EDINGNESS.* n. s. [from exceeding.] Greatness in quantity, extent, or duration. Sherwood.

To EXCE'L.† v. a. [excello, Latin.]

1. To outgo in good qualities; to surpass.

Venus her myrtle, Phœbus has his bays;
Tea both excels, which you vouchsafe to praise.

Waller.

How heroes rise, how patriots set,
Thy father's bloom and death may tell;
Excelling others, these were great;
Thou, greater still, must these excel. Prior.

2. To overpower.

He ended, or I heard no more; for now
My earthly by his heavenly overpower'd,
Which it had long stood under, strain'd to the height
In that celestial colloquy sublime,
As with an object that excels the sense,
Dazzled and spent, sunk down, and sought repair
Of sleep. Milton, P. L.

3. To exceed, simply.

She open'd;
But to shut excell'd her power. Milton, P. L.

To EXCE'L. v. n. To have good qualities in a great degree; to be eminent; to be great.

Then to Silvia let us sing,
That Silvia is excelling. Shakspeare.

Reuben, unstable as water, thou shalt not excel.

Gen. xlix.

It is not only in order of nature for him to govern, that is the more intelligent; but there is no less required courage to protect, and, above all, honesty and probity to abstain from injury: so fitness to govern is a perplexed business. Some men, some nations, excel in the one ability, some in the other. Bacon, Holy War.

Company are to be avoided that are good for nothing; those to be sought and frequented that excel in some quality or other. Temple.

He match'd their beauties where they most excel;
Of love sung better, and of arms as well. Dryden.

Let those teach others, who themselves excel;
And censure freely, who have written well. Pope.

E'XCELLENCE.† } n. s. [excellence, French;
E'XCELLENCY. } excellentia, Latin.]

1. The state of abounding in any good quality.

Sudden mind arose
In Adam, not to let the occasion pass
Given him by this great conference to know
Of things above this world, and of their being
Who dwell in heaven, whose excellence he saw
Transcend his own so far; whose radiant forms,
Divine effulgence, whose high power, so far
Exceeded human. Milton, P. L.

2. Dignity; high rank in existence.

Is it not wonderful, that base desires should so extinguish in men the sense of their own excellency, as to make them willing that their souls should be like to the souls of beasts, mortal and corruptible with their bodies? Hooker.

I know not why a fiend may not deceive a creature of more excellency than himself, but yet a creature. Dryden, Juv. Dedic.

3. The state of excelling in any thing.

I have, amongst men of parts and business, seldom heard any one commended for having an excellency in musick. Locke.

4. That in which one excels.

The criticisms have been made rather to discover beauties and excellencies than their faults and imperfections. Addison.

5. Purity; goodness.

She loves him with that excellence,
That angels love good men with.
Shakspeare, Hen. VIII.

6. A title of honour. It is now usually applied to generals of an army, ambassadours, and governours.

They humbly sue unto your excellence,
To have a goodly peace concluded of.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

E'XCELLENT.† adj. [excellent, old Fr. excellens, Lat.]

1. Of great virtue; of great worth; of great dignity.

Arts and sciences are excellent, in order to certain ends. Taylor.

2. Eminent in any good quality.

He is excellent in power and in judgement.
Job, xxxvii. 23.

E'XCELLENTLY. adv. [from excellent.]

1. Well; in a high degree.

He determines that man was erect, because he was made with hands, as he excellently declareth. Brown, Vulg. Err.

That was excellently observed, says I, when I read a passage in an author, where his opinion agrees with mine. Swift.

2. To an eminent degree.

Comedy is both excellently instructive and extremely pleasant; satire lashes vice into reformation; and humour represents folly so as to render it ridiculous. Dryden.

EXCE'NTRICK.* See ECCENTRICK.

To EXCE'PT.† v. a. [old Fr. excepter, from excipio, Latin.]

1. To leave out, and specify as left out of a general precept, or position.

But when he saith, All things are put under him, it is manifest, that he is excepted which did put all things under him. 1 Cor. xv. 27.

Adam, behold
The effects, which thy original crime hath wrought
In some to spring from thee, who never touch'd
The excepted tree. Milton, P. L.

To EXCE'PT. v. n. To object; to make objections.

A succession which our author could not except against. Locke.

EXCE'PT. preposit. [from the verb. This word, long taken as a preposition or conjunction, is originally the participle passive of the verb; which, like most others, had for its participle two terminations, except or excepted. All except one, is all, one excepted. Except may likewise be, according to the Teutonick idiom, the imperative mood: all, except one; that is, all but one, which you must except.]

1. Exclusively of; without inclusion of.

Richard except, those whom we fight against,
Had rather have us win than him they follow.
Shakspeare.

God and his Son except,
Nought valued he nor fear'd. Milton, P. L.

2. Unless; if it be not so that.

It is necessary to know our duty, because 'tis necessary for us to do it; and it is impossible to do it except we know it. Tillotson.

EXCE'PTING. preposit. [from except. See EXCEPT.] Without inclusion of; with exception of. An improper word.

May I not live without controul and awe,
Excepting still the letter of the law? Dryden, Pers.

People come into the world in Turkey the same way they do here, and yet, excepting the royal family, they get but little by it. Collier on Duelling.

EXCE'PTION.† n. s. [from except; exceptio, Latin; exception, old French.]

1. Exclusion from the things comprehended in a precept, or position; exclusion of any person from a general law.

When God renewed this charter of man's sovereignty over the creatures to Noah and his family, we find no exception at all; but that Cham stood as fully invested with this right as any of his brethren. South.

Let the money be raised on land, with an exception to some of the more barren parts, that might be tax free. Addison.

2. It should have from before the rule or law to which the exception refers; but it is sometimes inaccurately used with to.

Pleads, in exception to all gen'ral rules,
Your taste of follies, with our scorn of fools. Pope.

3. Thing excepted or specified in exception.

Every act of parliament was not previous to what it enacted; unless those two, by which the earl of Strafford and sir John Fenwick lost their heads may pass for exceptions. Swift.

Who first taught souls enslav'd, and realms undone,
Th' enormous faith of many made for one;
That proud exception to all nature's laws,
T' invert the world and counterwork its cause.
Pope.

4. Objection; cavil: with against or to.

Your assertion hath drawn us to make search whether these be just exceptions against the customs of our church, when ye plead that they are the same which the church of Rome hath, or that they are not the same which some other reformed churches have devised. Hooker, Preface.

He may have exceptions peremptory against the jurors, of which he then shall shew cause. Spenser.

Revelations will soon be discerned to be extremely conducible to reforming men's lives, such as will answer all objections and exceptions of flesh and blood against it. Hammond.

I will answer what exceptions they can have against our account, and confute all the reasons and explications they can give of their own. Bentley.

5. Peevish dislike; offence taken: sometimes with to.

I fear'd to shew my father Julia's letter,
Lest he should take exceptions to my love. Shaksp.

6. Sometimes with at.

He first took exception at this badge,
Pronouncing, that the paleness of this flow'r
Bewray'd the faintness of my master's heart.
Shakspeare.

7. Sometimes with against.

Roderigo, thou hast taken against me an exception; but I protest I have dealt most directly in thy affair. Shakspeare.

8. In this sense it is commonly used with the verb take.

He gave sir James Tirrel great thanks; but took exception to the place of their burial, being too base for them that were king's children. Bacon, Hen. VII.

9. [In law.] Exception is a stop or stay to an action, being used both in the civil and common law, and in both divided into dilatory and peremptory. Cowel.

EXCE'PTIONABLE. adj. [from exception.] Liable to objection.

The only piece of pleasantry in Milton is where the evil spirits rally the angels upon the success of their artillery: this passage I look upon to be the most exceptionable in the whole poem. Addison.

EXCE'PTIONER.* n. s. [from exception.] One who makes objections.

Thus much, readers, in favour of the softer spirited christian; for other exceptioners there was no thought taken. Milton, Animad. Rem. Def.

EXCE'PTIOUS. adj. [from except.] Peevish; froward; full of objections; quarrelsome.

They are so supercilious, sharp, troublesome, fierce, and exceptious, that they are not only short of the true character of friendship, but become the very sores of society. South.

EXCE'PTIOUSNESS.* n. s. [from exceptious.] Peevishness.

A froward, malicious exceptiousness.
Barrow, vol. i. S. 1

EXCE'PTIVE.† adj. [from except.] Including an exception.

It is to be inferred either by a conjunction causal, illative, exceptive, &c.
Instruct. for Oratory, (Oxf. 1682,) p. 108.

Exceptive propositions will make complex syllogisms, as none but physicians came to the consultation; the nurse is no physician, therefore the nurse came not to the consultation. Watts, Logick.

EXCE'PTLESS. adj. [from except.] Omitting or neglecting all exception; general; universal. This is not in use.

Forgive my gen'ral and exceptless rashness,
Perpetual sober gods! I do proclaim
One honest man. Shakspeare, Timon.

EXCE'PTOR. n. s. [from except.] Objector; one that makes exceptions.

The exceptor makes a reflection upon the impropriety of those expressions.
Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

To EXCE'RN. v. a. [excerno, Latin.] To strain out; to separate or emit by strainers; to send out by excretion.

That which is dead, or corrupted, or excerned, hath antipathy with the same thing when it is alive and sound, and with those parts which do excern. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Exercise first sendeth nourishment into the parts; and secondly, helpeth to excern by sweat, and so maketh the parts assimilate. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

An unguent or pap prepared, with an open vessel to excern it into. Ray on the Creation.

To EXCE'RP.* v. a. [Lat. excerpo.] To pick out. Cockeram.

In your reading excerp, and note, in your books such things as you like. Hales, Rem. p. 288.

To EXCE'RPT.* v. a. [Lat. excerptus.] To select. Not so correct as excerp.

Possibly he meaneth his own dear words I have excerpted. Barnard, Life of Heylin, (1683,) p. 12.

EXCE'RPTION. n. s. [excerptio, Latin.]

1. The act of gleaning; selecting.

2. The thing gleaned or selected.

Times have consumed his works, saving some few excerptions. Ralegh.

EXCE'RPTOR.* n. s. [Lat. excerptor.] A picker or culler.

I have not been surreptitious of whole pages together out of the doctor's printed volumes, and appropriated them to myself without any mark, or asterism, as he has done. I am no such excerptor. Barnard, Life of Heylin, p. 12.

E'XCERPTS.* n. s. pl. [Lat. excerpta.] Passages selected from authors; extracts.

EXCE'SS.† n. s. [old Fr. excez, from excessus, Latin.]

1. More than enough; faulty superfluity.

Amongst the heaps of these excesses and superfluities, there is espied the want of a principal part of duty. Hooker.

Goodness answers to the theological virtue charity, and admits no excess but errour: the desire of power in excess caused the angels to fall; the desire of knowledge in excess caused man to fall; but in charity there is no excess, neither can angel or man come in danger by it. Bacon, Essays.

Members are crooked or distorted, or disproportionate to the rest, either in excess or defect. Ray on the Creation.

2. Exuberance; state of exceeding; comparative exuberance.

Let the superfluous and lust-dieted man,
That braves your ordinance, feel your power quickly;
So distribution shall undo excess,
And each man have enough. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

The several rays in that white light retain their colorifick qualities, by which those of any sort, whenever they become more copious than the rest, do by their excess and predominance cause their proper colour to appear. Newton, Opticks.

3. Intemperance; unreasonable indulgence in meat and drink.

It was excess of wine that set him on,
And on his more advice we pardon him. Shaksp.

There will be need of temperance in diet; for the body, once heavy with excess and surfeits, hangs plummets on the nobler parts. Duppa, Rules for Devotion.

4. Violence of passion.

5. Transgression of due limits.

[He] the full wrath beside
Of vengeful justice bore for our excess. Milton, Ode on the Circumcision.

A popular sway, by forcing kings to give
More than was fit for subjects to receive,
Ran to the same extremes; and one excess
Made both, by striving to be greater, less. Denham.

Hospitality sometimes degenerates into profuseness: even parsimony itself, which sits but ill upon a publick figure, is yet the more pardonable excess of the two. Atterbury.

EXCE'SSIVE. adj. [excessif, French; from excess.]

1. Beyond the common proportion of quantity or bulk.

If panicum be laid below and about the bottom of a root, it will cause the root to grow to an excessive bigness. Bacon.

2. Vehement beyond measure in kindness or dislike.

Be not excessive toward any. Ecclus. xxxiii. 29.

The people's property it is, by excessive favour, to bring great men to misery, and then to be excessive in pity. Hayward.

EXCE'SSIVELY.† adv. [from excessive.]

1. Exceedingly; eminently; in a great degree.

A man must be excessively stupid, as well as uncharitable, who believes there is no virtue but on his own side. Addison.

2. In an intemperate way.

Which having swallow'd up excessively,
He soone in vomit up againe doth lay. Spenser, F. Q. ii. xii. 3.

EXCE'SSIVENESS.* n. s. [from excessive.] Exceedingness. Sherwood.

To EXCHA'NGE. v. a. [exchanger, Fr.; excambiare, low Latin.]

1. To give or quit one thing for the sake of gaining another.

They shall not sell of it, neither exchange nor alienate the first fruits. Ezek. xlviii. 14.

Exchange his sheep for shells, or wool for a sparkling pebble, or a diamond. Locke.

Take delight in the good things of this world, so as to remember that we are to part with them, and to exchange them for more excellent and durable enjoyments. Atterbury.

2. To give and take reciprocally.

Exchange forgiveness with me, noble Hamlet;
Mine and my father's blood be not upon thee,
Nor thine on me. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

Words having naturally no signification, the idea must be learned by those who would exchange thoughts, and hold intelligible discourse with others. Locke.

Here then exchange we mutually forgiveness,
So may the guilt of all my broken vows,
My perjuries to thee be all forgotten. Rowe, Jane Shore.

3. It has with before the person with whom the exchange is made, and for before the thing taken in exchange.

The king called in the old money, and erected exchanges where the weight of old money was exchanged for new. Camden.

Being acquainted with the laws and fashions of his own country, he has something to exchange with those abroad. Locke.

EXCHA'NGE. n. s. [from the verb.]

1. The act of giving and receiving reciprocally.

And thus they parted, with exchange of harms;
Much blood the monsters lost, and they their arms. Waller.

They lend their corn, they make exchanges; they are always ready to serve one another. Addison.

2. Traffick by permutation.

The world is maintained by intercourse; and the whole course of nature is a great exchange, in which one good turn is, and ought to be, the stated price of another. South.

3. The form or act of transferring, properly by bills or notes.

I have bills for money by exchange
From Florence, and must here deliver them. Shakspeare.

4. The balance of the money of different nations.

He was skilled in the exchange beyond seas, and in all the circumstances and practices thereof. Hayward on Edw. VI.

5. The thing given in return for something received.

If none appear to prove upon thy person
Thy heinous, manifest, and many treasons,
There is my pledge: I'll prove it on thy heart.
— There's my exchange; what in the world he is
That names me traitor, villain like he lies. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Spend all I have, only give me so much time in exchange of it. Shakspeare, M. Wives of Windsor.

It made not the silver coined go for more than its value in all things to be bought; but just so much as the denomination was raised, just so much less of commodity had the buyer in exchange for it. Locke.

If blood you seek, I will my own resign:
O spare her life, and in exchange take mine. Dryden, Ind. Emp.

6. The thing received in return for something given.

The respect and love which was paid you by all, who had the happiness to know you, was a wise exchange for the honours of the court. Dryden.

7. The place where the merchants meet to negociate their affairs; place of sale.

He that uses the same words sometimes in one, and sometimes in another signification, ought to pass, in the schools, for as fair a man, as he does in the market and exchange, who sells several things under the same name. Locke.

No thing, no place is strange,
While his fair bosom is the world's exchange. Denham.

EXCHA'NGEABLE.* adj. [from exchange.] That may be exchanged.

EXCHA'NGER.† n. s. [from exchange.] One who practises exchange.

Thou oughtest therefore to have put my money to the exchangers. St. Matt. xxv. 27.

Whilst bullion may be had for a small price more than the weight of our current cash, these exchangers generally chuse rather to buy bullion than run the risk of melting down our coin, which is criminal by the law. Locke.

EXCHE'AT. n. s. See ESCHEAT.

[He] by my ruins thinks to make them great:
To make one great by other's loss, is bad excheat. Spenser, F. Q.

EXCHE'ATOR. n. s. See ESCHEATOR.

These earls and dukes appointed their special officers; as sheriff, admiral, receiver, havener, customer, butler, searcher, comptroller, gager, excheator, feodary, auditor, and clerk of the market. Carew, Surv. of Cornwall.

EXCHE'QUER.† n. s. [eschequeir, Norman French; schaccharium, low Latin, from schatz, a treasure, German, which is the Gothick skatts.] The court to which are brought all the revenues belonging to the crown. It consists of two parts; whereof one dealeth specially in the hearing and deciding of all causes appertaining to the king's coffers: the other is called the receipt of the exchequer, which is properly employed in the receiving and paying of money. It is also a court of record, wherein all causes touching the revenues of the crown are handled. Harris.

I will be cheater to them both, and they shall be exchequers to me. Shakspeare.

Your treasures
Are quite exhausted, the exchequer's empty. Denham, Sophy.

Clipped money will pass whilst the king's bankers and at last the exchequer takes it. Locke.

To EXCHE'QUER.* v. a. [from the noun.] To institute a process against a person in the court of exchequer. Modern.

Among other strange verbs, the following has arisen in vulgar language, viz. to exchequer a man; which is, to institute a process against him, in the court of exchequer, for non-payment of a debt due to the king, and in some other cases. Pegge, Anecd. of the Eng. Language.

EXCI'SABLE.* adj. [from excise.] Liable to the duty of excise.

The concealment of excisable goods is subject to a forfeiture of those goods, and treble value. Act of Parl. 11 Geo. ch. 30.

EXCI'SE.† n. s. [accijs, Dutch; excisum, Latin; and formerly our word was written accize, or accise. "He did not first send to the accise-men to accise it." Rem. for Trav. in Holland, Lond. 1695, p. 68.] A tax levied upon various commodities by several acts of parliament; and collected by officers appointed for that purpose. It was introduced towards the close of Charles the first's reign. The judicious biographer of Dr. Johnson admits, that prejudice dictated what the great lexicographer has given as the definition of excise; and adds, that the late lord Mansfield thought it actionable. See Boswell's Life of Johnson. Instead of rendering what may be distasteful more bitter by aggravated description, I have presumed to give a plain account of the impost, rather than to place opinion "to the account of capricious and humorous indulgence."

The people should pay a ratable tax for their sheep, and an excise for every thing which they should eat. Hayward.

Ambitious now to take excise
Of a more fragrant paradise. Cleaveland.

Excise,
With hundred rows of teeth, the shark exceeds,
And on all trades like Cassawar she feeds. Marvel.

Hire large houses, and oppress the poor,
By farm'd excise. Dryden, Juv.

To EXCI'SE.† v. a. [from the noun.] To levy excise upon a person or thing.

Home she packs,
Excis'd in all the dialects of her knacks.
Cleaveland, Poems, (1659,) p. 135.

In South-sea days, not happier when surmis'd
The lord of thousands, than if now excis'd.
Pope, Horace.

EXCI'SEMAN. n. s. [excise and man.] An officer who inspects commodities, and rates their excise.

EXCI'SION.† n. s. [excisio, Latin.] Extirpation; destruction; ruin; the act of cutting off; the state of being cut off.

O poor and miserable city, what sundry torments, excisions, subversions, depopulations, and other evil adventures hath happened unto thee, since thou wert bereft of that noble court of Sapience! Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 197.

Pride is one of the fatalest instruments of excision. Decay of Piety.

Such conquerours are the instruments of vengeance on those nations that have filled up the measure of iniquities, and are grown ripe for excision. Atterbury.

EXCITABI'LITY.* n. s. [from excitable.] Capability of being excited; proneness to be excited.

EXCI'TABLE.* adj. [from excite.] Easy to be excited.

His affections were most quick and excitable by their due objects. Barrow, Works, i. 475.

E'XCITANT.* adj. [Lat. excitans.] Animating; stirring up.

The donation of heavenly graces, prevenient, subsequent, excitant, adjuvant.
Bp. Nicholson, Expos. of the Catechism, (1662,) p. 60.

To E'XCITATE.* v. a. [excito, Lat.] To stir up.

The earth, being excitated to wrath, in revenge of her children brought forth fame, the youngest sister of the giants.
Bacon, Sister of the Giants, or Fame.

EXCITA'TION.† n. s. [excitation, old Fr.; from excito, Lat. to excite.]

1. The act of exciting, or putting into motion.

All putrefactions come from the ambient body, either by ingress of the ambient body into the body putrefied, or by excitation and solicitation of the body putrefied, by the body ambient.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. The act of rousing or awakening.

Here are words of fervent excitation to the frozen hearts of others. Bp. Hall, Works, ii. 293.

The original of sensible and spiritual ideas may be owing to sensation and reflection, the recollection and fresh excitation of them to other occasions.
Watts, Logick.

EXCI'TATIVE.* adj. [old Fr. excitatif.] Having power to excite.

Admonitory of duty, and excitative of devotion.
Barrow, Expos. on the Creed.

To EXCI'TE. v. a. [excito, Latin.]

1. To rouse; to animate; to stir up; to encourage.

The Lacedemonians were more excited to desire of honour with the excellent verses of the poet Tirtæus, than with all the exhortations of their captains. Spenser on Ireland.

That kind of poesy which excites to virtue the greatest men, is of greatest use to human kind.
Dryden.

2. To put into motion; to awaken; to raise.

EXCI'TEMENT. n. s. [from excite.] The motive by which one is stirred up, animated, or put in action.

How stand I then,
That have a father kill'd, a mother stain'd,
Excitements of my reason and my blood,
And let all sleep? Shakspeare, Tempest.

EXCI'TER. n. s. [from excite.]

1. One that stirs up others, or puts them in motion.

They never punished the delinquency of the tumults and their excitors. King Charles.

Hope is the grand exciter of industry.
Decay of Piety.

EXCI'TING.* n. s. [from excite.] Excitation.

Wanting many excitings of grace.
Herbert, Country Pars. ch. 22.

To EXCLA'IM. v. n. [exclamo, Latin.]

1. To cry out with vehemence; to make an outcry; to cry out querulously and outrageously.

This ring,
Which, when you part from, lose, or give away,
Let it presage the ruin of your love,
And be my 'vantage to exclaim on you.
Shakspeare, Merch. of Venice.

Those who exclaim against foreign tyranny, do, to this intestine usurper, make an entire dedition of themselves. Decay of Piety.

The most insupportable of tyrants exclaim against the exercise of arbitrary power.
L'Estrange.

2. To declare with loud vociferation.

Is Cade the son of Henry the Fifth,
That thus you do exclaim you'll go with him?
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

EXCLA'IM. n. s. [from the verb.] Clamour; outcry. Now disused.

Alas, the part I had in Glo'ster's blood
Doth more solicit me than your exclaims,
To stir against the butchers of his life.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

EXCLA'IMER. n. s. [from exclaim.] One that makes vehement outcries; one that speaks with great heat and passion.

I must tell this exclaimer, that his manner of proceeding is very strange and unaccountable.
Atterbury.

EXCLAMA'TION. n. s. [exclamatio, Latin.]

1. Vehement outcry; clamour; outrageous vociferation.

The ears of the people are continually beaten with exclamations against abuses in the church.
Hooker, Dedication.

Either be patient, or intreat me fair,
Or with the clamorous report of war,
Thus will I drown your exclamations.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

2. An emphatical utterance; a pathetical sentence.

O Musidorus! Musidorus! but what serve exclamations, where there are no ears to receive the sound? Sidney.

3. A note by which a pathetical sentence is marked thus !

EXCLA'MATORY.† adj. [from exclaim.]

1. Practising exclamation.

2. Containing exclamation.

Which point I shall conclude with those exclamatory words of St. Paul, so full of wonder and astonishment in Rom. xi. 33. "How unsearchable are his judgements, and his ways past finding out!" South, Serm. iv. 346.

To EXCLU'DE. v. a. [excludo, Latin.]

1. To shut out; to hinder from entrance or admission.

Fenc'd with hedges and deep ditches round,
Exclude th' incroaching cattle from thy ground.
Dryden, Virg.

Sure I am, unless I win in arms,
To stand excluded from Emilia's charms.
Dryden, Knight's Tale.

Bodies do each singly possess its proper portion, according to the extent of its solid parts, and thereby exclude all other bodies from that space.
Locke.

Though these three sorts of substances do not exclude one another out of the same place, yet we cannot conceive but that they must necessarily each of them exclude any of the same kind out of the same place. Locke.

If the church be so unhappily contrived as to exclude from its communion such persons likeliest to have great abilities, it should be altered. Swift.

2. To debar; to hinder from participation; to prohibit.

Justice, that sits and frowns where publick laws
Exclude soft mercy from a private cause,
In your tribunal most herself does please;
There only smiles, because she lives at ease.
Dryden.

This is Dutch partnership, to share in all our beneficial bargains, and exclude us wholly from theirs. Swift.

3. To except in any position.

4. Not to comprehend in any grant or privilege.

They separate from all apparent hope of life and salvation, thousands whom the goodness of Almighty God doth not exclude. Hooker.

5. To dismiss from the womb or egg.

Others ground this disruption upon their continued or protracted time of delivery, wherewith excluding but one a day, the latter brood impatient, by a forcible proruption, antedates their period of exclusion. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXCLU'SION.† n. s. [from exclude.]

1. The act of shutting out or denying admission.

In bodies that need detention of spirits, the exclusion of the air doth good; but in bodies that need emission of spirits, it doth hurt.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

2. Rejection; not reception in any manner.

If he is for an entire exclusion of fear, which is supposed to have some influence in every law, he opposes himself to every government.
Addison, Freeholder.

3. The act of debarring from any privilege or participation.

He pretended that he preferred limitations to an exclusion; because the one kept up the monarchy still, only passing over one person; whereas the other brought us really into a commonwealth, as soon as we had a popish king over us.

Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1679.

4. Exception.
There was a question asked at the table, whether the French king would agree to have the disposing of the marriage of Bretagne, with an exception and exclusion that he should not marry her himself.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

5. The dismission of the young from the egg or womb.
How were it possible the womb should contain the child, nay, sometimes twins, till they come to their due perfection and maturity for exclusion?
Ray on the Creation.

6. Ejection; emission; thing emitted.
The salt and lixiviated serosity, with some portion of choler, is divided between the guts and bladder, yet it remains undivided in birds, and hath but a single descent by the guts with the exclusions of the belly. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXCLU'SIONIST.* n. s. [from exclusion.] One who would debar another from any privilege. See the third sense of EXCLUSION.
The exclusionists had a fair prospect of success.
Fox, Hist. of the Reign of King James II.

EXCLU'SIVE. adj. [from exclude.]

1. Having the power of excluding or denying admission.
They obstacle find none
Of membrane, joint, or limb, exclusive bars:
Easier than air with air, if spirits embrace,
Total they mix. Milton, P. L.

2. Debarring from participation.
In Scripture there is no such thing as an heir that was, by right of nature, to inherit all, exclusive of his brethren. Locke.

3. Not taking into an account or number: opposed to inclusive.
I know not whether he reckons the dross exclusive or inclusive with his three hundred and sixty tons of copper. Swift.

4. Excepting.

EXCLU'SIVELY. adv. [from exclusive.]

1. Without admission of another to participation: sometimes with to, properly with of.
It is not easy to discern among the many differing substances obtained from the same portion of matter, which ought to be esteemed, exclusively to all the rest, its inexistent elementary ingredients; much less what primogenial and simple bodies, convened together, compose it. Boyle.
Ulysses addresses himself to the queen chiefly or primarily, but not exclusively of the king.
Broome on the Odyssey.

2. Without comprehension in an account or number; not inclusively.
The first part lasts from the date of the citation to the joining of issue, exclusively: the second continues to a conclusion in the cause, inclusively.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

To EXCO'CT. v. a. [excoctus, Latin.] To boil up; to make by boiling.
Salt and sugar, excocted by heat, are dissolved by cold and moisture. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To EXCO'GITATE.† v. a. [excogito, Lat. Heylin calls this word, in 1656, strange and unusual. Yet it had then been in use more than a century; though Dr. Johnson produces no example earlier than that of More, who was fond of the word; for I have repeatedly found it in his writings. But I am to shew the word in the service of elder writers.] To invent; to strike out by thinking.
He [Jul. Cæsar] did — excogitate most excellent policies and devices to vanquish or subdue his enemies. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 73. b.
He must first think, and excogitate his matter; then choose his words, and examine the weight of either. B. Jonson, Discoveries.
If the wit of man had been to contrive this organ, what could he have possibly excogitated more accurate? More.
The tradition of the origination of mankind seems to be universal; but the particular methods of that origination, excogitated by the heathen, were particular. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.
We shall find them to be little else than excogitated and invented models, not much arising from the true image of the things themselves.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

To EXCO'GITATE.* v. n. To think.
I take it to be my duty — to meditate, and to excogitate, of myself, wherein I may best, by my travels, derive your virtues to the good of your people. Bacon to K. James I. on the Laws of Eng.

EXCOGITA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. excogitation.] Invention.
Wherefore to consideration perteineth excogitation, and advisement; to providence, provision, and execution. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 72. b.
When we are alone, we are not always busy; the labour of excogitation is too violent to last long; the ardour of enquiry will sometimes give way to idleness or satiety. Johnson, Rasselas, ch. 43.

To EXCO'MMUNE.* v. a. [low Lat. excommunis, the same as excommunicatus.] To exclude; to discommon.
Poets, indeed, were excommuned Plato's commonwealth; but yet Augustus, in the zenith of his empire, cherished them, and sate with them.
Gayton, Notes on Don Quix. p. 21.

EXCOMMU'NICABLE. adj. Liable or deserving to be excommunicated.
Perhaps excommunicable; yea, and cast out for notorious improbity. Hooker.

To EXCOMMU'NICATE. v. a. [excommunico, low Latin.] To eject from the communion of the visible church by an ecclesiastical censure; to interdict from the participation of holy mysteries.
What if they shall excommunicate me, hath the doctrine of meekness any salve for me then?
Hammond, Pract. Catechism.
The office is performed by the parish priest at interment, but not unto persons excommunicated.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXCOMMU'NICATE.* adj. [Lat. excommunicatus.] Excluded from the fellowship of the church.
Thou shalt stand curst and excommunicate;
And blessed shall he be, that doth revolt
From his allegiance to an heretick.
Shakspeare, K. John.
And when I
Am the recusant, in that resolute state
What hurts it me to be excommunicate.
Donne, Poems, p. 77.

EXCOMMU'NICATE.* n. s.

1. One who is excluded from the fellowship of the church.
They [the druids] sate as judges, and determined all causes emergent, civil and criminal; subjecting the disobedient, and such as made default, to interdicts, and censures; prohibiting them from sacred assemblies; taking away their capacities in honourable offices; and so disabling them, that (as our now outlaws, excommunicates, and attainted persons,) they might not commence suit against any man.
Selden on Drayton's Polyolb. S. 9.

2. One cut off from any advantage.
When thou, poor excommunicate
From all the joyes of love, shalt see
The full reward, &c. Carew's Poems, p. 19.

EXCOMMUNICA'TION. n. s. [from excommunicate.] An ecclesiastical interdict; exclusion from the fellowship of the church.
As for excommunication, it neither shutteth out from the mystical, nor clean from the visible church; but only from fellowship with the visible in holy duties. Hooker.

To EXCO'RIATE.† v. a. [old Fr. excorier, Lat. excorio; considered by Heylin, in 1656, as an uncouth and unusual word. It is, in the enlarged vocabulary of Bullokar of that year, with a definition similar to the present.] To flay; to strip off the skin.
An hypersarcosis arises upon the excoriated eyelid, and turneth it outward. Wiseman, Surg.
A looseness proves often a fatal symptom in fevers; for it weakens, excoriates, and inflames the bowels. Arbuthnot.

EXCORIA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. excoriation.]

1. Loss of skin; privation of skin; the act of flaying.
Some four years after the contention betwixt Apollo and Pan, and a little before the excoriation of Marsyas. Brewer, Com. of Lingua, iii. 5.
Our poets, the John Ketches of the nation,
Have seem'd to lash ye, ev'n to excoriation.
Dryden, Prol. to Albion and Albanius.
The pituite secerned in the nose, mouth, and intestines, is not an excrementitious, but a laudable humour, necessary for defending those parts from excoriations. Arbuthnot.

2. Plunder; spoil; the act of stripping of possessions.
It hath marvellously enhanced the revenues of the crown, though with a pitiful excoriation of the poorer sort. Howel.

EXCORTICA'TION. n. s. [from cortex and ex, Latin.] Pulling the bark off any thing. Quincy.

E'XCREABLE.* adj. [Lat. excreabilis. This word should be written with an s, being derived from ex and screo.] That may be spit out. Bullokar.

E'XCREMENT.† n. s. [excrement, Fr. excrementum, Latin.]

1. That which is thrown out as useless, noxious, or corrupted from the natural passages of the body.
We see that those excrements, that are of the first digestion, smell the worst; as the excrements from the belly. Bacon.
It fares with politick bodies as with the physical; each would convert all into their own proper substance, and cast forth as excrement what will not so be changed. Ralegh, Essays.
Their sordid avarice rakes
In excrements, and hires the very jakes.
Dryden, Juv.
Farce, in itself, is of a nasty scent;
But the gain smells not of the excrement. Dryd.
You may find, by dissection, not only their stomachs full of meat, but their intestines full of excrement. Bentley.
The excrements of horses are nothing but hay, and, as such, combustible. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. Hair.
Why is time such a niggard of his hair, being, as it is, so plentiful an excrement!
Shakspeare, Com. of Err.

The very hairs of your head are all numbered: God keeps an account even of that stringy excrement.

Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 267.

EXCREME'NTAL.† adj. [from excrement.] That is voided as excrement.

God hath given virtues to springs, fountains, earth, plants, and the excremental parts of the basest living creatures. Ralegh.

Full of filthy flegm, stinking, putrid, excremental stuff. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 566.

That virtue therefore which is but youngling in the contemplation of evil, and knows not the utmost that vice promises to her followers, and rejects it, is but a blank virtue, not a pure; her whiteness is but an excremental whiteness. Milton, Areopagitica.

EXCREMENTI'TIOUS. adj. [from excrement.] Containing excrements; consisting of matter excreted from the body; offensive or useless to the body.

The excrementitious moisture passeth in birds through a fairer and more delicate strainer than in beasts. Bacon.

Toil of the mind destroys health, by attracting the spirits from their task of concoction to the brain; whither they carry along with them clouds of vapours and excrementitious humours. Harvey on Consumptions.

The lungs are the grand emunctory of the body; and the main end of respiration is continually to discharge and expel an excrementitious fluid out of the mass of blood. Woodward.

An animal fluid no ways excrementitious, mild, elaborated, and nutritious. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To E'XCREMENTIZE.* v. n. [from excrement.] To void excrement.

They [Sir C. Sedley, Ld. Buckhurst, &c.] being all inflamed with strong liquors, — excrementized in the street. Life of A. Wood, (an. 1663,) p. 187.

EXCRE'SCENCY. }

All beyond this is monstrous, 'tis out of nature, 'tis an excrescence, and not a living part of poetry. Dryden.

We have little more than the excrescencies of the Spanish monarchy. Addison on the War.

They are the excrescences of our souls; which, like our hair and beards, look horrid or becoming, as we cut or let them grow. Tatler.

Tumours and excrescences of plants, out of which generally issues a fly or a worm, are at first made by such insects which wound the tender buds. Bentley.

EXCRE'SCENT. adj. [excrescens, Lat.] That grows out of another with preternatural superfluity.

Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
Of all, our vices have created arts:
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serv'd the past, and must the times to come. Pope.

To EXCRE'TE.* v. a. [excretus, Latin.] To send out by excretion.

The nature and quality of the excreted substance. Paley, Nat. Theol. ch. 13. § 2.

EXCRE'TION.† n. s. [excretion, old Fr. excretio, Latin.]

1. Separation of animal substance; ejecting somewhat quite out of the body, as of no further use, which is called excrement. Quincy.

Upon the use of aloe both in hawks and cormorants, I have sometimes observed bloody excretions. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 113.

The symptoms of the excretion of the bile vitiated, are a yellowish skin, white hard fæces, loss of appetite, and lixivial urine. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. The thing excerned.

The moss from apple trees is little better than an excretion. Bacon.

EXCRE'TIVE. adj. [excretus, Lat.] Having the power of separating and ejecting excrements.

A diminution of the body happens by the excretive faculty, excerning and evacuating more than necessary. Harvey on Consumptions.

EXCRE'TORY. adj. [from excretion.] Having the quality of separating and ejecting superfluous parts.

EXCRE'TORY. n. s. The instrument of excretion.

Excretories of the body are nothing but slender slips of the arteries, deriving an appropriated juice from the blood. Cheyne.

EXCRU'CIABLE. adj. [from excruciate.] Liable to torment. Dict.

To EXCRU'CIATE. v. a. [excrucio, Lat.] To torture; to torment.

And here my heart long time excruciate,
Amongst the leaves I rested all that night. Chapman, Odyssey.

Leave them, as long as they keep their hardness and impenitent hearts, to those gnawing and excruciating fears, those whips of the divine Nemesis, that frequently scourge even atheists themselves. Bentley.

EXCRUCIA'TION.* n. s. [from excruciate.] Torment; vexation.

He that by the oracle was approved for the wisest, confessed, though he knew before he married her, that his Zantippe was a scold insufferable; yet he wittingly did marry her to exercise his patience, that by the practice of enduring her shrewish heats, he might be able to brook all companies; the brawls, the scorns, the sophisms, and the petulancies of rude and unskilful men; the frettings, the thwartings, and the excruciations of life. Feltham, Res. ii. 57.

EXCUBA'TION. n. s. [excubatio, Lat.] The act of watching all night. Dict.

EXCU'LPABLE.* adj. [Lat. ex and culpo, to blame.] Capable of being cleared from the imputation of blame or fault.

A good child will not seek to exculpate herself at the expence of the most revered characters. Richardson, Clarissa.

After these several petitions, manifestly tending to fix all the blame of the maladministration in the latter part of Edward the Third's reign upon the same set of men who had been called to account for it, and punished in the parliament of 1376, and who had gotten themselves exculpated in the succeeding parliament. Lowth, Life of Wykeham, p. 144.

EXCULPA'TION.* n. s. [from exculpate.] The act of clearing from alleged blame.

Abeillard entered on a tedious exculpation of himself. Berington, Hist. of Ab. p. 199.

EXCU'LPATORY.* adj. [from exculpate.] Clearing from imputed fault.

By this fond and eager acceptance of an exculpatory comment, Pope testified that whatever might be the seeming or real import of the principles which he had received from Bolinbroke, he had not intentionally attacked religion. Johnson, Life of Pope.

To EXCU'R. v. n. To pass beyond limits. A word not used.

His disease was an asthma, oft excurring to an orthopnœia; the cause a translation of tartarous humours from his joints to his lungs. Harvey on Consumptions.

EXCU'RSION. n. s. [excursion, French; excurro, Latin.]

1. The act of deviating from the stated or settled path; a ramble.

The muse whose early voice you taught to sing,
Prescrib'd her heights and prun'd her tender wing;
Her guide now lost, no more attempts to rise,
But in low numbers short excursions tries. Pope.

2. An expedition into some distant part.

The mind extends its thoughts often even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible. Locke.

3. Progression beyond fixed limits.

The causes of those great excursions of the seasons into the extremes of cold and heat, are very obscure. Arbuthnot on Air.

4. Digression; ramble from a subject.

Expect not that I should beg pardon for this excursion, till I think it a digression, to insist on the blessedness of Christ in heaven. Boyle, Seraphick Love.

I am too weary to allow myself any excursion from the main design. Atterbury.

EXCU'RSIVE.† adj. [from excurro, Latin.] Rambling; wandering; deviating.

But why so far excursive, when at hand
Fair handed spring unbosoms every grace? Thomson, Spring.

Pensive I stray, or with the rising dawn
On fancy's eagle-wing excursive soar. Thomson, Summer.

The first is miscellaneous and excursive, but the subjects often lead to an unbecoming licentiousness of language and images. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, iv. 31.

EXCU'RSIVELY.* adv. [from excursive.] In a wandering, unsettled manner.

The flesh of animals, which feed excursively, is allowed to have a higher flavour than that of those who are cooped up. Boswell, Life of Johnson, i. 35.

3. To remit; not to exact: as, to excuse a forfeiture.
4. To weaken or mollify obligation to any thing; to obtain remission.
Nor could the real danger of leaving their dwellings to go up to the temple, excuse their journey. South.
5. To pardon by allowing an apology.
O thou, whoe'er thou art, excuse the force
These men have us'd; and O befriend our course!
Addison.
Excuse some courtly strains,
No whiter page than Addison's remains. Pope.
6. To throw off imputation by a feigned apology.
Think you that we excuse ourselves unto you?
2 Cor. xii. 19.
7. To justify; to vindicate. This sense is rare.
Accusing or else excusing one another.
Rom. ii. 15.

EXCU'SE. n. s. [from the verb. The last syllable of the verb is sounded as if written excuze, that of the noun with the natural sound.]
1. Plea offered in extenuation; apology.
I was set upon by some of your servants, whom because I have in my just defence evil entreated, I came to make my excuse to you. Sidney.
Be gone, I will not hear thy vain excuse,
But, as thou lov'st thy life, make speed from hence. Shakspeare.
As good success admits no examination, so the contrary allows of no excuse, how reasonable or just soever. Ralegh.
We find out some excuse or other for deferring good resolutions, till our intended retreat is cut off by death. Addison.
2. The act of excusing or apologising.
Heaven put it in thy mind to take it hence,
That thou might'st win the more thy father's love,
Pleading so wisely in excuse of it.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV.
3. Cause for which one is excused.
Let no vain hope your easy mind seduce;
For rich ill poets are without excuse. Roscommon.
Nothing but love this patience could produce;
And I allow your rage that kind excuse.
Dryden, Aurengzebe.

EXCU'SELESS.† adj. [from excuse.] That for which no excuse or apology can be given.
Excuseless is the idle man's "nihil agendo," sleeping out his lamp, or as vainly burning it.
Whitlock, Mann. of the English, p. 301.
You are likely to come so excuseless to your torments, so unpitied, and so scorned.

If upon an excussion there are not goods to satisfy the judgement, his body may be attached.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

E'XECRABLE.† adj. [execrable, old Fr. execrabilis, Latin.] Hateful; detestable; accursed; abominable.
For us to change that which he hath established, they hold it execrable pride and presumption.
Hooker.
Of the visible church of Jesus Christ those may be, in respect of their outward profession; who, in regard of their inward disposition, are most worthily both hateful in the sight of God himself, and in the eyes of the sounder parts of the visible church most execrable. Hooker.
Give sentence on this execrable wretch,
That hath been breeder of these dire events.
Tit. Andronicus.
When execrable Troy in ashes lay,
Through fires, and swords, and seas they forc'd their way. Dryden, Æn.

E'XECRABLY. adv. [from execrable.] Cursedly; abominably.
'Tis fustian all, 'tis execrably bad;
But if they will be fools, must you be mad?
Dryden, Pers.

To E'XECRATE.† v. a. [execror, Latin.] To curse; to imprecate ill upon; to abominate.
As if mere plebeian noise, dust, clamour, credulity, and confidence were enough to make a goddess; or sufficient either to consecrate or execrate any thing as divine, or devilish.
Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 156.
Extinction of some tyranny, by the indignation of a people, makes way for some form contrary to that which they lately execrated and detested.
Temple.

EXECRA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. execration.]
1. Curse; imprecation of evil.
Mischance and sorrow go along with you,
And threefold vengeance tend upon your steps!
— Cease, gentle queen, these execrations.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.
For this we may thank Adam! but his thanks
Shall be the execration. Milton, P.L.
The Indians, at naming the devil, did spit on the ground in token of execration. Stillingfleet.

E'XECRATORY.* n. s. [from execrate.] A formulary of execrations.
This notice of the ceremony is very agreeable to the execratory which is now used by them; wherein they profoundly curse the Christians.
L. Addison, State of the Jews, p. 179.

To EXE'CT. v. a. [execo, Latin.] To cut out; to cut away.
Were it not for the effusion of blood which would follow an exection, the liver might not only be exected, but its office supplied by the spleen and other parts. Harvey on Consumptions.

EXE'CTION.† n. s. [from exect.] The act of cutting out. See EXECT; in the example to which, exection occurs; but the words should be properly exsect and exsection.

To E'XECUTE.† v. a. [executer, old Fr.; from exequor, Latin.]
1. To perform; to practise.
Against all the gods of Egypt I will execute judgement. Exod. xii. 12.
He casts into the balance the promise of a reward to such as should execute, and of punishment to such as should neglect their commission. South.
2. To put in act; to do what is planned or determined.
Men may not devise laws, but are bound for ever to use and execute those which God hath delivered. Hooker.
The government here is so regularly disposed, that it almost executes itself. Swift.
Absalom pronounced sentence of death against his brother, and had it executed too. Locke.
3. To put to death according to form of justice; to punish capitally.
Fitzosborn was executed under him, or discarded into a foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wotton, Char. of Kings of England.
Sir William Bremingham was executed for treason. Davies.
O Tyburn, cou'dst thou reason and dispute,
Cou'dst thou but judge as well as execute,
How often wou'dst thou change the felon's doom,
And truss some stern chief justice in his room!
Dryden.
4. To put to death; to kill.
The treacherous Fastolfe wounds my peace,
Whom with my bare fists I would execute,
If I now had him. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

To E'XECUTE. v. n. To perform the proper office.
The cannon against St. Stephen's gate executed so well, that the portcullis and gate were broken, and entry opened into the city. Sir J. Hayward.

E'XECUTER.† n s. [from execute. This word is usually written executor, though Dr. Johnson has chosen to write it executer. Lat. executor. And so executorship, as in the example from Bacon.]
1. He that performs or executes any thing.
My sweet mistress
Weeps when she sees me work, and says such baseness
Had ne'er like executor. Shakspeare, Tempest.
Sophocles and Euripides, in their most beautiful pieces, are impartial executers of poetick justice.
Dennis.
2. He that is intrusted to perform the will of a testator. In this sense the accent is on the second syllable.
Let's choose executors, and talk of wills;
And yet not so; for what can we bequeath?
Shakspeare.
3. An executioner; one who puts others to death. Disused.
The sad-ey'd justice, with his surly hum,
Delivers o'er to executors pale
The lazy yawning drone. Shakspeare, Hen. V.

EXE'CUTERSHIP. n. s. [from executor.] The office of him that is appointed to perform the will of the defunct.

As for fishing for testaments and executorships, it is yet worse; by how much men submit themselves to meaner persons, than in service. Bacon, Ess. of Riches.

EXECU'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. execution.]

1. Performance; practice.

When things are come to the execution, there is no secrecy comparable to celerity. Bacon, Essays.

I wish no better
Than have him hold that purpose, and to put it
In execution. Shakspeare, Coriol.

I like thy counsel; and how well I like it,
The execution of it shall make known. Shakspeare.

The excellency of the subject contributed much to the happiness of the execution. Dryden.

2. The last act of the law in civil causes, by which possession is given of body or goods.

Sir Richard was committed to the Fleet in execution for the whole six thousand pounds. Clarendon.

3. Capital punishment; death inflicted by forms of law.

Good rest.
— As wretches have o'er night,
That wait for execution in the morn. Shakspeare.

I have seen,
When, after execution, judgement hath
Repented o'er his doom. Shakspeare.

Laws support those crimes they checkt before,
And executions now affright no more. Creech, Manilius.

4. Destruction; slaughter.

Brave Macbeth, with his brandish'd steel,
Which smok'd with bloody execution,
Carv'd out his passage. Shakspeare.

The execution had been too cruel, and far exceeding the bounds of ordinary hostility. Hayward.

5. It is used with the verb do.

When the tongue is the weapon, a man may strike where he cannot reach, and a word shall do execution both further and deeper than the mightiest blow. South.

Ships of such height and strength, that his vessels could do no execution upon them. Arbuthnot on Coins.

EXECU'TIONER. n. s. [from execution.]

1. He that puts in act, or executes; in this sense executor is now more used.

It is a comfort to the executioners of this office, when they consider that they cannot be guilty of oppression. Bacon.

The heart of every man was in the hand of God, and he could have made them executioners of his wrath upon one another. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

In this case every man hath a right to punish the offender, and be the executioner of the law of nature. Locke.

2. He that inflicts capital punishment; he that puts to death according to the sentence of the law.

He, born of the greatest blood, submitted himself to be servant to the executioner that should put to death Musidorus. Sidney.

The deluge was not sent only as an executioner to mankind, but its prime errand was to reform the earth. Woodward.

3. He that kills; he that murders.

Is not the causer of the timeless deaths
As blameful as the executioner?
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

I would not be thy executioner:
I fly thee, for I would not injure thee;
Thou tell'st me there is murder in mine eyes.
Shakspeare.

4. The instrument by which any thing is performed.

All along
The walls, abominable ornaments!
Are tools of wrath, anvils of torments hung,
Fell executioners of foul intents. Crashaw.

EXE'CUTIVE. adj. [from execute.]

1. Having the quality of executing or performing.

They are the nimblest, agile, strongest instruments, fittest to be executive of the commands of the souls. Hale.

2. Active; not deliberative; not legislative; having the power to put in act the laws.

The Roman emperours were possessed of the whole legislative as well as executive power. Addison, Freeholder.

Hobbes confounds the executive with the legislative power, though all well instituted states have ever placed them in different hands. Swift.

EXE'CUTOR.* See the second sense of EXECUTER.

EXE'CUTORSHIP.* See EXECUTERSHIP.

EXE'CUTORY.* adj. [Fr. executoire.]

1. Having authority to put the laws in force; exercising authority.

A vigilant and jealous eye over executory and judicial magistracy; an anxious care of publick money; an openness, approaching towards facility, to publick complaint; these seem to be the true characteristicks of a house of commons. Burke.

What person is a king to command executory service, who has no means whatsoever to reward it! Burke.

2. [In law.] To be executed or performed at a future period.

Contingent or executory remainders are, where the estate is limited to take effect, either to a dubious and uncertain person, or upon a dubious and uncertain event. Blackstone.

By executory devise, a fee, or other less estate, may be limited after a fee. Blackstone.

EXE'CUTRESS.* n. s. [old Fr. exequeteresse.] An executrix.

A will indeed! a crabbed woman's will,
Wherein the devil is an overseer,
And proud dame Eleanor sole executress.
Tragedy of K. John, (1611.)

EXE'CUTRIX.† n. s. [Fr. executrice.] A woman intrusted to perform the will of the testator.

He did, after the death of the earl, buy of his executrix the remnant of the term. Bacon.

EXEGE'SIS. n. s. [ἐξήγησις, Gr.] An explanation.

EXEGE'TICAL.† adj. [ἐξηγητικος, Gr.] Explanatory; expository.

Plainly, throughout the whole word of God, breath, and life, and soul, and spirit, are synonymous, and often made exegetical one of another. Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 135.

I have here and there interspersed some critical and some exegetical notes, fit for learners to know, and not unfit for some teachers to read. Walker.

EXEGE'TICALLY.* adv. [from exegetical.] By way of explanation; in an expository manner.

So insufferable a thing is the state of thraldom, very significantly implied in the "land of Egypt," and exegetically expressed by the "house of bondage." Dean Pierce, Serm. (29 May, 1661,) p. 5.

This is not added exegetically, or by way of exposition. Bp. Bull's Works, i. 200.

The phrase, "in the form of God,"—is used by the apostle with respect unto that other of "the form of a servant," exegetically continued "in the likeness of man." Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

EXE'MPLAR. n. s. [exemplar, Lat.] A pattern; an example to be imitated.

The idea and exemplar of the world was first in God. Ralegh.

They began at a known body, a barleycorn, the weight whereof is therefore called a grain; which ariseth, being multiplied to scruples, drachms, ounces, and pounds, and then those weights, as they happen to take them, are fixed by authority, and exemplars of them publickly kept. Holder.

Best poet! fit exemplar for the tribe
Of Phœbus. Philips.

EXE'MPLAR.* adj. See EXEMPLARY.

EXE'MPLARILY.† adv. [from exemplary.]

1. In such a manner as deserves imitation.

Be you wisely charitable, and let us be exemplarily holy. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 46.

She is exemplarily loyal in a high exact obedience. Howell.

2. In such a manner as may warn others.

Some he punisheth exemplarily in this world, that we might from thence have a taste or glimpse of his future justice. Hakewill on Providence.

If he had shut the commons house, whilst their champions were exemplarily punished, their jurisdiction would probably in a short time have been brought within the due limits. Clarendon.

3. In proof.

These wild dogs, either by diversity of air or soil, vary their species; as exemplarily we see in the Indian ounce, which is the product of an European cat. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 114.

EXE'MPLARINESS. n. s. [from exemplary.] State of standing as a pattern to be copied.

In Scripture we find several titles given to Christ, which import his exemplariness as of a prince and a captain, a master and a guide. Tillotson.

EXEMPLA'RITY.* n. s. [from exemplary.] A pattern worthy of imitation; goodness.

Sincerity — and exemplarity — are the two things, whereby kings who are in age of government, and princes who are in years of discipline, are most advantaged. W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 97.

Thou shalt escape better than any party of men by reason of thy conspicuous innocency, sincerity, and exemplarity of life. More on the Seven Churches, p. 133.

Of some performances of our Saviour no other, or no so probable, an account can be given, as that they were done for exemplarity. Barrow, Serm. vol. iii. S. 3.

E'XEMPLARY.† adj. [from exemplar, Dr. Johnson says. And formerly exemplar itself was used as an adjective, as in Bishop Taylor's Life of Christ, edit. 1653, p. 519. "But such had been the excellency and exemplar piety and prudence of the life of Jesus, that if they pretended against him questions of their law, they were not capital in a Roman court." But this has not been regarded. The accent on exemplary is now usually on the first syllable, though Dr. Johnson has placed it on the second.]

1. Such as may deserve to be proposed to imitation, whether persons or things.

The archbishops and bishops have the government of the church: be not you the mean to prefer any to those places, but only for their learning, gravity, and worth: their lives and doctrine ought to be exemplary. Bacon.

If all these were exemplary in the conduct of their lives, religion would receive a mighty encouragement. Swift.

2. Such as may give warning to others.

Had the tumults been repressed by exemplary justice, I had obtained all that I designed.
King Charles.

3. Such as may attract notice and imitation.

Awaking therefore, as who long had dream'd,
Much of my women and their gods asham'd,
From this abyss of exemplary vice
Resolv'd, as time might aid my thought, to rise.
Prior.

When any duty is fallen under a general disuse and neglect, in such a case the most visible and exemplary performance is required. Rogers.

4. Illustrating as the proof of a thing.

Exemplary is the coat of George Villiers Duke of Buckingham; five scallop-shells on a plain cross, speaking his predecessors' valour in the holy war. Fuller, Holy War, p. 271.

EXE'MPLARY.* n. s. [Fr. exemplaire, "the copy of a writing," Cotgrave.] A copy of a book, or writing.

These latter words, which are evident to be seen in the Greek exemplaries, are faire and smoothly left clene out in the Latine translation.
Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) sign. Ll. i.

Whereof doth it come, that the exemplaries and copies of many books do vary, but by such means?
Hunting of Purgatory, (1561,) fol. 322. b.

I will here insert the tenour and copy of the request made to the king by Demetrius, &c. The exemplary of Demetrius his request to the king was this: Great sir, Since it hath pleased you to give me commandment to search in all places for all manner of books, &c.
Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 29.

EXEMPLIFICA'TION. n.s. [from exemplify.] A copy; a transcript.

An ambassadour of Scotland demanded an exemplification of the articles of peace. Hayward.

A love of vice as such, a delighting in sin for its own sake, is an imitation, or rather an exemplification of the malice of the devil. South.

EXE'MPLIFIER.* n. s. [from exemplify.] One that followeth the example of others. Huloet.

To EXE'MPLIFY. v.a. [from exemplar.]

1. To illustrate by example.

This might be exemplified even by heaps of rites and customs, now superstitious in the greatest part of the Christian world. Hooker.

Our author has exemplified his precepts in the very precepts themselves. Spectator.

A satire may be exemplified by pictures, characters, and examples. Pope.

2. To transcribe; to copy: in the juridical sense, to take an attested copy.

To EXE'MPT.† v. a. [old Fr. exempter, from exemptus, Lat.] To privilege; to grant immunity from.

Things done well,
And with a care, exempt themselves from fear:
Things done without example, in their issue
Are to be fear'd. Shakspeare.

The religious were not exempted, but fought among the other soldiers.
Knolles, Hist. of the Turks.

The emperours exempted them from all taxes, to which they subjected merchants without exception.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

EXE'MPT. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Free by privilege.

Be it my wrong you are from me exempt;
But wrong not that wrong with a mere contempt.
Shakspeare.

An abbot cannot, without the advice of his convent, subject a monastery to any, from whose jurisdiction such monastery was exempted.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

2. Not subject; not liable to.

Do not once hope, that thou canst tempt
A spirit so resolv'd to tread
Upon thy throat, and live exempt
From all the nets that thou canst spread.
B. Jonson.

No man, not even the most powerful among the sons of men, is exempt from the chances of human life. Atterbury.

The god constrains the Greek to roam,
A hopeless exile from his native home,
From death alone exempt. Pope, Odyssey.

3. Clear; not included.

His dreadful imprecation hear;
'Tis laid on all, not any one exempt. Lee, Oedipus.

4. Cut off from. Disused.

Was not thy father for treason 'headed?
And by his treason stand'st not thou attainted,
Corrupted, and exempt from ancient gentry?
Shakspeare.

EXE'MPTION.† n. s. [old Fr. exemption.] Immunity; privilege from evil; freedom from imposts or burdensome employments.

The like exemption hath the writ to enquire of a man's death, which also must be granted freely.
Bacon.

The Roman laws gave particular exemptions to such as built ships or traded in corn.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

EXE'MPTIBLE.* adj. [old Fr. exemptible.] Loose; quit; free; privileged.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXEMPTI'TIOUS. adj. [from exemptus, Lat.] Separable; that which may be taken from another.

If motion were loose or exemptitious from matter, I could be convinced that it had extension of its own. More.

To EXE'NTERATE.† v. a. [exentero, Lat.] To embowel; to deprive of the entrails.

Piso commends a ram's lungs applied hot to the forepart of the head, or a young lamb divided in the back, exenterated, &c.
Burton, Anat. of Melanch. p. 399.

A toad contains not those urinary parts which are found in other animals to avoid that serous excretion, which may appear unto any that exenterates or dissects them. Brown.

EXENTERA'TION.† n. s. [exenteratio, Lat.] The act of taking out the bowels; embowelling.

Belonius not only affirms that chamelions feed on flies, caterpillars, beetles, and other insects; but upon exenteration he found these animals in their bellies. Brown.

If we can arrive at this perfection, without exenteration or incision, so as to preserve a dead body after the manner aforesaid, it were reasonable to believe it would not only less terrify all scrupulous persons, but likewise be of greater use to the commonwealth.
Greenhill, Art of Embalming, p. 121.

EXE'QUIAL.† adj. [from exequiæ, Lat.] Funeral; relating to funerals. Dict.

Thetis herself to all our peers proclaims
Heroick prizes and exequial games. Pope, Odys. 24.

E'XEQUIES.† adj. n. s. pl. [old French, exeques; Lat. exequiæ. Without a singular, Dr. Johnson says; nevertheless, a funeral poem of Dr. King, in his Poems published in 1657, is entitled "the exequy." But the word in the singular can hardly be said to be in use.] Funeral rites; the ceremony of burial; the procession of burial. For this word obsequies is often used, but not so properly.

Let's not forget
The noble duke of Bedford late deceas'd,
But see his exequies fulfill'd in Roan. Shakspeare.

The tragical end of the two brothers, whose exequies the next successor had leisure to perform.
Dryden.

E'XEQUY.* See EXEQUIES.

EXE'RCENT. adj. [exercens, Lat.] Practising; following any calling or vocation.

The judge may oblige every exercent advocate to give his patronage and assistance unto a litigant in distress for want of an advocate.
Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXERCI'SABLE.* adj. [from exercise.] Capable of being exercised.

It is natural to see such powers with a jealous eye; and, when stretched in the exercise, they alarm and disgust those over whom they are exercisable. Hargrave's Jurid. Argum. (1797,) p. 10.

E'XERCISE.† n. s. [exercise, old French; exercitium, Lat.]

1. Labour of the body; labour considered as conducive to the cure or prevention of diseases.

Men ought to beware that they use not exercise and a spare diet both; but if much exercise, a plentiful diet; if sparing diet, little exercise.
Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The wise for cure on exercise depend:
God never made his work for man to mend.
Dryden.

He is exact in prescribing the exercises of his patients, ordering some of them to walk eighty stadia in a day, which is about nine English miles.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

The purest exercise of health,
The kind refresher of the summer heats. Thomson.

2. Something done for amusement.

As a watchful king, he would not neglect his safety, thinking nevertheless to perform all things rather as an exercise than as a labour.
Bacon, Hen. VII.

3. Habitual action by which the body is formed to gracefulness, air, and agility.

He was strong of body, and so much the stronger as he, by a well-disciplined exercise, taught it both to do and to suffer. Sidney.

The French apply themselves more universally to their exercises than any nation: one seldom sees a young gentleman that does not fence, dance, and ride. Addison.

4. Preparatory practice in order to skill: as, the exercise of soldiers.

5. Use; actual application of any thing.

The sceptre of spiritual regimen over us in this present world is at the length to be yielded up into the hands of the Father which gave it; that is, the use and exercise thereof shall cease, there being no longer on earth any militant church to govern. Hooker.

6. Practice; outward performance.

Lewis refused even those of the church of England, who followed their master to St. Germain's, the publick exercise of their religion.
Addison on Italy.

7. Employment frequently repeated.

The learning of the situation and boundaries of kingdoms, being only an exercise of the eyes and memory, a child with pleasure will learn them.
Locke.

Children, by the exercise of their senses about objects that affect them in the womb, receive some few ideas before they are born. Locke.

Exercise is very alluring and entertaining to the understanding, while its reasoning powers are employed without labour. Watts.

8. Task; that which one is appointed to perform.

Patience is more oft the exercise
Of saints, the trial of their fortitude;
Making them each his own deliverer,
And victor over all
That tyranny or fortune can inflict. Milton, S. A.

9. Act of divine worship, whether publick or private.

Good sir John ——
I'm in your debt for your last exercise;
Come the next Sabbath, and I will content you.
Shakspeare.

Neither shall any minister not licensed, as is aforesaid, presume to appoint or hold any meetings for sermons, commonly termed by some prophecies or exercises, in market-towns, or other places. Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical.

To E'XERCISE. v. a. [exerceo, Lat.]

1. To employ; to engage in employment.

This faculty of the mind, when it is exercised immediately about things, is called judgement. Locke.

2. To train by use to any act.

The Roman tongue was the study of their youth: it was their own language they were instructed and exercised in. Locke.

3. To make skilful or dexterous by practice; to habituate.

Strong meat belongeth to them who, by reason of use, have their senses exercised to discern both good and evil. Hebr. v. 14.

Reason, by its own penetration, where it is strong and exercised, usually sees quicker and clearer without syllogism. Locke.

And now the goddess, exercis'd in ill,
Who watch'd an hour to work her impious will,
Ascends the roof. Dryden, Æn.

4. To busy; to keep busy.

He will exercise himself with pleasure, and without weariness, in that godlike employment of doing good. Atterbury.

5. To task; to keep employed as a penal injunction.

Sore travail hath God given to the sons of man, to be exercised therewith. Eccl. i. 13.

Where pain of unextinguishable fire
Must exercise us, without hope of end.
Milton, P. L.

6. To practise; to perform.

A man's body is confined to a place; but where friendship is, all offices are granted to him and his deputy: for he may exercise them by his friend. Bacon, Essays.

Age's chief arts, and arms, are to grow wise;
Virtue to know, and, known, to exercise. Denham.

7. To exert; to put in use.

The princes of the Gentiles exercise dominion over them, and they that are great exercise authority upon them. St. Matt. xx. 25.

Their consciences oblige them to submit to that dominion which their governours had a right to exercise over them. Locke.

8. To practise or use in order to habitual skill.

To you such scabb'd harsh fruit is given, as raw
Young soldiers at their exercisings gnaw. Dryden.

Meanwhile I'll draw up my Numidian troop
Within the square, to exercise their arms.
Addison, Cato.

To E'XERCISE. v. n. To use exercise; to labour for health or for amusement.

The Lacedemonians were remarkable for the sport, and Alexander the Great frequently exercised at it. Broome.

E'XERCISER.† n. s. [from exercise.]

1. One that directs or uses exercise. Dict.

2. One that practises or performs an office or duty.

God never granteth any power or authority, but he appointeth also who shall be the lawful exercisers and executors of the same.
Fulke against Allen, (1586,) p. 488.

All such possessors and exercisers of peculiar jurisdiction shall once in every year exhibit into the public registry of the bishop of the diocese.
Constitutions and Canons Ecclesiastical.

EXERCITA'TION.† n. s. [exercitatio, Lat.]

1. Exercise.

It were some extenuation of the curse, if in sudore vultus tui were confinable unto corporal exercitations. Brown.

2. Practise; use.

You use to sharpen and whet your understanding in the exercitation of high deeds and gests; in which you have employed much time.
Donne, Hist. of the Septuagint, p. 180.

By frequent exercitations we form them within us. Felton.

EXE'RGUE.* n. s. [French; from the Greek ἐξ and ἔργον, out of the work, not belonging to the work.] Among medallists, that part of the medal which belongs not to the general device or subject of it, but which contains in a corner of it, or under a line or figure, the name of the author or some collateral circumstance.

To EXE'RT. v. a. [exero, Latin.]

1. To use with an effort; to use with ardour and vehemence.

When the service of Britain requires your courage and conduct, you may exert them both. Dryden.

Whate'er I am, each faculty,
The utmost power of my exerted soul,
Preserves a being only for your service. Rowe.

2. To put forth; to perform.

When the will has exerted an act of command upon any faculty of the soul, or member of the body, it has done all that the whole man, as a moral agent, can do for the actual exercise or employment of such a faculty or member. South.

3. To enforce; to push to an effort. With the reciprocal pronoun.

Strong virtue, like strong nature, struggles still;
Exerts itself, and then throws off the ill. Dryden.

4. To bring out.

The several parts lay hidden in the piece,
Th' occasion but exerted that or this. Dryden.

5. To emit; to push out; to put forth.

The orchard loves to wave
With winter winds, before the gems exert
Their feeble heads. Philips.

The stars no longer overlaid with weight,
Exert their heads from underneath the mass,
And upward shoot and kindle as they pass,
And with diffusive light adorn the heavenly place.
Dryden.

EXE'RTION.† n. s. [from exert.] The act of exerting; effort.

The constitution of their bodies was naturally so feeble, and so unaccustomed to the laborious exertions of industry, that they were satisfied with a proportion of food amazingly small.
Robertson, Hist. of America, b. 2.

EXE'SION. n. s. [exesus, Latin.] The act of eating through.

Theophrastus denieth the exesion or forcing of vipers through the belly of the dam.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXESTUA'TION. n. s. [exæstuo, Latin.] The state of boiling; tumultuous heat; effervescence; ebullition.

Saltpetre is in operation a cold body: physicians and chymists give it in fevers, to allay the inward exestuations of the blood and humours. Boyle.

To EXFO'LIATE.† v. n. [exfolier, French; from ex and folium, Latin.] To shell off; separate, as a corrupt bone from the sound part. A term of chirurgery.

Our work went on successfully, the bone exfoliating from the edges. Wiseman, Surgery.

EXFOLIA'TION.† n. s. [exfoliation, French.] The process by which the corrupted part of the bone separates from the sound.

The bullet stuck in the bishop of Orkney's arm, and shattered it so, that, though he lived some years after that, they were forced to open it every year for an exfoliation.
Burnet, Hist. Own Times, an. 1669.

If the bone be dressed, the flesh will soon arise in that cut of the bone, and make exfoliation of what is necessary, and incarn it.
Wiseman, Surgery.

EXFO'LIATIVE.† n. s. [Fr. exfoliatif.] That which has the power of procuring exfoliation.

Dress the bone with the milder exfoliatives, till the burnt bone is cast off. Wiseman, Surgery.

EXHA'LABLE. adj. [from exhale.] That may be evaporated or exhaled.

The fire may resolve some of the more spirituous and exhalable parts, whereof distillation has shewn me that alabaster is not destitute, into vapours. Boyle.

EXHALA'TION.† n. s. [exhalatio, Latin.]

1. The act of exhaling or sending out in vapours; emission.

In their convivial garlands they had respect unto plants preventing drunkenness, or discussing the exhalations from wine.
Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 91.

2. The state of evaporating or flying out in vapours; evaporation.

3. That which rises in vapours, and sometimes takes the form of meteors.

No nat'ral exhalation in the sky,
No 'scape of nature, no distemper'd day,
But they would pluck away its nat'ral cause,
And call them meteors, prodigies, and signs.
Shakspeare.

Moving in so high a sphere, and with so vigorous a lustre, he must needs, as the sun, raise many envious exhalations; which, condensed by a popular odium, are capable to cast a cloud upon the brightest merit and integrity. King Charles.

A fabrick huge
Rose like an exhalation, with the sound
Of dulcet symphonies and voices sweet.
Milton, P. L.

It is no wonder if the earth be often shaken, there being quantities of exhalations within those mines, or cavernous passages, that are capable of rarefaction and inflammation. Burnet.

The growing tow'rs like exhalations rise,
And the huge columns heave into the skies. Pope.

To EXHA'LE. v. a. [exhalo, Latin.]

1. To send or draw out in vapours or fumes.

Yon light is not daylight, I know it well:
It is some meteor that the sun exhales,
To be to thee this night a torch-bearer. Shaks.

I flattered myself with the hopes that the vapour had been exhaled. Temple.

Fear freezes minds; but love, like heat,
Exhales the soul sublime to seek her native seat.
Dryden.

2. To draw out.

See, dead Henry's wounds
Open their congeal'd mouths, and bleed afresh!
Blush, blush, thou lump of foul deformity;
For 'tis thy presence that exhales this blood
From cold and empty veins, where no blood dwells!
Shakspeare

EXHA'LEMENT. n. s. [from exhale.] Matter exhaled; vapour.

Nor will polished amber, although it send forth a gross and corporal exhalement, be found a long time defective upon the exactest scales.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

To EXHA'UST.† v. a.

1. To drain; to diminish; to deprive by draining.

Single men be many times more charitable, because their means are less exhausted. Bacon, Ess.

Spermatick matter of a vitious sort abounds in the blood, exhausts it of its best spirits, and derives the flower of it to the seminal vessels.

Wiseman, Surgery.

2. To draw out totally; to draw till nothing is left.

Though the knowledge they have left us be worth our study, yet they exhausted not all its treasures: they left a great deal for the industry and sagacity of after-ages. Locke.

The nursling grove
Seems fair awhile, cherish'd with foster earth;
But when the alien compost is exhaust,
Its native poverty again prevails. Philips.

3. To draw forth. Not now in use.

The babe,
Whose dimpled smiles from fools exhaust their mercy. Shakspeare, Timon.

EXHA'UST.* adj. [from the verb.] Drained; deprived of strength.

Intemperate, dissolute, exhaust through riot.

Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 63.

EXHA'USTER.* n. s. [from exhaust.] One who draws out totally.

Which of the ancients was this exhauster of nature, could explain its phenomena, or tell how things are brought to pass?

Ellis, Knowledge of Divine Things, p. 397.

EXHA'USTIBLE.* adj. [from exhaust.] Capable of being exhausted.

His uncle, Mr. Martin, a lieutenant-colonel, left him about two thousand pounds; a sum which Collins could scarcely think exhaustible, and which he did not live to exhaust. Johnson, Life of Collins.

EXHA'USTION.† n. s. [from exhaust.] The act of drawing or draining.

Great exhaustions cannot be cured with sudden remedies. Wotton, Rem. p. 334.

I found, by the long use of two or three physicians, the exhaustion of my purse as great as other evacuations. Wotton, Rem. p. 561.

EXHA'USTMENT.* n. s. [from exhaust.] Drain; diminution; outgoing.

This bishoprick being already very meanly endowed, in regard of the continual charge and exhaustments of the place.

Bp. Williams to the Duke of Buck. Cabala, p. 55.

EXHA'USTLESS.† adj. [from exhaust.] Not to be emptied; not to be all drawn off; inexhaustible.

Of heat and light, what everduring stores
Brought from the sun's exhaustless golden shores,
Through gulphs immense of intervening air,
Enrich the earth, and every loss repair. Blackmore.

So with superiour boon may your rich soil,
Exuberant, nature's better blessings pour
O'er ev'ry land, the naked nations clothe,
And be the exhaustless granary of a world.

Thomson, Spring.

To EXHE'REDATE.* v. a. [old Fr. exhereder, Lat. exhæredo.] To disinherit.

Huloet.

EXHEREDA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. exheredation, Lat. exhæredatio.] A disinheriting.

Huloet.

By the ancient Roman law, the father might pronounce exheredation without any cause; but the rigour of this law was restrained, and moderated, by Justinian. Chambers.

EXHEREDITA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. ex and hæreditas.] A disinheriting; disherison.

There are unanswerable dissuasions from punishing to exhereditation and loss of life.

Waterhouse, Apol. for Learn. (1653,) p. 251.

To EXHI'BIT. v. a. [exhibeo, Latin.]

1. To offer to view or use; to offer or propose in a formal or publick manner.

If any claim redress of injustice, they should exhibit their petitions in the street.

Shakspeare, Meas. for Meas.

He suffered his attorney-general to exhibit a charge of high treason against the earl. Clarendon.

2. To show; to display.

One of an unfortunate constitution is perpetually exhibiting a miserable example of the weakness of mind and body. Pope.

EXHI'BIT.* n. s. [In law.] Any paper formally exhibited in a court of law or equity.

File is a thread or wire, whereon writs and other exhibits in courts and offices are filed. Cowel.

EXHI'BITER.† n. s. [from exhibit. This word should perhaps be written exhibitor.]

1. One that offers any thing, as a petition or charge, in a publick manner.

He seems indifferent,
Or rather swaying more upon our part,
Than cherishing the exhibiters against us. Shaksp.

2. One that displays to publick view.

The exhibitors of that shew politickly had placed whiffers armed and linked through the hall.

Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. p. 245.

EXHIBI'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. exhibition.]

1. The act of exhibiting; display; setting forth.

What are all mechanick works, but the sensible exhibition of mathematick demonstrations?

Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

2. Allowance; salary; pension: it is much used for pensions allowed to scholars at the university.

I crave fit disposition for my wife,
Due preference of place and exhibition,
As levels with her breeding. Shakspeare, Othello.

What maintenance he from his friends receives,
Like exhibition thou shalt have from me.

Shakspeare, Two Gent. of Ver.

All was assigned to the army and garrisons there, and she received only a pension or exhibition out of his coffers. Bacon.

He is now neglected, and driven to live in exile upon a small exhibition. Swift.

3. Payment; recompence.

I would not do such a thing for gowns, petticoats, nor caps, nor any petty exhibition.

Shakspeare, Othello.

EXHIBI'TIONER.* n. s. [from exhibition.] One, who in our English universities, receives a pension or allowance, bequeathed by benefactors for the encouragement of learning.

EXHI'BITIVE.† adj. [from exhibit.] Representative; displaying.

Truths must have an eternal existence in some understanding; or rather, they are the same with that understanding itself, considered as variously exhibitive or representative, according to the various modes of inimitability or participation. Norris.

Exhibitive symbols of Christ's body and blood.

Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 4.

EXHI'BITIVELY.* adv. [from exhibitive.] Representatively.

The trope lies in the verb "was," put for "signify," or "exhibitively signify."

Waterland, Charge on the Eucharist, p. 12.

EXHI'BITOR.* See EXHIBITER.

EXHI'BITORY.* adj. [from exhibit.] Setting forth; shewing.

In an exhibitory bill, or schedule, of expences for their removal this year, as it seems, mention is made of carrying the clock from the college-hall to Garsington-house.

Warton, Life of Sir T. Pope, p. 379.

To EXHI'LARATE. v. a. [exhilaro, Lat.] To make cheerful; to cheer; to fill with mirth; to enliven; to glad; to gladden.

The coming into a fair garden, the coming into a fair room richly furnished, a beautiful person, and the like, do delight and exhilarate the spirits much. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The force of that fallacious fruit,
That with exhilarating vapours bland
About their spirits had play'd, and inmost pow'rs
Made err, was now exhal'd. Milton, P. L.

Let them thank
Boon nature, that thus annually supplies
Their vaults, and with her former liquid gifts
Exhilarates their languid minds, within
The golden mean confin'd. Philips.

To EXHI'LARATE.* v. n. To become glad.

The shining of the sun, whereby all things exhilarate, and do fructify, is either hindered by clouds above, or mists below.

Bacon, Speech in Parliament to the Speaker's Excuse.

EXHILARA'TION. n. s. [from exhilarate.]

1. The act of giving gaiety.

2. The state of being enlivened.

Exhilaration hath some affinity with joy, though it be a much lighter motion. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

To EXHO'RT. v. a. [exhortor, Latin.] To incite by words to any good action.

We beseech you, and exhort you by the Lord Jesus, that as ye have received of us how you ought to walk, so ye would abound. 1 Thess. iv. 1.

My duty is to exhort you to consider the dignity of that holy mystery. Common Prayer.

Designing or exhorting glorious war. Milt. P. L.

EXHO'RT.* n. s. Exhortation. Not in use.

Urge those who stand, and those who faint excite;
Drown Hector's vaunts in loud exhorts of fight.

Pope, Iliad, 12.

EXHORTA'TION. n. s. [from exhort.]

1. The act of exhorting; incitement to good.

If we will not encourage publick beneficence, till we are secure that no storm shall overturn what we help to build, there is no room for exhortations to charity. Atterbury.

2. The form of words by which one is exhorted.

I'll end my exhortation after dinner. Shakspeare.

EXHO'RTATIVE.* adj. [from exhort.] Containing exhortation.

Considering St. Paul's style and manner of expression in the preceptive and exhortative part of his epistles. Barrow, Serm. 8.

EXHO'RTATORY.† adj. [from exhort.] Tending to exhort.

There was read at St. Ann's church an exhortatory letter to the clergy from the bishop of London.

Evelyn, Diary sub 1690.

EXHO'RTER.† n. s. [from exhort.] One who exhorts or encourages by words.

Huloet, and Barret.

A most devout exhorter, and a most earnest perswader.

Martin, Marr. of Priests, (1554,) sign. A a. 4.

EXHUMA'TION.* n. s. [Fr. exhumation; low Lat. exhumatio, from ex, out, and humus, the ground.] The act of unburying, or removing out of the grave.

Mr. Flecquet says, in his collection of Tracts relative to the exhumation in the great church at Dunkirk, that the town became more healthy after the bodies of those who had been buried in it had been taken up. Seward's Anec. v. 288.

To EXI'CCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry; to dry up. Dict.

EXICCA'TION. n. s. [from exiccate.] Arefaction; act of drying up; state of being dried up.

What is more easily refuted than that old vulgar assertion of an universal drought and exiccation of the earth? As if the sun could evaporate the least drop of its moisture, so that it should never descend again, but be attracted and elevated quite out of the atmosphere. Bentley.

EXI'CCATIVE. adj. [from exiccate.] Drying in quality; having the power of drying.

E'XIGENCE.† } n. s. [This word is pro-
E'XIGENCY. } bably only a corruption of exigents, vitiated by an unskilful pronunciation, Dr. Johnson says. However it is the old French exigence.]

1. Demand; want; need.

As men, we are at our own choice, both for time and place and form, according to the exigence of our own occasions in private. Hooker.

You have heard what the present condition and exigencies of these several charities are. Atterbury.

While our fortunes exceed not the measure of real convenience, and are adapted to the exigencies of our station, we perceive the hand of Providence in our gradual and successive supplies. Rogers.

2. Pressing necessity; distress; sudden occasion.

This dissimulation in war may be called stratagem and conduct; in other exigencies address and dexterity. Broome.

Now in such exigencies not to need,
Upon my word, you must be rich indeed!
A noble superfluity it craves,
Not for yourself, but for your fools and knaves.
Pope.

E'XIGENT.† n. s. [exigens, Lat.]

1. Pressing business; occasion that requires immediate help.

In such an exigent I see not how they could have staid to deliberate about any other regiment than that which already was devised to their hands. Hooker, Pref.

The council met, your guards to find you sent,
And know your pleasure in this exigent. Waller.

Prayer and fasting were his certain refuge in all exigents. Fell, Life of Hammond.

2. [A law term.] A writ sued when the defendant is not to be found, being part of the process leading to an outlawry. Shakspeare uses it for an extremity. Hanmer.

3. End.

These eyes, like lamps whose wasting oil is spent,
Wax dim, as drawing to their exigent. Shakspeare.

E'XIGENT.* adj. [Lat. exigens.] Pressing; requiring immediate aid.

At this exigent moment, th loss of a finished man is not easily supplied. Burke.

EXIGU'ITY.† n. s. [exiguitas, Latin.] Smallness; diminutiveness; slenderness. Cockeram.

The exiguity and shape of the extant particles is now supposed. Boyle on Colours.

EXI'GUOUS.† adj. [exiguus, Lat.] Small; diminutive; little. Not used, Dr. Johnson says. But he had forgotten how aptly a modern poet has applied it.

Their subtile parts and exiguous dose are consumed and evaporated in less than two hours' time. Harvey.

Protected mice,
The race exiguous, uninur'd to wet,
Their mansions quit, and other countries seek.
Philips, Fall of Chloe's Jordan.

E'XILE.† n. s. [exilium, Lat. It seems anciently to have had the accent indifferently on either syllable: now it is uniformly on the first.]

1. Banishment; state of being banished from one's country.

Our state of bodies would bewray what life
We've led since thy exile. Shakspeare, Coriol.

Welcome is exile, welcome were my death.
Shakspeare.

Let them pronounce the steep Tarpeian death,
Vagabond exile, flaying, pent to linger
But with a grain a day, I would not buy
Their mercy at the price of one fair word. Shaksp.

2. The person banished. [old French, exil.]

O must the wretched exiles ever mourn,
Nor after length of rolling years return?
Dryden, Virg.

Ulysses, sole of all the victor train,
An exile from his dear paternal coast,
Deplor'd his absent queen, and empire lost.
Pope, Odyssey.

To E'XILE. v. a. [from the noun. This had formerly the accent on the last syllable, now generally on the first, though Dryden has used both.] To banish; to drive from a country; to transport.

Call home our exil'd friends abroad,
That fled the snares of watchful tyranny. Shaksp.

Foul subordination is predominant,
And equity exil'd your highness' land.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

For that offence,
Immediately we do exile him hence. Shakspeare.

They fettered with the bonds of a long night, lay there exiled from the eternal Providence. Wisd. xvii. 2.

His brutal manners from his breast exil'd,
His mien he fashion'd, and his tongue he fil'd.
Dryden.

Arms and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expell'd and exil'd. Dryden.

EXI'LE.† adj. [old Fr. exile; from exilis, Latin.] Small; slender; not full; not powerful. Not in use, except in philosophical writings.

It were good to enquire what means may be to draw forth the exile heat which is in the air; for that may be a secret of great power to produce cold weather. Bacon.

In a virginal, when the lid is down, it maketh a more exile sound than when the lid is open. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

EXI'LEMENT.† n. s. [old Fr. exilement.] Banishment.

Fitzosborn was discarded into a foreign service for a pretty shadow of exilement. Wotton, Chr. of Kings of England.

EXILI'TION. n. s. [exilitio, Lat.] The act of springing or rushing out suddenly.

From saltpetre proceedeth the force and report of gunpowder: for sulphur and small-coal mixt, will not take fire with noise or exilition; and powder, which is made of impure and greasy petre, hath but a weak emission, and gives but a faint report. Brown.

EXI'LITY.† n. s. [old Fr. exilité.] Slenderness; smallness; diminution.

Certain flies, called ephemera, live but a day: the cause is the exility of the spirit, or perhaps the absence of the sun. Bacon.

For exility of the voice, or other sounds, it is certain that the voice doth pass through solid and hard bodies, if they be not too thick; and through water, which is likewise a very close body, and such an one as letteth not in air. Bacon.

A body, by being subtilized, can lose nothing of its corporeity; neither can it hereby gain any thing but exility; for all degrees of subtilty are essentially the same thing. Grew.

EXI'MIOUS.† adj. [eximius, Lat.] Famous; eminent; conspicuous; excellent. Dict.

Who sees not that, in this first and principal mystery of our religion, the Holy Spirit is exhibited to us as a person, that about him, as such, this excellent part of our duty, this eximious worship is conversant. Barrow, Serm. i. 24.

To EXI'NANITE.* v. a. [old Fr. exinaner, Lat. exinanio.] To make empty; to spoil; to weaken; to make of no force. So the word is defined in the enlarged edition of Bullokar; and it is also given in Cockeram's vocabulary. But Dr. Fulke, in 1617, places it among the words in the Rhemish translation of the N. Test. "as not familiar to the vulgar reader." Not now in use. Bishop Pearson applies exinanition to the following passage.

He exinaniled himself, and took the form of a servant. Philip. ii. 7. Rhemish Transl.

EXINANI'TION.† n. s. [exinanition, old Fr. exinanitio, Lat.] Privation; loss; emptiness.

So wert thou, for the great work of our redemption, willing to be led from the mount Tabor to mount Calvary, from the height of that glory, to the lowest depth of sorrow, pain, exinanition. Bp. Hall, Myst. of Godliness, § 3.

Philoponus calls the habituate sinner, of returning the gross habit of sin to a spareness and slenderness of stature, an exinanition of that carnal appetite which hath brought in all the grosser joys which hitherto we have fed on. Hammond, Works, iv. 478.

If the assumption of the form of a servant be contemporary with his exinanition; if that exinanition necessarily presupposeth a plenitude as indispensably antecedent to it, if the form of God be also coeval with that precedent plenitude, then must we confess, Christ was in the form of God, before he was in the form of a servant. Pearson on the Creed, Art. 2.

Diseases of exinanition are more dangerous than diseases of repletion. Herbert, Country Pars. ch. 26.

He is not more impotent in his glory than he was in his exinanition. Decay of Piety.

To EXI'ST. v. n. [existo, Lat.] To be; to have a being.

It is as easy to conceive that an Almighty Power might produce a thing out of nothing, and make that to exist de novo, which did not exist before; as to conceive the world to have had no beginning, but to have existed from eternity. South.

It seems reasonable to enquire, how such a multitude comes to make but one idea, since that combination does not always exist together in nature. Locke.

One year is past, a different scene!
No farther mention of the dean:
Who now, alas, no more is mist
Than if he never did exist. Swift.

EXI'STENCE.† } n. s. [existentia, low Lat.]
EXI'STENCY. }

1. State of being; actual possession of being.

Nor is only the existency of this animal considerable, but many things delivered thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

It is impossible any being can be eternal with successive eternal physical changes, or variety of states, or manner of existency, naturally and necessarily concomitant unto it. Hale.

The soul, secur'd in her existence, smiles
At the drawn dagger, and defies its point.
Addison, Cato.

When a being is considered as possible, it is said to have an essence or nature: such were all things before the creation. When it is considered as actual, then it is said to have existence also. Watts, Logick.

2. A being.

It is a pleasant story that we forsooth, who are the only imperfect creatures in the universe, are the only beings that will not allow of imperfection. Somebody has taken notice, that we stand in the middle of existencies, and are by this one circumstance the most unhappy of all others. Tatler, No. 246.

EXI'STENT. adj. [from exist.] Having being; in possession of being or of existence.

Whatsoever sign the sun possessed, whose recess or vicinity defineth the quarters of the year, those seasons were actually existent. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The eyes and minds are fastened on objects which have no real being, as if they were truly existent. Dryden.

EXISTE'NTIAL.* adj. [from existent.] Having existence.

Enjoying the good of existence —— and the being deprived of that existential good. Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 483.

EXISTIMA'TION. n. s. [existimatio, Lat.]

1. Opinion.
2. Esteem.

E'XIT. n. s. [exit, Lat.]

1. The term set in the margin of plays to mark the time at which the player goes off the stage.
2. Recess; departure; act of quitting the stage; act of quitting the theatre of life.

All the world's a stage,
And all the men and women merely players:
They have their exits and their entrances,
And one man in his time plays many parts. Shakspeare.

A regard for fame becomes a man more towards the exit than at his entrance into life. Swift.

Many of your old comrades live a short life, and make a figure at their exit. Swift.

3. Passage out of any place.

In such a pervious substance as the brain, they might find an easy either entrance or exist, almost every where. Glanville.

4. Way by which there is a passage out.

The fire makes its way, forcing the water forth through its ordinary exits, wells, and the outlets of rivers. Woodward.

EXI'TIAL.† } adj. [exitialis, Lat.] Destruc-
EXI'TIOUS. } tive; fatal; mortal; deleterious. Not now in use.

To this end is come that beginning of setting up of images in churches, then judged harmless, in experience proved not only harmfull, but exitious and pestilent. Homilies against Idolatry, P. iii.

Most exitial fevers, although not concomitated with the tokens, exanthemata, anthraces, or carbuncles, are to be censured pestilential. Harvey on the Plague.

E'XODE.* n. s. [Gr. ἔξοδιον.] An interlude, or farce, at the end of a tragedy.

The Romans had three plays acted one after another, on the same subject; the first a real tragedy, the second the Atellane, the third a satire or exode, a kind of farce of one act. Roscommon.

E'XODUS.† } n. s. [ἔξοδος.] Departure;
E'XODY. } journey from a place: the second book of Moses is so called, because it describes the journey of the Israelites from Egypt.

In all probability their years continued to be three hundred and sixty-five days, ever since the time of the Jewish exody at least. Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The men of Hamel date all their publick matters especially, from this exodus, or going forth of the children, setting it down next to the year of our Lord. Gregory, Posthumæ, p. 107.

EXOLE'TE. adj. [exoletus, Latin.] Obsolete; out of use. Dict.

To EXO'LVE. v. a. [exolvo, Latin.] To loose; to pay. Dict.

EXOLU'TION.† n. s. [exolution, old Fr. "faintness," Cotgrave; exolutio, Latin.] Laxation of the nerves.

Considering the exolution and languor ensuing that action in some, we cannot but think it much abridgeth our days. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXO'MPHALOS. n. s. [ἐξ and ὄμφαλος.] A navel rupture.

To EXO'NERATE. v. a. [exonero, Lat.] To unload; to disburden; to free from any heavy charge.

The glands being a congeries of vessels curled, circumgirated, and complicated, give the blood time to separate through the capillary vessels into the secretory ones, which afterwards all exonerate themselves into one common ductus. Ray.

EXONERA'TION. n. s. [from exonerate.] The act of disburdening, or discharging.

The body is adapted unto eating, drinking, nutrition, and other ways of repletion and exoneration. Grew.

EXO'NERATIVE.* adj. [from exonerate.] Freeing from any charge or burden.

EXO'PTABLE. adj. [exoptabilis, Lat.] Desirable; to be sought with eagerness or desire.

E'XORABLE.† adj. [exorabilis, Latin; exorable, old Fr. "exorable, fit or easy to be entreated," Cotgrave. Our word is also in the old vocabularies of Bullokar and Cockeram, though Dr. Johnson has given it without producing any authority or example.] To be moved by entreaty.

I doubt too many of you will be too exorable in this point. Harington, Apologie of Poetrie.

He was always exorable to offenders. Bp. Hacket, Life of Abp. Williams.

To be patient, exorable, and reconcileable to those who give the greatest cause of offence. Barrow, Serm. 1.

If you repent and turn to Him, He is so exorable and pitiful, that no tender parent hath more yearning bowels, or more open arms to receive his prodigal and lost son. Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. p. 259.

To E'XORATE.* v. a. [Lat. exoro.] To obtain by request. Cockeram.

EXO'RBITANCE.† } n. s. [from exorbit-
EXO'RBITANCY. } ance, Fr.]

1. The act of going out of the tract prescribed.

All these exorbitances in nature serve to foil and set off the general beauty and elegancy of its works. Spencer on Prodigies, p. 133.

2. Enormity; gross deviation from rule or right.

Bewail the lamentable exorbitances of their superstitions. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 31.

Curbing their wild exorbitance almost in the other extreme. Milton, Doct. and Discip. of Divorce.

I see some degree of this fault cleave to those, who have eminently corrected all other exorbitancies of the tongue. Gov. of the Tongue, p. 40.

The reverence of my presence may be a curb to your exorbitancies. Dryden, Span. Friar.

The people were grossly imposed on, to commit such exorbitancies as could not end but in the dissolution of the government. Swift, on the Diss. in Athens and Rome.

3. Boundless depravity.

They riot still,
Unbounded in exorbitance of ill. Garth, Dispensary.

EXO'RBITANT.† adj. [exorbitant, old Fr. from ex and orbito, Latin.]

1. Going out of the prescribed tract.
2. Deviating from the course appointed or rule established.

Once more I will renew
His lapsed powers, though forfeit, and enthrall'd
By sin to foul exorbitant desire. Milton, P. L.

What signifies the fiction of the tortoise riding upon the wings of the wind, but to prescribe bounds and measures to our exorbitant passions? L'Estrange.

These phenomena are not peculiar to earthquakes in our times, but have been observed in all ages, and particularly those exorbitant commotions of the waters of the globe. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

3. Anomalous; not comprehended in a settled rule or method.

The Jews, who had laws so particularly determining in all affairs what to do, were notwithstanding continually inured with causes exorbitant, and such as their laws had not provided for. Hooker.

4. Enormous; beyond due proportion; excessive.

Their subjects would live in great plenty, were not the impositions so very exorbitant; for the courts are too splendid for the territories. Addison on Italy.

So endless and exorbitant are the desires of men, that they will grasp at all, and can form no scheme of perfect happiness with less. Swift.

EXO'RBITANTLY.* adv. [from exorbitant.] Beyond all bound or rule.

She — implored his grace not to think her so exorbitantly and vainly ambitious, to wish herself a queen. Sir G. Buck, Hist. of Rich. III. p. 117.

The same court acting more exorbitantly, contrary to law. Dr. Hoadly, Serm. 30th Jan. 1718, p. 26.

To EXO'RBITATE.† v. n. [ex and orbito, Latin.] To deviate; to go out of the track or road prescribed.

A wise intermixture of some irregularities puts men upon reflection, and gives them to understand, that Nature's ill-shaped letters at one time are an assurance, that she could not write so fairly and evenly as generally, had she not some Great Master to guide her hand, and bind in the power of some causes apt to exorbitate and fly out. Spencer on Prodigies, (1665,) p. 122.

The planets sometimes would have approached the sun as near as the orb of Mercury, and sometimes have exorbitated beyond the distance of Saturn. Bentley.

To E'XORCISE.† v. a. [ἐξορκίζω, Gr. exorciser, Fr.]

1. To adjure by some holy name.
2. To drive away spirits by certain forms of adjuration.
3. To purify from the influence of malignant spirits by religious ceremonies.

I conjure thee, O thou creature of galbanum, sulpher, &c. that thou be for our defence; and that thou be made a perpetual fumigation, exorcised, and consecrated to the safety of us! Bp. Hall, (from the Treas. of Rom. Exorc.) Ca. of Cons. iii. 1.

And friars, that through the wealthy regions run,
Resort to farmers rich, and bless their halls,
And exorcise the beds, and cross the walls. Dryden.

E'XORCISER.† n. s. [from exorcise.] One who practises to drive away evil spirits. Improperly used by Shakspeare for one who raises spirits, as he also uses exorcist.

No exorciser harm thee,
Nor no witchcraft charm thee. Shakspeare, Cymb.

E'XORCISM.† n. s. [ἐξορκισμὸς, Gr. exorcisme, old Fr.] The form of adjuration, or religious ceremony by which evil and malignant spirits are driven away.

Will his lordship behold and hear our exorcisms? Shakspeare.

Symptoms supernatural, must be only curable by supernatural means; namely, by devout prayers or excorcisms. Harvey.

E'XORCIST.† n. s. [ἐξορκιστὴς, Gr. exorciste, old Fr.]

1. One who by adjurations, prayers, or religious acts, drives away malignant spirits.

Then certain of the vagabond Jews, exorcists, took upon them to call over them which had evil spirits. Acts, xix. 13.

He who hath had the patience of Diogenes, to make oration unto statues, may more sensibly apprehend how all words fall to the ground, spent upon such a surd and earless generation of men, stupid unto all instruction, and rather requiring an exorcist than an orator for their conversion! Brown, Chr. Morals, iii. 6.

2. An enchanter; a conjurer. Improperly.

Soul of Rome!
Thou, like an exorcist, hast conjur'd up
My mortified spirit. Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

Is there no exorcist
Beguiles the truer office of mine eyes?
Is't real that I see? Shakspeare, All's well.

EXO'RDIAL.* adj. [from exordium.] Introductory.

The greatest underweening of this life is to undervalue that, unto which this is but exordial, or a passage leading unto it. Brown, Chr. Morals, iii. 25.

Prolixity of paragraph and length of sentence are peculiar to Milton. This is seen — in some of his exordial invocations in the Paradise Lost. Warton, Pref. to Milton's Smaller Poems.

If the exordial verses of Homer be compared with the rest of the poem, they will not appear remarkable for plainness or simplicity, but rather eminently adorned and illuminated. Johnson, Rambler, No. 158.

EXO'RDIUM.† n. s. [Latin. The Latin plural, exordia, is used by Lord Chesterfield: but exordiums have abundant and good authority.] A formal preface; the proemial part of a composition.

Captain Bessus, you are a rank rascal, without more exordiums. Beaum. and Fl. King and No King.

Nor will I thee detain
With poets fictions, nor oppress thine ear
With circumstance, and long exordiums here. May, Virg.

I have been distasted at this way of writing, by reason of long prefaces and exordiums. Addison on Medals.

EXORNA'TION.† n. s. [exornatio, Latin. First used in our language, perhaps, as a rhetorical expression. Wilson, in his Art of Rhetorick, published in 1553, calls exornacion one of the four parts belonging to elocution.] Ornament; decoration; embellishment.

This exornation [amplification] was first devised and ordained to increase causes, and enrich the oration with words and sentences. Peacham, Garden of Eloqu. (1577,) sign. N. ii, b.

It seemeth that all those curious exornations should rather cease. Hooker.

Hyperbolical exornations, elegancies, &c. many much affect. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader, p. 12.

EXO'SSATED. adj. [exossatus, Latin.] Deprived of bones. Dict.

EXOSTO'SIS. n. s. [ἐκ and ὄστεον.] Any protuberance of a bone that is not natural, as often happens in venereal cases. Quincy.

EXO'SSEOUS. adj. [ex and ossa, Latin.] Wanting bones; boneless; formed without bones.

Thus we daily observe in the heads of fishes, as also in snails and soft exosseous animals, nature near the head hath placed a flat white stone, or testaceous concretion. Brown.

EXOTE'RICAL.* } adj. [Gr. ἐξωτερικὸς,
EXOTE'RICK. } external.] A term applied to the double doctrine of the ancient philosophers; the publick, or exoterick; the secret, or esoterick. It is also used, in opposition to acroamatical; as the French likewise use exoterique.

Aristotle was wont to divide his lectures and readings into acroamatical and exoterical. Some of them contained only choice matter, and they were read privately to a select auditory; others contained but ordinary stuff, and were promiscuously and in publick exposed to the hearing of all that would. Hales, Rem. p. 148.

E'XOTERY.* n. s. [Gr. ἐξωτερικὸς.] What is obvious or common. See ESOTERY.

Reserving their esoteries for adepts, and dealing out exoteries only to the vulgar. Note in Search's Freewill, &c. p. 172.

EXO'TICAL.* adj. [Gr. ἐξωτικὸς; Lat. exoticus.] Foreign; not domestick.

How many have we seen, and pitied, which have brought nothing from foreign countries but misshapen clothes, or exotical gestures, or new games, or affected lispings, or the diseases of the place, or (which is worst) the vices! Bp. Hall, Lett. to the E. of Essex, Ep. 8.

Shall they, who have been trained up in so clear a light of the Gospel, begin to cast wanton eyes upon their [the papists'] glorious superstitions? and contrary to the laws of God, and our sovereign, throng to their exotical devotions? Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 31.

EXO'TICK.† adj. [ἐξωτικὸς, Gr. exotique, old French.] Foreign; not produced in our own country; not domestick.

Mr. Selden, the ornament of our nation for exotick learning. Bp. Morton, Episcop. Asserted, p. 51.

Some learned men treat of the nature of letters as of some remote exotick thing, whereof we had no knowledge but by fabulous relations. Holder, Elements of Speech.

Continue fresh hot-beds to entertain such exotick plants as arrive not to their perfection without them. Evelyn, Kalendar.

EXO'TICK. n. s. A foreign plant.

Claudian was seated on the other summit, which was barren, and produced, on some spots, plants that are unknown to Italy, and such as the gardeners call exoticks. Addison, Guardian.

To EXPA'ND. v. a. [expando, Latin.]

1. To spread; to lay open as a net or sheet.

2. To dilate; to spread out every way; to diffuse.

She useth most the target to fence away the blow, and leaves all other weapons to the Alchoran to propagate and expand itself. Howell.

Bellerophon's horse, framed of iron, and placed between two loadstones, with wings expanded, hung pendulous in the air. Brown, Vulg. Err.

An animal growing, expands its fibres in the air as a fluid. Arbuthnot on Air.

Along the stream of time thy name
Expanded flies, and gathers all its fame. Pope.

EXPA'NSE. n. s. [expansum, Latin.] A body widely extended without inequalities.

A murmuring sound
Of waters issued from a cave, and spread
Into a liquid plain; then stood unmov'd,
Pure as the expanse of heav'n. Milton, P. L.

Bright as th' ethereal glows the green expanse. Savage.

On the smooth expanse of crystal lakes,
The sinking stone at first a circle makes;
The trembling surface, by the motion stirr'd,
Spreads in a second circle, then a third;
Wide, and more wide, the floating rings advance,
Fill all the wat'ry plain, and to the margin dance. Pope.

EXPANSIBI'LITY. n. s. [from expansible.] Capacity of extension; possibility to be expanded or spread into a wider surface.

With the rotundity common to the atoms of all fluids, there is some difference in bulk, by which the atoms in one fluid are distinguished from those of another; else all fluids would be alike in weight, expansibility, and all other qualities. Grew.

EXPA'NSIBLE. adj. [from expansus, Lat.] Capable to be extended; capable to be spread into a wider surface.

Bodies are not expansible in proportion to their weight, or to the quantity of matter to be expanded. Grew.

EXPA'NSION.† n. s. [from expanse.]

1. The state of being expanded into a wider surface or greater space.

And God said, let there be a firmament, [in the margin, expansion.] Genesis, i. 6.

'Tis demonstrated that the condensation and expansion of any portion of the air is always proportional to the weight and pressure incumbent upon it. Bentley.

2. The act of spreading out.

The easy expansion of the wing of a bird, and the lightness, strength, and shape of the feathers, are all fitted for her better flight. Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

3. Extent; space to which any thing is extended.

The capacious mind of man cannot be confined by the limits of the world: it extends its thoughts often even beyond the utmost expansion of matter, and makes excursions into that incomprehensible inane. Locke.

4. Pure space, as distinct from extension in solid matter.

Distance or space, in its simple abstract conception, I call expansion, to distinguish it from extension, which expresses this distance only as it is in the solid parts of matter. Locke.

It would for ever take an useless flight,
Lost in expansion, void and infinite. Blackmore, Creation.

EXPA'NSIVE. adj. [from expand.] Having the power to spread into a wider surface, or greater space.

The elastick or expansive faculty of the air, whereby it dilates itself when compressed, hath been made use of in the common weather glasses. Ray on the Creation.

Th' expansive atmosphere is cramp'd with cold. Thomson.

*EX PARTE. [Latin.] Of the one part. A law term, signifying what is executed by one side only; and in common conversation sometimes applied to partial narrations, to what is related on one part only of the matter; as, we will not be guided in this affair by ex parte hearsay or evidence.

EXPATIA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. expatiatus.] Wandering.

Take them from the devil's latitudes and expatiations; — from the infinite mazes and by-paths of errour. Farindon's Serm. (1647,) Serm. 1. p. 2.

To EXPA'TIATE.† v. n. [expatior, Lat.]

1. To range at large; to rove without any prescribed limits.

I have more exspacyated in this campe than they did.

Leland, New Year's Gift, (1549,) sign. F. 3. b.

Religion contracts the circle of our pleasures, but leaves it wide enough for her votaries to expatiate in. Addison, Spect.

He looks in heav'n with more than mortal eyes,
Bids his free soul expatiate in the skies;
Amidst her kindred stars familiar roam,
Survey the region, and confess her home. Pope.

Expatiate free o'er all this scene of man;
A mighty maze! but not without a plan. Pope.

With wonder seiz'd, we view the pleasing ground,
And walk delighted, and expatiate round.
Pope, Odyssey.

2. To enlarge upon in language.

They had a custom of offering the tongues to Mercury, because they believed him the giver of eloquence: Dacier expatiates upon this custom. Broome.

To EXPA'TIATE.† v. a. To let loose; to allow to range. This sense, which is active, is very improper, Dr. Johnson says, citing only Dryden. Sprat thought otherwise.

Make choice of a subject, which, being of itself capable of all that colours and the elegance of design can possibly give, shall afterwards afford art an ample field of matter wherein to expatiate itself. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

They were not allowed to expatiate, or amplify, or connect, specious arguments together. Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 91.

EXPA'TIATOR.* n. s. [Lat. expatiator.] One who enlarges upon in language.

The person, intended by Montfaucon as an expatiator on the word "endovellicus," I presume is Thomas Reinesius. Pegge, Anonym. p. 201.

To EXPA'TRIATE.* v. a. [old French, expatrier, from ex, out, and patria, country, Latin.] To banish from one's native country; to leave it. This word, I think, is somewhere used by lord Chesterfield.

Lost in these desponding thoughts, Abeillard indulged the romantick wish of expatriating himself for ever. Berington, Hist. of Ab. p. 187.

EXPATRIA'TION.* n. s. [old French, expatriation, "éloignement de l'endroit où l'on est né, bannissement volontaire ou forcé." Lacombe.] Banishment, voluntary or compulsory; emigration.

To EXPE'CT.† v. a. [expecto, Latin.]

1. To have a previous apprehension of either good or evil.

I know the thoughts that I think toward you, saith the Lord; thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an expected end. Jerem. xxix. 11.

We expected
Immediate dissolution. Milton, P. L.

Needs must the serpent now his capital bruise
Expect with mortal pain. Milton, P. L.

Good with bad
Expect to hear, supernal grace contending
With sinfulness of man. Milton, P. L.

Eve, now expect great tidings. Milton, P. L.

2. To wait for; to attend the coming.

The guards,
By me encamp'd on yonder hill, expect
Their motion. Milton, P. L.

While, expecting there the queen, he rais'd
His wond'ring eyes, and round the temple gaz'd. Dryden.

False hopes
He cherishes; nor will his fruit expect
The autumnal season, but in summer's pride,
When other orchats smile, abortive fail.
Philips, Cider, B. I.

To EXPE'CT.† v. n.

1. To wait; to stay. Dr. Johnson here cites a passage from the book of Job, which is a marginal reading, and which he has unwarrantably converted, from an active, into a neuter verb: for he has printed it, "Elihu had expected till Job had spoken;" but the true reading is "expected Job in words," Job, xxxii. 4. The poet, who has admirably paraphrased the book of Job, affords an example of the verb neuter.

I will expect until my change in death,
And answer at thy call: Thou wilt renew
What thou hast ruin'd, and my fears subdue.
Sandys, Paraphr. of Job, (1648,) p. 22.

2. To suppose; to believe. A common northern expression.

EXPE'CTABLE. adj. [from expect.] To be expected; to be hoped or feared.

Occult and spiritual operations are not expectable from ice; for being but water congealed, it can never make good such qualities. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXPE'CTANCE. } n. s. [from expect.]
EXPE'CTANCY. }

1. The act or state of expecting; expectation.

Every moment is expectancy
Of more arrivance. Shakspeare, Othello.

Satyrs, leave your petulance,
Or else rail upon the moon,
Your expectance is too soon;
For before the second cock
Crow, the gates will not unlock.
B. Jonson, Fairy Prince.

This blessed expectance must be now my theme. Boyle.

But fie, my wandering muse, how thou dost stray!
Expectance calls thee now another way.
Milton, Vac. Exercise.

2. Something expected.

There is expectance here from both the sides,
What further you will do.
Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

3. Hope; that of which the expectation is accompanied with pleasure.

Oh, what a noble mind is here o'erthrown!
The expectancy and rose of the fair state.
Shakspeare, Hamlet.

EXPE'CTANT.† adj. [French.] Waiting in expectation.

Expectaunt aye till I may meet
To getten mercie of that sweet.
Chaucer, Rom. R. 4571.

If it be said that some parishes reverâ, have not curates, I answer that the supernumerary expectant clergy may balance that.
Bp. Barlow, Rem. p. 276.

Her majesty has offered concessions, in order to remove scruples raised in the mind of the expectant heir. Swift.

EXPE'CTANT.† n. s. [from expect.] One who waits in expectation of any thing; one held in dependance by his hopes.

Scribe was originally the distinctive title of a son of the prophets, and an expectant of that sacred function. Spenser on Vulg. Proph. p. 36.

An expectant of future glory.
South, Serm. vi. 509.

They, vain expectants of the bridal hour,
My stores in riotous expence devour.
Pope, Odyssey.

This treatise was agreeable to the whole nation, except those who had employments, or were expectants. Swift to Pope.

EXPECTA'TION. n. s. [expectatio, Latin.]

1. The act of expecting.

The trees
Should have borne men, and expectation fainted,
Longing for what it had not.
Shakspeare, Ant. and Cleop.

The rest,
That are within the note of expectation,
Already are i' th' court. Shaksp. Macbeth.

'Tis expectation makes a blessing dear.
Congreve.

2. The state of expecting either with hope or fear.

Live in a constant and serious expectation of that day, when we must appear before the Judge of heaven and earth. Rogers, Serm.

3. Prospect of any thing good to come.

My soul, wait thou only upon God; for my expectation is from him. Ps. lxii. 5.

4. The object of happy expectation; the Messiah expected.

Now clear I understand,
What oft my steadiest thoughts have search'd in vain,
Why our great expectation should be call'd
The seed of woman. Milton, P. L.

5. A state in which something excellent is expected from us.

How fit it will be for you, born so great a prince, and of so rare not only expectation but proof, to divert your thoughts from the way of goodness. Sidney.

You first came home
From travel with such hopes as made you look'd on,
By all men's eyes, a youth of expectation;
Pleas'd with your growing virtue I receiv'd you.
Otway.

EXPE'CTATIVE.* adj. [Fr. expectatif.] Expecting. Colgrave.

EXPE'CTATIVE.* n. s. The object of expectation.

I am already abundantly satisfied in some expectatives.
Sir H. Wotton, Lett. (1618,) Rem. p. 486.

In the mean time the king conferred upon him as many ecclesiastical preferments, of a lower degree, as he could legally be possessed of; as marks of royal favour; and supports of his state and dignity, while this great expectative was depending.
Lowth, Life of Wykeham, p. 34.

EXPE'CTER.† n. s. [from expect.]

1. One who has hopes of something.

These are not great expecters under your administration, according to the period of governours here. Swift.

2. One who waits for another.

Signify this loving interview
To the expecters of our Trojan part.
Shakspeare, Troil. and Cress.

3. The name of a sect who had no determinate religion.

Many have wrangled so long about the church, that at last they have quite lost it, and go under the name of Expecters and Seekers, and do deny that there is any true church, or any true minister, or any ordinances.
Pagitt, Heresiography, (1654,) p. 128.

EXPE'CTORANTS.* n. s. pl. Medicines which promote expectoration. See To EXPECTORATE. Chambers.

To EXPE'CTORATE. v. a. [ex and pectus, Latin.] To eject from the breast.

Excrementitious humours are expectorated by a cough after a cold or an asthma. Harvey on Consumptions.

Morbifick matter is either attenuated so as to be returned into the channels, or expectorated by coughing. Arbuthnot.

EXPECTORA'TION. n. s. [from expectorate.]

1. The act of discharging from the breast.
2. That discharge which is made by coughing, as bringing up phlegm, or any thing that obstructs the vessels of the lungs, and straitens the breath. Quincy.

With water, vinegar, and honey, in pleurisies and inflammations of the lungs, he mixeth spices, for promoting expectoration. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXPE'CTORATIVE. adj. [from expectorate.] Having the quality of promoting expectoration.

Syrups and other expectoratives, in coughs, must necessarily occasion a greater cough. Harvey on Consumptions.

To EXPE'DIATE.* v. a. [old Fr. expedier.] To expedite; to dispatch. Obsolete. Cockeram.

Great alterations in some kind of merchandise may serve, for that present instant, to expediate their business. Sir E. Sandys, State of Religion.

EXPE'DIENCE. } EXPE'DIENCY. } n. s. [from expedient.]

1. Fitness; propriety; suitableness to an end.

Solemn dedications of things set apart for Divine Worship, could never have been universally practised, had not right reason dictated the high expediency and great use of such practices. South.

2. It is used in Shakspeare for expedition, as adventure; or attempt.

Let me hear —
What yesternight our council did decree,
In forwarding this dear expedience.
Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. I.

3. It is also used by Shakspeare for expedition, as haste; dispatch.

I shall break
The cause of our expedience to the queen,
And get her leave to part. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

Eight tall ships, three thousand men of war,
Are making hither with all due expedience.
Shakspeare, Rich. II.

EXPE'DIENT.† adj. [expedient, old Fr.; expedit, Latin.]

1. Proper; fit; convenient; suitable.

All things are not expedient: in things indifferent there is a choice; they are not always equally expedient. Hooker.

When men live as if there were no God, it becomes expedient for them that there should be none; and then they endeavour to persuade themselves so. Tillotson.

2. In Shakspeare, quick; expeditious.

The adverse winds,
Whose leisure I have staid, have given him time
To land his legions all as soon as I:
His marches are expedient to this town.
Shakspeare, K. John.

EXPE'DIENT.† n. s. [expedient, n. s. old French.]

1. That which helps forward, as means to an end.

God does not project for our sorrow, but our innocence; and would never have invited us to the one, but as an expedient to the other. Decay of Piety.

2. A shift; means to an end which are contrived in an exigence, or difficulty.

Th' expedient pleas'd, where neither lost his right;
Mars had the day, and Venus had the night.
Dryden.

He flies to a new expedient to solve the matter, and supposes an earth of a make and frame like that of Des Cartes. Woodward.

EXPE'DIENTLY. adv. [from expedient.]

1. Fitly; suitably; conveniently.
2. Hastily; quickly; not used.

Let my officers of such a nature
Make an extent upon his house and lands:
Do this expediently, and turn him going.
Shakspeare, As you like it.

To EXPE'DITATE.* v. a. [low Lat. expedito, of ex, from, and pede, the foot.] To cut off the balls, or, as some say, certain claws of great dogs' feet, which are kept near a forest, that they may not harm the king's deer. The dogs so cut are said to be expeditated. Bullokar.

In the forest laws, every one that keeps a great dog not expeditated, forfeits three shillings and four pence to the king. Chambers.

EXPEDITA'TION*. n. s. [low Latin, expeditatio.] In the forest laws, the mutilation of dogs' feet.

The king granted to him free chase and free warren, in all those his lands, both within and without the forest; also freedom from the expeditation of dogs. Ashmole, Berks. ii. p. 425.

To E'XPEDITE. v. a. [expedio, Latin.]

1. To facilitate; to free from impediment.

By sin and death a broad way now is pav'd,
To expedite your glorious march. Milton, P. L.

2. To hasten; to quicken.

An inquisition would still be a further improvement, and would expedite the conversion of the Papists. Swift.

3. To dispatch; to issue from a publick office.

Though such charters be expedited of course, and as of right, yet they are varied by discretion. Bacon.

E'XPEDITE. adj. [expeditus, Latin.]

1. Quick; hasty; soon performed.

Wholesome advice, and expedite execution, in freeing the state of those monsters. Sandys.

2. Easy; disencumbered; clear from impediments.

Nature can teach the church but in part; neither so fully as is requisite for man's salvation, nor so easily as to make the way plain and expedite enough, that many may come to the knowledge of it, and so be saved, and therefore the Scripture has been given. Hooker.

3. Nimble; active; agile.

The more any man's soul is cleansed from sensual lusts, the more nimble and expedite it will be in its operations. Tillotson.

4. It seems to be used by Bacon for light armed in the Roman signification.

He sent the lord chamberlain with expedite forces to speed to Exeter, to the rescue of the town. Bacon, Hen. VII.

E'XPEDITELY. adv. [from expedite.] With quickness; readiness, haste.

Nature left his ears naked, that he may turn them more expeditely for the reception of sounds from every quarter. Grew.

EXPEDI'TION.† n. s. [expedition, old Fr.]

1. Haste; speed; activity.

Prayers, whereunto devout minds have added a piercing kind of brevity; thereby the better to express that quick and speedy expedition wherewith ardent affections, the very wings of prayer, are delighted to present our suits in heaven. Hooker.

Ev'n with the speediest expedition
I will dispatch him to the emperour's court.
Shakspeare.

2. A march or voyage with martial intentions.

Young Octavius, and Mark Antony,
Come down upon us with a mighty power,
Bending their expedition tow'rd Philippi.
Shakspeare, Jul. Cæs.

EXPEDI'TIOUS.† adj. [from expedite.]

1. Speedy; quick; soon done: as, an expeditious march.

I'll deliver all;
And promise you calm seas, auspicious gales,
And sail so expeditious, that shall catch
Your royal fleet far off. Shakspeare, Tempest.

2. Nimble; quick; swift; acting with celerity: as, an expeditious runner.

EXPEDI'TIOUSLY. adv. [from expeditious.] Speedily; nimbly; with celerity.

E'XPEDITIVE.* adj. [Fr. expeditif.] Performing with speed.

I mean not to purchase the praise of expeditive in that kind; but as one, that have a feeling of my duty: and of the ease of others, my endeavour shall be to hear patiently. Bacon, Speech on taking his Place in Chancery.

To EXPE'L. v. a. [expello, Latin.]

1. To drive out; to force away.

The Lord your God shall expel them from before you, and drive them from out of your sight. Josh. xxiii. 5.

I may know the let why gentle peace
Should not expel these inconveniencies.
Shakspeare, Hen. V.

Suppose a mighty rock to fall there, it would expel the waters out of their places, with such violence as to fling them among the clouds. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

2. To eject; to throw out.

Whatsoever cannot be digested by the stomach, is either put up by vomit, or put down to the guts, and other parts of the body are moved to expel by consent. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

The virgin huntress was not slow
T' expel the shaft from her contracted bow. Dryd.

3. To banish; to drive from the place of residence.

Arms, and the man I sing, who forc'd by fate,
And haughty Juno's unrelenting hate,
Expell'd and exil'd left the Trojan shore.
Dryden, Æn.

4. To reject; to refuse.

And would you not poor fellowship expel,
Myself would offer you t'accompany
In this adventurous chanceful jeopardy.
Spenser, Hubb. Tale.

5. To keep off; to exclude; to keep out.

Since she did neglect her looking-glass,
And threw her sun-expelling mask away,
The air hath starv'd the roses in her cheeks,
And pitch'd the lily tincture of her face. Shaks.

O that the earth which kept the world in awe
Should patch a wall t' expel the winter's flaw!
Shakspeare.

EXPE'LLER.† n. s. [from expel.] One that expels or drives away.

Unspotted faith, expeller of all vice,
And most undoubted argument to prove
A mind descended nobly.
Fanshawe, Trans. of Pastor Fido, p. 74.

EXPE'NCE.* See EXPENSE.

To EXPE'ND. v. a. [expendo, Latin.] To lay out; to spend.

If my death might make this island happy,
I would expend it with all willingness.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

The king of England wasted the French king's country, and thereby caused him to expend such sums of money as exceeded the debt. Hayward.

The publick burthens, though they may be a good reason for our not expending so much in charity, yet will not justify us in giving nothing. Atterbury.

EXPE'NDITURE.* n. s. [from expend.] Cost; disbursement.

EXPE'NSE.† n. s. [low Latin, expensa, or expensum. Our word, in the old vocabularies, is usually written expense, but not always so. And our old authors write it expence. See EXPENSEFUL, where the single example cited by Dr. Johnson from Wotton contains not expenseful, as he has given it, but expenceful.] Costs; charges; money expended.

Hence comes that wild and vast expense,
That hath enforc'd Rome's virtue thence,
Which simple poverty first made.
B. Jonson, Catiline.

A feast prepar'd with riotous expense,
Much cost, more care, and most magnificence.
Dryden.

Such provision made, that a country should not want so many springs as were convenient, and afford a supply every where suitable to the necessities and expenses of each climate. Woodward.

I can see no reason by which we were obliged to make those prodigious expenses. Swift.

EXPE'NSEFUL.† adj. [expense and full.] Costly; chargeable; expensive.

Who will be troubled with a pettish girl?
I may be proud; and, to that vice, expenceful.
Beaum. and Fl. The Pilgrim.

No part of structure is either more expenseful than windows, or more ruinous.
Wotton, Architecture.

EXPE'NSEFULLY.* adv. [from expenseful.] In a costly way; at great charge.

Where now is seen, saith Camden, the fair habitation of Sir William Sidley, a learned knight, painfully and expensefully studious of the common good of his country. Weever, Fun. Mon. p. 316.

EXPE'NSELESS. adj. [from expense.] Without cost.

A physician may save any army by this frugal and expenseless means only. Milton on Education.

What health promotes, and gives unenvy'd peace,
Is all expenseless, and procur'd with ease.
Blackmore.

EXPE'NSIVE. adj. [from expense.]

1. Given to expense; extravagant; luxurious.

Frugal and industrious men are friendly to the established government, as the idle and expensive are dangerous. Temple.

2. Costly; requiring expense: as, expensive dress; an expensive journey.

3. Liberal; generous; distributive.

This requires an active, expensive, indefatigable goodness, such as our apostle calls a work and labour of love. Sprat.

EXPE'NSIVELY.† adv. [from expensive.] With great expense; at great charge.

You know our court took the resolution, that it was the best way to dispatch the French prince back again quickly, to receive him solemnly, ceremoniously, and expensively, when he hoped a domestick and durable entertainment.
Donne, Letter in his Poems, p. 279.

I never knew him live so great and expensively as he hath done since his return from exile. Swift.

EXPE'NSIVENESS.† n. s. [from expensive.]

1. Addiction to expense; extravagance.

The courtiers studied to please the king's taste; and gave into an expensiveness of equipage and dress, that exceeded all bounds.
Lowth, Life of Wykeham, p. 203.

2. Costliness.

Their highways, for their extent, solidity, or expensiveness, are some of the greatest monuments of the grandeur of the Roman empire.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

EXPE'RIENCE.† n. s. [old French, experience; from experientia, Latin.]

1. Practice; frequent trial.

Hereof experience hath informed reason, and time hath made those things apparent which were hidden. Ralegh.

But apt the mind or fancy is to rove
Uncheck'd, and of her roving is no end,
Till warn'd, or by experience taught, she learn,
That not to know at large of things remote
From use, obscure and subtle, but to know
That which before us lies in daily life,
Is the prime wisdom; what is more is fume
Or emptiness, or fond impertinence,
And renders us in things that most concern
Unpractis'd, unprepar'd, and still to seek.
Milton, P. L.

2. Knowledge gained by trial and practice.

Boys immature in knowledge,
Pawn their experience to their present pleasure.
Shakspeare.

Ordinarily all proverbs are very true, being certain brief sentences collected out of long and discreet experiences. Shelton, Don Quixote, p. 101.

Experience is the daughter of time.
Decay of Chr. Piety, p. 104.

But if you'll prosper, mark what I advise,
Whom age and long experience render wise. Pope.

To EXPE'RIENCE. v. a. [from the noun.]

1. To try; to practise.

2. To know by practice.

He through the armed files
Darts his experienc'd eye. Milton, P. L.

EXPE'RIENCED. part. adj. [from experience.]

1. Made skilful by experience.

We must perfect, as much as we can, our ideas of the distinct species: or learn them from such as are used to that sort of things, and are experienced in them. Locke.

2. Wise by long practice.

To him experienc'd Nestor thus rejoin'd,
O friend, what sorrows dost thou bring to mind!
Pope.

EXPE'RIENCER. n. s. One who makes trials; a practiser of experiments.

A curious experiencer did affirm, that the likeness of any object, if strongly enlightened, will appear to another in the eye of him that looks strongly and steadily upon it, till he be dazzled by it, even after he shall have turned his eyes from it.
Digby on Bodies.

EXPE'RIENT.* adj. [Latin, experiens.] Having experience; knowing the world.

Why is the prince, now ripe, and full experient,
Not made a doer in the state?
Beaum. and Fl. Cupid's Revenge.

EXPE'RIMENT.† n. s. [experiment, old Fr. experimentum, Lat.] Trial of any thing; something done in order to discover an uncertain or unknown effect.

That which sheweth them to be wise, is the gathering of principles out of their own particular experiments; and the framing of our particular experiments, according to the rule of their principles, shall make us such as they are. Hooker.

It is good also not to try experiments in states, except the necessity be urgent, or the utility evident. Bacon.

Adam! by sad experiment I know
How little weight with thee my words can find.
Milton, P. L.

Till his fall, man's mind was ignorant of nothing but of sin; or at least, it rested in the notion without the smart of the experiment. South, Serm.

When we are searching out the nature or properties of any being by various methods of trial, this sort of observation is called experiment.
Watts on the Mind.

To EXPE'RIMENT.† v. a. [experimenter, old French.]

1. To try; to search out by trial.

This naphta is an oily or fat liquid substance, in colour not unlike soft white clay; of quality hot and dry, so as it is apt to inflame with the sunbeams, or heat that issues from fire; as was mirthfully experimented upon one of Alexander's pages, who, being anointed, with much ado escaped burning. Sir T. Herbert, Trav. p. 182.

2. To know by experience.

These and many other spiritual wickednesses in high places doth the parson fear, or experiment, or both. Herbert, Country Pars. ch. 9.

When the succession of ideas ceases, our perception of duration ceases with it, which every one experiments whilst he sleeps soundly. Locke.

To EXPE'RIMENT.* v. n. To make experiment.

Francisco Redi experimented, that no putrefied flesh will of itself, if all insects be carefully kept from it, produce any. Ray on the Creation.

EXPERIME'NTAL. adj. [from experiment.]

1. Pertaining to experiment.

2. Built upon experiment; formed by observation.

Trust not my reading, nor my observations,
Which with experimental seal do warrant
The tenour of my book. Shakspeare, Much Ado.

The experimental testimony of Gillius is most considerable of any, who beheld the course thereof.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

3. Known by experiment or trial.

We have no other evidence of universal impenetrability, besides a large experience, without an experimental exception. Newton, Opticks.

These are so far from being subservient to atheists in their audacious attempts, that they rather afford an experimental confirmation of the universal deluge. Bentley, Serm.

EXPERIME'NTALIST.* n. s. [from experimental.] One who makes experiments.

It was usual, we are told, with the experimentalists in physics in the last age, to labour their experiments with the most diligent exactness.
Burgess on the Divinity of Christ, (1790,) p. 24.

EXPERIME'NTALLY.† adv. [from experimental.] By experience; by trial; by experiment; by observation.

Solid divines experimentally know what belongs to the healing of a sinful soul.
Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 110.

While Pharos was an isle, the true distance between it and the city, as it hath been usually and experimentally accounted, was about seven furlongs. Gregory, Posthuma, p. 29.

The miscarriage being sometimes universal, has made us impart what we have experimentally learned by our own observations. Evelyn, Kalend.

While the man is under the scourge of affliction, he is willing to abjure those sins which he now experimentally finds attended with such bitter consequences. Rogers, Serm.

EXPE'RIMENTER.† n. s. [from experiment.] One who makes experiment.

Galileus and Morsennus, two exact experimenters, do think they find this verity by their experiences; but surely this is impossible to be done. Digby on Bodies.

There will be no fear that the experimenter should reject the first, seeing they may be conceived by the meanest capacity.
Sprat, Hist. R. Soc. p. 353.

EXPE'RT.† adj. [old Fr. expert; Latin, expertus.]

1. Skilful; addressful; intelligent.

Now we will take some order in the town,
Placing therein some expert officers.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

Again fair Alma sits confest
On Florimel's experter breast;
When she the rising sigh constrains,
And by concealing speaks her pains. Prior.

2. Ready; dexterous.

The meanest sculptor in the Æmilian square,
Can imitate in brass the nails and hair;
Expert in trifles, and a cunning fool,
Able t' express the parts, but not dispose the whole.
Dryden.

They have not the good luck to be perfectly knowing in the forms of syllogism, or expert in mode and figure. Locke.

3. Skilful by practice or experience. This sense is rare, Dr. Johnson says. But may not the preceding definitions be referred to this?

Expert men can execute, and judge of particulars, one by one; but the general counsels, and the plots and marshalling of affairs, come best from those that are learned. Bacon.

4. It is used by Pope with of before the object of skill, generally with in, Dr. Johnson says. Expert of appears to be an ancient phrase for experienced in.

This excellent woman — being after experte of the paynes of bearing of children.
Ld. Morley, Tr. of Boc. temp. H. 8. Waldron's Tracts.

Thy offspring bloom,
Expert of arms, and prudent in debate,
The gifts of heaven to guard thy hoary state.
Pope, Odyssey.

To EXPE'RT.* v. a. To experience. Not now in use.

We deem of death as doom of ill desert;
But knew we, fools, what it us brings until,
Die would we daily, once it to expert!
Spenser, Shep. Cal. Nov.

EXPE'RTLY.† adv. [from expert.] In a skilful, ready, and dexterous manner.
Huloet, and Sherwood.

EXPE'RTNESS. n. s. [from expert.] Skill; readiness; dexterity.

What his reputation, what his valour, honesty, and expertness in war.
Shakspeare, All's well that ends well.

This army, for the expertness and valour of the soldiers, was thought sufficient to have met the greatest army of the Turks. Knolles, Hist.

EXPE'TIBLE.* adj. [Lat. expetibilis.] To be wished for, or desired.

Uniformity in religious and ecclesiastical matters sure is so excellent and desirable a gain, that certainly an establishment, somewhat less perfect, with "being of the same mind as far as we have attained," and with a regular and effectual observation of good laws, is more expetible than an appointment in some circumstances more perfect, without the same uniform order and peace therewith.
Puller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 410.

E'XPIABLE.† adj. [from expiate.] Capable to be expiated, or atoned.

Did not the accidents of the holiest child-bed carry in them an expiable impurity?
Bp. Hall, Honour of the Married Clergy, p. 112.

The church of Rome is not so highly severe. Some sins they can allow to be but venial; such as oblige not man to the punishment of eternal death: which indeed is a life endless, in endless torment. But yet they allow them to be such as deserve punishment, though such as are easily pardonable: remissible of course, or expiable by an easie penitence. Feltham, Res. ix. p. 274.

To E'XPIATE. v. a. [expio, Latin.]

1. To annul the guilt of a crime by subsequent acts of piety; to atone for.

Strong and able petty felons, in true penitence, implore permission to expiate their crimes by their assiduous labours in so innocent and so hopeful a work. Bacon, Phys. Rem.

The odium which some men's rigour or remissness had contracted upon my government, I resolved to expiate by regulations. King Charles.

For the cure of this disease an humble, serious, hearty repentance is the only physick; not to expiate the guilt of it, but to qualify us to partake of the benefit of Christ's atonement.
Ray on the Creation.

2. To avert the threats of prodigies.

3. To make reparation for.

The treasurer obliged himself to expiate the injury, to procure some declaration to that purpose under his majesty's sign manual. Clarendon.

The more they have hitherto embezzled their parts, the more they endeavour to expiate that unthriftiness by a more careful managery for the future. Gov. of the Tongue.

EXPIA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. expiation.]

1. The act of expiating or atoning for any crime.

The land cannot be cleansed of the blood that is shed therein, [in the margin, there can be no expiation for the land.] Numbers, xxxv. 33.

2. The means by which we atone for crimes; atonement.

Law can discover sin, but not remove,
Save by those shadowy expiations weak,
The blood of bulls and goats. Milton, P. L.

The former part of this poem is but a due expiation for my not serving my king and country in it. Dryden.

Let a man's innocence be what it will, let his virtues rise to the highest pitch of perfection, there will be still in him so many secret sins, so many human frailties, so many offences of ignorance, passion, and prejudice, so many unguarded words and thoughts, that without the advantage of such an expiation and atonement as Christianity has revealed to us, it is impossible he should be saved.
Addison, Spect.

3. Practices by which the threats of ominous prodigies were averted.

Upon the birth of such monsters, the Grecians and Romans did use divers sorts of expiations, and to go about their principal cities with many solemn ceremonies and sacrifices. Hayward.

E'XPIATORY.† adj. [old Fr. expiatoire.] Having the power of expiation or atonement.

A real and expiatory offering and oblation.
Harmar, Tr. of Beza's Serm. (1587,) p. 81.

His voluntary death for others prevailed with God, and had the force of an expiatory sacrifice.
Hooker.

EXPILA'TION.† n. s. [expilatio, Lat.] Robbery; the act of committing waste upon land to the loss of the heir; "pillage."
Cockeram.

EXPIRA'TION.† n. s. [from expire.]

1. The act of respiration which thrusts the air out of the lungs, and contracts the cavity of the breast. Quincy.

In all expiration the motion is outwards, and therefore rather driveth away the voice than draweth it. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

Of an inflammation of the diaphragm, the symptoms are a violent fever, and a most exquisite pain increases upon inspiration; by which it is distinguished from a pleurisy, in which the greatest pain is in expiration. Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The last emission of breath; death.

Though therefore it be certainly true that Christ did truly and properly die, as other men are wont to do, and that after expiration he was in the state or condition of the dead, as some have learned to speak; yet the creed had spoken as much as this before, when it delivered that he was dead.
Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

We have heard him breathe the groan of expiration. Rambler.

3. Evaporation; act of fuming out.

By the expiration of such atoms, the dog finds the scent as he hunts. Howell, Lett. iv. 50.

He was to receive immediate benefit either by eructation, or expiration, or evomition.
Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 4.

4. Vapour; matter expired.

Words of this sort resemble the wind in fury and impetuousness, in transientness and sudden expiration. Decay of Piety.

Close air is warmer than open air, as the cause of cold is an expiration from the earth, which in open places is stronger. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

5. The cessation of any thing to which life is figuratively ascribed.

To satisfy ourselves of its expiration, we darkened the room, and in vain endeavoured to discover any spark of fire. Boyle.

6. The conclusion of any limited time.

If till the expiration of your month,
You will return and sojourn with my sister,
Dismissing half your train, come then to me.
Shakspeare, K. Lear.

This he did in a fortnight after the expiration of the treaty of Uxbridge. Clarendon.

To EXPI'RE.† v. a. [expiro, Latin.]

1. To breathe out.

To save his body from the scorching fire,
Which he from hellish entrails did expire.
Spenser, F. Q.

Anatomy exhibits the lungs in a continual motion of inspiring and expiring air.
Harvey on Consumptions.

This chaff'd the boar; his nostrils flames expire,
And his red eyeballs roll with living fire.
Dryden, Ovid.

2. To exhale; to send out in exhalations.

The fluid which is thus secreted, and expired forth along with the air, goes off in sensible parcels.
Woodward.

3. To close; to conclude; to bring to an end. Obsolete, Dr. Johnson says, citing only the example from Spenser. But surely it is still usual to say, "the time is almost expired;" or, "the agreement is expired." And other writers, beside Spenser, use expire in this sense.

When as time flying with wings swift,
Expired had the term that these two javels
Should render up a reck'ning of their travels.
Spenser, Hub. Tale.

My mind misgives,
Some consequence, yet hanging in the stars,
Shall bitterly begin his fearful date
With this night's revels, and expire the term
Of a despised life. Shakspeare, Rom. and Jul.

Death was umpire by expiring the best spirit of the one, the quarrel being only for the lie given.
Selden, Duello, ch. 4.

To EXPI'RE. v. n.

1. To make an emission of the breath.

If the inspiring and expiring organ of any animal be stopt, it suddenly dies. Walton, Angler.

2. To die; to breathe the last.

For when the fair in all their pride expire,
To their first elements the souls retire. Pope.

3. To perish; to fall; to be destroyed.

All thy praise is vain,
Save what this verse, which never shall expire,
Shall to thee purchase. Spenser.

The dead man's knell,
Is there scarce ask'd, for whom; and good men's lives
Expire before the flowers in their caps,
Dying or ere they sicken. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

4. To fly out with a blast.

The distance judg'd for shot of every size,
The linstocks touch, the pond'rous ball expires;
The vigorous seaman every porthole plies,
And adds his heart to every gun he fires. Dryden.

5. To conclude; to terminate; to come to an end.

A month before
This bond expires, I do expect return
Of thrice three times the value of this bond.
Shakspeare.

EXPISCA'TION.* n. s. [Lat ex and piscatio.] A fishing. See PISCATION.

In expiscation of whose mysteries,
Our nets must still be clogg'd with heavy lead
To make them sink and catch.
Chapman on B. Jonson's Sejanus.

To EXPLA'IN. v. a. [explano, Latin.] To expound; to illustrate; to clear by notes or commentaries.

Such is the original design, however we may explain it away. Ayliffe, Parergon.

You will have variety of commentators to explain the difficult passages to you. Gay.

Some explain'd the meaning quite away. Pope.

EXPLA'INABLE. adj. [from explain.] Capable of being explained or interpreted.

It is symbolically explainable, and implieth purification and cleanness. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXPLA'INER.† n. s. [from explain.] Expositor; interpreter; commentator.

According to our common explainers.
Milton, Doct. and Discpl. of Divorce.

As there is no author who more frequently repeats similar sentiments and expressions than Arrian, so for that reason there is no one who is a better commentator and explainer to himself.
Harris to Upton, (1734), in Dr. Warton's Works, p. 207.

Here we behold the rise of a second race of critics, the tribe of scholiasts, commentators, and explainers. Harris, Philolog. Inquiries.

EXPLANA'TION. n. s. [from explain.]

1. The act of explaining or interpreting.
2. The sense given by an explainer or interpreter.

Before this explanation be condemned, and the bill found upon it, some lawyers should fully inform the jury. Swift.

EXPLA'NATORY. adj. [from explain.] Containing explanation.

Had the printer given me notice, I would have printed the names, and writ explanatory notes. Swift.

EXPLE'TION.* n. s. [Lat. expletio.] Accomplishment.

They conduce nothing at all to the perfection of men's natures, nor the expletion of their desires. Killingbeck's Serm. p. 374.

E'XPLETIVE.† n. s. [expletif, old Fr. expletivum, Lat.] Something used only to take up room; something of which the use is only to prevent a vacancy.

These are not only useful expletives to matter, but great ornaments of style. Swift.

Oft the ear the open vowels tire,
While expletives their feeble aid do join.
Pope, Ess. on Criticism.

Expletives, whether words or syllables, are made use of purely to supply a vacancy: do, before verbs plural, is absolutely such; and future refiners may explode did and does. Pope.

E'XPLETORY.* adj. [Lat. expletus.] Filling up; taking up room.

In the address of the Almighty to Job, in chapters 38, 39, no less than twenty-one verses begin with the particle what, decorated with a note of admiration! No less than six successive verses in ch. 38, and four in ch. 39, have this uncouth introduction, for which there is not the smallest authority in the original. Dr. Garden is so fond of this expletory embellishment, as even to introduce it twice in the same verse. Brit. Crit. 1797, Feb.

E'XPLICABLE. adj. [from explicate.] Explainable; possible to be explained.

Many difficulties, scarce explicable with any certainty, occur in the fabrick of human nature.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

Great variety there is in compound bodies, and little many of them seem to be explicable. Boyle.

To E'XPLICATE.† v. a. [explico, Lat.]

1. To unfold; to expand.

They explicate the leaves, and ripen food
For the silk labourers of the mulberry wood.
Blackmore.

2. To explain; to clear; to interpret.

I name him a grammarian by the authority of Quintillian, that, speaking Latin elegantly, can expound good authors, expressing the invention and disposition of the matter, their style or form of eloquence; explicating the figures as well of sentences as of words; leaving nothing, person or place, named by the author, undeclared or hid from his scholars. Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 51.

They do not understand that part of Christian philosophy which explicates the secret nature of this divine sacrament. Bp. Taylor.

Although the truths may be elicited and explicated by the contemplation of animals, yet they are more clearly evidenced in the contemplation of man.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

The last verse of his last satire is not yet sufficiently explicated. Dryden.

EXPLICA'TION. n. s. [from explicate.]

1. The act of opening; unfolding or expanding.
2. The act of explaining; interpretation; explanation.

The church preacheth, first publishing, by way of testimony, the truth which from them she hath received, written in the sacred volumes of Scripture; secondly, by way of explication, discovering the mysteries which lie hid therein. Hooker.

Many things are needful for explication, and many for application unto particular occasions.
Hooker.

Allowances are made in the explication of our Saviour's parables, which hold only as to the main scope. Atterbury.

3. The sense given by an explainer; interpretation.

'Tis the substance of this theory I mainly depend upon; many single explications and particularities may be rectified upon farther thoughts.
Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

E'XPLICATIVE. adj. [from explicate.] Having a tendency to explain.

If the term which is added to the subject of a complex proposition be either essential or any way necessary to it, then it is called explicative; for it only explains the subject; as, every mortal man is a son of Adam. Watts, Logick.

E'XPLICATOR.† n. s. [from explicate.] An expounder; interpreter; explainer.
Sherwood.

E'XPLICATORY.* adj. [from explicate.] Explicative; tending to explain.

Hereon are grounded those evangelical commands, explicatory of this law, as it now standeth in force. Barrow, Serm. vol. i. S. 25.

EXPLI'CIT. adj. [explicitus, Latin.] Unfolded; plain; clear; not obscure; not merely implied.

We must lay aside that lazy and fallacious method of censuring by the lump, and bring things close to explicit proof and evidence.
Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

These speculations, when most refined, serve only to shew how impossible it is for us to have a clear and explicit notion of that which is infinite.
South, Serm.

*E'XPLICIT. [Latin.] A word found at the conclusion of our old books, signifying the end, or it is finished; as we now find finis. Thus the Liber Festivalis of Caxton concludes with "Explicit: Enprynted at Westmynster, &c. mcccclxxxiij." The old French books have the same word.

The word explicit generally used at the end of MSS. and early printed books, is a contraction of explicitus. The ancient books were nothing but rolls of parchment, (hence the Latin word volumen, and our volume,) which were unfolded by the reader in his progress through them. When they were quite unfolded, they were of course finished; and the word explicitus, which properly conveys the former sense, was afterwards used in the latter, when the books assumed a different form, to signify that they were finished or ended.
Aubrey, Anec. ii. 99. note by the Editor.

EXPLI'CITLY. adv. [from explicit.] Plainly; directly; not merely by inference or implication.

This querulous humour carries an implicit repugnance to God's disposals; but where it is indulged, it usually is its own expositor, and explicitly avows it. Gov. of the Tongue.

EXPLI'CITNESS.* n. s. [from explicit.] The state of being explicit. Ash.

To EXPLO'DE. v. a. [explodo, Lat.]

1. To drive out disgracefully with some noise of contempt; to treat with open contempt; to treat not only with neglect, but open disdain or scorn.

Him old and young
Exploded, and had seiz'd with violent hands,
Had not a cloud descending snatch'd him thence

Thus was the applause they meant,
Turn'd to exploding hiss, triumph to shame,
Cast on themselves from their own mouths.
Milton, P. L.

Old age explodes all but morality. Roscommon.

There is pretended, that a magnetical globe or terrella, being placed upon its poles, would have a constant rotation; but this is commonly exploded, as being against all experience. Wilkins, Dædalus.

Shall that man pass for a proficient in Christ's school, who would have been exploded in the school of Zeno? South.

Provided that no word, which a society shall give a sanction to, be antiquated and exploded, they may receive whatever new ones they shall find occasion for. Swift.

2. To drive out with noise and violence.

But late the kindled powder did explode
The massy ball, and the brass tube unload.
Blackmore.

EXPLO'DER.† n. s. [from explode.] An hisser; one who drives out any person or thing with open contempt.

According to the republican divinity of some scandalous exploders of the doctrine of passive obedience. South, Serm. vi. 276.

This age hath produced too many confident exploders of immaterial substances.
Hallywell, Melampr. p. 3.

EXPLO'IT.† n. s. [exploit, old French substantive; but the verb was expleiter, whence Chaucer took expleite for to perform. Latin, expletum, res expleta.] A design accomplished: an achievement; a successful attempt.

Know'st thou not any whom corrupting gold
Would tempt into a close exploit of death?
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

Flight cannot stain the honour you have won;
But mine it will that no exploit have done.
Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

How shall I relate
To human sense th' invisible exploits
Of warring spirits? Milton, P. L.

He breaks fierce Hannibal's insulting heats;
Of which exploit thus our friend Ennius treats.
Denham.

The exploits of wicked spirits upon particular persons may be permitted for diverse good purposes. Hallywell, Melampr. p. 92.

Will you thus dishonour
Your past exploits, and sully all your wars!
Addison, Cato.

To EXPLO'IT. v. a. [from the noun.] To perform; to achieve. Not used.

He exploited great matters in his own person in Gallia, and by his son in Spain. Camden, Remains.

EXPLO'ITABLE.* adj. [old Fr. exploitable.] Capable of being achieved.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXPLO'ITURE.* n. s. [old French, exploit.] Achievement. Obsolete.

The commentaries of Julius Cæsar, which he made of his exploiture in Fraunce and Britaine.
Sir T. Elyot, Gov. fol. 33. b.

To EXPLO'RATE. v. a. [exploro, Latin.] To search out; to try by searching; to explore.

Snails exclude their horns, and therewith explorate their way. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXPLORA'TION. n. s. [from explorate.] Search; examination.

For exact exploration scales should be suspended where the air is quiet, that, clear of impediments, they may the more freely convert upon their natural verticity. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Use may be made of the like way of exploration in that enquiry which puzzles so many modern naturalists. Boyle.

EXPLORA'TOR.† n. s. [from explorate; old Fr. explorateur.] One who searches; a searcher; an examiner.

Percy, their explorator, was let out like a raven, and sent as a spy to descry, by the best inducements he could find, whether the state took hold of their proceedings or not.
Proceedings against Garnet, (1606,) sign. Bbb. 3.

This envious explorator, or searcher for faults.
Hallywell, Melampr. p. 92.

EXPLO'RATORY.† adj. [from explorate.] Searching; examining.

This is but an exploratory purpose between us.
Wotton, Rem. p. 507.

There is an exploratory temptation, to search out and discover what is in man, what his graces and corruptions are.
Bp. Hopkins, Expos. of the Lord's Prayer, p. 123.

Round the castle, was an exploratory post to the Akeman-street. Warton, Hist. of Kiddington, p. 53.

To EXPLO'RE. v. a. [exploro, Lat.] To try; to search into; to examine by trial.

Abdiel that sight endur'd not, where he stood
Among the mightiest, bent on highest deeds,
And thus his own undaunted heart explores.
Milton, P. L.

Divers opinions I have been inclined to question, not only as a naturalist, but as a chymist, whether they be agreeable to true grounds of philosophy, or the exploring experiments of the fire.
Boyle.

But Capys, and the rest of sounder mind,
The fatal present to the flames design'd,
Or to the wat'ry deep; at least to bore
The hollow sides, and hidden frauds explore.
Dryden, Æn.

The mighty Stagyrite first left the shore,
Spread all his sails, and durst the deeps explore;
He steer'd securely, and discover'd far,
Led by the light of the Mœonian star.
Pope, Ess. on Criticism.

EXPLO'REMENT. n. s. [from explore.] Search; trial.

The frustrated search of Porta, upon the explorement of many, could scarce find one.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXPLO'SION. n. s. [from explode.] The act of driving out any thing with noise and violence.

Those parts which abound with strata of stone, or marble, making the strongest opposition, are the most furiously shattered; an event observable not only in this, but all other explosions whatever.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

In gunpowder the charcoal and sulphur easily take fire, and set fire to the nitre; and the spirit of the nitre being thereby rarified into vapour, rushes out with explosion, after the manner that the vapour of water rushes out of an æolipile: the sulphur also, being volatile, is converted into vapour, and augments the explosion.
Newton, Opticks.

With explosion vast,
The thunder raises his tremendous voice.
Thomson.

EXPLO'SIVE.† adj. [from explode.] Driving out with noise and violence.

These minerals constitute in the earth a kind of natural gunpowder, which takes fire; and by the assistance of its explosive power renders the shock greater. Woodward.

From the red abyss
New hills explosive thrown. Thomson, Liberty.

EXPOLIA'TION.* n. s. [Lat. expoliatio.] A spoiling or wasting.

Now, even now, O Saviour, art thou entering into those dreadful lists, and now art thou grappling with thy last enemy; as if thou hadst not suffered till now, now thy bloody passion begins: a cruel expoliation begins that violence.
Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

To EXPO'LISH.* v. a. [Lat. expolio.] To polish exquisitely.

To strive, where nothing is amiss, to mend;
To polish and expolish, paint and stain,
Unguents to daub, and then wipe out again.
Heywood, Hist. of Women, (1624.)

EXPO'NENT.† n. s. [from expono, Lat.] Exponent of the ratio, or proportion between any two numbers or quantities, is the exponent arising when the antecedent is divided by the consequent; thus six is the exponent of the ratio which thirty hath to five. Also a rank of numbers in arithmetical progression, beginning from 0, and placed over a rank of numbers in geometrical progression, are called indices or exponents; and in this is founded the reason and demonstration of logarithms; for addition and substraction of these exponents answers to multiplication and division in the geometrical numbers.
Harris.

We may often observe that the exponents of fluctions or notes representing fluxions are confounded with the fluxions themselves.
Bp. Berkeley, Analyst, § 45.

EXPONE'NTIAL. adj. [from exponent.] Exponential curves are such as partake both of the nature of algebraick and transcendental ones. They partake of the former, because they consist of a finite number of terms, though those terms themselves are indeterminate; and they are in some measure transcendential, because they cannot be algebraically constructed. Harris.

To EXPO'RT. v. a. [exporto, Latin.] To carry out of a country, generally in the way of traffick.

Glorious followers taint business for want of secrecy, and export honour from a man, and make him a return in envy.
Bacon, Ess. Civil and Moral.

Edward III., by his encouragement of trade, turned the scale so much in favour of English merchandize, that, by a balance of trade taken in his time, the exported commodities amounted to two hundred ninety-four thousand pounds, and the imported but to thirty-eight thousand.
Addison, Freeholder.

Great ships brought from the Indies precious wood, and exported pearls and robes.
Arbuthnot on Coins.

E'XPORT.† n. s. [from the verb.] Commodity carried out in traffick.

Whether there should not be published, yearly, schedules of our trade, containing an account of the imports and exports of the year?
Bp. Berkeley, Querist, § 179.

EXPO'RTABLE.* adj. [from export.] That may be exported; as, exportable goods.

EXPORTA'TION.† n. s. [from export.]

1. The act or practice of carrying out commodities into other countries.

The cause of a kingdom's thriving is fruitfulness of soil to produce necessaries, not only sufficient for the inhabitants, but for exportation into other countries. Swift.

2. Simply, the act of carrying out. Neither this, nor the following sense, is noticed by Dr. Johnson.

The symptom, last spoken of, had reference to the instruments of the vital faculty, which serve for importation and reception of the blood and spirits; this, that we are now speaking to, hath reference to those which serve for exportation and rejection of the same.
Smith, Portr. of Old Age, (1666,) p. 239.

3. The state of being carried out.

They were wont to sit by it, [the corpse,] from the time of its death till its exportation to the grave.
Bourne, Antiq. of the Com. People, (1725,) p. 15.

EXPO'RTER. n. s. [from export.] One that carries out commodities, in opposition to the importer, who brings them in.

Money will be melted down, or carried away in coin by the exporter, whether the pieces of each species be by the law bigger or less. Locke.

To EXPO'SE. v. a. [expono, expositum. Lat. exposer, French.]

1. To lay open; to make liable.

Take physick, pomp;
Expose thyself to feel what wretches feel,
That thou may'st shake the superflux to them,
And shew Heaven just. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Who here
Will envy whom the highest place exposes
Foremost to stand against the Thunderer's aim?
Milton, P. L.

To pass the riper period of his age,
Acting his part upon a crowded stage,
To lasting toils expos'd, and endless cares,
To open dangers, and to secret snares. Prior.

2. To put in the power of any thing.

But still he held his purpose to depart;
For as he lov'd her equal to his life,
He would not to the seas expose his wife. Dryden.

3. To lay open; to make bare; to put in a state of being acted upon.

Then joyous birds frequent the lonely grove,
And beasts, by nature strong, renew their love;

Then fields the blades of bury'd corn disclose,
And while the balmy western spirit blows,
Earth to the breath her bosom dares expose.
Dryden, Virg.

4. To lay open to censure or ridicule; to show in such a state as brings contempt.

Like Horace, you only expose the follies of men, without arraigning their vices. Dryden, Juv. Ded.

Tully has justly exposed a precept, that a man should live with his friend in such a manner that if he became his enemy, it should not be in his power to hurt him. Addison, Spect.

A fool might once himself alone expose;
Now one in verse makes many more in prose.
Pope.

Your fame and your property suffer alike, you are at once exposed and plundered. Pope.

5. To lay open to examination.

Those who seek truth only, freely expose their principles to the test, and are pleased to have them examined. Locke.

6. To put in danger.

The exposing himself notoriously did change the fortune of the day, when his troops begun to give ground. Clarendon.

7. To cast out to chance.

A father, unnaturally careless of his child, gives him to another man; and he again exposes him: a third man finding him, breeds up and provides for him as his own. Locke.

Helpless and naked on a woman's knees,
To be expos'd or rear'd as she may please,
Feel her neglect, and pine for her disease. Prior.

8. To censure; to treat with dispraise. A colloquial abuse of the word.

A little wit is equally capable of exposing a beauty, and of aggravating a fault.
Addison, Spect.

EXPO'SER.* n. s. [from expose; old Fr. exposeur.]

1. An explainer: an interpreter.
Cotgrave.

2. One who lays things or persons open to contempt or ridicule.

EXPOSI'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. exposition.]

1. The situation in which any thing is placed with respect to the sun or air.

Water he chuses clear, light, without taste or smell; drawn from springs with an easterly exposition. Arbuthnot.

The diversity of exposition of the several kitchens in this city, whereby some receive the rays of the sun sooner, and others later, will occasion great irregularity as to the time of dining.
Arbuthnot.

2. Explanation; interpretation; [from expound, expono, Latin.]

My lord of York, it better shew'd with you,
When that your flock, assembled by the bell,
Encircled you, to hear with reverence
Your exposition on the holy text. Shaks. Hen. IV.

You are a worthy judge;
You know the law: your exposition
Hath been most sound. Shaks. Merch. of Ven.

I have sometimes very boldly made such expositions of my authors, as no commentator will forgive me. Dryden.

EXPO'SITIVE.* adj. [from expose.] Explanatory; containing exposition.

The opinion of Durandus is to be rejected, as not expositive of the Creed's confession.
Pearson on the Creed, Art. 5.

EXPO'SITOR. n. s. [expositor, Latin.] Explainer; expounder; interpreter.

A mirth-moving jest,
Which his fair tongue, conceit's expositor,
Delivers in such apt and gracious words,
That aged ears play truant at his tales. Shaks.

In the picture of Abraham's sacrificing his son, Isaac is described as a little boy, which is not consentaneous unto the authority of expositors.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

The sinner's conscience is the best expositor of the mind of God, under any judgement or affliction. South, Serm.

Scholiasts, those copious expositors of places, pour out a vain overflow of learning on passages plain and easy. Locke.

EXPO'SITORY.* adj. [from expositor.] Explanatory.

This book may serve as a glossary or expository index to the poetical writers.
Johnson, Pref. to his Abridged Dictionary.

To EXPO'STULATE. v. n. [expostulo, Latin.] To canvass with another; to altercate; to debate without open rupture.

More bitterly could I expostulate,
Save that for reverence of some alive
I give a sparing limit to my tongue.
Shakspeare, Rich. III.

The emperour's embassadour did expostulate with the king, that he had broken his league with the emperour. Hayward.

It is madness for friendless and unarmed innocence to expostulate with invincible power.
L'Estrange.

Durst I expostulate with Providence, I then might ask. Cotton.

The bishop will expostulate, and the tenant will have regard to the reasonableness of the demand.
Swift.

To EXPO'STULATE.* v. a. To discuss; to enquire into; to examine.

I cannot now stay to expostulate the case with them.
Asheton's Danger of Hypocrisy, (1673,) p. 17.

If either of us had intelligence that an enemy were coming upon us, with a design to assault us, and take away our life, although it were a person of but ordinary reputation that brought us the news, yet it would startle us, and we should not stand disputing the truth of the relation, but presently either prepare ourselves to appease him, or arm ourselves to encounter him; and then, if no no enemy appeared, we could securely expostulate the false alarm afterwards.
Goodman, Wint. Ev. Conf. p. 183.

EXPOSTULA'TION. n. s. [from expostulate.]

1. Debate; altercation; discussion of an affair in private without rupture.

Expostulations end well between lovers, but ill between friends. Spectator.

2. Charge; accusation.

This makes her bleeding patients to accuse
High Heav'n, and these expostulations use;
Could Nature then no private woman grace,
Whom we might dare to love with such a face?
Waller.

Expostulation is a private accusation of one friend touching another, supposed not to have dealt singly or considerately in the course of good friendship. Ayliffe, Parergon.

EXPO'STULATOR. n. s. [from expostulate.] One that debates with another without open rupture.

EXPO'STULATORY.† adj. [from expostulate.] Containing expostulation.

This fable is a kind of an expostulatory debate between Bounty and Ingratitude. L'Estrange.

I confess with shame, it was an unpardonable omission to proceed so far as I have already done, before I had performed the due discourses, expostulatory, supplicatory, or deprecatory, with my good lords the criticks. Swift, Tale of a Tub, § 5.

She writ him a short expostulatory letter, worthy of herself. Welwood, Mem. p. 14.

EXPO'SURE. n. s. [from expose.]

1. The act of exposing or setting out to observation.

2. The state of being open to observation.

When we have our naked frailties hid,
That suffer in exposure, let us meet.
Shakspeare, Macbeth.

3. The state of being exposed, or being liable to any thing.

Determine on some course,
More than a wild exposure to each chance
That starts i' th' way before thee. Shaks. Coriol.

4. The state of being in danger.

Ajax sets Thersites
To match us in comparisons with dirt;
To weaken and discredit our exposure,
How hard soever rounded in with danger.
Shakspeare, Tr. and Cress.

5. Exposition; the situation in which the sun or air is received.

The cold now advancing, set such plants as will not endure the house, in pots two or three inches lower than the surface of some bed, under a southern exposure. Evelyn.

To EXPO'UND. v. a. [expono, Latin.]

1. To explain; to clear; to interpret; to shew the meaning of.

We cannot better interpret the meaning of those words than pope Leo himself expounded them, whose speech concerning our Lord's ascension may serve instead of a marginal gloss. Hooker.

This by Calphurnia's dream is signified.
— And this way you have well expounded it.
Shakspeare.

He expounded unto them in all the Scriptures, the things concerning himself. St. Luke, xxiv. 27.

Those right holy fathers, as in matters of faith they did not make truth, but religiously expounded it; so in matters of ecclesiastical government, they did not create provinces; but ordered the countries which they then had. Ralegh.

2. To examine; to lay open. A Latinism.

He expounded both his pockets,
And found a watch with rings and lockets.
Hudibras.

EXPO'UNDER. n. s. [from expound.] Explainer; interpreter.

This they did partly as faithful witnesses; making a mere relation of what God himself had revealed unto them; and partly as careful expounders, teachers, and persuaders thereof. Hooker.

The best he was,
And faithfullest expounder of the laws.
Dryden, Juv.

To EXPRE'SS.† v. a. [expresser, old French; exprimo, expressus, Lat.]

1. To copy; to resemble; to represent.

So kids and whelps their sires and dams express,
And so the great I measured by the less.
Dryden, Virg.

Adorn a dream, expressing human form,
The shape of him who suffer'd in the storm.
Dryden.

2. To represent by any of the imitative arts: as, poetry, sculpture, painting.

Each skilful artist shall express thy form
In animated gold. Smith, Phæd. and Hip.

3. To represent in words; to exhibit by language; to utter; to declare.

Less than half we find express,
Envy bid conceal the rest. Milton, Arcades.

Though they have learned those sounds, yet there are no determined ideas laid up in their minds, which are to be expressed to others by them.
Locke.

In moral ideas we have no sensible marks that resemble them, whereby we can set them down: we have nothing but words to express them by.
Locke.

True wit is nature to advantage drest,
What oft was thought, but ne'er so well exprest.
Pope.

Others for language all their care express,
And value books, as women men, for dress. Pope.

To shed tears, among the ancients, when they should express their gratitude to the gods with joy, was esteemed a prophanation. Broome.

4. To show or make known in any manner.

No longer shall thy bodice aptly lace,
That air and shape of harmony express,
Fine by degrees, and delicately less. Prior.

5. To utter; to declare: with the reciprocal pronoun.

Mr. Philips did express himself with much indignation against me one evening. Pope.

6. To denote; to designate.

Moses and Aaron took these men expressed by their names. Numb. i. 17.

7. To squeeze out; to force out by compression.

The disdainfull soul he thence dispatcht,
And th' idle breath all utterly express'd.
Spenser, F. Q. ii. xi. 42.

The word signifieth new wine, yea generally all moisture, which, either by expressing or treading, is fet from any fruit.
Expos. of Solomon's Song, (1585,) p. 234.

Among the watery juices of fruit are all the fruits out of which drink is expressed; as the grape, and the apple. Bacon.

8. To extort by violence, or elicit by art. A Latinism.

Halters and racks cannot express from thee
More than thy deeds: 'tis only judgement waits thee. B. Jonson.

Art did express
A quintessence, even from nothingness,
From dull privatives and lean emptiness. Donne.

EXPRE'SS. adj. [from the verb.]

1. Copied; resembling; exactly like.

Of his presence many a sign
Still following thee, still compassing thee round
With goodness and paternal love; his face
Express, and of his steps the track divine.
Milton, P. L.

2. Plain; apparent; declared in direct terms.

There hath been some doubt whether containing in Scripture do import express setting down in plain terms; or else comprehending in such sort, that by reason we may from thence conclude all things which are necessary. Hooker.

There is not any positive law of men, whether general or particular, received by formal express consent, as in councils; or by secret approbation; but the same may be taken away, if occasion serves. Hooker.

All the gazers on the skies,
Read not in fair heaven's story
Expresser truth, or truer glory,
Than they might in her bright eyes. B. Jonson.

3. Clear; not dubious. This seems to be no proper use.

I love to feel myself of an express and settled judgement and affection, in things of the greatest moment. More, Div. Dial.

As to the testimonies of the fathers, let them be never so express against all sorts of prayers and invocations, they hold only of such a sort of prayer. Stillingfleet.

Where reason or scripture is express for any opinion, or action, we may receive it as of divine authority. Locke.

4. On purpose; for a particular end.

They who are not induced to believe and live as they ought, by those discoveries which God hath made in scripture, would stand out against any evidence whatsoever; even that of a messenger sent express from the other world. Atterbury.

EXPRE'SS.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. A messenger sent on purpose.

The king sent an express immediately to the marquis, with all the particular informations. Clarendon.

As if expresses from all parts had come,
With fresh alarms, threat'ning the fate of Rome.
Dryden, Juv.

Upon the first moment I was discovered, the emperour had early notice of it by an express. Swift, Gulliver's Travels.

2. A message sent.

I am content my heart should be discovered to the world, without any of those popular captations which some men use in their speeches and expresses. King Charles.

3. A declaration in plain terms. Not usual.

They do not only contradict the general design and particular expresses of the gospel, but trespass against all logick and common sense. Norris.

4. A representation by sculpture. See the second sense of the verb. Not now in use.

Some ancient coins have been called by the name of their expresses, as the Athenians had a certain coin, saith Pollux, και εκαλειτο βους, ὅτι βοῦν εἶχεν ἐντετυπωμένον, from the figure of an ox imprinted upon it.
Gregory, Notes on Script. (4th ed. 1684,) p. 51.

EXPRE'SSIBLE. adj. [from express.]

1. That may be uttered or declared.

They had not only a memory and tradition of it in general, but even of several particular accidents of it likewise, which they handed downwards to the succeeding ages, with notes of the greatest terror expressible. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. That may be drawn by squeezing or expression.

EXPRE'SSION.† n. s. [from express.]

1. The act or power of representing any thing.

There is nothing comparable to the variety of instructive expressions by speech, wherewith a man alone is endowed, as with an instrument suitable to the excellency of his soul, for the communication of his thoughts. Holder on Speech.

2. The form or mode of language in which any thoughts are uttered.

But ill expression sometimes gives allay
To noble thoughts, whose flame shall ne'er decay.
Buckingham.

The poet to reconcile Helen to his reader, brings her in as a penitent, condemning her own infidelity in very strong expressions. Broome.

3. A phrase; a mode of speech.

Shakspeare's energy does not arise so much from these old expressions, (most of which were not old in his time,) but from his artificial management of them. Mason, Life of Gray.

4. The act of squeezing or forcing out any thing by a press. [old Fr. expression.]

Those juices that are so fleshy, as they cannot make drink by expression, yet may make drink by mixture of water. Bacon.

The juices of the leaves are obtained by expression: from this juice proceeds the taste.
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXPRE'SSIVE. adj [from express.] Having the power of utterance or representation. With of before the thing expressed.

Each verse so swells expressive of her woes,
And every tear in lines so mournful flows,
We, spite of fame, her fate revers'd believe,
O'erlook her crimes, and think she ought to live.
Tickell.

And four fair queens, whose hands sustain a flow'r,
Th' expressive emblem of their softer pow'r. Pope.

A visible and exemplary obedience to God's laws is the most expressive acknowledgement of the majesty and sovereignty of God, and disposes others to glorify him by the same observances. Rogers.

EXPRE'SSIVELY. adv. [from expressive.] In a clear and representative way.

EXPRE'SSIVENESS. n. s. [from expressive.] The power of expression or representation by words.

The murrain has all the expressiveness that words can give: it was here that Virgil strained hard to outdo Lucretius. Addison.

EXPRE'SSLY. adv. [from express.] In direct terms; plainly; not by implication; not generally.

It doth not follow that of necessity we shall sin, unless we expressly extend this in every particular. Hooker.

Articles of belief, and things which all men must do, to the end they may be saved, are either expressly set down in scripture, or else plainly thereby to be gather'd. Hooker.

Who dare cross 'em,
Bearing the king's will from his mouth expressly?
Shakspeare.

The beginning of the worship of images in these western parts, was by the folly and superstition of the people, expressly against the will of their own bishop. Stillingfleet.

This account I expressly give of them, when I enter on the argument. Atterbury.

All the duties that the best political laws enjoin, as conducive to the quiet and order of social life, are expressly commanded by our religion. Rogers.

EXPRE'SSNESS.* n. s. [from express.] The power of expression.

The terms of the question want somewhat of expressness. Hammond, Works, i. 709.

Considering the expressness of all these places, I cannot see but that any duty of religion may be more easily evaded than this.
Glanville, Serm. ii. p. 100.

EXPRE'SSURE. n. s. [from express. Now disused in all its meanings.]

1. Expression; utterance.

There is a mystery in the soul of state,
Which hath an operation more divine,
Than breath or pen can give expressure to. Shaksp.

2. The form; the likeness represented.

I will drop some obscure epistles of love, wherein, by the colour of his beard, the manner of his gait, the expressure of his eye, forehead, and complexion, he shall find himself personated.
Shaksp. Tw. Night.

3. The mark; the impression.

And nightly, meadow fairies, look you sing,
Like to the garter-compass in a ring:
The expressure that it bears, green let it be,
More fertile fresh than all the field to see. Shaksp.

To EXPROBRATE. v. a. [exprobro, Lat.] To charge upon with reproach; to impute openly with blame; to upbraid.

To exprobrate their stupidity, he induces the providence of storks: now, if the bird had been unknown, the illustration had been obscure, and the exprobration not so proper. Brown.

EXPROBRA'TION. n. s. [from exprobrate.] Scornful charge; reproachful accusation; act of upbraiding.

The goodness we glory in, is to find out somewhat whereby we may judge others to be ungodly: each other's fault we observe as matter of exprobration, not of grief. Hooker.

The Parthians, with exprobration of Crassus's thirst after money, poured gold into his mouth after he was dead. Abbot.

It will be a denial with scorn, with a taunting exprobration; and to be miserable without commiseration, is the height of misery. South, Serm.

No need such boasts, or exprobrations false
Of cowardice: the military mound
The British files transcend in evil hour
For their proud foes. Philips.

E'XPROBRATIVE.* adj. [from exprobrate.] Reproaching; upbraiding.

All benefits losing much of their splendour, both in the giver and receiver, that do bear with them an exprobrative term of necessity.
Sir A. Shirley's Travels.

To EXPRO'PRIATE.† v. a. [old French, exproprier; from ex and proprius, Lat. The word was not coined by Boyle, as the example, given by Dr. Johnson, might lead the reader to suppose; for expropriated had, long before Boyle wrote, been used by Cotgrave and Sherwood.] To make no longer our own; to hold no longer as a property. Not now in use.

When you have resigned, or rather consigned, your expropriated will to God, and thereby entrusted him to will for you, all his dispensations towards you are, in effect, the acts of your own will.
Boyle, Seraphick Love.

EXPROPRIA'TION.* n. s. [from expropriate.] The act of making no longer our own.

The soul of man, then, is capable of a state of much peace and equanimity in all exterior bands and agitations; but this capacity is rather an effect of the expropriation of our reason, than a virtue resulting from her single capacity; for it is the evacuation of all self-sufficiency that attracteth a replenishment from that Divine plenitude, from whose "fulness we receive grace for grace:" So that it is a supervenient gift, not a native graft in our reason.
W. Mountague, Dev. Ess. P. i. (1648,) p. 342.

To EXPU'GN.† v. a. [expugner, old Fr. expugno, Lat.] To conquer; to take by assault.

They suborned certain men, which, when they could not expugn him by arguments and disputation, should by entreaty, and fair promises, or any other means, allure him to recantation.
Fox, (Acts and Monuments,) of Abp. Cranmer.

These ten voices were united in one sound, that their conjoined forces might expugn that gracious ear. Bp. Hall, Contempl. B. 4.

Great cities once expugned, the dorps and villages will soon come in of themselves.
Feltham, Res. xiii. 33.

EXPU'GNABLE.* adj. [old Fr. expugnable.] That may be forced, or won by force.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXPUGNA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. expugnation.] Conquest; the act of taking by assault.

Since the expugnation of the Rhodian isle,
Methinks, a thousand years are overpass'd.
Trag. of Soliman and Perseda, (1599.)

The expugnation of Vienna he could never accomplish. Sandys.

EXPU'GNER.* n. s. [from expugn.] A forcer; a subduer; an overthrower of towns. Sherwood, and Cotgrave in V. Expugnateur.

To EXPU'LSE.† v. a. [expulser, old Fr.; expulsus, Latin. Our word has been pronounced faulty by some who have overlooked to repulse. There is hardly any word more frequent among our old and good authors than this verb.] To drive out; to expel; to force away.

For ever should they be expuls'd from France,
And not have title to an earldom there.
Shakspeare, K. Hen. VI.

Suppose a nation where the custom were, that after full age the sons should expulse their fathers and mothers out of possessions, and put them to their pensions. Bacon, Holy War.

Extinguishing and expulsing what part soever it cannot overcome.
Bacon on the Union of Eng. and Scotland.

The expulsed Apicata finds them there.
B. Jonson, Sejanus.

Ask your Lysimachus Nicanor what defaming invectives have lately flown abroad against the subjects of Scotland, and our poor expulsed brethren of New England. Milton, Animad. Rem. Def.

Inwardly received, it may be very diuretick, and expulse the stone in the kidneys. Brown.

Dictys relates, that Peleus was expulsed from his kingdom by Acastus. Broome.

EXPU'LSER.* n. s. [Fr. expulseur.] An expeller. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXPU'LSION.† n. s. [old Fr. expulsion.]

1. The act of expelling or driving out.

A wooer,
More hateful than the foul expulsion is
Of thy dear husband. Shakspeare, Cymb.

Sole victor from th' expulsion of his foes,
Messiah his triumphal chariot turn'd. Milton, P. L.

Others think it possible so to contrive several pieces of steel and a load-stone, that, by their continual attraction and expulsion of one another, they may cause a perpetual revolution of a wheel.
Wilkins, Dædalus.

This magnificent temple was not finished till after the expulsion of Tarquin. Stillingfleet.

Coffee-coloured urine proceeds from a mixture of a small quantity of blood with the urine; but often prognosticates a resolution of the obstructing matter, and the expulsion of gravel or a stone.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. The state of being driven out.

To what end had the angel been sent to keep the entrance into Paradise, after Adam's expulsion, if the universe had been Paradise? Ralegh, Hist.

EXPU'LSIVE. adj. [from expulse.] Having the power of expulsion.

If the member be dependent, by raising of it up, and placing it equal with or higher than the rest of the body, the influx may be restrained, and the part strengthened by expulsive bandages.
Wiseman, Surgery.

EXPU'NCTION.† n. s. [from expunge.] Abolition; the act of expunging, blotting, or effacing.

This work will ask as many more officials, to make expurgations and expunctions, that the commonwealth of learning be not damnified.
Milton, Areopagitica.

To EXPU'NGE.† v. a. [expungo, Lat.]

1. To blot out; to rub out.

A universal blank
Of nature's works to me expung'd and ras'd.
Milton, P. L.

The difference of the denarius and drachm having been done in the manuscript, it was needless to expunge it. Arbuthnot.

2. To efface; to annihilate.

Wilt thou not to a broken heart dispense
Thy balm of mercy, and expunge th' offence?
Sandys, Job, p. 13.

Deduct what is but vanity, or dress,
Or learning's luxury, or idleness,
Or tricks to shew the stretch of human brain
Mere curious pleasure, or ingenious pain;
Expunge the whole, or lop th' excrescent parts
Of all, our vices have created arts;
Then see how little the remaining sum,
Which serv'd the past, and must the times to come!
Pope.

EXPU'NGING.* n. s. [from expunge.] The act of blotting out.

Neither do they remember the many alterations, additions, and expungings made by great authors in those treatises which they prepare for the publick. Swift.

To EXPU'RGATE.* v. a. [Lat. expurgo.] To expunge; to purge away. Applied to passages in books. See EXPURGATORY.

The Church of Rome hath cracked her credit by forging, expurgating, &c.
Jones, Rome no Mother Church, (1678,) p. 64.

EXPURGA'TION.† n. s. [expurgatio, Lat.]

1. The act of purging or cleansing.

All the intestines, but especially the great ones, kidneys and ureters, serve for expurgation.
Wiseman, Surgery.

2. Purification from bad mixture, as of errour or falsehood.

Nothing can argue guiltiness so much as unjust expurgations. Bp. Hall, Epist. Dec. ii. Ep. 3.

Wise men know, that arts and learning want expurgation; and if the course of truth be permitted to itself, it cannot escape many errours.
Brown, Pref. to Vulg. Err.

This work will ask as many more officials, to make expurgations and expunctions, that the commonwealth and learning be not damnified.
Milton, Areopagitica.

EXPU'RGATOR.† n. s. One who corrects by expunging.

They may well be allowed an expurgator.
Lord Digby.

We cannot wonder if these practices had a great share in the motives to the conversion of Henricus Boxhornius, who before was one of the principal expurgators. For some time these Indices Expurgatorii were a great mystery.
Jenkins, Hist. Ev. of Councils, p. 6.

EXPURGATO'RIOUS.* adj. [Lat. expurgatorius.] Expunging. See EXPURGATORY.

It were hard if the freeborn people of England, with whom the voice of truth for these many years, even against the proverb, hath not been heard but in corners, after all your monkish prohibitions, and expurgatorious indexes, your gags and snaffles.
Milton, Animadv. Rem. Def.

EXPU'RGATORY.† adj. [expurgatorius, Lat.] Employed in purging away what is noxious: as, the expurgatory index of the Romanists directs the abolition or expunction of passages admitted by any authors contrary to popery.

There wants expurgatory animadversions, whereby we might strike out great numbers of hidden qualities; and having once a conceded list, we might with more safety attempt their reasons.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

The Spanish Inquisitors, in their expurgatory index, commanded that all that Luciferian exorcism be blotted out.
Bp. Taylor, Diss. from Popery, ch. 2. § 10.

To EXPU'RGE.* v. a. [Lat. expurgo.] To purge away; to expunge.

The council of Trent, and the Spanish inquisition, engendering together, brought forth or perfected those catalogues and expurging indexes that rake through the entrails of many an old good author, with a violation worse than any could be offered to his tomb. Milton, Areopagitica.

To EXPU'TE.* v. a. [Lat. expuo.] To spit out; to throw out.

I spit blood, and exputed a viscous tough matter.
Fuller, Medicina Gymn. (1705,) p. 198.

To EXQUI'RE.* v. a. [Lat. exquiro.] To search into; to enquire after. Not in use.

Can
Thy years determine like the age of man,
That thou shouldst my delinquencies exquire,
And with variety of tortures tire?
Sandys, Paraphr. of Job, p. 16.

E'XQUISITE.† adj. [exquisitus, Lat.]

1. Farsought; excellent; consummate; complete.

His absolute exactness they imitate by tending unto that which is most exquisite in every particular. Hooker.

Why should the state be troubled with this needless charge of keeping and maintaining so great a navy in such exquisite perfection and readiness? Ralegh, Essays.

Adam and Eve, before the fall, were a different species; and none but a poet of the most unbounded invention, and the most exquisite judgement, could have fitted their conversation and behaviour to their state of innocence. Addison.

The pleasures of sense are probably relished by beasts in a more exquisite degree than they are by men; for they taste them sincere and pure, without being distracted in the pursuit, or disquieted in the use of them. Atterbury, Serm.

2. Consummately bad.

With exquisite malice they have mixed the gall and vinegar of falsity and contempt. King Charles.

3. Very sensibly felt.

The scales of the scarf-skin hinder objects from making too painful and exquisite impression on the nerves. Cheyne.

4. Curious; searching into. Not now in use.

Be not over exquisite
To cast the fashion of uncertain evils.
Milton, Comus.

E'XQUISITELY. adv. [from exquisite.] Perfectly; completely: in either a good or ill sense.

We see more exquisitely with one eye shut than with both open; for that the spirits visual unite themselves, and become stronger. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

A collection of rare manuscripts, exquisitely written in Arabick, and sought in the most remote parts by Epenius, the most excellent linguist. Wotton.

The soldier then, in Grecian arts unskill'd,
Returning rich with plunder from the field,
If cups of silver or of gold he brought,
With jewels set, and exquisitely wrought,
To glorious trappings strait the plate he turn'd,
And with the glitt'ring spoil his horse adorn'd.
Dryden.

The poetry of operas is generally as exquisitely ill as the musick is good. Addison on Italy.

E'XQUISITENESS.† n. s. [from exquisite.] Nicety; perfection.

A discourse which passes through the ear well, and seems to carry a good show of exquisiteness. Bp. Hall, Rem. p. 51.

Nor do we find, that in the great pomp or princely parada used by queen Berenice and her train of women, (among whom, no doubt, all the Roman and Asiatick fashions of improved beauty did appear, as St. Luke intimates) we find not, the blessed apostle, either at all taken, or scandalized with that exquisiteness and glory. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 82.

We suppose the superficies of the two glasses should be so exactly flat and smooth, that no air at all can come between them; and experience has informed us, that it is extremely difficult to procure from our ordinary tradesmen either glasses or marbles so much as approaching such an exquisiteness. Boyle.

EXQUI'SITIVE.* adj. [Lat. exquisitus.] Curious. See EXQUISITIVELY.

EXQUI'SITIVELY.* adv. Curiously; minutely.

To a man that had never seen an elephant, or a rhinoceros, who should tell him most exquisitely all their shape, colour, bigness, and particular marks. Sidney, Def. of Poesy.

To EXSCI'ND.* v. a. [Lat. exscindo.] To cut off. Used by Dr. Johnson in his definition of the verb extirpate.

To EXSCRI'BE.* v. a. [Lat. exscribo.] To copy; to write out.

I that have been a lover, and could shew it,
(Though not in these,) in rhimes not wholly dumb,
Since I exscribe your sonnets, am become
A better lover and much better poet.
B. Jonson, Underwoods.

His proof is from a passage in the Misnah, which Maimonides has also exscribed. Hooper on Lent, (1695,) p. 223.

E'XSCRIPT. n. s. [exscriptum, Lat.] A copy; a writing copied from another.

EXSI'CCANT. adj. [from exsiccate.] Drying; having the power to dry up.

Some are moderately moist, and require to be treated with medicines of the like nature, such as fleshy parts; others dry in themselves, yet require exsiccants, as bones. Wiseman.

To EXSI'CCATE. v. a. [exsicco, Lat.] To dry.

If in a dissolution of steel a separation of parts be made by precipitation, or exhalation, the exsiccated powder ascends not unto the loadstone. Brown, Vulg. Err.

Great heats and droughts exsiccate and waste the moisture and vegetative nature of the earth. Mortimer, Husbandry.

EXSICCA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. exsiccation.] The act of drying.

That which is concreted by exsiccation, or expression of humidity, will be resolved by humectation; as earth, dirt, and clay. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXSI'CCATIVE.† adj. [old Fr. exsiccatif.] Having the power of drying. Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXSPUI'TION. n. s. [expuo, Lat.] A discharge of saliva by spitting. Quincy.

EXSU'CTION. n. s. [exugo, Lat.] The act of sucking out, or draining out, without immediate contact of the power sucking with the thing sucked.

If you open the valve, and force up the sucker after this first exsuction, you will drive out almost a whole cylinder full of air. Boyle.

EXSUDA'TION.† n. s. [from exudo, Lat.] A sweating out; an extillation; an emission.

They seemed to be made by an exsudation, or extillation of some petrifying juices out of the rocky earth. Derham.

The resinous exsudations of pines and firs are an important branch of the materia medica. Bp. Berkeley, Siris, § 11.

EXSUFFLA'TION.† n. s. [ex and sufflo, Latin.]

1. A blast working underneath.

Of volatility the utmost degree is when it will fly away without returning: the next is when it will fly up, but with ease return: the next is when it will fly upwards over the helm, by a kind of exsufflation, without vapouring. Bacon.

2. A kind of exorcism. [low Latin, exsufflatio.] See EXSUFFOLATE.

He urgeth them with exorcism and exsufflation, which were there used in the church. Fulke's Retentive, (1580,) p. 40.

That wondrous number of ceremonies in exorcism, exsufflation, use of salt, spittle, inunction, &c. in the church of Rome required. Puller, Moderat. of the Ch. of Eng. p. 282.

EXSU'FFLICATE.* adj. See EXSUFFOLATE. But exsufflicate is the true word.

EXSU'FFOLATE.† adj. A word peculiar to Shakspeare, Dr. Johnson says, making it a verb, where, if the word were really the poet's, it is in truth an adjective; and defining it, with Sir T. Hanmer, from the Italian suffolare, to whisper; to buzz in the ear; further observing, in a note on the passage in his edition of Shakspeare, that the allusion, where the word occurs, is to a bubble, and therefore assigning the sense of empty to exsuffolate, which, after all, is an alteration of exsufflicate made by Hanmer; and which Mr. Malone interprets by swollen. It seems to me, that all the criticks have overlooked the meaning of the passage. Exsufflicate may be traced to the low Latin exsufflare, to spit down upon, an ancient form of exorcising; and figuratively, to spit out in abhorrence or contempt. See Du Cange in V. EXSUFFLARE. Exsufflicate may thus signify contemptible; and Othello may be supposed to mean, that he would not change the noble designs that then employed his thoughts for contemptible and despicable surmises.

Exchange me for a goat,
When I shall turn the business of my soul
To such exsufflicate and blown surmises,
Matching thy inference. Shakspeare, Othello.

To EXSU'SCITATE. v. a. [exsuscito, Latin.] To rouse up; to stir up. Dict.

EXSUSCITA'TION.* n. s. [exsuscitatio, Lat.] A stirring up; an awakening.

Virtue is not a thing that is merely acquired, and transfused into us from without, but rather an exsuscitation and raising up of those intellectual principles, pro re nata, and according as the circumstances of human actions invite, which were essentially engraven and sealed upon the soul at her first creation. Hallywell, Excell. of Mor. Virtue, (1692,) p. 54.

E'XTANCE.* n. s. [from extant.] Outward existence.

Where we were when the foundations of the earth were laid, when the morning stars sang together, and all the sons of God shouted for joy, he must answer who asked it; who understands entities or preordination, and beings yet unbeing; who hath in his intellect the ideal existences of things and entities before their extances. Brown, Chr. Mor. iii. 25.

E'XTANCY.† n. s. [Lat. extantia.]

1. The state of rising above the rest.

2. Parts rising up above the rest; in opposition to those depressed.

The order of the little extancies, and consequently that of the little depressions, will be altered likewise. Boyle on Colours.

E'XTANT.† adj. [extant, old French; extans, Latin.]

1. Standing out to view; standing above the rest.

That part of the teeth which is extant above the gums is naked, and not invested with that sensible membrane called periosteum, wherewith the other bones are covered. Ray.

If a body have part of it extant and part of it immersed in fluid, then so much of the fluid as is equal in gravity to the whole. Bentley.

2. Publick; not suppressed.

'Tis extant, that that which we call comedia, was at first nothing but a simple, continued song. B. Jonson, Every Man out of his Humour.

The first of the continued weekly bills of mortality, extant at the parish clerks hall, begins the twenty-ninth of December 1603. Graunt, Bills of Mortality.

EXTA'TICAL.† } adj. [ἐκστατικὸς, Gr. extatique, French. See ECSTATICAL.]
EXTA'TICK. }

1. Tending to something external.

I find in me a great deal of ecstatical love, which continually carries me to good without myself. Norris.

2. Rapturous; in a state in which the soul seems to leave the body.

Some reduce enthusiasts, extatical and demoniacal persons, to this rank. Burton, Anat. of Mel. p. 36.

The dithyrambus was a kind of extatick morricedance. Stilling fleet, Orig. Sac. ii. 4.

Not one of those sanctified philosophers but had dreams, visions, and extatick colloquies with demons every night. Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 43.

In trance extatick may thy pangs be drown'd;
Bright clouds descend, and angels watch thee round. Pope.

E'XTASY.* n. s. [ἔκστασις.] See ECSTASY.

Spenser once uses this word in the sense of sudden surprize.

She thus resolv'd; that whil'st the gods
Were troubled, and amongst themselves at odds,
Before they could new counsels re-allie,
To set upon them in that extasie.
Spenser, F. Q. vii. vi. 23.

To E'XTASY.* v. a. To overcome with joy. See To ECSTASY.

I am extasied;
Were you witness for me too? is it possible
I am what this affirms, true Leonatus?
Beaum. and Fl. The Coronation.

Our spirits are extasied with the rapture and contemplation of thy bounty. Hewyt, Serm. p. 81.

EXTE'MPORAL. adj. [extemporalis, Latin.]

1. Uttered without premeditation; quick; ready; sudden.

Alcidimus the sophister hath arguments to prove, that voluntary and extemporal far excelleth premeditated speech. Hooker.

A man of pleasant and popular conversation, of good extemporal judgement and discourse, for the satisfying of publick ministers. Wotton, Life of D. of Buck.

2. Speaking without premeditation.

Many foolish things fall from wise men, if they speak in haste, or be extemporal. B. Jonson, Discoveries.

EXTE'MPORALLY. adv. [from extemporal.] Quickly; without premeditation.

The quick comedians
Extemporally will stage us, and present
Our Alexandrian revels. Shaks. Ant. and Cleop.

EXTEMPORA'NEAN.* adj. [Lat. extemporaneus.] Unpremeditated. Now extemporaneous.

Extemporanean style, tautologies, apish imitation. Burton, Anat. of Mel. To the Reader.

EXTEMPORA'NEOUS.† adj. [extemporaneus, Latin.] Unpremeditated; sudden.

By working of miracles is meant a more private and extemporaneous exercise of the same power. Warburton, Doct. of Grace.

The extemporaneous effusions of the glowing bard seem naturally to have fallen into this measure, and it was probably more easily suited to the voice or harp. Warton, Hist. of Eng. Poetry, i. Diss. 1. e. 4. b.

EXTE'MPORARY.† adj. [extemporareus, Latin.]

1. Uttered or performed without premeditation; sudden; quick.

This custom was begun by our ancestors out of an ambition of shewing their extemporary ability of speaking upon any subject. More, Divine Dialogues.

That men should confer at very distant removes by an extemporary intercourse, is another reputed impossibility. Glanville.

They write in so diminutive a manner, with such frequent interlineations, that they are hardly able to go on without perpetual hesitations, or extemporary expletives. Swift.

2. Occasional; for the time. A sense not noticed by Dr. Johnson.

A third shall be, by referring you to the most extemporary view of the commands of the decalogue, which Christ came not to destroy, but to fill up and perfect. Hammond, Works, iv. p. 480.

It may be wondered what should induce the people to build in this base manner, when they have, in the adjacent mountains, such plenty of good stone for nobler fabricks. I can give no reason for it, unless this may pass for such; that those who first planted here, finding so delicious a situation, were in haste to come to the enjoyment of it; and therefore nimbly set up those extemporary habitations, being unwilling to defer their pleasure so long, as whilst they might erect more magnificent structures; which primitive example their successors have followed ever since. Maundrell's Journey, p. 125.

EXTE'MPORE.† adv. [extempore, Lat.]

1. Without premeditation; suddenly; readily; without any previous care or preparation.

You may do it extempore; for it is but roaring. Shakspeare.

Nothing great ought to be ventured upon without preparation; but, above all, how sottish is it to engage extempore, where the concern is eternity? South, Sermons.

Hast thou no mark at which to bend thy bow?
Or, like a boy, pursu'st the carrion-crow
With pellets and with stones from tree to tree,
A fruitless toil, and liv'st extempore? Dryd. Pers.

2. It is sometimes used as an adjective, but very improperly, Dr. Johnson says, citing this usage of it only by Addison. Dryden has also used it.

A sort of extempore poetry, or rather of tunable hobbling verse. Dryden, Orig. and Prog. of Satire.

I have known a woman branch out into a long extempore dissertation upon a petticoat. Addison, Spect.

3. It is also sometimes used as a substantive, which escaped Dr. Johnson's notice.

Amidst the disadvantage of extempore against premeditation, he dispelled with ease and perfect clearness all the sophisms that had been brought against him. Fell, Life of Hammond.

EXTE'MPORINESS. n. s. [from extempore.] The faculty of speaking or acting without premeditation; the state of being unpremeditated.

To EXTE'MPORIZE. v. n. [from extempore.] To speak extempore, or without premeditation.

The extemporizing faculty is never more out of its element than in the pulpit; though even here, it is much more excusable in a sermon than in a prayer. South, Serm. ii. 117.

To EXTE'ND.† v. a. [extendo, Latin.]

1. To stretch out in any direction.

If those pieces were extended and stretched out in man, as they are in the world, man would be the giant and the world the dwarf, the world but the map and the man the world. Donne, Dev. (1624,) p. 65.

See the figure of his lifeless friend,
And his old sire, his helpless hand extend.
Dryden, Virgil.

Should'ring God's altar a vile image stands,
Belies his features, nay extends his hands. Pope.

2. To amplify: opposed to contract.

It is sufferable in any to use what liberty they list in their own manner of writing; but the contracting and extending the lines and sense of others would appear a thankless office. Wotton.

3. To spread abroad; to diffuse; to expand.

He much magnifies the capacity of his understanding, who persuades himself that he can extend his thoughts farther than God exists, or imagine any expansion where he is not. Locke.

4. To widen to a large comprehension.

Few extend their thoughts towards universal knowledge. Locke.

5. To stretch into assignable dimensions; to make local; to magnify so as to fill some assignable space.

The mind, say they, while you sustain
To hold her station in the brain;
You grant, at least she is extended,
Ergo the whole dispute is ended. Prior.

6. To enlarge; to continue.

To Helen's bed the gods alone assign
Hermione t' extend the regal line. Pope, Odyssey.

7. To encrease in force or duration.

If much you note him,
You shall offend him, and extend his passion:
Feed and regard him not. Shakspeare, Macbeth.

The eyes of Tobit, carrying in themselves some action of their own, were additionally promoted by that power which can extend their natures into production of effects, beyond created efficiencies. Brown, Vulg. Err.

8. To enlarge the comprehension of any position.

Seeing it is not set down how far the bounds of his speech concerning dissimilitude reach, who can assure us that it extendeth farther than to those things only wherein the nations were idolatrous? Hooker.

9. To impart; to communicate.

Let there be none to extend mercy unto him. Psalm cix. 12.

10. To seize by a course of law.

This manor is extended to my use. Massinger, New Way to pay Old Debts.

The law, that settles all you do,
And marries where you did but woo;
And if it judge upon your side,
Will soon extend her for your bride;
And put her person, goods or lands,
Or which you like best, int' your hands. Hudibras.

To EXTE'ND. v. n. To reach to any distance.

My goodness extendeth not to thee. Psalm xvi. 2.

The bigness of such a church ought to be no greater than that unto which the voice of a preacher of a middling lungs can easily extend. Graunt.

EXTE'NDER.† n. s. [from extend.] The person, thing, or instrument by which any thing is moved or extended.

Those muscles which are inserted into the thigh, and have their use for the motion thereof, notwithstanding their origination may be either from the back, (inwardly, as the chief flector, the Psoas; or outwardly, as the first extender, Gloutœne major;) or from the os Ilium, (as most other movers of the thigh have;) ought all to be accounted into the number of the strong men. Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 65.

The extension made, the extenders are to be loosened gently. Wiseman, Surgery.

EXTENDIBI'LITY.* n. s. [from extend.] Capability of extension.

Fire is cause of extendibility. Old Poem in Ashmole's Theat. Cham. 1652, p. 58.

EXTE'NDIBLE.† adj. [from extend.]

1. Capable of extension; capable to be made wider or longer.

Tubes, recently made of fluids, are easily lengthened; such as have often suffered force, grow rigid, and hardly extendible. Arbuthnot on Aliments.

2. That may be seized by law.

Warrants for vagrants are not extendible to knight-errants! Gayton, Notes on D. Quix. p. 263.

EXTE'NDLESSNESS. n. s. [from extend.] Unlimited extension. In this sense it is once found; but, I think, with little propriety.

Certain moleculæ seminales must keep the world from an infinitude and extendlessness of excursions every moment into new figures and animals.
Hale, Orig. of Mankind.

EXTENSIBI'LITY. n. s. [from extensible.] The quality of being extensible.

In what manner they are mixed, so as to give a fibre extensibility, who can say?
Grew, Cosmol. Sacra.

EXTE'NSIBLE.† adj. [old Fr. extensible.]

1. Capable of being stretched into length or breadth.

The malleus, being fixed to an extensible membrane, follows the traction of the muscle, and is drawn inward. Holder.

2. Capable of being extended to a larger comprehension.

That love is blind, is extensible beyond the object of poetry. Glanville.

EXTE'NSIBLENESS. n. s. [from extensible.] Capacity of being extended.

EXTE'NSION. n. s. [from extensio, Latin.]

1. The act of extending.
2. The state of being extended.

The hiccough cometh of fulness of meat, especially in children, which causeth an extension of the stomach. Bacon.

All rest satisfied at the postures of moderation, and none endure the extremity of flexure or extension. Brown.

This foundation of the earth upon the waters, or extension of it above the waters, doth agree to the antediluvian earth. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

By this idea of solidity is the extension of body distinguished from the extension of space: the extension of body being nothing but the cohesion or continuity of solid, separable, movable parts; and the extension of space, the continuity of unsolid, inseparable, and immovable parts. Locke.

EXTE'NSIONAL. adj. [from extension.] Long drawn out; having great extent.

You run into these extensional phantasms, which I look upon as contemptuously, as upon the quick wrigglings up and down of pismires.
More, Divine Dialogues.

EXTE'NSIVE. adj. [extensivus, Latin.]

1. Wide; large.

I would not be understood to recommend to all a pursuit of those sciences, to those extensive lengths to which the moderns have advanced them.
Watts on the Mind.

2. That may be extended. Not used.

Silver beaters chuse the finest coin, as that which is most extensive under the hammer. Boyle.

EXTE'NSIVELY. adv. [from extensive.] Widely; largely.

'Tis impossible for any to pass a right judgement concerning them, without entering into most of these circumstances, and surveying them extensively, and comparing and balancing them all aright. Watts on the Mind.

EXTE'NSIVENESS. n. s. [from extensive.]

1. Largeness; diffusiveness; wideness.

As we have reason to admire the excellency of this contrivance, so have we to applaud the extensiveness of the benefit. Gov. of the Tongue.

An extensiveness of understanding and a large memory are of service. Watts, Logick.

2. Possibility to be extended.

We take notice of the wonderful dilatability or extensiveness of the throats and gullets of serpents: I myself have taken two entire adult mice out of the stomach of an adder, whose neck was not bigger than my little finger. Ray on the Creation.

EXTE'NSOR. n. s. [Latin.] The muscle by which any limb is extended.

Extensors are muscles so called, which serve to extend any part. Quincy.

Civil people had the flexors of the head very strong; but in the insolent there was a great overbalance of strength in the extensors of the neck.
Arbuthnot and Pope, Mart. Scrib.

EXTE'NT. participle from extend. Extended. Not used.

Both his hands most filthy feculent,
Above the water were on high extent,
And fain'd to wash themselves incessantly.
Spenser, F. Q.

EXTE'NT. n. s. [extentus, Latin.]

1. Space or degree to which any thing is extended.

If I mean to reign
David's true heir, and his full sceptre sway
To just extent over all Israel's sons. Milton, P. L.

What's vice in me, is only mirth in him.
Dryden, Juv.

3. To lessen; to degrade; to diminish in honour.

Righteous are thy decrees on all thy works;
Who can extenuate thee? Milton, P. L.

4. To lessen in representation; to palliate: opposite to aggravate.

When you shall these unlucky deeds relate,
Speak of me, as I am: nothing extenuate,
Nor set down aught in malice. Shaks. Othello.

Upon his examination he denied little of that wherewith he was charged, nor endeavoured much to excuse or extenuate his fault; so that, not very wisely thinking to make his offence less by confession, he made it enough for condemnation.
Bacon.

Yet hear me, Sampson, not that I endeavour
To lessen or extenuate my offence. Milton, S. A.

5. To make lean.

The people from their infancy are bred up with dry bisket, and other extenuating diet, to make them extreme lean.
Blount, Voyage to the Levant, p. 53.

6. To make rare: opposed to dense.

The race of all things here is to extenuate and turn things to be more pneumatical and rare, and not to retrograde from pneumatical to that which is dense. Bacon.

He the congealed vapours melts again,
Extenuated into drops of rain. Sandys, Job, p. 58.

EXTE'NUATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Small; thin.

Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXTE'RMINATORY.* adj. [from exterminate.] Consigning to destruction.

After what has passed in 1782, one would not think that decorum, to say nothing of policy, would permit them to call up, by magick charms, the grounds, reasons, and principles of those terrible, confiscatory, and exterminatory periods.
Burke, Lett. to R. Burke, Esq.

To EXTE'RMINE.† v. a. [extermino, Latin.] To exterminate; to destroy. Not now in use.

If you do sorrow at my grief in love,
By giving love your sorrow and my grief
Were both extermin'd. Shakspeare, As you like it.

Enemies that strive to destroy, loose, abolish, burn, and extermine from the world the books of it. Donne, Hist. of the Sept. p. 210.

EXTE'RN.† adj. [externus, Latin.]

1. External; outward; visible.

When my outward action doth demonstrate
The native act and figure of my heart
In compliment extern, 'tis not long after
But I will wear my heart upon my sleeve
For daws to peck at. Shakspeare, Othello.

We contend about the extern policy and government of the church.

Bacon on the Controv. of the Ch. of England.

Those things of extern mode and fashion, which will either cease to be doubted of and used, when once they appear, to a gracious heart, any way evil. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Hand. p. 83.

Nor are the observations of the eye any thing profitable, unless the mind draw something from the extern object to enrich the soul withal. Howell, Instruct. For. Trav. p. 196.

2. Without itself; not inherent; not intrinsick; not depending on itself.

When two bodies are pressed one against another, the rare body not being so able to resist division as the dense, and being not permitted to retire back, by reason of the extern violence impelling it, the parts of the rare body must be severed. Digby.

EXTE'RNAL. adj. [externus, Latin.]

1. Outward; not proceeding from itself; operating or acting from without: opposite to internal.

We come to be assured that there is such a being, either by an internal impression of the notion of a God upon our minds, or else by such external and visible effects as our reason tells us must be attributed to some cause, and which we cannot attribute to any other but such as we conceive God to be. Tillotson.

Shells being exposed loose upon the surface of the earth to the injuries of weather, to be trod upon by horses and other cattle, and to many other external accidents, are, in tract of time, broken to pieces. Woodward.

2. Having the outward appearance; having to the view or outward perception any particular nature.

Adam was then no less glorious in his externals: he had a beautiful body as well as an immortal soul. South.

He that commits only the external act of idolatry is as guilty as he that commits the external act of theft. Stilling fleet.

EXTERNA'LITY.* n. s. [from external.] External perception.

3. Termination of a family or succession.

His heart easily conceived treason against the crown, wherein he perished himself, and made a final extinguishment of his house and honour. Davies on Ireland.

To EXTI'RP.† v. a. [extirper, old French, extirpo, Lat.] To eradicate; to root out. Not now used; though formerly very common.

Which to extirpe he laid him privily
Down in a darksome lowly place far in. Spenser, F. Q.

Nor shall that nation boast it so with us,
But be extirped from our provinces. Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

For these not knowing how to owe a gift
Of that dear grace, but with their shame; being plac'd
So 'bove all powers of their gratitude,
Began to hate the benefit; and, in place
Of thanks, devise t' extirp the memory
Of such an act. B. Jonson, Fox.

To extirp all knowledge, and exile
All brave and ancient things for ever from this isle. Drayton, Polyolb. S. 6.

A time to plant, to extirp; to kill, to cure;
A time to batter down, a time to immure. Sandys, Ecclesiast. p. 4.

Bone of my bone, flesh of my flesh, myself
Before me: woman is her name, of man
Extracted. Milton, P. L.

4. To draw out of any containing body or cavity.

These waters were extracted, and laid upon the surface of the ground. Burnet, Theory of the Earth.

5. To select and abstract from a larger treatise.

To see how this case is represented, I have extracted out of that pamphlet a few notorious falsehoods. Swift.

E'XTRACT.† n. s. [from the verb. Addison has placed the accent on the last syllable of this substantive, in his translation of Virgil's fourth Georgick; but it is now constantly on the first.]

1. The substance extracted; the chief parts drawn from any thing.

In tinctures, if the superfluous spirit of wine be distilled off, it leaves at the bottom that thicker substance, which chymists call the extract of the vegetables. Boyle.

To dip our tongues in gall, to have nothing in our mouth but the extract and exhalation of our inward bitterness, is no great sensuality. Government of the Tongue.

2. The chief heads drawn from a book; an abstract; an epitome.

I will present a few extracts out of authors. Camden, Rem.

Some books may be read by extracts made of them by others, but only in the less important arguments, and the meaner books; else distilled books are like common distilled waters, flashy things. Bacon, Essays.

Spend some hours every day in reading, and making extracts, if your memory be weak. Swift.

3. Extraction; descent. Not used.

The apostle gives it a value suitable to its extract, branding it with the most ignominious imputation of foolishness. South.

EXTRA'CTION. n. s. [extractio, Latin.]

1. The act of drawing one part out of a compound; the act of drawing out the principal substance by chymical operation.

Although the charge of extraction should exceed the worth, at least it will discover nature and possibility. Bacon.

The distillations of waters, extractions of oils, and such like experiments are unknown to the ancients. Hakewill on Providence.

It would not defray the charge and labour of the extraction, and must needs be all irretrievably lost. Woodward, Nat. Hist.

2. Derivation from an original; lineage; descent.

One whose extraction's from an ancient line,
Gives hope again that well-born men may shine;
The meanest in your nature mild and good,
The noble rest secured in your blood. Waller.

A family of an ancient extraction, transported with the conqueror out of Normandy. Clarendon.

EXTRA'CTIVE.* adj. [from extract.] Capable of being extracted.

Mr. Giobert has communicated, to the publick, the analysis of a fertile soil in the vicinity of Turin, where it rains yearly above 40 inches on the square foot. He found 1lb. of it to contain from 20 to 30 grains of extractive matter which flamed and burned, and therefore was a coal soluble in water. Kirwan on Manures, p. 55.

EXTRA'CTOR. n. s. [Latin.] The person or instrument by which any thing is extracted.

EXTRADI'CTIONARY. adj. [extra and dictio, Latin.] Not consisting in words but realities.

Of extradictionary and real fallacies, Aristotle and logicians make six; but we observe men are commonly deceived by four thereof. Brown, Vulg. Err.

EXTRAJUDI'CIAL. adj. [extra and judicium, Latin.] Out of the regular course of legal procedure.

A declaratory or extrajudicial absolution is conferred in foro pœnitentiali. Ayliffe, Parergon.

may be said to be done extrajudicially, when opposition ensues thereupon. Ayliffe.

EXTRAMI'SSION. n. s. [extra and mitto, Latin.] The act of emitting outwards: opposite to intromission.

Aristotle, Alhazen, and others, hold that sight is by reception, and not by extramission; by receiving the rays of the object unto the eye, and not by sending any out. Brown.

EXTRAMU'NDANE. adj. [extra and mundus, Latin.] Beyond the verge of the material world.

'Tis a philosophy that gives the exactest topography of the extramundane spaces. Glanville, Scepsis.

EXTRA'NEOUS. adj. [extraneus, Latin.] Not belonging to any thing; foreign; of different substance; not intrinsick.

Relation is not contained in the real existence of things, but something extraneous and superinduced. Locke.

When the mind refers any of its ideas to any thing extraneous to them, they are then called true or false. Locke.

Gold, when equally pure, and freed from extraneous matter, is absolutely alike in colour, consistence, specifick gravity, and all other respects. Woodward on Fossils.

EXTRAO'RDINARIES.* See EXTRAORDINARY, n. s.

EXTRAO'RDINARILY. adv. [from extraordinary.]

1. In a manner out of the common method and order.

In the affairs which were not determinable one way or other by the Scripture, himself gave an extraordinarily direction and counsel, as oft as they sought it at his hands. Hooker.

In government it is good to use men of one rank equally; for to countenance some extraordinarily, is to make them insolent, and the rest discontent. Bacon.

2. Uncommonly; particularly; eminently; remarkably.

He quotes me right; and I hope all his quotations, wherein he is so extraordinarily copious and elaborate, are so. Howell.

The temple of Solomon was a type, and therefore was so extraordinarily magnificent; otherwise perhaps a cheaper structure might have been as servicable. Wilkins, Math. Magick.

EXTRAO'RDINARINESS. n. s. [from extraordinary.] Uncommonness; eminence; remarkableness.

I chuse some few either for the extraordinariness of their guilt, or the frequency of their practice. Gov. of the Tongue.

EXTRAO'RDINARY. adj. [extraordinarius, Lat. This word and its derivatives are generally pronounced extrordinary, whereby the a is liquified into the o.]

1. Different from common order and method; not ordinary.

Evils must be judged inevitable, if there be no apparent ordinary way to avoid them; because where council and advice bear rule of God's extraordinary power, without extraordinary warrant, we cannot presume. Hooker.

Spain had no wars save those which were grown into an ordinary: now they have coupled therewith the extraordinary of the Voltaline and the Palatinate. Bacon.

See what extraordinary armies have been transmitted thither, and what ordinary forces maintained there. Davies.

2. Differing from the common course of law.

If they proceeded in a martial or any other extraordinary way, without any form of law, his majesty should declare his justice and affection to an old faithful servant. Clarendon.

3. Eminent; remarkable; more than common.

The house was built of fair and strong stone, not affecting so much any extraordinary kind of fineness, as an honourable representing of a firm stateliness. Sidney.

The Indians worshipped rivers, fountains, rocks, or great stones, and all things which seemed to have something extraordinary in them. Stillingfleet.

EXTRAO'RDINARY.* n. s. Any thing which exceeds ordinary method or computation. Uncommon in the singular number.

All the extraordinaries in the world, which fall out by no steady rules and causes, I style prodigies preternatural. Spencer on Prod. p. 163.

EXTRAO'RDINARY. adv. [This word seems only a colloquial barbarism, used for the ease of pronunciation.] Extraordinarily.

I ran over their cabinet of medals, but don't remember to have met with any things in it that are extraordinary rare. Addison.

EXTRAPARO'CHIAL.† adj. [extra and parochia, Lat.] Not comprehended within any parish; privileged or exempt from the duties of a parish. Cowel.

EXTRAPROVI'NCIAL. adj. [extra and provincia, Latin.] Not within the same province; not within the jurisdiction of the same archbishop.

EXTRARE'GULAR. adj. [extra and regula, Latin.] Not comprehended within a rule.

His providence is extraregular, and produces strange things beyond common rules; and he led Israel through a sea, and made a rock pour forth water. Bp. Taylor, Rule of Living Holy.

EXTRA'VAGANCE.† } n. s. [extravagance, old French; extravagans, Latin.]
EXTRA'VAGANCY. }

1. Excursion or sally beyond prescribed limits.

I have troubled you too far with this extravagance: I shall make no delay to recall myself into the road again. Hammond.

2. Irregularity; wildness.

Using such ways of sweetness, neatness, and decency (which are potent decoys to love) as may best keep their husbands from any loathing or indifferency, also from any extravagancy. Bp. Taylor, Artif. Handsom. p. 39.

3. Outrage; violence; outrageous vehemence.

How many, by the wild fury and extravagancy of their own passions, have put their bodies into a combustion, and by stirring up their rage against others, have armed that fierce humour against themselves. Tillotson.

4. Unnatural tumour; bombast.

Some verses of my own, Maximin and Almanzor cry vengeance upon me for their extravagance. Dryden.

5. Waste; vain and superfluous expence.

She was so expensive, that the income of the three dukes was not enough to supply her extravagance. Arbuthnot.

EXTRA'VAGANT.† adj. [extravagant, old Fr.; extravagans, Latin.]

1. Wandering out of his bounds. This is the primogeneal sense, but not now in use.

At his warning,
The extravagant and erring spirit hies
To his confine. Shakspeare, Hamlet.

2. Roving beyond just limits or prescribed methods.

I dare not ask for what you would not grant:
But wishes, madam, are extravagant;
They are not bounded with things possible;
I may wish more than I presume to tell.
Dryden, Aurengzebe.

3. Not comprehended in any thing. Dr. Johnson has here given, as an example, the substantive which has a law-sense. See EXTRAVAGANTS.

4. Irregular; wild.

They were all seen, but in an extravagant order B. Jonson, Masques.

For a dance they seem'd
Somewhat extravagant, and wild. Milton, P. L.

There appears something nobly wild and extravagant in great natural geniuses, infinitely more beautiful than turn and polishing. Addison.

New ideas employed my fancy all night, and composed a wild extravagant dream. Addison, Spect.

5. Wasteful; prodigal; vainly expensive.

An extravagant man, who has nothing else to recommend him but a false generosity, is often more beloved than a person of a much more finished character, who is defective in this particular. Addison.

EXTRA'VAGANT.† n. s.

1. A stroller; a vagabond.

They took me up for a 'stravagant. Nobody and Somebody, (1598.)

2. One who is confined in no general rule or definition.

We pity or laugh at those fatuous extravagants. Glanville.

There are certain extravagants among people of all sizes and professions. L'Estrange.

3. The singular of extravagants, which mean part of the canon law. See EXTRAVAGANTS.

EXTRA'VAGANTLY. adv. [from extravagant.]

1. In an extravagant manner; wildly.

Her passion was extravagantly new;
But mine is much the madder of the two. Dryden.

2. In an unreasonable degree.

Some are found to praise our author, and others as rashly and extravagantly contradict his admirers. Pope.

3. Expensively; luxuriously; wastefully; profusely.

EXTRA'VAGANTNESS. n. s. [from extravagant.] Excess; excursion beyond limits.

EXTRA'VAGANTS.* n. s. [Latin, extravantes, q. d. quasi extra corpus juris vagantes.] A part of the canon law, containing various papal constitutions not included in the body of the canon law. The singular number of this word is sometimes used.

The decree of pope Boniface the eighth, in his extravagants set forth by himself in the eighth year of his papacy. Sir S. D'Ewes, Prim. Pract. p. 63.

The seventh [article] is an extravagant concerning the Manichees. Bp. Cosin, Hist. Can. of Script. p. 186.

To EXTRA'VAGATE.† v. n. [extravaguer, "to roam, extravagate, range, &c."

Cotgrave. extra and vagor, Latin.] To wander out of limits.

When the body plunges into the luxury of sense, the mind will extravagate through all the regions of a vitiated imagination.

Warburton, Serm. xx.

EXTRAVAGA'TION.* n. s. [old Fr. extravagation.] Excess.

I do not pretend to justify the extravagations of the mob. Smollet.

EXTRA'VASATED. adj. [extra and vasa, Latin.] Forced out of the properly containing vessels.

The viscuous matter, which lies like leather upon the extravasated blood of pleuretick people, may be dissolved by a due degree of heat.

Arbuthnot on Aliments.

EXTRAVASA'TION. n.s. [from extravasated.] The act of forcing, or state of being forced out of the proper containing vessels.

Aliment, too viscuous, obstructing the glands, and by its acrimony corroding the small vessels of the lungs, after a rupture and extravasation of blood, easily produces an ulcer. Arbuthnot.

EXTRAVE'NATE. adj. [extra and vena, Lat.] Let out of the veins.

That there is a magnetick way of curing wounds, by anointing the weapon; and that the wound is affected in like manner as is the extravenate blood by the sympathetick medicine, as to matter of fact, is with circumstances of good evidence asserted.

Glanville, Scepsis.

EXTRAVE'RSION. n. s. [extra and versio, Latin.] The act of throwing out; the state of being thrown out.

Nor does there intervene heat to afford them any colour to pretend that there is made an extraversion of the sulphur, or of any of the two other supposed principles. Boyle.

EXTRA'UGHT. part. [an obsolete participle from extract; as distraught from distract.] Extracted.

Sham'st thou not, knowing whence thou art extraught,
To let thy tongue detect thy baseborn heart.

Shakspeare, Hen. VI.

EXTREA'T.* n. s. [old Fr. extraict, or extrait.] Extraction. Spenser has also used extract in the same sense. But both are obsolete.

Some clarkes doe doubt in their deviceful art,
Whether this heavenly thing whereof I treat,
To weeten mercie, be of justice part,
Or drawne forth from her by divine extreat.

Spenser, F. Q. v. x. i.

EXTRE'ME.† adj. [extreme, old French; extremus, Latin. This word is sometimes corrupted by the superlative termination, of which it is by no means capable, as it has in itself the superlative signification. The word was also formerly accented on the first syllable, but is now constantly on the last.]

1. Greatest; of the highest degree.

The Lord shall smite thee with a fever, an inflammation, and an extreme burning.

Deut. xxviii. 22.

They thought it the extremest of evils to put themselves at the mercy of those hungry and disorderly people. Bacon.

2. Utmost.

The hairy fool
Stood on th' extremest verge of the swift brook,
Augmenting it with tears.

Shakspeare, As you like it.

Miseno's cape and Bauli last he view'd,
That on the sea's extremest borders stood.

Addison on Italy.

3. Last; that beyond which there is nothing.

Farewell, ungrateful and unkind! I go,
Condemn'd by thee, to those sad shades below:
I go th' extremest remedy to prove,
To drink oblivion, and to drench my love. Dryd.

4. Pressing in the utmost degree.

Cases of necessity being sometimes but urgent, sometimes extreme, the consideration of publick utility is urged equivalent to the easier kind of necessity. Hooker.

5. Rigorous; strict.

If thou be extreme to mark what is amiss, O Lord, who shall abide it? Psalms in Comm. Prayer.

EXTRE'ME.† n. s. [from the adjective.]

1. Utmost point; highest degree of any thing.

Thither by harpy-footed furies hal'd,
At certain revolutions, all the damn'd
Are brought; and feel by turns the bitter change
Of fierce extremes, extremes by change more fierce;
From beds of raging fire to starve in ice
Their soft ethereal warmth, and there to pine
Immovable, infix'd, and frozen round
Periods of time; thence hurried back to fire.

Milton, P. L.

Avoid extremes, and shun the faults of such,
Who still are pleas'd too little, or too much. Pope.

They cannot bear that human nature, which they know to be imperfect, should be praised in an extreme, without opposition. Pope, Essay on Homer.

2. Points at the greatest distance from each other; extremity.

The true Protestant religion is situated in the golden mean; the enemies unto her are the extremes on either hand. Bacon.

The syllogistical form only shews, that if the intermediate idea agree with those it is on both sides immediately applied to, then those two remote ones, or, as they are called, extremes, do certainly agree. Locke.

3. Extravagance of conduct. Obsolete.

My gracious lord,
To chide at your extremes, it not becomes me;
O, pardon that I name them: your high self,
The gracious mark o' the land, you have obscur'd
With a swain's wearing. Shaks. Winter's Tale.

EXTRE'MELY. adv. [from extreme.]

1. In the utmost degree.

She might hear, not far from her, an extremely doleful voice; but so suppressed with a kind of whispering note, that he could not conceive the words distinctly. Sidney.

2. Very much; greatly: in familiar language.

Whoever sees a scoundrel in a gown reeling home at midnight, is apt to be extremely comforted in his own vices. Swift.

EXTRE'MITY.† n.s. [extremité, old French; extremitas, Latin.]

1. The utmost point; the highest degree.

He that will take away extreme heat by setting the body in extremity of cold, shall undoubtedly remove the disease; but together with it the diseased too. Hooker.

Should any one be cruel and uncharitable to that extremity, yet this would not prove that propriety gave any authority. Locke.

2. The utmost parts; the parts most remote from the middle.

In its proper colour it is inclining to white, excepting the extremities or tops of the wing-feathers, which are black. Brown.

The extremities of the joints must be seldom hidden, and the extremities or end of the feet never. Dryden, Dufresnoy.

The extremity of pain often creates a coldness in the extremities; but such a sensation is very consistent with an inflammatory distemper.

Arbuthnot on Diet.

3. The points in the utmost degree of opposition, or at the utmost distance from each other.

He's a man of that strange composition,
Made up of all the worst extremities
Of youth and age. Denham, Sophy.

4. Remotest parts; parts at the greatest distance.

They sent fleets out of the Red Sea to the extremities of Æthiopia, and imported quantities of precious goods. Arbuthnot.

5. Violence of passion.

With equal measure she did moderate
The strong extremities of their outrage.

Spenser, F. Q.

If I shew no colour for my extremity, let me be your table-sport. Shakspeare.

6. The utmost violence; rigour; or distress.

Why should not the same laws take good effect on that people, being prepared by the sword, and brought under by extremity? Spenser on Ireland.

Their hearts she guesseth,
And yields her to extremity of time. Spenser, F. Q.

This world have seem'd a period
To such as love not sorrow; but another,
To amplify too much, would make much more,
And top extremity. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

He promised, if they should be besieged, to relieve them before they should be reduced to extremity. Clarendon.

It should be never so exposed to the extremity of war as to fall into those barbarous hands.

Clarendon.

I wish peace, and any terms prefer
Before the last extremities of war.

Dryden, Ind. Emperour.

7. The most aggravated state.

The world is running mad after farce, the extremity of bad poetry; or rather the judgement that is fallen upon dramatic writing.

Dryden, Pref. to Cleom.

E'XTRICABLE.* adj. [Lat. extricabilis.] That may be rid or avoided. Cockeram.

To E'XTRICATE. v. a. [extrico, Latin.] To disembarrass; to set free any one in a state of perplexity; to disentangle.

We run into great difficulties about free created agents, which reason cannot well extricate itself out of. Locke.

These are reliefs to nature, as they give her an opportunity of extricating herself from her oppressions, and recovering the several tones and springs of her vessels. Addison.

EXTRICA'TION. n. s. [from extricate.] The act of disentangling; disentanglement.

Crude salt has a taste not properly acid, but such as predominates in brine; and it does not appear, that this acid spirit did as such pre-exist in the salt whence it was obtained, so that we may suppose it to have been made rather by transmutation than extrication. Boyle.

EXTRI'NSICAL.† adj. [extrinsecus, Lat.] External; outward; not intimately belonging; not intrinsick. It is commonly written so, but analogy requires extrinsecal, Dr. Johnson observes; and good writers, it may be added, have so given it. Thus bishop Bramhall, more than a century and a half since. And thus Burke, in modern times. The old Fr. also is extrinseque.

A body cannot move, unless it be moved by some extrinsical agent: absurd it is to think that a body, by a quality in it, can work upon itself.

Digby on Bodies.

A concourse of necessary extrinsecal causes.
Bramhall against Hobbes, p. 29.

Neither is the atom by any extrinsical impulse diverted from its natural course. Ray on the Creation.

Outward objects, that are extrinsical to the mind; and its own operations, proceeding from powers intrinsical, and proper to itself, which, when reflected on by itself, become also objects of its contemplation, are the original of all knowledge. Locke.

More observe the characters of men than the order of things; to the one we are formed by nature and by that sympathy, from which we are so strongly led to take a part in the passions and manners of our fellow men. The other is as it were foreign and extrinsecal.
Burke, Ess. on the Drama.

EXTRI'NSICALLY.† adv. [from extrinsical.] From without.

If he were extrinsecally predetermined, he should not say, I will serve, but I must serve.
Bramhall against Hobbes, p. 29.

If to suppose the soul a distinct substance from the body, and extrinsically advenient, be an errour, almost all the world hath been mistaken. Glanville.

EXTRI'NSICK.† adj. [extrinseque, old Fr. extrinsecus, Lat.] Outward; external; not intrinsick.

When they cannot shake the main fort, they try if they can possess themselves of the outworks, raise some prejudice against his most extrinsick adherents. Gov. of the Tongue.

The symbol he here speaks of, made no part of the letters, nor began the first paragraph of them. — 'Twas extrinsick, if I mistake not, to the letter.
Bentley, Phil. Lips. § 46.

Extrinsick modes are such as arise from something that is not in the subject or substance itself; but it is a manner of being which some substances attain, by reason of something external or foreign to the subject; as, this globe lies within two yards of the wall; this man is beloved or hated.
Watts, Logick.

To EXTRU'CT. v. a. [extruo, extructum, Latin] To build; to raise; to form into a structure.

EXTRU'CTION.* n. s. [Latin, extructio.] A building. Cockeram.

EXTRU'CTIVE.* adj. [from extruct.] Forming into a structure.

If it were not as easy for us to say, that papistry is both affirmative and extructive of all wickedness.
Fulke, Answ. to Frarine's Decl. (1580,) p. 41.

EXTRU'CTOR. n. s. [from extruct.] A builder; a fabricator; a contriver.

To EXTRU'DE. v. a. [extrudo, Latin.] To thrust off; to drive off, to push out with violence.

If in any part of the continent they found the shells, they concluded that the sea had been extruded and driven off by the mud.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

EXTRU'SION. n. s. [extrusus, Latin.] The act of thrusting or driving out.

They suppose the channel of the sea formed, and mountains and caverns, by a violent depression of some parts of the earth, and an extrusion and elevation of others. Burnet.

EXTU'BERANCE.† n. s. [Lat. extuberans.] See EXTUBERANT.] A knob, or part protuberant; parts that rise from the rest of the body.

The gouge takes off the irregularities or extuberances that lie farthest from the axis of the work.
Moxon, Mech. Ex.

Consider the humerus, its head, its neck, its pullies, its cavities, its extuberances.
Smith, Portraiture of Old Age, p. 60.

EXTU'BERANCY.* n. s. Any protuberance.

"And the dry land appeared:" Not so precisely globous as before, but recompenced with an extuberancy of hills and mountains for the receipts, into which God had sunk the waters.
Gregory, Notes on Passages in Script. p. 114.

EXTU'BERANT.* adj. [Lat. extuberans.] Swelling. Bullokar.

Extuberant lips.

EXTUBERA'TION.* n. s. [Latin, extuberatio.] A swelling; a protuberance.

In both there is matter for humility to work on; in both there are excrescences and extuberations to be lopt off and abated.
Farindon's Sermons, 1647, p. 582.

EXTUME'SCENCE.* n. s. [old Fr. extumescence; from the Latin extumesco.] A swelling; a rising up.
Cotgrave, and Sherwood.

EXU'BERANCE.† n. s. [exuberance, old Fr. exuberans, Latin. Our word, in 1656, was pronounced by Heylin new and uncouth. Yet exuberancy had long before been in the dictionaries of Cotgrave and Sherwood.] Overgrowth; superfluous shoots; useless abundance; luxuriance.

Men esteem the overflowing of gall the exuberance of zeal, and all the promises of the faithful combatant they confidently appropriate.
Decay of Piety.

Though he expatiates on the same thoughts in different words, yet in his similes that exuberance is avoided. Garth.

EXU'BERANCY.* n. s. Abundance; great plenty; fruitfulness.
Cotgrave in V. Exuberance.

The freeness of his own bounty, and the exuberancy of his goodness towards them.
Stilling fleet, Orig. Sac. ii. 3.

EXU'BERANT.† adj. [exuberant, old Fr. "exuberant, plenteous, abundant, swelling with store of fruit," Cotgrave; exuberans, Latin.]

1. Growing with superfluous shoots; overabundant; superfluously plenteous; luxuriant.

Another Flora there, of bolder hues,
Plays o'er the fields, and showers with sudden hand
Exuberant spring. Thomson, Spring.

His similes have been thought too exuberant, and full of circumstances. Pope, Pref. to the Iliad.

2. Abounding in the utmost degree.

Such immense power, such unsearchable wisdom, and such exuberant goodness, as may justly ravish us to an amazement, rather than a bare admiration. Boyle, Seraphick Love.

A part of that exuberant devotion, with which the whole assembly raised and animated one another, catches a reader at the greatest distance of time. Addison, Freeholder.

EXU'BERANTLY. adv. [from exuberant.] Abundantly; to a superfluous degree.

A considerable quantity of the vegetable matter lay at the surface of the antediluvian earth, and rendered it exuberantly fruitful.
Woodward, Nat. Hist.

To EXU'BERATE.† v. n. [exubero, Latin.] To bear in great abundance; to abound in the highest degree. A word in use long before Boyle wrote, being found with the first of the preceding definitions in Cockeram's vocabulary.

All the loveliness imparted to the creature is lent it, to give us enlarged conceptions of that vast confluence and immensity that exuberate in God.
Boyle, Seraphick Love.

EXU'CCOUS. adj. [exsuccus, Latin.] Without juice; dry.

This is to be effected not only in the plant yet growing, but in that which is brought exuccous and dry unto us. Brown.

EXUDA'TION. n. s. [from exudo, Lat.]

1. The act of emitting in sweat; the act of emitting moisture through the pores.

The tumour sometimes arises by a general exudation out of the cutis. Wiseman, Surgery.

2. The matter issuing out by sweat from any body.

The gum of trees, shining and clear, is but a straining of the juice of the tree through the wood and bark; and Cornish diamonds, and rock rubies, which are yet more resplendent than gums, are the fine exudations of stone. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

If it hath more dew at noon than in the morning, then it seemeth to be an exudation of the herb itself. Bacon.

Cuckowspittle, or woodsere, that spumous frothy dew or exudation, or both, is found especially about the joints of lavender and rosemary.
Brown, Vulg. Err.

To EXU'DATE. } v. n. [exudo, Latin.] To
To EXU'DE. } sweat out; to issue out by sweat.

Some perforations in the part itself, through which the humour included doth exudate, may be observed in such as are fresh. Brown, Vulg. Err.

The juices of the flowers are, first, the expressed juice; secondly, a volatile oil, wherein the smell of the plant presides; thirdly, honey, exuding from all flowers, the bitter not excepted,
Arbuthnot on Aliments.

To EXU'DATE. } v. a. To force out, or
To EXU'DE. } throw out, as by sweat.

To EXU'LCERATE.† v. a. [exulcero, Lat.]

1. To make sore with an ulcer; to affect with a running or eating sore.

Cantharides applied to any part of the body, touch the bladder and exulcerate it, if they stay on long.
Bacon.

That the saliva hath a virtue of macerating bodies, appears by the effects in taking away warts, sometimes exulcerating the jaws and rotting the teeth. Ray on the Creation.

The stagnating serum turning acrimonious, exulcerates and putrifies the bowels.
Arbuthnot on Diet.

2. To afflict; to corrode; to enrage.

Froward, exulcerated, and seditious spirits, being too ready to follow what they dare not begin.
Bp. Reynolds on the Passions, ch. 24.

Thoughts, my tormentors, arm'd with deadly stings,
Mangle my apprehensive tenderest parts,
Exasperate, exulcerate, and raise
Dire inflammation, which no cooling herb
Or medicinal liquor can assuage. Milton, S. A.

To EXU'LCERATE.* v. n. To become ulcerous.

Sharp and eager humours will not evaporate; and then they must exulcerate, and so may endanger the sovereignty itself.
Bacon, Speech in Parl. 7 Jac. I.

EXU'LCERATE.* adj. [from the verb.] Wounded; vexed; enraged.

Finding the king's mind so exulcerate, as he rejected all counsel that tended to mild and gracious proceeding. Bacon, Observ. on a Libel in 1592.

The speech being already ill taken, the writing might exasperate that which already was exulcerate. Harrington, Br. View of the Church, p. 190.

EXULCERA'TION.† n. s. [old Fr. exulceration.]

1. The beginning erosion, which wears away the substance, and forms an ulcer.
Quincy.

2. Exacerbation; corrosion.

This exulceration of mind made him apt to take all occasions of contradiction. Hooker.

The sight of his competitor causeth bitter exulcerations. Dr. Jackson, Works, iii. 643.

The lover,
Sighing like a furnace, with a woful ballad
Made to his mistress' eyebrow. Shaks. As you like it.

On the seventh day he shall shave all his hair off his head, his beard, and his eyebrows. Lev. xiv. 9.

Above stand the eyebrows, to keep any thing from running down upon the eyes; as drops of sweat from the forehead, or dust.
Ray on the Creation.

The balls of his broad eyes roll'd in his head,
And glar'd betwixt a yellow and a red;
He look'd a lion with a gloomy stare,
And o'er his eyebrows hung his matted hair.
Dryden.

EY'ED.† adj. [from eye.] Having eyes: used in composition.

Some reliques of the true antiquity,
Although disfigured, a well-eyed man
May happily discover. Spenser

Leah was tender-eyed. Gen. xxix. 17.

I'll not be made a soft and dull-eyed fool,
To shake the head, relent, and sigh, and yield
To Christian intercessors. Shakspeare.

EY'EDROP. n. s. [eye and drop.] Tear.

That tyranny which never quaft but blood,
Would by beholding him have wash'd his knife
With gentle eyedrops. Shakspeare, Hen. IV. P. II.

The suitor was a diligent eyer of her.
Gayton, Notes on Don Quir. p. 47.

EY'EGLANCE.† n. s. [eye and glance.] Quick notice of the eye.

His countenance was bold, and bashed not
For Guyon's looks; but scornful eyeglance at him shot. Spenser, F. Q.

Therein they see, through amorous eyeglances,
Armies of loves still flying to and fro.
Spenser, Hymn of Beauty.

Hail, sovereign queen of secrets, who hast power
To call the fiercest tyrant from his rage,
And weep unto a girl; that hast the might,
Even with an eye-glance, to choak Mars's drum,
And turn the alarm to whispers.
Beaum. and Fl. Two Nob. Kinsmen.

EY'EGLASS. n. s. [eye and glass.] Spectacles; glass to assist the sight.

Ha' not you seen Camillo?
But that's past doubt you have; or your eyeglass
Is thicker than a cuckold's horn.
Shakspeare, Wint. Tale.

By comparing it with a good perspective of four foot in length, made with a concave eyeglass, I could read at a greater distance with my own instrument than with the glass. Newton.

EYEGLU'TTING.* adj. [eye and glut.] Feasting the eye to satiety.

Mammon, said he, thy godhead's vaunt is vain,
And idle offers of thy golden fee;
To them that covet such eyeglutting gain
Proffer thy gifts! Spenser, F. Q. ii. vii. 9.

EY'ELASH. n. s. [eye and lash.] The line of hair that edges the eyelid.

EY'ELESS. adj. [from eye.] Wanting eye; sightless; deprived of sight.

A proclaim'd prize! most happy!
That eyeless head of thine was first fram'd flesh
To raise my fortunes. Shakspeare, K. Lear.

Promise was, that I
Should Israel from Philistian yoke deliver:
Ask for this great deliverer now, and find him
Eyeless in Gaza, at the mill with slaves.
Milton, S. A.

Pentheus durst deride
The cheated people, and the eyeless guide.
Addison.

Meonides,
Poor eyeless pilgrim. Philips.

Cyclop, if any pitying thy disgrace,
Ask who disfigur'd thus that eyeless face.
Pope, Odyssey.

To noble Edmund. Shaksp. K. Lear.

EY'ELID. n.s. [eye and lid.] The membrane that shuts over the eye.

Mark when she smiles with amiable chear,
And tell me whereto can ye liken it!
When on each eyelid sweetly do appear
An hundred graces as in shade to sit.
Spenser, Sonnets.

On my eyelids is the shadow of death.
Job, xvi. 16.

Fetch me that flower; the herb I shew'd thee once;
The juice of it, on sleeping eyelids laid,
Will make or man or woman madly doat
Upon the next live creature that it sees. Shaks.

The Turks have a black powder, made of a mineral called alcohol, which with a fine long pencil they lay under their eyelids, which doth colour black, whereby the white of the eye is set off more white. Bacon, Nat. Hist.

At length, the crackling noise and dreadful blaze
Call'd up some waking lover to the sight;
And long it was ere he the rest could raise,
Whose heavy eyelids yet were full of night. Dryd.

EYEOFFE'NDING.* adj. [eye and offend.] That hurts or offends the eye.

Like a cloistress, she will veiled walk,
And water once a day her chamber round
With eye-offending brine. Shakspeare, Tw. Night.

Patch'd with foul moles, and eye-offending marks. Shakspeare, K. John.

EY'OT.* n.s. A little island. See EY and EIGHT.

EY'ESHOT. n.s. [eye and shot.] Sight; glance; view.

I must not think of sharing the booty before I am free from danger, and out of eyeshot from the other windows. Dryden.

I have preserved many a young man from her eyeshot by this means. Spectator.

EY'ESIGHT. n.s. [eye and sight.] Sight of the eye.

The Lord hath recompensed me according to my cleanness in his eyesight. 2 Sam. xxii. 25.

Methinks I see thee, now thou art below,
As one dead in the bottom of a tomb;
Either my eyesight fails, or thou look'st pale. Shaks.

Though sight be lost,
Life yet hath many solaces, enjoy'd
Where other senses want not their delights,
At home in leisure and domestick ease,
Exempt from many a care and chance, to which Eyesight exposes daily men abroad. Milton, S. A.

Josephus sets this down from his own eyesight, being himself a chief captain at the siege of Jopata, where these events happened.
Wilkins, Math. Magick.

He blinds the wise, gives eyesight to the blind,
And molds and stamps anew the lover's mind.
Dryden.

EY'ESORE. n.s. [eye and sore.] Something offensive to the sight.

Hath the church of Christ, from the first beginning, by a secret universal instinct of God's good spirit, always tied itself to end neither sermon, nor almost any speech of moment, which hath concerned matters of God, without some special words of honour and glory to the Trinity, which we all adore; and is the like conclusion of psalms become now, at length, an eyesore, or a galling to the ears that hear it? Hooker.

Fy, doff this habit; shame to your estate,
And eyesore to our solemn festival.
Shakspeare, Tam. of the Shrew.

As soon as the two lords came thither, they covered, to the trouble of the other; but having presently to speak, they were quickly freed from that eyesore. Clarendon.

Mordecai was an eyesore to Haman.
L'Estrange.

He's the best piece of man's flesh in the market; not an eyesore in his whole body.
Dryden, Don Sebast.

Nor Juno's bird, in her eyespotted train,
So many goodly colours doth contain. Spenser.

EY'ESTRING. n.s. [eye and string.] The string of the eye; the tendon by which the eye is moved.

I would have broke mine eyestrings; crackt them, but
To look upon him. Shakspeare, Cymb.

To know whether the sheep are sound or not, see that their gums be red, and the eyestrings ruddy.
Mortimer.

EY'ETOOTH. n.s. [eye and tooth.] The tooth on the upper jaw next on each side to the grinders; the fang.

The next tooth on each side stronger and deeper rooted, and more pointed, called canini, in English eyeteeth, to tear the more tough sort of aliments.
Ray on the Creation.

EY'EWINK. n.s. [eye and wink.] A wink, as a hint or token.

They would have won any woman's heart; and, I warrant you, they could never get an eyewink of her. Shakspeare.

EYEWI'TNESS. n.s. [eye and witness.] An ocular evidence; one who gives testimony to facts seen with his own eyes.

We made known unto you the power and coming of our Lord Jesus Christ, and were eyewitnesses of his majesty. 2 Peter, i. 16.

To meet him all his saints, who silent stood
Eyewitnesses of his almighty acts,
With jubilee advanc'd. Milton, P. L.

The curious, by laying together circumstances, attestations, and characters of those who are concerned in them, either receive or reject what at first but eyewitnesses could absolutely believe or disbelieve. Addison, on the Christ. Religion.

EYRE.† n.s. [eyre, French; iter, Latin.] The court of justices itinerants; and justices in eyre are those only which Bracton in many places calls justiciarios itinerantes. The eyre also of the forest is nothing but the justice-seat, otherwise called; which is, or should, by ancient custom, be held every three years by the justices of the forest, journeying up and down to that purpose. Cowel.

Some of the judges of the bench or of the grand eyre. Sadler, Rights of the Kingdom, (1649,) p. 187.

EY'RY.† n.s. [from ey, Teut. an egg; eyry, i. e. eggery. See AERIE.] The place where birds of prey build their nests and hatch.

Hawks of different kinds, and not of the same eyrie or nest. Sir T. Brown, Miscell. p. 119.

The eagle, and the stork,
On cliffs and cedar-tops their eyries build.
Milton, P. L.

Some haggard hawk, who had her eyry nigh,
Well pounc'd to fasten, and well wing'd to fly.
Dryden.

Our farmer was himself the man, that last year plundered the eagle's eyrie. Gray to Dr. Wharton.
